Thirdly, if it be for the safety of his life in a good cause. So Moses, Exod. 2.14, 15. fled into the Land of Midian, and there stayed when Pharaoh sought his life: And Christ himselfe fled with his father & mother into Ægypt; from the fury of Herod, Matth. 1. The like may bee said for them, that to preserve their liberty, fly from the cruelty of their creditors, who will not take honest and reasonable satisfaction, of a surety for another man; or of a childe for the Fathers debts: But in no case for them, who travell in purpose to defeat their Creditors, or thereby to deliver themselves from payment of their due debts, being able to pay. Of both these wee have example in David, and his followers. David himselfe was faine to flie for his life from Sauls unjust cruelty, and therefore went and dwelt amongst the Philistims, 1 Sam. 27.1, 2. and 1 Sam. 22.2. there came to David such as were in trouble, & in debt, & these were with him in his travel, and persecutions. Now doubtlesse, had they beene ungodly men (who had not cared how they came into debt, nor how they paid it) David would never have beene their Prince; as the Text saith he was.

Fourthly, if it be for the maintenance of pure religion, and keeping a good conscience. This hath Christs warranty, Matthew 10.23. When they persecute you in one city, fly unto another. For this cause many of our fore-fathers, in the former age, were faine to flie into Germany, Switzerland, and to Geneva. And for these causes divers of other Nations doe repaire to this Nation, and are here entertained.

Fifthly, if it be for the getting, or increasing of any good learning, and lawfull knowledge, especially divine knowledge for matter of religion. Thus the Queene of Saba went out of the inmost parts of Africa, to Ierusalem in Asia, to see and heare Solomon: 2 King. 10. and for that cause, she is highly commended by Christ himselfe, Matth. 12.42. Thus may young men travell for learning or the tongues, especially such as intend thereby to fit themselves for publike service, so it be with safety of religion, and securitie of conscience.

Sixthly, if it bee for the practice of a mans lawfull calling, as for trafficke; and thus Merchants may, and doe lawfully travell in all nations, and liave their factors there resident: provided they lose not their souls, to gaine for their bodies: their travelling is allowed by Christ in the Parable, where hee saith, The Kingdome of heaven is like a Merchant man that seekes good pearles, Matth. 13.45.

Seventhly, if it be to receive and take possession of any goods or lands, lawfully descended or fallen unto a man in another Nation, as sometime it doth: This seemes to bee allowed by Christ in the Parable, where hee saith, A certaine Nobleman went into a far country, to receive for himselfe a kingdome, and so to come againe, Luke 19.12.

In a word; if it be upon any good and sufficient cause, allowable in good reason, & not contrary to any part of Gods word. But as for such as leave their Countries, and travell into other:

Either upon levitie, to see strange sights and fashions: Or being malefactors, flye from their due punishment: Or being in debt, goe away to deceive their Creditors: Or being vaine-glorious, to make themselves knowne: Or being at enmity, to fight combats, or to kill their enemy;

All these and all such like, can have no comfort in their travels: for they send themselves, God sent them not; they are out of Gods protection, because they goe without his warrant. And as many of them as goe away to escape the hand of the Magistrate, let them bee assured they shall not escape the hand of God.

In the fourth place, here is a comfort for all such as are banished from their owne native Countries, for God and his Gospels sake. For, here Abraham the Prince of Patriarchs, was a baniſhed man, and lived in a ſtrange Countrey, the greater part of all his life. Let ſuch men therefore take patiently what God laieth upon them: for it is not their miſery or miſhap alone, but hath been common to Gods children in all ages. Againe, Chriſt himſelfe pronounceth them bleſſed, who ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſſe ſake: for though they bee exiles from their owne kingdome, or toſſed up and downe the kingdomes of the earth, yet theirs is the kingdome of heaven, Matth. 5. 10.

Laſtly, though this commandement was perſonally directed to Abraham, and concernes not us as it did him: yet it hath his force and uſe even to us. For, though wee are not to goe out of our Countrey, and leave our livings and habitations: yet we muſt doe that that is proportionable hereunto. That which is commanded to Salomons wife, is to all Chriſtians; Hearken, O daughter, and conſider, incline thine eare, forget thine owne kindred, and thy fathers houſe: ſo ſhall the King take pleaſure in thy beauty. This wife of Salomon is the ſoule of every Chriſtian, the ſpouſe of Chriſt, the true Salomon, who by nature is daughter to heathen Pharaoh, that is, to ſinne, corruption, and wrath: but being married to Chriſt, muſt forget her owne kindred and fathers houſe, that is, their owne nature and naturall affections, and carnall deſires: and then ſhall Chriſt our King, and ſpirituall husband, take pleaſure in us, and rejoice to doe us good. And this is the chiefe travelling of all, and moſt acceptable to God, when a man goeth out of himſelfe, and denieth his owne deſires to obey God, and to ſerve Ieſus Chriſt.

Pſalm 45. 10, 11.

Thus wee ſee the matter of his obedience. Now followeth the end.

Which he ſhould after receive for inheritance.

The ſecond particular in his obedience is the end, why hee went out of his owne Countrey, to inherit another, that is, the land of Canaan, called elſe-where the Land of Promiſe, becauſe God promiſed it unto him, and to his ſeed. Now Abraham at Gods Commandement, went out of his owne native Countrey into this place, to inherit it, and to take poſſeſſion of it.

But it may be objected, Hee inherited it not: yea, furthermore Stephen ſaith, Acts 7. 4. God brought him in, but gave him no inheritance in it, no not the breadth of a foot.

I anſwer: though Abraham did not inherit it perſonally himſelfe, yet he may be ſaid to inherit it two wayes:

1. Sacramentally, or Myſtically:
2. In his poſterity.

First, Sacramentally thus; the land of Canaan is to be underſtood, not onely as a Countrey of Aſia, fruitfull and fertill, and plentifull of all good things, wherein the onely viſible Church was confirmed till Chriſts comming. But further, as a Type of the heavenly Canaan, where the triumphant Church raignes in glory with God. And thus Abraham did in his owne perſon inherit it: for he was tranſlated from this world, after his death, into the glory of heaven. And in that reſpect, the glory of heaven is rather called the boſome of Abraham, Luke 16. than of any other the Patriarchs, both for the excellency of his faith, as alſo for that the promiſe of inheriting the land of Canaan, was firſt of all (perſonally) made to him: which becauſe he enjoyed not, hee was recompenced with the fruition of the true Canaan.

A

From hence, wee learne a notable doctrine; That God in performing of his promiſes, giveth not oftentimes the very particular thing promiſed, but ſomething equivalent, or proportionable to it, or elſe better. Thus in the fifth commandement, obedient children are promiſed by God long life, as a reward for honouring their Parents. Now when he takes them away in their beſt age, as he did Ioſias, 2 Kin. 22. 10. he giveth them eternall life; which is not onely proportionable, but farre exceeding the thing promiſed: So here, he promiſeth Abraham the land of Canaan; but when it comes to the performance, he gives him a better, even the true Canaan, the Kingdome of heaven.

B

The uſe hereof, is to teach us wiſdome for the true diſcerning of Gods mercifull performance of his promiſes: for he performeth them not alwayes one way unto his children: ſometime hee giveth the particular thing promiſed, as unto the children of Iſrael, their deliverance out of Ægypt: unto Hezekiah, the reſtoring of his health, and ſuch like. Sometime hee giveth not it, but ſomething which ſhall be as good, or better unto his children: as when they are in ſome great danger, and crave deliverance, or in ſome neceſſity, and have promiſe of ſupply: God oftentimes delivereth them not, but gives them patience, and feeling of his favour in ſuch ſort, as is many degrees more comfortable unto them. And herein God heareth their prayers, and performeth his promiſe to them, to their full contentation.

C

Secondly, Abraham inherited Canaan in his poſterity: For though God promiſed it to himſelfe, when hee was 75. yeares old, Geneſ. 12. 4. and to him and to his ſeed, Gen. 15. 7. yet neither hee, nor his immediate ſeed enjoyed it, but his poſterity the Iſraelites 430. yeares after the promiſe, as S. Paul proveth, Galat. 3. 17. And ſo Abraham inherited it in his poſterity, which is a part of him; and they inherited it many hundreth yeares, even untill the comming of Chriſt.

D

As afore wee learned, that God in the performance of his promiſes, giveth not alwayes the thing promiſed: ſo here let us learne that he doth not alwayes performe them to the ſame parties, and yet moſt truly performeth them. If therefore God doth not to our ſelves, nor in our times accompliſh his promiſes, or prophecies, we muſt not be impatient, but wait in patience. For as the Prophet ſaith, The viſion is yet for an appointed time, but at the last it shall speake and not lie: though it tary, wait for it; it shall surely come, and shall not stay, Hab. 2. 3. To this end David also most divinely saith, Psal. 97. 11. Light is sowen for the righteous, and joy for the upright in heart. See, light and joy belongs unto them: but how? It is sowen, that is, it is in hope and expectation, and not alwaies in fruition. Therefore as the husbandman casts his seed into the earth, and is content to stay almost a ful yeare without it, or any profit of it, and yet is patient all that while, because he is sure it will come, and bring increase with it: So must we wait patiently on the Lord, and know that whatsoever he hath promised, wee or ours after us, shall be sure to enjoy it. And though wee doe not, what great matter is it, if our children doe? For, we know, that oftentimes the Father soweth, and dieth ere the harvest, and so the sonne reapeth. So for Gods great and gracious promises, which are sowen unto the Fathers; if themselves doe not, their children are sure to reape the comfortable harvest of performance. And thus we see how Abraham inherited the land of Canaan, which is called the land of Promise, because it was so long, and so often promised to so many great Patriarkes.

In the second place, it is to bee observed, when God promised this unto Abraham; even then when the land of Canaan was possessed by many mighty Kings: So that it may be here further doubted, how Abraham could take any comfort in this promise, seeing it was at that day held by almost 40. Kings greater and lesse, as wee may see in Joshua, Chap. 10. 11, 12. and further, The people were many, and strong: the Cities were well walled, and full of huge Gyants, Numb. 13. 28, 29. Yet for all this, he not onely beleeves and obeyeth; but as God promised, so hee went to it, and tooke possession, and dyed in this faith, that God would performe his promise, and that his posterity should inherit it all, as afterward indeed they did, even from Moses to Christ. If it be asked how this could bee: the answer is, That Abraham knew that God was King of Kings, and had the world, and Kingdomes of the world in his hand and disposition: and therefore assured himselfe, that hee could bring to passe what he had promised, and make good his word, notwithstanding all such impediments to the contrary. And as he beleeved, it came to passe; his posterity came to it, entred as conquerors, upon this gift of God: and by the power of God, so amazed all these Kings and their people, as some submitted, as the Gibeonites; and they that did not, were all slaine, and their Countreys conquered, as we may reade at large in the book of Iosua: all the stories whereof are briefly comprehended by David in few words, where he saith, Wee have heard with our eares, our fathers have told us, how thou O Lord, drove out the heathen with thy hand, and planted them in: how thou destroyed the people, and made them grow, Psal. 44. 1, 2.

A Out of which, we learne two instructions:

First, that the change of states, and alteration of Kingdomes or common wealths, are in Gods hand: and that he can turne them one way, or other, as it pleaseth him. To this purpose, saith David, in the fore-named Psalme, They inherited not the land by their owne sword, neither did their owne arme save them: but thy right hand, and thy arme, and the light of thy countenance, because thou didst favour them.

This must teach us to pray earnestly, in our daily prayers, for the good estate of this Kingdome, wherein wee live; and of that worthy Prince and Queene, under whose government, we have beene so long, and so liberally blessed. For the welfare and prosperity, the certainty and security of it and her, is not in our policy, B might, munition, ships: nor in the strength of our navie, nor in the power of our armour, nor in the chivalry of our people, nor in the wisdome of our Councell (though for all these wee are a people honoured of our friends, and feared of our enemies:) but in the mighty hand of our God, who (as David saith) beareth rule over the kingdomes of the earth, and giveth them to whomsoever he will, Dan. 4. 22.

Seeing therefore the King of heaven is the giver and establisher, the remover and changer of Kingdomes of the earth; let us assure our selves, that the prayers of Elisha, are the Horses the Chariots of Israel: 2 Kings 13. 14.

And surely, if Elisha for his prayer was acknowledged by the King himselfe, to be his father; then doubtlesse, the godly Ministers, and C such other in our Church, as pray daily for the peace of our Ierusalem, are worthy to be accounted good children of our Church, and worthy members of our state.

Secondly, here wee learne what is the ruine of kingdomes, and overthrow of estates: namely, sinne and ungodlinesse. This is most apparant in the present example. For, why did God take this land from the Cananites, and give it to Abraham and his seed? the Stories of the old Testament answer, Nothing but sinne. In Deuteronomie, Moses chargeth the Israelites, that they doe not after the abhominations of the heathen Cananites: For, saith hee, Because of their abhominable sinnes, God did cast them out before you, [illegible]. 18. 9, 12. And why did not God instantly give it to Abraham (to inherit) after the promise? even because the wickednesse of these Amorites was not then full, Gen. 15. 16. that is, their sinnes were not then ripe. For wee must know, that though God be the absolute and Soveraigne Lord of all Kingdomes, and may dispose them as he will: yet he rather exerciseth his Iustice than his Power; and never overturneth any State, but upon cause of their apparant sinfulnesse. Nor can the Amorites or Cananites plead herein any hard measure: for the same God dealt afterward in the same Iustice with his owne people, giving the kingdome of Iudah to the Chaldeans, and Israel to the Assyrians: and the cause is laid downe most memorably in the Story; When the Israelites sinned against the Lord their God, and walked after the fashions of the heathen, whom the Lord had cast out before them, and did secretly things that were wicked, and made images, and served Idols: and though God warned them by his Prophets, yet would they not obey, but hardened their neckes, and so finally, left all the commandements of God: then the Lord was exceeding wroth with Israel, and cast them also out of his sight, 2 King. 17. from the seventh verse to the 19. Thus sin is able to overturne kingdomes, be they Cananites, Israelites, or whosoever.

Let this teach us all to looke to our lives; and make conscience of all sin; especially great and capitall, and crying sinnes: for the sinnes of a people are wormes and Cankers, eating out the life and strength of a common-wealth. And let our State and government learne here to looke to the reformation of our people, especially for great sinnes. For open prophanenesse, or uncleannesse, or oppressions, or injustice, or extortions, or cruelties, and exactions; all these, or any of these sinnes, raigning in a State, are able to overturne the best established Kingdome on the earth, and will at last (doe power and policy what they can) make the land spew out her inhabitants: and in that meane time (let the wily wits of men, judge as they list) it will prove true, that the sinfull and prophane man is the worst, and the godly and conscionable man the best friend to a State, and best subject in a Kingdome.

Thus much for the second point in Abrahams obedience; namely, the end of it.

The third and last point is the manner of his obedience: which followeth in these words:

And hee went out, not knowing whether hee went.

The manner of this his leaving his Countrey in mans reason would seeme strange; nay, the world will condemne it for plaine foolishnesse, for a man to leave a certainty, for an uncertainty. But it may here bee doubted, how the Apostle can here say, that he knew not whether hee went; seeing these words are not in the story of the old Testament: doth not [illegible] practice allow tradition beside Scripture?

I answer first; We refuse not [illegible]ions, which are agreeable to the Scripture, [illegible] analogy of faith: but such as are agreeable to one of these, wee receive them, though not as Scripture.

Secondly, if the Apostles in the new Testament doe adde any thing in any story, which is not in the old, (as S. Paul doth the names of the Sorcerers of Ægypt, Iannes and Iambres, 2 Tim. 3. 8.) that circumstance by them so added, is to bee holden as Scripture, and no tradition; because they having the same spirit of God, which the writers of the old Testament had, have inserted it into the bodie of Scripture: even as the three sentences of the heathen Poets, alleaged by Saint Paul (Act. 17. 28. 1 Corinthians 15. 33. Titus 1. 12.) have now a divine truth in them, which they had not before.

But yet will some say, The Apostles had these things from the old Testament by tradition; seeing they were not written.

I answer: Wee may safely grant it, and yet our cause loseth nothing, though it may bee they had them by inspiration, and not by tradition, that being as likely, or much more than the other.

Thirdly, but for this particular, I answer, that the Apostle had the words, or at least the matter out of the Story in Genesis. For thus goe the words; God said to Abraham, Goe out of thy Countrey, &c. into the land that I will shew thee: He named none to him, but told him he would shew him one. So then Abraham went out at Gods appointment; and God knew, but hee knew not whither hee went: hee knew well the land hee left, but hee knew not the land hee should have.

But it may bee againe objected, that this is not true: for it appeares, Gen. 12. 5. That Abraham with Sarah his wife, and all their substance, departed to goe into the land of Canaan, and to the land of Canaan they came: therefore hee knew whither hee went; namely, to that land.

I answer: It is true, he went out with purpose and assurance, to inherit a Land promised him by God, but not named to him. And whereas it is there said, Hee went out to goe into the land of Canaan, that is spoken in respect of the performance when hee was come thither, not of the first promise made him at his departure: or of the time when Moses wrote it, not of the time when God spake it to Abraham. And that hee knew not what land God did meane, untill hee came thither, is plaine in the 7. verse, where it is said, That when Abraham had passed thorow all the Countrey, and was come into Canaan, then God appeared to him, and said, This Land will I give unto thy seed: But till then God never named it unto him; and therefore we reade afore, that he beleeved and obeyed upon the generall promise: but now when God did particularly specifie and shew what land, hee then shewed his thankfulnesse to God, and did there build an Altar unto the God that had appeared unto him.

Thus it is cleare, that Abraham went out, not knowing whither hee went. Which being so, it appeares that Abraham did that which the world would call, plaine foolishnesse. To leave known friends for unknown, certaine living for uncertaine, is a simple course in mans reason: at least (the world will say) he might first have demanded of God, what land that was which hee should have, before hee left that which hee had: but Abraham makes no such questions, moves no such doubts: but beleeveth and obeyeth, beyeth, and goeth out of his certaine dwelling (at Gods calling,) though he knew not whereto lodge at night.

This practice of faithfull Abraham, hath profitable use;

First, here we learne, that though Gods commandements seeme foolish, and unreasonable, yet wee must obey them. Christ saith, If a man will ever come in the kingdome of heaven, he must be borne againe, Joh. 3. 3. S. Paul saith, If any man among you seeme to be wise, let him be a foole that he may be wise, 1 Cor. 3. 18. Christ saith, If any man will bee my Disciple, hee must deny himselfe and follow me, Luke 9. 23.

But how can these Commandements be beleeved or done? how can reason beleeve them? how can nature doe them? So disputed the woman of Samaria with Christ, John 4. 11. when Christ told her, he would give her of the waters of life; she replied, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the wel is deepe: whence then hast thou that water of life? Thus wee object and reason against God with carnal objections, and weigh Gods commandements in the ballance of reason: Thus God and his Commandements are much abused by us. And this is the cause wee heare and read Gods word, and profit not by it, because wee ponder it in our reason, and allow not follow it no further, than it agreeth with our naturall affections. As a man that will needs stand under a penthouse, hath no water falling on him, though it should raine never so precious water from heaven: so when the water of life, out of the Word of God, should drop upon our soules, to comfort our consciences, and to wash away our sinnes; we have our devices out of wit, and distinctions out of reason, as penthouses to keepe it from us, that it slides away, and never hath any worke in us. But contrariwise, wee must remember Abraham the Father of our faith: and when wee heare Gods Word, wee must with him captivate our reason, and subdue our affections to it; measure them by Gods word, and not by them; and what wee cannot yeeld to in the obedience of reason, wee must obey with the obedience of faith: and so shall Gods Word have a gracious and powerfull worke in us.

Secondly, here we must learne, that though wee see no profit goine by obeying Gods Commandements, yet we must obey them. For what profit could Abraham see in leaving a certaine living, for an uncertainty? yet hee obeyed and went upon the bare word of God, building upon no, that God hath his word, hee could not go astray. So must we follow God sincerely, and doe his commandements, though no profit seeme can come thereby. But some will say, Shall godly men bee so like blind fond fooles? shall they refuse all meanes of helpe, by wit and policy? This is the way to make them ridiculous, and asses for the wicked world to ride upon.

Ianswer: let godly men use all their wit, and looke with all their eyes, in their actions with men of this world. But in the obedience of Gods commandements, let them doe as Abraham did: follow Gods calling, though it seeme to be to no end.

In obedience to God, we must doe as blinde men doe, who follow their guides, though it be thorow woods and rockes, hils, or dales, or dangerous places, regarding nothing, fearing nothing; onely following and trusting to their guides, who have eyes for them, though they have none for themselves. So must wee follow Gods calling, and yeeld absolute obedience to his commandements, fearing nothing but trusting to the faithfulnesse of his power, and assuredly beleeving, that he being our blessed guide, wee shall not bee misled: this to doe, is true faith.

But alas, how contrary is the practice of the world! Men deale with God, as wee doe with loose chapmen, whom we will not trust without a good pawne. So wee will not obey Gods Commandements, longer than his religion serves our turne: not will wee trust and follow God without the pawns and profits of pleasure. Nay wee doe worse: most men esteeme of God no better, nor use him any better than they doe theeves in their houses. If a man come into our house, that is given to stealing, wee trust him as long as he is in our sight; but if hee be out of our sight, wee thinke ever hee is stealing. So if men see the meanes of Gods providence, they will take his word, and trust it; but else God must excuse them, they may not trust him further than they see him. And if the commandements of God, sound to their content, and tend to their profit, they will obey them: but if not, they will cast them behinde their backe: at least, they will make a pause at the matter, and take their owne time. And if Gods wayes seeme pleasant and profitable, they will walke in them: or else they will leave them, and walke in their owne.

And hence is it, that men in distresses, runne to Wizards, and Wise men; others deale fraudulently, and deceitfully: others worke on the Sabbath day: and thus by indirect and unlawfull dealing, they labour to entrich themselves, and to bring their purposes to passe. And why all this? but because Gods commandements doe not sound to their purpose, nor tend to their profit, and therefore they will not obey them.

If these men had been in Abrahams case, they would never have gone out, not knowing whether to goe: but they would have argued the matter with God, and have thought it good wisdome to pause well, afore they leave a certainty for an uncertainty. But contrariwise, Abraham thought it foolishnesse to reason with God, and therefore performed obedience: and for this cause, he and his faith are renowned to this day namely, 3000. yeares after him, and shall bee all the worlds end.

This was the obedience of faith: and this to doe, is to be true subjects to Gods Kingdome. If the King call a man from his owne living, to come to him selfe and to the Court; who will not leave what he hath of his owne, and trust his word? So who will not leave his own wisdome, and relie on the promise and word of God: and obey his commandements, though there seeme at the first, no profit can come thereby. Thus shall we be sure, both to have sufficient for this world, and shall also be true children of faithfull Abraham.

Hitherto of the first example of Abrahams faith.

By Faith hee abode in the land of promise, as in a strange country, as one that dwelt in tents with Isaac and Jacob, heires with him of the same promise.

HEre is the second example of Abrahams Faith, and the fifth in order, and is concerning Abrahams abiding, or dwelling in that land wherinto God had called him: and this he also did by faith. As hee went out of his owne countrey, and came into Canaan, by the power and leading of his faith, so by the same faith he abode and dwelt in the same land.

The parts are two:

1. The Action of Abrahams faith, in the 9. vers.
2. The Reason of that his so doing, in the 10.

The Action in the 9. vers. is spoken of two wayes:

1. It is laid downe to be his abiding in the land of promise.
2. It is amplified by two circumstances:

1. The manner how he dwelt there, in two points:
   1. As a stranger, or in a strange country.
   2. As one that dwelt in tents, and not in houses.
2. The persons with whom: with Isaac and Jacob, Heires with him of the same promise.

The first point in order, is his dwelling in the land of Canaan (called here the land of Promise.)

By faith he abode in the land of Promise.]

Canaan is now called the land of Promise, because it was promised in the verse afore-going, as we then heard: so that the meaning is, he abode in that land, which was promised him, when he came out of his own countrey. Which countrey Abraham knew not by name, when he left his own, nor till he came thither: but then God told him, This is the land I will give thee and thy seed, Gen. 12.7. In this land thus promised, Abraham dwelt and remained the rest of his life, which was an hundreth yeares.

In this action of Abraham, are three particular points:

1. He dwelt in Canaan.
2. That Canaan was the land of Promise.
3. He dwelt there by faith.

For the first: Concerning Abrahams dwelling in Canaan, divers questions may bee moved:

First, how it is true, that he abode or dwelt there? Seeing it is apparant in the Story, hee dwelt in Ægypt, Gen. 12.10. and in Gerar, Gen. 20.1.

I answer: The meaning is not, that he staied there every day of his life; but that he lived and died there, and made it the place of his residence and ordinary habitation, whereunto hee alwayes resorted againe, if any occasion drew him abroad.

And further, he went not into Ægypt, but upon such speciall cause, as could not otherwise be helped, as upon a famine or such like, Genes. 12.10. then there came a famine in the land, therefore Abraham went downe into Ægypt to sojourn there. Where it appeares: first, that the cause was extraordinary: secondly, that he went not to make any dwelling, but to sojourne there for a time, and then to repaire home againe.

Where we learne, that a man is not to depart out of that land, where God hath appointed him to dwell, but upon good and sufficient causes: so when those causes cease, which drew him out, hee is not to stay longer from home, but to repaire againe to the place of his ordinary dwelling. God would have a mind dwell at home: and it is levitie, and a token of an inconstant minde, and a running head, for a man to desire to be alwayes abroad.

Birds flie abroad, but so as they may come to their nests at night: so men should endevour, as much as may be, so to take few occasions of being from their dwellings: and when they needs must, to let it bee for as short a time as may bee. For as it is a signe of a light woman, Prov. 7.11. Her feet cannot abide in her house: so is it of an unstaied man, upon every occasion to be carried from home.

Wee must therefore follow holy Abraham, who is here commended for abiding or dwelling in the Countrey, which God had given him.

Againe,

Againe, this practice of Abrahams faith, condemnes the wandring beggers to bee an unfaithfull and ungracious generation. Our Land (by the abuse of our peace and plenty) is full of such. Aske them where they dwell: their answer is, They have small dwelling; but looke into the matter, and they have the largest dwelling of all: for they dwell every where, and all abroad; they count it bondage to be tied to one Town, or dwell in one parish, and thinke it freedome and liberrie to dwell everie where. These are Caterpillers of a Common-wealth, and the greatest robbers of the poore that are. Common Theeves steale from rich men: but these steale from the poore; they get that from men, which the true poore should have. No good comes to Church nor Common-wealth by these men, but much hurt to both. For, a finger cut off from his place, is of no use: so, a man living out of his calling, and out of his place, is of no use in the bodie politike.

Happy will it be with our Church and State, when we have such lawes, and such execution of them, as that this disorder may be reformed, and every man confined to his owne dwelling, and none suffered to live in our Kingdome, who is not of some Parish: for let us be assured, so many wandring beggers, so many blemishes in our government.

Thirdly, Abrahams dwelling in this Land (being a fruit of his faith) teacheth us, it is no good token, but an ill signe for a man to be uncertaine in his dwelling. It is the fashion of many men, if they travell, they never lodge at one place twice: and for their dwelling, it is not certaine; but now in the North, now in the South: now in this parish, now in that: now in this jurisdiction, now in another: Sometime in the Cities, sometime in the Countrie. Who be these? But either such as be in debt, and purpose to deale ill with their Creditors; or that are malefactors, and hereby labour to avoid the censure of Authoritie: or else they be Papists, which by this meanes labour to lurke unseene, and to escape the law; as many of them doe, either by skipping out of one Parish, Diocesse, Countrie, or Province into another, and so avoiding the authoritie of all: or else, by lurking in great Cities, and so lying as Sojourners, and not as Parishioners, unseene or unmarked in so great multitudes. Let our authoritie take the more carefull notice of such men, the more craftily they labour to creepe from under it: and let such men know, they discover themselves the more by this practice, to be unfaithfull either to God, or Men, or both: seeing that God here commends Abraham for dwelling or staying in that place, which God had appointed him. And so much for this question.

Againe, it may here be demanded: How Abraham might lawfully dwell in Canaan, seeing it was then Idolatrous. It may seeme, that therefore it is no: unlawfull for men to dwell in Popish or Idolatrous Countries.

I answer: Abraham did not so upon any private motion, nor for any worldly cause, but upon speciall warrant and calling from God: otherwise his so doing, had not beene justifiable: therefore that practice of his cannot be a warrant for any to doe the like, without the like cause and calling.

But how could Abraham be preserved from the contagion of Idolaters, living amongst them? I answer;

First, God that called him thither, did there preserve him. Againe, Abraham lived in the Countrey, but conversed not with the people at all, but in some necessary and civil affaires: and by this meanes escaped the danger of infection.

Where we may learne, that if any man would live in such places, without hurt to their conscience, let them first be sure that they have a calling and warrant from God, to live in those Countries. Secondly, let them converse with Idolaters warily and sparingly, and so shal they preserve themselves from the occasions of evill, as Abraham did, who abode in an Idolatrous Country; and so, though not without danger, yet without hurt to his religion. Thus we see Abraham dwelt in the land of Canaan.

Now secondly, this Land is called the Land of Promise: that is the Land formerly promised him by God, when he called him out of his owne Countrey. And it is likely that the Apostle doth not here first of all call it so, but that it was knowne generally among the Patriarks by that name: and that Abraham himselfe did first of all so call it; who when he looked upon it, and considered the fruitfulnesse and excellencie of it, did evermore remember and call to minde, this land is promised to me, this is mine by promise. And herein he rested and satisfied himselfe, though he had not the possession of it.

Here we may see the excellency of true faith: which depends upon the promises of God, though they be unperformed. A Land of promise contents Abraham, he leaves the possession to his posteritie. It is hard to finde such faith in the world: it is land in possession which we looke for: a Land of promise cannot contents: but let us labour to practise faith, and so take comfort in the promises of God, and leave the performance to Gods appointed time.

Thirdly, he dwelt in this land by faith. And no marvell: for had it not beene by faith, he would never have dwelt there, where he had not so much as a roome for his Tent to stand in, but he must borrow it; nor to burie his dead, but he must buy it. This was against reason: yet by faith he dwelt there, as afore by faith he left his owne, which was also against reason. Where still the power of faith is magnified to be such, as it will carrie a man over all impediments of obedience, and will give him victory not against one, but against all objections; and power to performe not one, but many things contrary to carnall wisdome.

We must here learne to examine, whether we have a true and sound faith or no. If wee have, then we must not doe some one or few actions in faith, or die in faith, but we must live by faith, the whole course of our lives. We must walke by faith, and not by sight, saith the Apostle, 2 Corinth. 5. 7. So saith he of himselfe, Galat. 2. 20. I live by the faith in the Sonne of God: he saith not, he hopes to die in that faith, but he lives by it. And in the former place hee saith not, we must set a step or two, but we must walke by faith, which argueth a continued action: and therefore it is that Saint Peter saith, Gods children are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, 1 Peter, 1. 5. In which words two things are spoken of faith: the first is affirmed; namely, that faith preserveth a man to salvation through all hindrances, either of inward temptations, or outward crosses, which the devill or the world can lay in his way. This preservation is one of the greatest workes in the world, and therefore it is worthily ascribed to God: the power of God preserveth us, but through faith. The second is implyed, that therefore we must labour to keepe that faith evermore with us, which must keepe us, and to cherish and preserve that that must preserve us to salvation. David was an excellent practitioner hereof: no man was more tried and tossed than he, yet he ever drew neere unto God, Psal. 73. 28. Indeed sometime hee said, all men were liars, but that was in his feare, Psal. 116. 11. And againe, I am cast out of thy sight, but that was in his haste, Psal. 31. 22. that is, when the force of some passion, or the violence of some temptations did carrie him headlong: but other wise he ever lived the life of faith.

So must we not thinke to live in sensuality, and die in faith: but to live by faith in all our actions, from one day to another, meditating daily on Gods promises, and beleeving them, and relying on them, and applying the generals to our owne selves, and practising faith by making conscience of sinne, and inuring our selves to patience and long-suffering. Thus doing, we shall be children of faithfull Abraham, who first by faith left his owne Country, and then by faith also dwelt still in the land of Canaan. And thus much for the action of his faith, He abode in the Land of Promise.

Now follow the circumstances of the action, which are two: 1. The manner how: 2. The Persons with whom.

The manner is laid downe in two points:

1. As a stranger.
2. As one that dwelt in tents.

The first point, for the manner, is laid downe in these words:

As in a strange Country.]

The meaning is: he esteemed it a strange Country to him, and accounted himselfe a stranger in it. Against which it may be objected, that he was familiarly acquainted with Mamre, Aner, and Eshcol, three great and mightie men of that Country: that hee and they were confederates together, Gen. 14. 13. therefore it seemes he lived not like a stranger in the Country.

Some answer, that these three were not Cananits, but neere a-kinne to Abraham, and had other names: but the Text is plain in that place, that Mamre was an Amorite, and the other two were his brethren. Therefore the answer is, that in all likelihood they three were Proselytes, and that by Abrahams godly perswasions they had renounced Idolatry, and were come to the knowledge of the true God; and that they joyned with Abraham in the worship of the true God, and so were his converts: whereupon Abraham (as he might lawfully) conversed with them as his familiar friends. And hereof there are two Inducements:

First, it is said, Gen. 14. 13. that they were confederates with Abraham: and it appeared so by their deeds; for they joyned their powers, and assisted him in the warre against the Kings, (Gen. 14. 24.)

Secondly, it is said, Gen 14. 13. That Abraham dwelt on the land of Mamre: hee was his Tenant or Farmour. Now, it is more than likely, Abraham would not have so farre beene beholden to them, but that they were true Christians, and of his owne religion.

Therefore this hinders not, but he might be a stranger notwithstanding, unto the body of the people; and that it is true that Abraham saith of himselfe to some of them, Gen. 23. 4. I am a stranger and a Sojourner amongst you.

But it may then bee demanded, Why did Abraham live amongst them as a stranger, and in that land as a Sojourner?

I answer: the reasons were divers: First, he had title given to that Land, but no possession; he therefore contented himselfe with that that God gave him, and chalenged not any possession all the dayes of his life, but bought or borrowed of Mamre the place where hee lived and dwelt, (Gen. 14. 13.) and of the Hittites a place of buriall, Gen. 23. 3, &c.

This may teach all men not to be too hastie, in seeking for that, that it may be is their right: let not men prescribe their owne times, nor be their owne carvers, but leave their affaires to Gods disposing, and enter no further than they see God goeth afore them: Abraham must be a stranger in his owne land; and thou sometime must be content for a time to bee a stranger to that which is thine owne.

Secondly, they were all of them for the most part heathen Idolaters, amongst whom Abraham would not converse, but as sparingly as might be. Now if Abraham would be a stranger in his owne Country, rather than live familiarly with Idolaters; It sheweth how litle faith, and lesse conscience they have, who can be content to live in the middeſt of Idolaters, where they have nothing to do, and can converſe with them in all familiaritie, without any ſcruple of conſcience. Abraham made himſelfe a ſtranger at home to avoid Idolatrie; but they will make themſelves at home in a ſtrange Country, to intangle themſelves in Idolatrie: theſe men will hardly prove the children of Abraham.

tent

Theſe reaſons Abraham himſelfe had in this his ſo doing.

There is a third, a more ſpirituall, or myſticall reaſon; and that reaſon God had in making Abraham live in Canaan as a ſtranger; namely, to teach all Chriſtian men their duty to the worlds end.

Abraham is the Father of the faithfull, Rom. 4. 11. And this is our honour, to be the children of Abraham, wee muſt therefore follow our Father in his faith, and in the practice of it: we muſt live in this world as Pilgrims and Strangers, even in the middeſt of all our peace and proſperitie, of all our libertie, riches, lands, and poſſeſſions; yea, of all our worldly friends and acquaintance. If it ſeeme ſtrange how this can be: I anſwer, the practice of it conſiſts in ſix actions:

Firſt, wee muſt not bathe our ſelves in the pleaſures of this world. Pilgrims take but little delight in their journies, becauſe they thinke themſelves not at home. This is S. Peters argument: Dearely beloved, as ſtrangers and pilgrims abſtaine from fleſhly luſts which fight againſt the ſoule, 1 Pet. 2. 11. For too much delight in fleſhly pleaſures, ſmothers the grace of God in us, and lets looſe all ſinnes, and gives life unto all corruptions.

Secondly, we muſt uſe this world as though we uſed it not: that is, even the neceſſary comforts and delights thereof: they be the very words of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 7. 31. For ſo the Pilgrim, when hee paſſeth thorow a ſtrange Countrie, hath not his minde troubled with looking or thinking on the goods and commodities of that Country where he is; but uſing as much thereof, as is neceſſary for him, all his thoughts are on his owne Country. So ſhould we, when we are in our beſt eſtates, in our greateſt jollitie, in the midſt of our wealth and abundance of pleaſures, caſt our minds from them, and have our thoughts even then converſing in heaven, where is the place of our abode. This is likewiſe the Apoſtles exhortation, Philip. 3. 20. Worldly men make their bellie their god: that is, drowne themſelves in carnall pleaſures, ſo far, as they forget any other God, any other heaven. But we muſt not doe ſo: our converſation muſt be in heaven, from whence we looke for our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

Thirdly, we muſt have a ſerious care and endevour to pleaſe God: for all the earth is his, and we are but ſojourners in his ſight: therefore as the Pilgrim is careful to pleaſe the Lord of the Countrey, by whoſe leave he travels thorow it: ſo muſt we be to pleaſe the Lord; ſeeing as

A God ſaith, Levit. 25. 23. The Land is his, and we are but ſtrangers and ſojourners with him.

And hereunto adde a fourth, which is neere a-kinne unto it: We muſt caſt all our care on God, ſeeing that hee is the Lord of the earth, and wee are but Pilgrims and Sojourners. David ſaith, Pſal. 24. 1. The earth is the Lords, and all that therein is. The ſame David confeſſeth, Pſalm. 39. 12. Hee is a ſtranger before God, and a ſojourner as all his Fathers were, and thereupon deſireth God to heare his praier, hearken to his crie, and not to keepe ſilence at his teares: as though he had ſaid, Inaſmuch as I ſojourn with thee, thou art to heare my complaint. For as a Sojourner cares nor lookes for nothing, but depends on them for all things with whom he
B ſojournes, ſo muſt we caſt all our care on God: for he careth for us, he is our Landlord, we are his Farmours and Tenants, we hold the earth from him, by no leaſe of yeares, but at his will, and it is lent us: let us therefore but have care to pleaſe this our Landlord, and care for nothing.

Fifthly, we muſt give continuall thanks and praiſe to God for his good bleſſings we receive in this world: for all are his, and wee are but ſtrangers. Thus did all Gods Saints in old time; Iacob, He was leſſe than the leaſt of Gods mercies. But eſpecially there is one memorable example of David, and the Church in his daies, 1 Chron. 29. 13, 14, 15, 16. When hee had prepared abundantly for the building of the C Temple, hee proſtrated himſelfe before God, and in his owne name and the peoples ſaid thus; Riches and honour come of thee, therefore our God, wee thanke thee, and praiſe thy glorious name. But who am I, and what is my people, that we ſhould offer unto thee? for all is thine, and of thine owne have we given thee: for we are ſtrangers before thee, and ſojourners, as all our Fathers were. Thankfulneſſe beſeemes all men, eſpecially ſtrangers. Therefore as Pilgrims doe thankfully accept the favours ſhewed them in a ſtrange Country; ſo muſt we, all the bleſſings God gives us in this world, where we are but ſtrangers.

Sixthly and laſtly, we muſt haſten to the kingdome, as a Pilgrim doth to his journeyes end,
D or to his owne Countrey: and till he can, is alwayes thinking of it, and ſighing after it: ſo muſt we (who are not dwellers but ſojourners in theſe houſes of clay) long after heaven, and as S. Paul ſaith, he did covet to remove from hence, and to dwell with the Lord. Strangers are not to take ſuch pleaſure in forren Countries, as to forget their owne. So Chriſtians muſt not bee ſo in love with this world, as to forget or neglect the world to come. If they doe, they are unworthy of it, and ſhew themſelves not ſtrangers, as Abraham here was; but men of this world, who have their portion in this life. Pſal. 17. 14.

In performing theſe ſix actions, men ſhew themſelves ſtrangers in this world. And thus muſt we doe, even in the midſt of all worldly pro-

proſperitie, if we looke ever to enjoy the glory of a better: And thus doing, we ſhall be children of faithfull Abraham, who dwelt in the land of Canaan, as in a ſtrange Countrey.

As one that dwelt in tents.]

The ſecond point for the manner, how Abraham dwelt in Canaan, is, that he built himſelfe no houſes, nor made Orchyards or Gardens, but dwelt in tents or tabernacles; which were ſuch houſes as now are uſed in warre, and are yet called by the ſame name, Tents, or Pavilions: whoſe matter is not wood, nor ſtone, but cloth, ſtuffe, or skinnes; and are eaſily reared and ſoone taken downe: and when a man departeth, he may carrie his houſe with him. That Abraham did thus, appeares in the Stories written of him. He came to Bethel, and there pitched his tent, Gen. 12. 8. and Gen. 13. 18. he removed his tent: and 18. 1. God appeared unto him, as he ſate in his tent doore: and 18. 9. being asked where Sarah was, he anſwered, ſhe is within the tent: and theſe tents are called his place, Geneſ. 18. 33. and his houſe, 24. 2. Out of all which places it is plaine, that he dwelt in tents, and that not onely at his firſt comming, when he had not time to build him a houſe, but even all the dayes of his life after his comming into the land of Canaan.

But why did Abraham dwell in tents, and not in houſes? was it becauſe then there were no houſes? not ſo: For there were cities built even afore the flood, Gen. 4. 17. Cain built a Citie: no marvell therefore if there were many after, as Sodome and all her ſiſters. And though it appeares not they digged into the earth for naturall ſtone, yet had they Bricke, which they made themſelves, Geneſ. 11. 3. and ſurely the world, which built the huge tower of Babel, Gen. 11. would not ſticke to build themſelves houſes. Nor can it be ſaid, that thoſe cities, Sodome, Gomorrha, and the reſt were nothing but a multitude of tents together. For we read, Gen. 19. 3. that Lot dwelling in Sodome, received two Angels into his houſe: and the 4. verſe, that the Sodomites came and invironed his houſe round about to take them, thinking they had beene men: and when Lot refuſed to deliver them, that they preſſed ſore upon the houſe to have broken up the doore: but all this might have bin ſpared, if it had beene nothing but a tent, which a child may cut in peeces with a knife. It is manifeſt then, that there were houſes in thoſe dayes. Why then did Abraham build none? was it becauſe hee was poore and could not? Not ſo: for contrariwiſe, Gen. 12. 5. He carried with him from his owne Country, all the ſubſtance he poſſeſſed. And what that was, is particularized, Gen. 13. 2. He was very rich in cattell, in ſilver, in gold. His riches were both great and of the beſt. So then he could, but would not. But why would he not? Was it upon a proud humour, or in a conceited ſingularitie, becauſe he wold not be like other men, but have a ſingular way of his owne? No: Abraham was none of A thoſe, who allow nothing, but that is done of themſelves; and who thinke nothing good, if it be ordinary: for he was an holy man, and famous for his faith. So then none of theſe were the reaſons of this his ſo doing.

The reaſons then why Abraham, and other holy Patriarches, uſed to dwell in tents, and not to build them houſes, were of two ſorts, Civil, and Holy.

The Civil or Politike reſpect that they had was this;

They holding themſelves Gods ſervants, did depend on his word; and therefore did ſubmit themſelves to goe up and downe the world, whitherſoever God did call them. Being then to remove every day (they knew not when nor whither) it was therefore both the fitteſt, B and cheapeſt, to dwell in tents, which were ſoon pitched up, and ſoone taken downe. Neither need it ſeeme ſtrange that they could live for cold, in thoſe poore thin tents all the yeare long: for the countrey and climate there was alwaies temperate enough for cold: and rather inclining to too much heat.

The holy or religious reſpect was this: They held themſelves but ſtrangers upon earth, and therefore would not build themſelves cities or houſes; as looking or caring to live upon earth: but dwelled in tents, as ſeeming deſirous to remove from the earth to heaven: the ſooner the better. And this did the Fathers of the old Teſtament: not that they thought it unlawfull to C build cities, or dwell in houſes; but that they might teſtifie their religion, and expectation of another world, in the midſt of that profane age wherein they lived; wherein there were almoſt none, that either regarded, remembred, or acknowledged a world to come.

And this was not the particular, or ſingular deed of Abraham alone. All holy men in thoſe dayes, lived in tents, Gen. 9. 21. It is cleare that Noah dwelt in tents, though then he was King of all the world. And ſo did Lot alſo as long as he lived with Abraham: Geneſ. 13. 5. Lot had ſheepe, and cattell, and tents. And thus they did, becauſe (as the Apoſtle ſaith) they had here no enduring citie, but they ſought for one to come, Hebr. 13. 14. And they thought, they ever D heard that voice ſounding in their eares, Micah. 2. 10. Ariſe and depart, for this is not your reſt.

Contrariwiſe, the wicked of the world, becauſe they ſet their reſts in this world, and cared for no other: they began preſently to build them houſes, nay cities, (as Cain did even in the beginning) Gen. 4. 17. And the Sodomites had a citie even walled (as is likely,) for Lot was ſitting in the gate of Sodome, when the two Angels came to him, Gen. 19. 1, 2. And the Cananites had cities walled exceeding high: (Numb. 13.) But wee finde not, that ever Gods children build them cities, untill they came to have a ſetled Church of their owne. But contrariwiſe, it is worth obſerving, that God promi-

seth his people, that they shall come and dwell in cities which they built not: namely, which were built by worldly men to their hand. And thus we see the reasons why Abraham dwelt in tents. Now let us see the use of it.

First, here we learne frugalitie, out of the civil use of their tents: that is, to use the blessings and comforts of this life, as soberly, and sparingly as may be: as to bestow as little cost as may be of our selves, in such things as perish in the using: namely, meat, drinke, apparell, and houses. For what is spent herein, is spent only on our selves: and being spent, is gone: therefore the lesse, the better: alwaies provided there be a discreet care had of our healths, and of the credit of the places we hold: and of our inabling to the duties of our calling. Which being sufficiently provided for, it is a Christian frugalitie to spare, what further may be spared: and he hath the lesse to answer for, who spendeth the least in superfluities.

Againe, here we are taught contentation in the state which God hath appointed us, and not to strive too fast to climbe to wealth. These holy men can bee content to dwell in tents, and tabernacles, though they might have compassed much more: for they were great and mighty men. Abraham had 318. men, able to beare a sword, in his house daily: and with them and a little more helpe, he overthrew divers Kings, and rescued Lot, Gen. 14. 14. He that durst incounter, and did overcome such an hoste: how many inhabitants of the country, could he have beat out of their houses? And how many tenants could hee have put out of their livings? And how much of that country could he have incloſed to himselfe? Surely, even as much and as many as he had pleased. Yet doth he no such thing: but contrariwise, considering himselfe to be but a tenant under God, he is content to let everie man sit quietly by him, and himselfe to dwell in tents; rather than to incroach one foot further than God bade him, though hee had beene able.

This checketh the pride, or covetousnesse, or ambition, or all, of such as joyne house to house, Land to Land, Lordshippe unto Lordshippe, Towne to Towne; and care not how many mens houses they pull downe to build one of their owne: nor how many men want land and living, so they have their parkes, and pastures, gardens, and orchyards, and all other delights they can devise. These are so farre from Abrahams minde, who desired onely so much land, as his tent might stand on, and might feed his cattell; as they can incloſe and make severall to themselves, that which in common should bee the living of many soules. But what can befall such men? but that that Esay prophesieth unto them, Esa. 5. 8. Woe bee unto them that joyne house to house, and land to land, till there bee no place left for the poore to dwell in.

Thirdly, in that Abraham lived thus, as ready ever to depart into any other countrey, when God would call him: It sheweth that true faith doth never limit Gods hand, either in the greatnesse or length of trials, but submitteth it selfe wholly to his will, being resolved and content to suffer all trials, how great soever, and how many soever God pleaseth to lay upon a man. Reason would have said, I have left one country at Gods Word: if I must leave another, then I shall never know an end, nor have any thing certaine to trust to. But faith saith, As I have left one countrey at Gods calling, so upon his word I will leave twenty more. For God hath as good reason to bid me the second time, as the first; and his love cannot faile me: he may still trie me, but can never leave me. Thus spake Abrahams faith. And not he alone: for Iob, though hee crie out of the violence of his temptation, The arrowes of the Almightie are in me, and the venome thereof doth drinke up my spirits, and the terrours of God do fight against me, Chap. 6. 4. yet when faith comes to play his part, hee then protesteth, that though God kill him, yet he will trust in him, and he shall be his salvation, Chap. 13. 15. See Abrahams faith will lead him from countrie to countrie; and Iobs will carrie him thorow life and death. And noble David is not behinde for his part: for he will lose his kingdome, if God will have it so: 2 Sam. 15. 26. If (saith David) God say, I have no delight in thee; loe here I am, let him doe to mee (not what I in my reason could wish, but) what seemeth good in his eyes. Behold now in these holy men, the practice and obedience of true faith. It prescribes not God the measure how long, or how farre he shall afflict us: but makes a man resigne up himselfe wholly, his causes, his livings, his countrey, his kingdome, his life and all, to bee at Gods disposing. Hee that can doe thus may have joy in himselfe, as being assuredly one of the children of faithfull Abraham.

Fourthly, in that Abraham in a strange countrey will not build him an house, but dwel in tents which daily are removeable; Here may such men learne, as are travellers, or factors, or sojourners in forren countries, not to thrust themselves too hastily into societie and familiaritie with the people of those countries where they sojourne. Abraham will not build him a house in a strange countrie, but will dwel in tents, that so he may the easier remove: even so, let no man fix and fasten himselfe too hastily in a strange countrey, but live so, as he may easily remove, when hee seeth good cause.

Fifthly, Abraham who in his owne country (it is likely) had his house, in a strange country will have none, but will dwell in tents. His practice must teach us, even so, not to build us houses in this world, where we are strangers, but to set our tent here, and to looke for our house in heaven. Literally wee are not bound to doe as Abraham did, but mystically wee must doe it: the the ſtate of our bodies here, is but a tent or a tabernacle; the ſtate of our ſoules in heaven, is a ſtrong houſe. Wee muſt therefore ſay with the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 5. 1,2. We are willing that this earthly tabernacle were deſtroyed, and deſire to be cloathed with our houſe which is from heaven. Carnall and worldly men build their houſe in this world; that is, have all their care for their body: but if we follow our father Abraham, and eſteeme our life, and bodies, but as tabernacles preſently to be removed, and build our houſes in heaven, then walke wee here in the ſteps of his faith, after this life ſhall attaine his reward.

For the ending and knitting up of this point, it may bee asked, How this can bee any ſuch commendation to him, ſeeing that wicked men have uſed to dwell in tents?

I anſwer: never any of them, but in two caſes: firſt in time of warre, where armies lying abroad in the fields, or in the ſiege of cities, muſt needs lie in tents; and ſo doe all men Chriſtian or Heathen to this day: or ſecondly, ſuch as kept ſheepe did for their cattels ſake lie abroad in tents; as it is recorded of Iabal, one of Cains poſteritie, Gen. 4.20. that he was the father of all them that dwell in tents, and ſuch as have cattell. In which words, obſerve how their dwelling in tents, and having cattell are put together: And ſo the Arabians, great keepers of cattell, doe in Arabia (being a hot countrey) to this day. So that it is cleare, the wicked dwelt in tents, either for neceſſitie ſake in the war, or elſe for profit ſake with their cattell; but that for no ſuch cauſe, but for their owne ſakes: and becauſe they eſteemed themſelves ſtrangers in the world, it was never found that any ungodly man dwelt in tents all his life: but that it was alwaies a practice of holy and faithfull men, untill they came to have a ſettled Church and ſtate of their owne.

And thus much for the manner how Abraham dwelt in Canaan: 1. as a ſtranger: 2. dwelling in tents.

Now follow the Perſons with whom.

With Iſaac and Iacob, heires with him of the ſame promiſe.]

The ſecond Circumſtance is the Perſons with whom: they were Iſaac and Iacob: his ſonne and his grandchild. But it may firſt of all be asked, to what clauſe is this referred, whether to Abrahams dwelling in Canaan, or to his being there a ſtranger, or to his dwelling there in tents. The anſwer is; to them all three: Hee dwelt there with them, he was a ſtranger with them, he dwelt in tents with them, and they with him. Now the meaning is not, that they dwelt together with Abraham in the ſame tents, at the ſame time, (for Iſaac was not borne till Abraham was an hundred yeares old, and Iacob was but yong when Abraham died:) But that the ſame promiſe made to Abraham, God renewed after to them, firſt to Iſaac, and then to Iacob: which they alſo beleeved as Abraham A did, and by the power of that faith were content to dwell in tents, as ſtrangers, as he had done before them.

But why doth he name none but Iſaac and Iacob? did no other dwell in tents, and thinke themſelves ſtrangers, but they? yes, many other: but theſe two are named above any other, both for that they were next Abraham in time, and in blood, and in faith alſo; for their faith was ſo excellent, as God is called the God of theſe three men, more ſpecially than of any other in the world: but in and under theſe two, are all other underſtood, who embracing the ſame promiſe, did therefore as ſtrangers dwell in tents.

From hence wee learne divers excellent inſtructions: B

Firſt, ſee here a notable worke of faith; I meane of true faith in the promiſes of eternall life: namely, that it conformeth the beleevers one to another, both in the inward diſpoſition of heart, and outward converſation of life. God hath made this promiſe, That he ſo loved the world, that hee gave his onely begotten ſonne, that whoſoever beleeveth in him ſhould not periſh, but have life everlaſting. Now as this promiſe is one, ſo is the faith that apprehends it; and this faith being one, conformeth all that have it, and makes them like one to another in the obedience of Gods Commandements. This is that that the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, Act. 4. 32. The beleevers were all of one heart, and one ſoule: and that not one of them, but the whole multitude of them that beleeved. And Eſay propheſieth, that in the Kingdome of Chriſt ſhall be ſuch uniformitie and peace, as that though men in their natures be as contrary one to another, as ſheepe and wolves, lyons and kids, young children and ſerpents: yet by grace and faith in Chriſt, they are changed, and all conformed one to another, ſo as they ſhall live and conſent together in the unitie of one obedience: Eſa. 11.6,7.

The Booke of the Pſalmes was penned by David, Aſaph, Moſes, and others, and in ſeveral ages and ſtates of the Church, and were appointed to bee ſung then, for the preſent ſtate of the Church in thoſe dayes. It may therefore be demanded: Why then doe we ſing them now in our Churches? The anſwer is: The Church in all ages conſiſts of a number of beleevers, and the faith is alwayes one, and makes all that apprehend Gods promiſes to bee alike to one another in grace, in meditations, in diſpoſitions, in affections, in deſires, in ſpirituall wants, in the feeling and uſe of afflictions, in courſe and converſation of life, and in performance of duties to God and man: and therefore the ſame Pſalmes, Prayers, and Meditations, are now as fit for the Church in theſe dayes, and are ſaid and ſung with the ſame uſe and profit, as to the Church in thoſe dayes when they were firſt made.

This doctrine hath profitable uſe:

Firſt,

First, if this bee so, here is confuted the opinion and practice of many, who when they are taught, they ought to doe this or this, after the examples of holy men in times past: They answer, they were great and glorious men: they may not thinke to bee like them; and their examples are too high: they may admire them, but not follow them. For example, when they are exhorted to walke with God, as Henoch did, Gen. 5. 24. to refuse the world for Christ, as Moses did, Exod. 2. 10. to spare our enemie being in our power, as David did, 1 Sam. 24. 5, 6, 7. In Magistracy to be able to say, whose Oxe or Asse have I taken, or whom have I done wrong to? as Samuel said, 1 Sam. 12. 3. In the Ministery, to follow the zeale, the patience, and the diligence of the holy Ministers of God in old time; they then answer: that they dare not looke at them, and that they may not thinke to bee like them. But let these men know, that if they have the same faith, they have the same conscience; and that as Isaac and Jacob, though they had not the same measure of faith, that Abraham had, yet having the same faith, were therefore willing to dwell in tents, as hee had done. So, if wee have the same faith that our fathers in times past had; though howsoever wee cannot match them in holinesse, and in vertues, yet wee must seriously labour to be like unto them, and must also practise the same vertues, which they did: for if wee bee heires with them of the same promise, then must wee bee practisers with them in the same obedience.

Secondly, this checketh a great and common prophanenesse, which now raigneth amongst us. We all professe religion: yet come to the practice of religion, the hearing of the word, receiving the holy Sacrament, or prayer, or abstaining from foule and common sinnes; let a man bee in any of these more forward than others, then some are so prophane, as they sticke not to deride and reproach them. But is this to be heires of one and the same promise? Let such men therefore know, that we in this age of the Church, are bound to conforme our selves to the holy lives of the Fathers of the old Church, or else wee have not the same faith that they had. Therefore our duty is to strive, and by all meanes we can, to endevour who should come neerest to their faith, to their zeale, and to their obedience. And if any doe it more than wee doe, wee should rather honour than reproach him.

In the next place, observe here the power of a great mans example, how forcible it is; especially to them of the same kindred. Abraham a grand-Patriarch, a man of honour, hee is contented to dwell in tents, like a stranger in that land which was promised him to be his owne. Isaac his sonne followeth him, and doth so also. Jacob his grand-childe comes after, and hee walketh in both their steps. Let this teach all superiours (be they Parents, Magistrates, A or Ministers) to looke to their wayes: for the higher they be, the more are they followed either in good or evill: Princes in Courts, what Princes doe, there is usually [illegible] any fashion they take up to put in practice (bee it never so strange) is followed of all men. And here wee see, Abraham will have not alone rest, but in rebus Isaac and Jacob will [illegible] so after him.

Thirdly, observe how these three holy men are called heires of the Promise, and they are so called in regard of God. Who as hee made the promise to Abraham, so he renewed the same unto them severally; and withall, gave them grace to apprehend it, and to shew the obedience of their faith, as Abraham did.

B But it is very notable, that they are not called heires of the Land, but of the Promise; for they enjoyed not the land, but the promise, and their seed did afterwards enjoy the land in deed. Where in appeares the excellency of their faith: For they who thus blessedly beleeved, and thus patiently and constantly obeyed God in all duties of holy obedience, having but the promises, how excellent and eminent would their faith and obedience have beene, had they beene partakers of the blessings themselves? And there also must wee learne our duties. For in greater matters than the land of Canaan, we enjoy not the things, the deeds they had but the promises, as namely, the incarnation of the Messias, and the calling of the Gentils: these two great and grand mercies, were looked for by them, but enjoyed by us: they had the promises, but wee the performance. Therefore if our obedience, and patience, and other vertues, be behind theirs, our condemnation must needs bee so much the deeper.

C Much more is to be said of Isaacs and Jacobs faith: but they have severall examples for themselves.

It followeth,

For he looked for a City having a foundation, whose maker and builder is God.

Thus we see the fact of Abrahams faith now followeth the reason that moved him to live in the land of Canaan, as a stranger, and in tents. And the reason is, because he looked for a City, &c. that is, for everlasting life in heaven. This is the substance of the reason; and then that life everlasting is further described in divers particulars: so that these two things are contained in this verse;

D 1. Generally the state of the reason, shewing the height and eminency of Abrahams faith: he looked for everlasting life.

2. A particular description of that life eternall.

In the generall state of the reason, many worthy points are to be considered.

First, in the very contexture, and framing of the reason, observe how Abraham therefore liveth as a stranger, patiently in that country which was his owne, because he looked for heaven after this life. Hence we learne, That hope to winne heaven, worketh patience and contentation in all estates and conditions of life. Thus reasoneth the holy Ghost here; Abraham was content to live in no city, but in tents, as a stranger; for he looked for a better city in heaven. So the Disciples, grieved at Christs departure from them, hee strengtheneth them with this consolation, In my fathers house are glorious mansions, I goe to prepare a place for you, Iohn 14. 2.

The use of this doctrine is necessary for these our daies; wherein are many that will say confidently they looke to bee saved, and hope for heaven: but let any man injury them, or crosse them in the least measure, they breake out into anger and impatience, yea, often into swearing and blaspheming of Gods name. Or if God lay his heavy hand on them or theirs, then instantly they run to wizards, and wise-men; that is, even to the bottome of hell for helpe. These and all such, doe foulely deceive themselves: for if they truly hoped for that city which is in heaven, no small crosse in this world could much trouble them: nor any so great, to drive them into that disquietnesse, as by their oaths they should rend heaven and earth; and as it were confound God and all his creatures. Or if they truly perswaded themselves that God would give them heaven at their end; they would be afraid, and ashamed to run to the devill to remove Gods hand from them: for assuredly that man cares not what God laieth on him in this life, who is perswaded that after this life God will give him heaven.

Secondly, this doctrine gives us a worthy direction for comfort under the crosse. For if Abraham bore all this patiently, because hee looked for heaven; then it must teach us, that when God laieth any crosse on us, if we would have the bitternesse thereof allayed, wee must not looke on it with both our eyes, but with one eye on the crosse, and with the other on the City prepared for us in heaven; where is no crosse, no woe, no sorrow, nor misery: but where God himselfe wil wipe away all teares from our eyes. There can bee no affliction so bitter but this meditation will mitigate it, and yeeld comfort and contentment in the sharpest pangs thereof.

In the second place, Abraham waiting for heaven, when he sojourned on the earth, giveth us an excellent paterne of Christian life. Whilst we are on earth, wee must wait for heaven, and looke, and long after it; there must our joy, and our affections be. So teacheth the Apostle, Col. 3. 1. If ye be risen with Christ, seeke yee the things that are above. And Phil. 3. 20. Wee must have our conversation in heaven, though wee live on earth. How this may bee, cannot be better expressed, than by a comparison:

A merchant that is a free-man in London, and there hath wife, children and living; travelleth as a Merchant into Turkie, or Barbary, or Spaine; there he lives, there is his body, but all his thoughts, and desires of his heart, are at home: and all his care there, is to maintaine his good estate at home: and all the hazard of his life and goods, are to preserve and helpe his estate there. So wee in this world, are but strangers; but wee are freemen in heaven; therefore our thoughts must bee there, and all our cares here should be nothing, but how to procure us sure and good estates in heaven. This if we doe seriously intend, and carefully endevour, then we are good children of Abraham our father; and thus doing, we have our conversation in heaven, though wee live on earth. And this wee should doe the rather, because generally the world is ful of such men: who (as the same place saith) doe minde nothing but earthly things. Now it is an hard thing for a man to be unlike the world, and to resist multitudes, and generall examples: but we must still remember we are Abrahams children, and children must labour to be like their father, and not the common multitudes: and it must more move a good childe, what his father alone doth, than what is done by many other.

Thirdly, let us observe, how God promising Abraham onely the Land of Canaan, that is, a temporall inheritance; he lookes further, for a City in heaven. This he did out of his faith: for he knowing that Canaan was but a type of heaven, therefore in consideration of the earthly Canaan, he arose to a consideration of the heavenly: and in the promise of the earthly, apprehended the heavenly. This is the true and Christian use of all Gods blessings, given in this life: in them to behold better things laid up in heaven, and shadowed in the other. Men use for their use, spectacles in reading: but they take no pleasure in looking upon them, but at other things, by and thorow them: So should Christians, through all temporall blessings looke at spirituall and eternall, which are promised and shadowed under the temporal. Thus doth Christ himselfe teach us, in the very order of the Lords prayer: directing us to pray for temporall blessings first, in the fourth petition; and then for eternall, in the fifth and sixth: as though that the one were introductions and passages to the other. And this made the prophets so ordinarily cover spiritual blessings under temporall, & put temporall deliverances for spiritual, and confusedly oftentimes one for another; because that the holy men of the old Church, did never rest in view of any temporall promise or blessing, but ascended to contemplation of the higher things in them. How pitifull then is the practice of worldly men; who use Gods blessings so, as they daily abuse and pervert them: using meat to glottony, raiment to pride, learning to vaine glory, speech to flattery, wit to deceit, authoritie to revenge, callings to oppression: whereas they are all given to bee helpes in Gods service, and furtherances in religion, and meanes to helpe us towards heaven. These men looke at Gods gifts, with the eye of reason, and no further; but if they looked at them, with the eye of faith, as Abraham did; it would teach them to make a heavenly and spirituall use of them, as he did.

Lastly, in the generall state of the reason, and of Abrahams practice; obserue how he having promise of Canaan, waited for heaven. Now no man waiteth for any thing, but that which hee hath hope of; nor hopeth truly and properly, for any thing, but that which he hath assurance of: for hope maketh not ashamed, Rom. 5. 5. Not worldly hope, for that hath deceived no more than ever trusted it: but hope in God never deceived man; nor went any away disappointed, that hoped in God. Therefore here it is apparant, that hope of heaven goeth with assurance: and this assurance must be particular to the beleever, as the beleefe and faith is.

But the Papists say, This is true indeed of Abraham; he had not onely hope, but full assurance; but that came by extraordinary revelation: So that this is a rare example, and his particular revelation, is no generall warrant to us.

Wee answer from S. Paul, (Rom. 4. 11.) that Abraham is the father of the faithfull; and that his faith is a patterne for all Christians to follow: for else, why doth the Apostle so farre extoll, and set forth that faith of his, above 1300. yeares after his death; shall it be onely for his commendation, and not for our imitation also? Therefore every man that will walke in the steps of holy Abraham, may come with him to that measure of faith, that he may wait for heaven, with assurance to enjoy it.

Now let us come to the particular description of that heaven, which Abraham thus waited for.

A City having a foundation, whose maker and builder is God.]

The description hath three parts:

1. It is said to be a City.
2. That hath a foundation.
3. That God made and built it.

For the first:

Abraham by his faith waited for heaven: But for which? For there are three heavens, or differences of heaven in the Scripture.

The first, that wherein we live and breathe, birds flye, and clouds move.

The second, that wherein the starres are.

The third is that, that is above them both, and is invisible; the seat of Gods glory, where God reuealeth his Majesty in speciall manner to men and Angels. This heaven Abraham waited for. For as for the first, he lived in it: And for the second, he knew it as well as most men: for it is credibly thought, he was a notable Astronomer. So that it was the third heaven, he waited for: which hee knew this world could not give him; and therefore expected it in another.

Now, this heaven which was Abrahams hope, is called a City.

A City properly is a place for the habitation of men, compassed with wals, and distinguished by streets and houses. Now properly heaven (or the estate of holy men in heaven) is not a City; but as else-where in the Scripture, it is called a house, a Tabernacle, a Temple, an inheritance, a kingdome: so is it here called a city; namely, for the resemblance it hath thereunto, which consisteth specially in foure points:

1. A City hath many houses, greater, lesse, and for all sorts. So in heaven also, there are many mansions, John 14. 2. places of glory for all men: none need to feare that hee shall not have fulnesse of joy, and perfect happinesse.

2. A City is built, and at first was ordained to this end; that many citizens might live together in concord and amitie. So the kingdome of heaven is an heavenly city, where the Saints of God shall live in perfect peace and love, with fulnesse of joy every one in himselfe, and each one in another.

3. The goodnesse or excellency of a City consists in this; to have good lawes, good Magistrates to execute them, and good people performing subjection and obedience. Therefore the kingdome of heaven is a most perfect City, wherein Gods lawes are the onely lawes, and they shall be written in mens hearts: where each one is a sufficient governour of himselfe, and yet all subject to God; and their God unto them all in all.

4. A City is a place, where generally are all necessaries and comforts for mans life: one part of the countrey hath this commodity, another that; but in the city are all, either brought into it, or of it selfe. So in heaven are all parts of perfection, and all complements of happinesse, to make the state of Gods children there infinitely blessed.

Such a glorious place is the Citie that was Abrahams hope.

Now for the use hereof.

First, is heaven such a City? Here is a notable comfort to the poore and plaine countryman, who lives in the simplicity of the countrie life, tilling the ground, or keeping cattell; and it may bee, never saw, or (at the least) never tasted of the pleasures and delights of cities: If hee serve God, and keepe a good conscience, here is his happinesse, he shall be citizen in the high and heavenly Jerusalem: that city which was the hope of the holy men of GOD in all ages.

Secondly, this may teach Citizens, in the great, populous, and pompous cities of this world, to labour also to be Citizens in heaven; for that is a city also, and the best on earth are but shadowes of it. And it may shame them that are drowned in the pleasures and delicacies of earthly cities, and care not, nor looke after the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusa- lem: as it is called, Heb. 12. 22. But alas, it seemes they care not for this shame; for where is security, wantonnesse, prophanenesse, oppressions so common, as in these great cities? And as in the Apostles times, the countrey towne Berea, was more zealous and religious, than the rich and stately city of Thessalonica, Acts 17. 11, so is it generally to this day, especially at such places in the countrey, where teaching and knowledge is. But let such cities know, that as they have better meanes and more comforts, and their very nature should put them in mind, and make them in love with heaven; so they shall receive greater damnation.

Lastly, Cities are places of freedome, and all such great places have some notable privileges; therefore men desire to bee free in such places: as is to be seene in London, Rome, Venice, &c. even the greatest persons will bee content to be free of them, and many seeke it, and pay deare for it; or at least, worke a long time for it.

But heaven is the City of cities, the perfection of beauty and true happinesse: therefore let every one, that desires either honour or happinesse, labour and strive to be a freeman of heaven, and never rest till hee know he be. And let those that live in cities, when they are admitted freemen (as daily some are,) remember what a blessednesse it will be, if they can be admitted freemen of the glorious Citie which is above; and how little that shall availe them, if they want this, which was the hope and joy of Abraham, and all holy men.

To goe further: this City which Abrahams faith waited for, is described by two points:

1. That it hath a foundation.
2. That the maker and builder was God.

For the first, heavenly Jerusalem hath a foundation, such a one, as no city in this world hath: and by this phrase, the holy Ghost insinuates unto us, what bee the properties of heaven; which be two:

1. The state of heaven is unchangeable.
2. Everlasting and eternall.

First, the state of the Elect in heaven, and their glory there, is not subject to corruption, or the least alteration; as appeareth in that notable and lofty description of the heavenly Jerusalem, Apoc. 21. 14, and from the 10. vers. to the 21. It hath a great wall and high, twelve gates, twelve Angels for porters: and the wall had twelve foundations, of twelve sorts of most excellent pretious stones: and the wall it selfe was Iasper, and the city pure gold, like chrystall. The state of it is shadowed by precious stones, and gold: to signifie, as well the durablenesse, as the excellency thereof. And in the 15. Psal. 1. it is called the mountaine of Gods holinesse: hils are hardly removed, and therefore David saith, that Mount Zion cannot bee removed, but remaineth for ever, Psalm. 125. 1. Now, if that bee true of Mount Zion, in this world; which must needs be taken either litterally, for A the state of the visible Church, which cannot be utterly overthrowne: or mystically, for the state of Gods grace, which in this world can not totally & finally be lost: I say, if this Mount Zion standeth fast, and cannot bee removed; how much more true is it, of the state of glory in heaven, and of the triumphant Church, and of heavenly Zion; that it is so unchangeable, so durable, so unremoveable, that it cannot bee shaken, but standeth fast for ever. And in this respect, well may the Apostle say here, It hath a foundation; which the holy Ghost in the Revelation saith, to have twelve foundations.

Secondly, the state of the Elect in heaven, is not only sure, but everlasting; that is, without end: Psalm. 37. 18. The inheritance of holy men is perpetuall: and therefore Saint Peter 1. 1. 4. B faith, that the inheritance reserved in heaven for us is immortall, and not fading away. It fades not away; there is the unchangeablenesse: it is immortall; there is the eternity of it. And this is meant, by having a foundation: for in this world, so much the longer doth any thing endure, as the foundation is stronger. Therefore seeing the heavenly city hath such a foundation, no marvell though it indure for ever.

Now put these two together, and they shew the perfect excellency of that city, which is both unchangeable and eternall. Where wee learne, the great difference betwixt the state of that world, and this present world wherein wee live in the body. For what is there in this world so excellent, so pretious, so costly, so artificiall, C but is subject both to alteration, and in the end to dissolution? The longest day hath his night; and the longest life endeth in death, after many miseries, and tossings: the longest Empires, and mightiest Monarchies, had their period, after many mutations: the stateliest and strongest cities, ended in ruine, after many civill broyles, massacres, and other miseries. So that no glory, no strength, no happinesse, nothing at all is there in this world, that is either constant or perpetuall, but subject to utter dissolution in the end; and in the meane time, to pitifull alterations. So weake a foundation hath this world, and the best things in it. But contrariwise, the glory of heaven hath such a foundation, as it is both unchangeable and eternall. D

The consideration of this difference, hath manifold and profitable use: First, wee may see how reasonable the counsell of the Apostle is, 1 Tim. 6. 17. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they bee not high minded, and put not their trust in uncertaine riches, but in the living God. For what a misery and vanity is it, to trust in that that is uncertaine, and therfore will deceive them? The Apostle tels them what to doe; namely, Doe good, and be rich in good workes, and bee ready to distribute, laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the times to come, that they may obtaine eternall life: that is, that they so spend their riches in holinesse and charity, that they may in the end

attaine heaven, which is the City that hath a foundation: and who would not spend riches which are so uncertaine, for heaven, which is so certaine a glory?

Secondly, this must teach us to follow the counsell of Christ Jesus, Matth. 6. 19, 20. Lay not up for your selves treasures on earth, where moth and canker corrupt; and theeves steale: but in heaven, where is neither canker, moth, theefe, nor any other corruption. Every man naturally must have his treasure, and that is it whereon he sets his heart; now that is unworthy of a mans heart, which will be lost wee know not how soone. But let us make heaven our treasure, the glory whereof is both eternall and unchangeable.

Againe, seeing nothing here is certaine, we must learne to seeke sound comfort, where it may bee had. Seeke it in this world, and it will faile us; but seeke it in the sincere worship of God, and that will minister such comfort in this life, and such glory in heaven, as hath a foundation, and will never faile us.

Further, this must put us in minde of the holy Kings advice; which is, to remember our Creator in the dayes of our youth, Eccles. 12. 1. Seeing this world is so uncertaine, and our life hath so weake a foundation, as wee are not sure to live to come to old age: every man therefore is to heare the conclusion of all; which is, to feare God, and keepe his commandements: and this, the sooner the better. For else, for a little foolish and vaine pleasure, transitory, and which hath no foundation; we shall venture the losing of that glorious city, which hath a sure foundation.

It followeth in the description;

Whose maker and builder is God.]

The second point in the description of this city is, that God was the maker, builder, or author of it. These two words are both one, and therefore it is a needlesse labour of some that would distinguish betwixt them: for the meaning is, God made, that is, prepared the glory of heaven, and he built it; as though he should say, Heavenly Jerusalem is a glorious city: and no marvell though it bee so, for God made it. And if you will needs, that being a city, it must be built, be it so; for God is the builder of it.

This doctrine is evident in the Scriptures, Psal. 136. 5. God by his wisdome made the Heavens. And here is another maine difference betwixt this world, and the glory of heaven: The Cities of this world were built by man, but Heaven by God himselfe. The art and skill of men built the cities of the earth, and sometime the covetousnesse, or other corruption of man, as is manifest in the beginning: for Cain, a covetous, cruell, and ambitious man, built the first city in the world: but holy and good men, have not the honour to be builders of this City: No, they are Citizens of it, but God only is the author and builder of it.

A

No man may doubt hereof, because this third heaven is invisible; for the Angels also are invisible, and yet Gods creatures. Besides our Creed teacheth, that God is Creator of all things visible and invisible.

If wee doubt why God made it, seeing hee made all things for man, and man in this world hath no sight nor use of it? The answer is, God made it for two ends:

B

First, to bee his owne glorious palace; (not wherein her would confine his being, or his presence, but) wherein he would make his glory most apparant; and wherin his glory should in a sort dwell. In which regards, it is called his throne, Esa. 66. And in our Lords prayer we say by Christs owne teaching, that God our father is in heaven. Therefore as Princes build themselves palaces, to shew their power and puissance, and to magnifie themselves, and to bee fit habitations for their greatnesse; So God made the third heaven to bee the throne of his glory.

Secondly, he had also a respect herein to his creatures: for hee made that heaven, therein to reveale his Majesty and glory to his reasonable creatures, Angels and Men: and (by shewing them his glory) to glorifie them. For in Gods presence is the fulnesse of joy, Psalme 16. ultim. And in this sense is it true, that God made all things for man (as man for himselfe:) namely, all things, either for his soule, or body, or both; either for his use in this life, or in the other.

C

And so the third heaven was made for mans use, not in this life, but in the life to come; for his soule untill the last Judgement; and after that, for both soule and body.

Hence we learne divers instructions:

First, in that the third heaven, which never was seene with the eie of man, is here positively affirmed to bee made by God: Wee learne, that therefore it is one of Gods creatures; and not eternall, as some hold, and goe about to prove thus: God is eternall; but hee must bee in some place: and heaven is the seat and place of God; therefore it is coeternall with God. But I answer, from Gods word; that though heaven be the seat, and throne of Gods glory, and where hee manifesteth, and magnifieth his glory; yet is it not the place of his substance and being, for that is infinite, and incomprehensible: and it is against the Christian faith, to imagine the God-head to bee comprehended or contained in any place. 1 King. 8. 27. The heavens, yea, the heavens of heavens cannot comprehend thee, O Lord; how much more unable is this house that I have built?

Nor is it materiall, that wee know not on what day it was created; or that it is not named amongst the workes of the creation. For the same is true of the Angels also: and it pleased Gods wisdome, for speciall causes, to name no creatures particularly in the creation, but visible; whereas wee know both from our Creed, and Gods word it selfe, that he is the creator of all things both visible and invisible. Therefore though wee know not what day the third heaven was made; yet is it sufficient, that here is said, It was made and built by God himselfe. Whereupon it necessarily followeth, it is a creature, and not coeternall with the Godhead.

Secondly, here appeares the weakneſſe of one of the commoneſt arguments, uſed for the defence of the Ubiquity and Conſubſtantiation. Chriſt (ſay they) is preſent bodily in the Euchariſt, and they prove it thus; Chriſt is in heaven, and hee is God: but heaven is every where; for God is every where, and where God is, there heaven is: (as where the King is, there the Court is:) Therefore Chriſt may be in the Sacrament, and yet bee in heaven notwithſtanding.

Anſwer, the ground is falſe: Heaven is not every where; for then it is in Hell: which to affirme, is abſurdity, confuſion, and impiety. Indeed Gods preſence is every where; and where his preſence is, there is his power: as where the Kings preſence is, there is alſo his power and authority; and there may be any ſeat or court of Juſtice: and ſo where he is, the court is. But if you take the Court for ſome one of his chiefe houſes, then the ſaying is not true. But contrariwiſe, as the Kings power is, whereſoever his preſence is; and yet hee may have one houſe more ſumptuous, and magnificent than all the reſt, which may be called his Court, by an excellency above other: and that Court is not alwayes where the King is, but in ſome ſet and certaine place, and not removeable:

So Gods power and glory is every where; and yet his moſt glorious Court, the third heaven, is not every where, but in his limited and appointed place, where Gods glory ſhineth more than in any other place.

Againe, if heaven properly taken, be every where, then it is God himſelfe: for that that is every where, muſt needs be deified; and indeed ſome, to maintaine this opinion, have ſaid little leſſe. But if the holy Ghoſt may moderate this diſputation, he plainly tels us here, That God is the maker and builder of it. Therefore aſſuredly it is not God, but one of Gods creatures.

Thirdly and laſtly, let us obſerve the deſcription of heaven, included in theſe two words, maker and builder. God made it, that is, it is one of his creatures; hee made it as well as the reſt: and he builded it, that is, (as the Word ſignifieth) made it with art; or hee beſtowed skill and wiſdome upon it. For though we may not imagine any ſubſtantiall difference betwixt theſe two words, for matter; yet in ſignification they differ: and ſo farre wee are to obſerve it.

D Here then we learne, that the third Heaven is like a peece of worke, wherein an excellent workeman hath ſpent his art, and ſhewed his skill; that is, that the higheſt heaven is a moſt glorious place, and ſurpaſſeth all other creatures of God in glory and excellencie, ſo farre as therein ſhineth the glory, skill, and wiſdome of the Creator, more than in any other creature. In which regard, it is no marvell though the holy Ghoſt ſay in another place, That the eye hath not ſeene, nor the eare heard, nor mans heart conceived, what God hath there prepared for them that love him, 1 Cor. 2. 9. And S. Paul himſelfe, though hee had the honour to bee taken up into this third heaven, and to ſee and heare the glory which is there; yet afterwards could not hee expreſſe the glory he had ſeene. And this was figured in the Temple of Ieruſalem, which was the mirrour, and beauty of the world; for the building whereof, God both choſe the skilfulleſt men, and indued them alſo with extraordinary gifts: namely, Bezaleel and Aholiab. Now, as thereby that Temple was the moſt excellent peece of worke that ever was in this world, made by man; ſo the higheſt heaven (which was myſtically prefigured in Salomons Temple) is the moſt excellent of all the workes of God.

The uſe of this doctrine is not to bee omitted.

First, if that bee ſo excellent and glorious a place, we muſt all labour to come thither; for above all things, it ſeemes worthy to be ſought for. People come out of all places of the countrey, to dwell in great townes, and rich cities; and men labour to bee freemen there, and to have their children free in them: and even the greateſt men, will have their houſes either in; or neere them; that ſo, though they will not alwayes dwell in them, yet they may ſojourne in them at their pleaſures now and then. And why all this? but becauſe, firſt, they are places beautifull, and many wayes pleaſant to the eye. Secondly, full, and frequented with the beſt company. Thirdly, repleniſhed with abundance of all things needfull for mans life, for neceſſity, comfort, and delight. Fourthly, they enjoy many privileges and freedomes. And laſtly, all this is moſt true of ſuch cities, where the King keepes his Court.

If this be ſo, then how is heaven to be ſought for? Behold here a goodly city, a city of God, (whereof London, Paris, Rome, Venice, nay Ieruſalem, are ſcarce ſhadowes) the true Jeruſalem, the joy of the whole earth: nay, the joy of the world, and the glory of all Gods creatures, made immediatly with the hand, and built with the skill and cunning of God himſelfe. The Princes of the world, and even of Rome it ſelfe, wondred at the beauty, and were amazed at the magnificence of Jeruſalem and the Temple, and yet it was but a type and figure hereof. For that had indeed the glory of the world upon her: but the new Jeruſalem hath the glory of God upon her, Rev. 21. 4.

Shall wee then ſeeke to dwell in the cities of this world, and not labour to come to heaven? Are they any way excellent, wherein heaven is not much more to be deſired? Are they beautifull, tifull, and is not it the beautie of the world? Read the 21. chap of the Reve. and suppose that the beauty of it were but outward, and worldly and sensible to humane capacitie: yet is it farre more excellent, than ever any was in this world. And is not there the company of the deitie, of Christs humanity, of the holy Angels, and all good men? And is not there abundance of whatsoever belongs to perfect happinesse? And is not there freedome from the devill, sinne, and death? And is it not the Court of God, the King of glorie? Then why doe we not sigh and grone, and long to bee free-men of this glorious citie? And though wee cannot come to it as long as wee live in this world: yet why doe we not strive to come as neere it as may bee? In this world, when a man cannot dwell in the heart of a Citie, yet he will rather dwell in the suburbs, than bee will not be neere it; and being there, hee knowes hee can soone step into the citie. So let us in this life come as neere heaven as we may; let us get into the suburbs, and dwell there.

The suburbs of heaven is Gods true Church on earth, where his Word is freely knowne and preached, and his holy Sacraments administred, and therein God truly served. Let us associate our selves to this Church, and live according to the holy lawes thereof. This is the suburbs of heaven: so shall wee be readie to enter into the glorious citie it selfe, when the Lord cals us.

And as this is for our selves; so if we love our children, or care for their advancement, let us make them free-men of that citie, whose maker and builder is God: So shall we be sure to have comfort and joy of them here, and with them in heaven. But if we will have them free-men in heaven, we must make them Gods apprentises on earth; they must serve out their time, else they get no freedome. This time, is all their life. Men are deceived that let their children be the devils slaves here, and thinke to have them free in heaven: let us then binde our children prentises to God, that is, make them his servants here: then assuredly, as in their repentance and regeneration here, they are borne free-men of heaven; so after this life they shall enjoy the freedomes and privileges of that heavenly citie, which was made and built by the wisdome of God.

Lastly, here we see how true it is that David teacheth, Psal. 15. 4. No vile person can come in heaven. And no marvell: for if men thus and thus defamed, cannot be free-men in the Cities on earth built by men, is it likely that sinners, and profane men, that care not for repentance, and regeneration, (for they bee the vile men) shall be admitted into that citie, whose maker and builder is God? It is the holy citie, no uncleane thing can enter into it, Revel. 21. It is Gods holy mountaine, how shall ungodlinesse ascend thither? Psal. 15. 1. It is the new Jerusalem, how shall the old man, that is sinnefull corruption, get into it? We must therefore cast off the old man with his lusts, and be renewed in holinesse: we must become penitent sinners for our lives past, and new men for hereafter; or else let us not looke to have any part in heaven.

And good reason, for God is the maker and builder of it: But he is not the maker of sinne; but the Devill, and our selves brought it out: and thinke we the Devills worke shall come in heaven? or that God will build a house for the devils slaves to dwell in? let us not be deceived: But contrariwise, grace and holinesse is Gods worke: as our soules and bodies were the worke of his hands, so our regeneration is much more the worke of his owne power and mercy. That man therefore, who can say; God as once he made me a man, so he hath againe made and built me a new man, and a new creature; that man is he, that shall be an inhabitant in that heavenly citie, whose maker and builder is the same God.

In this holy way of faith and repentance did the holy Fathers walke to the citie: as David saith, in the name of them all, Thou will I wait for thee in holinesse.

And thus doubtlesse did the holy patriarke Abraham, who as hee was the Father of our faith, so was hee also a patterne of repentance and holy life: and in that holinesse he waited for this city that hath a foundation, whose maker and builder is God.

Hitherto we have heard the holy practice of Abrahams faith, in two examples.

There is much more spoken of the excellencie of his faith: but by the way, the holy Ghost interlaceth a worthy example, even of a womans faith; namely, Sarahs his wife. The sixth example in the order of the whole, followeth in the words of the two next verses.

Sarahs Faith.

Verse 11.

By faith, even Sarah also received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a childe, when shee was past age, because she judged him faithfull which had promised.

NExt to Abraham, who is called the father of our faith, or of faithfull men, followeth Sarah, who was also mystically the mother of beleevers:

next

next to the husband followeth the wife: nay, Abrahams faith is commended, both before her, and after her; and hers inclosed in the midst.

By the way here observe, how God honours holy mariage, and observes the decorum, and dignitie of it: He not onely allowes, or commends the faith of Abel, who it may be was unmaried, but as we see, of maried men also. And it is worthy our observation, that of all these whom the holy Ghost here records for their faith and holinesse, they were all maried, except Abel; of whom, it is not certaine whether hee were or no.

It appeares therefore, that God as he ordained holy mariage, so he alwaies honored it, both with his grace on earth, and his glorie in heaven: as well, if not better, than any other state of life. They therefore doe spit in the face of God himselfe, who any way disgrace it, and they especially who allow fornication, or adultetie, in any sort of men, rather than it, as some Papists doe. But here we may observe further, how God maintaines the dignitie and decorum of it: hee placeth Abraham and Sarah together, and puts none betwixt them, to shew the inseparable unitie, that is to be betwixt them: so farre, as that even in storie, they are to bee set together: and how he shuns their presumption, that dare any way attempt to separate or part that unitie.

He placeth Abraham first, to shew the dignitie and preheminence of the man, whom for her sinne God hath set over her; not onely for her head, but for her guide and governour: and to teach the man, that he, and his example should be first, and should be a light unto her; to shame them who come behinde their wives in faith and holinesse. Hee placeth Abraham both afore and after her, and her in the midst; to teach her, that her glorie and honour, every way, is in the vertue and worthinesse of her husband; her head under God: who is to goe before her, to give her good example: and to come after, to oversee her courses; and on all sides, to be a shelter and defence unto her.

These things may not unfitly bee noted in this contexion: Now let us come to the words, wherein are these points;

1. Who beleeved: Even Sarah.
2. What shee beleeved: Gods promise to beare Isaac.
3. The impediments of that faith: which were two; 1. Her age. 2. Her barrennesse.
4. The effects of this her faith: which were three,
   1. Thereby she conceived seed.
   2. Brought forth Isaac.
   3. Had a great issue and posterity by him.
5. The ground of her faith: she judged him faithfull which had promised.

All these are laid down in this v. or the next.

The first point is, the person, of whom this storie is: Sarah a woman; even shee beleeved. We have heard some examples of notable men: but behold here, a woman chronicled for her faith, and holy obedience, as well as men.

Where we learne, that saving faith, and consequently salvation it selfe, is not proper to one sex, but to both; man and woman. The woman indeed was the first that brought in sinne; and being deceived her selfe by the Devill, she deceived man. In which sense the Apostle saith, 1 Tim. 2. 14. The man was not deceived, but the woman; and shee was in the transgression. And for that cause, grievous calamities, and much bitternesse, was laid upon that sex, in bearing, and bringing up children, and in subjection. In which regards they might thinke themselves forsaken of God, for their fault. For the preventing whereof, the Apostle here, or rather the holy Ghost by him teacheth us, that true faith and salvation by the Messias, belongeth to Sarah as well as Abraham; to women, as well as to men. And Saint Peter also most plainely (1 Pet. 3. 7.) teacheth us, that they are heires together with their husbands, of the grace of life.

The use whereof, as it discovereth the monstrous and unnaturall madnesse of some men, who have called into question the possibility of their salvation; yea some, whether they have soules or no: so it giveth encouragement to women, to serve that God in zeale and sinceritie, which hath beene so mercifull unto their sin; and who, though he hath subjected them in bodie unto their husbands, yet hath made their soules partakers with them, of the same hope of immortall life.

Yet withall we may observe, how few the holy Ghost here recordeth; namely, but one or two women, amongst many men. For so it hath beene in all ages, those that have beene good, were excellent; but they were few in comparison of men: which, as it is the more commendation to them that are good, so it must stirre up all women professing religion, to labour in the imitation of the faith of their grandmother Sarah; that so they may bee some of those few.

But let us enter into further, and more particular consideration, who this Sarah was; especially seeing shee is the onely woman of the Jewes nation, whose faith is here remembred.

Shee was the wife of Abraham, the grand Patriarch of the age betwixt the Flood, and the giving of the Law. And of her wee reade this storie amongst other, Gen. 18. 13. God by his Angell appearing to her husband and her, made a promise, that within the yeare they should have a sonne: both heard it, and both laughed to heare it: Abraham in joy and admiration, and therefore was not reproved: shee in doubtfulnesse, and a conceit of almost impossibilitie, and was for it sharply reproved of the Angel. Yet behold this Sarah, that even now laughed to heare such a promise, as being a fond conceit, and meere impossible: yet afterward beleeveth, and in so good a measure, as her faith is here registred to all posterities.

In her example, we may learne a good lesson. It was a bad thing in Sarah to laugh at Gods Word, though it seemed never so high above her conceit: But it was good and commendable, that she correcteth her fault, and testifieth her amendment by beleeving. Wee all follow Sarahs fault; but few her repentance. Many in our Church are mockers of our religion, and of the Ministers and professors thereof: and all religion that standeth not with their humours, is no more regarded of them, than toyes or devices; and they are counted fooles or hypocrites that thinke otherwise. But alas, these men know not how vile a sinne they commit, while they laugh at Gods Word. For if her fault was such, who laughed at that that seemed to her almost impossible, and yet without any profanenesse; what shall become of them, that out of their carnalitie, and fleshly profanenesse doe make but a sport at all Gods ordinances, promises, and commandements; and at all religion, more than serveth their owne turne? Let such men be warned, to cease mocking, and lay aside reviling of others, and begin soberly and seriously to beleeve; else they will find it sharpe kicking against the pricke, and dangerous playing with edge-tooles.

Furthermore, Sarah that laughed in doubting, yet (withall) beleeves. This teacheth us, that true faith is joyned alwaies with doubting in all Gods children. If any object, that followeth not here: for she first doubted, and then beleeved; when she doubted she beleeved not, and when she beleeved, she doubted not.

I answer: It is not so, but the contrarie, as I will prove. For Sarah was no Infidell, utterly to denie and gaine-say Gods Word, when she heard it: but onely finding it in all reason impossible, she therefore presently yeelded not to it, but laughed at it as a matter past ordinarie course, yet withall she regarded who spake it; namely God, and therefore forthwith judged it possible with God, though impossible in reason, and so at last constantly beleeved it, yet still her reason gaine-saying it: so that shee never doubted so, but that she in some part beleeved it. And when she beleeved it most stedfastly, yet she something doubted of it: reason said it could not be, faith said it might be. Therefore, as when reason over-ruling, yet she had some sparkes of faith: so when her faith was predominant, there remained some reliques of doubting: for as reason cannot overthrow true faith; so the best faith in this world, cannot fully vanquish reason.

This is the doctrine of Gods Word, Mar. 9. 24. Jesus bidding the father of the child possessed to beleeve, and that his child should be dispossessed: he answered crying with teares, Lord I beleeve, helpe my unbeleefe: There is faith and unbeleefe in one soule at one time, in one action, upon one object, and what is unbeleefe, but doubting or worse?

And Christ often reproveth his Disciples for their doubting; and cals them, O ye of little faith; and ye all know that, that they then had true faith: yea, S. Peter himselfe, most famous for his faith, is reproved in the same words, O thou of little faith, wherefore doest thou doubt? He had a little faith, therefore some faith: a little faith, therefore much doubting; therefore it is apparant, a man may have in his soule at once, both faith and doubting: yea, commonly we have a graine of mustard-seed, or a mite of faith, and a mountaine of doubting.

The use of this doctrine; First, discovereth the nakednesse of many professing themselves Christians, who care not how they live, yet say they beleeve in Christ, and looke to be saved by him. Aske how they know it: they answer, they know no other: Aske when they began: they say they did ever so: Aske if they doubt; they answer they would be ashamed so to doe. But alas, here is nothing but ignorance and presumption. Our religion can never bee disgraced by such men: for they have it not, they know it not: for if they did, they would shame to answer so. These men have no faith at all: for, where it is, doubting doth alwaies shew it selfe. And he that knowes he beleeves, knowes also he doubts: and the more he beleeves, the more hee knoweth and feeleth his doubting: for where these two are, they are alwaies opposite, and shew their contrary natures: the one is the spirit, the other is flesh and corruption. And these, saith the Apostle, doe lust one against another, Galat. 5. 17. He therefore that thinketh he is wholly spirit, and hath no flesh or corruption in him, is nothing but corruption: and he that imagineth he hath perfect faith, and no doubting, hath no faith at all in him, but carnall presumption.

Secondly, here is comfort to all such as have faith and grace, and yet are daily troubled with temptations: let not such be dismaied, though they finde in themselves much doubting and diffidence. For Sarah beleeved, and yet shee doubted; yea, notwithstanding all her doubting, she beleeved so excellently, as her faith is here made a patterne to all holy Matrons for ever. He therefore that is even buffeted by Sathan, with temptations of doubting, let not him be dismaied, as though he had no faith: but let him be assured, his doubting doth not bewray it self, but that faith makes the opposition; and therefore let him strive with teares and prayers to God, and say, Lord I beleeve, helpe thou my unbeleefe.

Thus we see the person who, Sarah: but what is the action which she did? It is implyed in these words,

Through faith Sarah, &c.

Her action is, shee beleeved. This vertue of faith faith, and this action of beleeving is the matter of all this chapter. These holy men and women had other holy vertues: but their faith is that alone, which is here commended.

Now particularly for Sarahs faith, here is one notable thing to be observed; the very same word of God, which she beleeved, and for beleeving whereof shee is here registred, at the same she also laughed: but behold, her faith is recorded, her laughing is not: her faith is commended, her fault silenced. In which holy and mercifull practice of God, we learne;

First, that God accepteth true faith, though it be attended with many infirmities. As a King is content to give a begger an almes, though he receive it with a hand shaking with the palsey: so, God is well pleased with our faith, though diseased with infirmities, and bestoweth grace on a beleeving soule, though shaken with many temptations.

In a Word, God accepteth soundnesse of faith, though it be but small, and more lookes at (in his mercie) a mans little faith, than his many faults. He will not breake the bruised reed, nor quench the smoaking flax, Esay 42.3. When a man is broken in heart, and dejected in soule, in sight of his many sinnes, and little grace, God will not breake this bruised reed, but will comfort and strengthen him. And when any life of grace appeares in a man, (as flax that smoaketh, but will not burne out) God will not quench it, but will rather kindle it, and give life unto it.

Let this teach us to take in good part, the holy and honest endevours of our brethren, though they cannot doe so well as they would, or should. Let us not exact too much, and too hastily upon them, but expect in meeknesse the working of Gods grace: and in the meane time, thinke well of Sarahs faith, though it be with laughing.

Secondly, here we may learne, that God rather observes and regards good things in his children, than their faults and imperfections: he writes up Sarahs faith, hee nameth not her laughing. This is from the goodnesse of his nature, being goodnesse it selfe, and therefore most easily apprehendeth, and takes notice of the least goodnesse, where-ever he findes it.

Thus should wee deale one with another: what good thing we see in any man, we should observe and commend it: his faults we should not see, or cover and omit them. But the course is contrary: the common table-talke of the world, is nothing but of mens faults, and to rip up their imperfections: but if they have never so many good properties, we can bury them all, or passe them over in silence. This argueth the malice and the naughtinesse of our nature; which being evill, doth delight in nothing but evill; and being corrupt, feeds, as doth the filthy horse-flie, on nothing but corruption. But let us remember the practice of God, and learn to conceale faults, and of our tongues to talke

A of the good things and vertues in our brethren: So shall we resemble the Lord, who though Sarah laughed (not in an holy admiration, but in unbeleefe) yet, forasmuch as afterward she beleeved, God hath matched her with the notablest beleevers, and holiest men that have beene in the world.

Thus much for the first point; the person, and her action, shee beleeved. Now the second is, what she beleeved? included and necessarily implied in the last words of the verse: she judged him faithfull which had promised.

The thing shee beleeved, was the word or promise of God: Particularly his promise that she should beare Isaac in her old age: of which promise, and the circumstances of it, wee may

B read, Gen. 18.13, &c.

Here the only question is, By what faith she beleeved this?

And the answer is, by true saving faith: and it is proved thus: Abraham beleeved this promise by the faith that justified him, Rom. 4. 10, 11. But Abraham and Sarah beleeved it both by one faith: therefore Sarah beleeved that promise by the faith that also justified her.

D Where we learne, that saving faith apprehendeth not onely the great promise of redemption by Christ, but all other inferiour promises that depend upon it. For here we see Abraham and Sarah take hold of the promises of a temporall blessing, by the same faith, whereby formerly they had laid hold on the promise of eternall

C salvation by the Messias: so that the object of true faith is,

1. Principall: The promise of salvation by Christ.
2. Secondarie: All inferiour promises annexed thereunto.

The maine promise is: So God loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne, to the end, that whosoever beleeveth in him, should not perish, but have eternall life, Ioh. 3.16. Now true faith, first of all, directly and plainely fasteneth it selfe on this: but after, and with this, on all other promises that concerne soule or bodie. In the Lords Prayer, wee are bid to pray for temporall blessings, health, peace, competencie of wealth, and all other, under the name of daily bread: and we are bound to beleeve, that God

D will give them, if wee aske in faith. Neither is this faith constrained, but free and voluntary, and on a good foundation. For being perswaded that God accepteth us in Christ for salvation, wee cannot but withall bee perswaded, that God will give us all things else needfull for us.

This wee here note againe, because we are wrongfully charg'd by the Papists, to hold, that faith apprehendeth the promise of salvation alone. But we passe it over, for that we have alreadie spoken something of it.

Now followeth the third point: namely, the impediments of her faith, in these words,

When she was past age.]

The

The promise was to have a child: She beleeved it. Now against child-bearing there are two impediments: 1. Barrennesse. 2. Age.

If one be aged, or past the ordinarie time, it is hard and unlikely: but if one be very aged, and far past it, it is impossible she should conceive and beare a child: thus it stands in reason. Besides, though one be not past age, yet if she be barren, (as some by secret reasons in nature are) it is not to be expected, shee should conceive. Now, both these lay in Sarahs way: for here it is said, shee was past age: and another place (namely, Gen. 16. 1, 2.) saith, shee was barren.

But it may be objected against Sarahs age, that in the old time they had children, till they were of great age. Eva had her sonne Sheth, at 130. yeares old, Genes. 5. 3. For Adam and Eve must needs be both of one age: and after that, Eve bore many sons and daughters. Therefore, it may seeme, that Sarah was not past age at ninetie yeares old. But wee are to know, that they who began to beare at that age, lived eight or nine hundred yeares: but Sarah lived after the flood, when Ages were brought downe to 200. and for the most part to 100. yeares. Abraham lived but 175. yeares, and Sarah but 127. She therefore who lived 127. yeares, and died an old woman, must needs be past age of childe-bearing at ninetie yeares old.

And besides her age, she was also barren by her natural constitution, (as many are and have beene) and brought Abraham no children. Yet unto this woman comes a word from God, Sarah shall beare a sonne. And behold, this same aged and barren woman, doth not object deperately these her two hinderances, (the one whereof in reason is sufficient against childe-bearing) but beyond all impediments, and above reason beleeveth it shall bee so, resting and relying onely and wholly on Gods Word for it.

The use of which notable and faithfull practice (so wonderfull in a woman) must teach us to rest on Gods Word and promise, though we have no reason so to doe: for example,

When we see our friends, or childrens bodies cast into the earth to feed worms, burnt by fire, or eaten by fishes, reason saith, they are gone, they can never be againe. We have Gods word and assured promise, The dead shall rise: with their bodies shall they rise. We must therfore beleeve it, if we will be of the faith of Sarah. God said to her, Age and barrennes shall have a child: she beleeved it. He saith to us, Dust and rottennesse shall live againe: nay, he hath often said it; and shall not our faith acknowledge the voice of our God, and beleeve it as she did?

But let us come to personall promises, as hers was (for this is generall:) God hath promised grace and pardon to every penitent and beleeving soule; yea, no man is partaker of the sweetnes hereof, without the bitternes of many temptations to the contrarie, giving him occasions of doubting, and often even of despairing of Gods favour. What must a man doe in this case? even beleeve, though he feele no reason why to beleeve it; & hope above hope. Such was Abrahams and Sarahs faith. And for it, as they were registred in the Storie of Genesis: so be it here, and also Rom. 4. remembred again, and commended for it. Now, suppose that thou after thy comming to God by faith and repentance, fall into temptations of desertion, wherein as Ahy feeling, Gods heavie hand and wrath hath seized on thee, and the Devill layeth thy sinnes to thy charge, and tells thee thou art a damned wretch, for thou were yet an hypocrit, and never hadst faith, and that therefore God is thy enemie; In this case, wherein in reason be in feeling, there is not the least hope of salvation; what must thou doe, despaire? God forbid. For that is the downfall into Hell. No, but hope when there is no hope, keepe faith when there is no feeling.

And to strengthen us herein, remember the faith of Iob (tried and sifted, so as few have bin) who though the arrowes of the Almightie stucke in him, and the venome thereof drunke up his spirits, Job 5. 4. yet even then he beleeved: and would not give over, not let goe his hold, and said, Though thou bring me to dust, yet will I not forsake thee: no, though thou kill me, yet will I trust in thee. So in the fierie temptations, when the venome of Gods wrath seemes to drinke up our spirits, then must we beleeve: and in the pangs of death, when God seemes ready to kill us, then must wee trust in him. In such cases is the life of faith to be shewed: when reason and feeling say, God is a terrible Judge; faith must say, he is a mercifull Father.

In our health, and welfare, and feeling of Gods favour, this exhortation may seeme tedious: but if we belong to God, if it be not past alreadie, the time is sure to come, when this doctrine will be needfull for the best of us.

Thus we see the excellency of this womans faith: which is the more commended, by reason of these two so great hinderances. Now follow the effects of her faith, which are divers: some laid downe in this verse, and some in the next.

Received strength to conceive seed,
And was delivered of a childe.

In these words are two effects:

First, by power of her faith she was inabled to conceive: which afore she did not, though there were the same reasons in nature why she should.

Secondly, she was delivered of a child in her old age, and that child was Isaac: who is therefore called the promised seed, and the child of the promise.

Out of the consideration of these two, wee may learne divers good instructions: for seeing they are so neere a-kin in their natures, we will speake of them both joynely together.

First, here we may see that nothing is so hard or difficult which God hath promised, but faith can can compasse it, and bring it to performance. Christ bade the blinde see, the lame to goe: he spake, they beleeved, and they were healed. So here God promiseth a barren old woman a child, shee beleeveth, and lo, she conceiveth and brings forth a sonne.

The use of this doctrine is for two sorts of people.

First, many in our Church being ignorant; which they are moved to learne religion, answer; Alas, they are simple, or not booke-learned, or they are dull and heavie witted, or they bee old and weake, and therefore they can learne nothing; or if they doe, they cannot remember it. But here is nothing but vaine excuses: for they want not wit to learne religion, if they have wit to buy and sell, to know a faire day from a foule, good meat from ill, deere from sheape, Winter from Summer. If they have wit to practise the civill actions of the world, they have wit enough to conceive the grounds of religion, and to get so much knowledge as may suffice for a ground of that faith which will save their soules; so that they want nothing, but grace and diligence to use the meanes. To them therefore here is matter of good advice. Let such men learne but one promise of God out of the holy Scripture, as this; Seeke first the Kingdome of God, and all things else shall be given unto you, Matth. 6. 33. or this; Cast all your care on him, for he careth for you, 1 Pet. 5. 7. or this; Hee that commeth unto me, I cast him not away, Joh. 6. 37. or but this; Aske, and ye shall have; seeke, and ye shall finde, Mat. 7. 7. Let them learne but one of these, and when they have learned it, beleeve it, and let their soules daily feed on that faith; and they shall see what will follow: even a wonderfull blessing upon that poore beginning. This their faith will so content and please their hearts, that it will urge them forward to get more, and will make them both desirous, and capable of more knowledge and grace; and wil make them even hunger and thirst after knowledge and grace: (whereas, he that knoweth no promise, nor beleeves it, contents himselfe in ignorance and errour.) And this shall every one finde, that wil carefully use the meanes that God appoints, and will begin to learne but one lesson at the first. For as old barren Sarah, beleeving Gods promise, conceives and brings forth: so old, simple, plaine, dull Countrey-men, beleeving but one promise of Gods Word, shall conceive and bring forth daily more and more fruits of knowledge and grace.

Secondly, others who have made better proceedings in religion, doe see their sinnes, and doe much bewaile them, but they cannot overcome their corruptions: yea, many there are, to whom their sinnes, and inward corruptions are more grievous, and burdensome, than all bodily wants or miseries in the world; yet see they not how to conquer their corruptions: but (alas) are oftentimes foiled by them, to their great discomfort.

Let these men know the want of faith is the cause hereof; for that they doe not sufficiently ruminate, & consider the promises of God made in that behalfe, nor use the meanes God hath appointed: to the use whereof he hath annexed his promises of helpe against sinne. Let them therefore lay Gods Word and promises unto their consciences, in holy and frequent meditations. Let them carefully use the meanes God hath appointed, hearing and reading his word, receiving the holy Communion, earnest and frequent Prayer, craving also the prayers of others: and let them sharpen these holy exercises, by fasting, watching, holy conferences with others, visitations of others afflicted like themselves, oft revealing their estate to their godly Pastors. Let them continue thus doing, and rest confidently on the word and promise of God, with the stedfast foot of faith, and they shall see, that old Sarah shall have strength to conceive: that is, that their poore soules shall receive strength to read upon Sathan, to conquer their corruptions, and to conceive, and bring forth many worthy fruits of holinesse, to their joy and comfort in their latter experience; as Isaac was to Sarah in her elder age.

The next doctrine wee may here learne is; That whereas Sarah, by her faith in Gods promise, conceives and brings forth: therefore children are the immediate blessing of the Lord: for Sarah bare Isaac, not by any ordinarie strength or power of nature, but through faith she received strength to conceive, &c. Neither is this so in her onely (wherein there was a miraculous worke of Gods power) but in all. Some are indeed barren by constitution, and these cannot conceive, unlesse by Gods power as Sarah did. But some have no children, who in all naturall reason might conceive. For as God gave the Law, and thereby a gift and power to increase and multiply, Gen. 1. 22. so he reserved the execution of it to himselfe, and power to alter or dispense, to adde or diminish as it pleaseth him. Therefore saith the Psalmist, Psa. 127. 3. Loe, children are the inheritance of the Lord, and the fruit of the wombe is his reward: And speaking of them, Psalm. 128. 4. hee saith, Loe, thus shall hee be blessed that feareth the Lord.

The use is, to teach Parents therefore to bring them up as Gods blessings, and not only to give them corporall necessities (for so they doe their beasts) but to nurture them in holy Discipline, by sowing the seeds of religion in their hearts. If this they want, they have nothing, though you leave them Earledomes. And herein is the saying true, Better unborne than untaught. The Law and power to increase and multiply, is given to beasts in their kinde, all as well as to us, Gen. 1. 22. Therefore unlesse we doe more than provide for their bodies, we differ little from the: but make the know God, & so we make the fellowes with the Angels. If

Parents

Parents did thus, it cannot bee expreſſed what bleſſings would come thereby to Church and Common-wealth.

Thirdly and laſtly, let us here know and learne, that this holy Matron, Sarah, figureth unto us myſtically the ſpirituall Hieruſalem, the Church of God. Allegories are charily and ſparingly to be taught, elſe much unſound doctrine may cumber mens conſciences: but this is ſound and ſure, for it is the Apoſtles, Gal. 4.23, &c. By Agar and Sarah other things are meant: for theſe two mothers are two Teſtaments: Agar, ſhee which gendereth unto bondage: Sarah, Hieruſalem, which is free, and from above, and is the mother of us all. Now the reſemblance betwixt naturall Sarah the wife of Abraham, and myſticall Sarah the ſpouſe of Chriſt the Church of God, ſtands in this; that as ſhe not by power in her ſelfe, but by Gods power and faith in his promiſe bare Iſaac; ſo the Church our mother bringeth forth children to God, onely by the power of Gods Word and Spirit. And therefore as Iſaac is called the child of Promiſe, and ſaid to be borne by Promiſe, Gal. 4.23. ſo men regenerate and borne to the Church, are ſaid not to be born of bloud, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God, Joh. 1.13. And Saint Iames ſaith, 1.18. God of his owne will begat us with the word of truth. Thus the word of God and the will, that is, the Spirit of God, theſe two together beget children to the Church.

The uſe is to teach us all to honour the Church as our mother; but to worſhip God alone, who is the father of our ſoule. The Church cannot make her ſelfe our mother, nor us her children, when ſhe will; but it is God that muſt ſpeak the word and then we are made, he muſt beget us by the power of his Spirit, and miniſtery of his Word. And further, let us learne here what account wee are to make of Gods holy word, which is the immortall ſeed of our regeneration, whereby wee are made Gods children and heires of immortality.

Thus much of the two firſt effects of her faith.

The third is laid downe in the next verſe: which becauſe it is much ſtood upon by the holy Ghoſt, we will put it off till then, being therefore worthy our deeper conſideration.

And now followeth in the end of this verſe, the fifth and laſt point, which is, the Ground of her faith:

Becauſe ſhee judged him faithfull which had promiſed.]

The foundation whereon ſhe built this her faith, that ſhe ſhould have a ſonne, being barren and paſt age, was not the bare promiſe of God, ſo much as the conceit or opinion ſhe had of him that promiſed. For promiſes are not of value, ſo much by the things promiſed, though never ſo great or excellent (for they may promiſe much, who can performe nothing: or though they can, yet will recall their word in lightneſſe and inconſtancy) as by the worthineſſe of the partie promiſing. Wee ſay in this world, wee had rather have ſome mens word, than other mens bond: and rather have a little promiſed of ſome, than much of others. Now ſuch was the judgement that Sarah held of him that promiſed; namely, God: She judged him faithfull which had promiſed.

Faithfull: that is, ſhee judged him able and willing to accompliſh whatſoever he promiſed to her. So that the Grounds of our faith in God and all his promiſes, muſt be a ſure apprehenſion and knowledge of theſe two things in God;

1. His ability to make good whatſoever paſſeth him in word.
2. His carefulneſſe to doe it when hee hath ſaid it.

Some will promiſe any thing though their abilities ſtretch not to performe: others are able enough but have no care of their word. But both theſe are in God; all-ſufficient ability and moſt carefull willingneſſe. So Sarah judged of God and therefore ſhee beleeved againſt reaſon; and ſo muſt wee doe, if wee will beleeve Gods word aright. We may reade, and heare, and know Gods word, and have the points therein ſwimming in our heads: but if we will conſtantly beleeve with our hearts his bleſſed promiſes, and in our conſciences feare his threatnings, we muſt be fully perſwaded of theſe two to be in him.

So are we taught by Chriſt (the wiſdome of God) in the Lords Prayer (afore wee pray for any thing) to be reſolved of Gods power and will to heare and helpe us. Hee is our Father, therefore carefull and willing: he is in heaven, and therefore able to heare us and to give us all things, Mat. 6.9.

And the ſame commendation here given to Sarah, is alſo given to Abraham, Rom. 4.21. He doubted not, but beleeved above hope, &c. being fully aſſured that he which had promiſed was alſo able to doe it.

The uſe hereof unto us is double:

Firſt, to adviſe and guide us for our promiſes; not to be too reckleſſe, as ſome are, what we promiſe: but to conſider aforehand, and if it be beyond our power, not to ſpeake the word (for Chriſtian mens words muſt not be vaine:) and if we have promiſed any thing lawfull and in our power, to be carefull to performe it. Thus to doe is to bee a faithfull man, and is a good ſigne of an holy man, and Gods child: provided this be ſo, Firſt of all towards God, that we make conſcience of performing the great vow wee made in our baptiſme, and all other ſerious and holy purpoſes of our heart made to God. For otherwiſe, hee that breakes his vow to God careleſly, by living profanely, he may in worldly policie keepe his word, but hee cannot doe it in conſcience.

The Church of Rome is fouly faulty in this point, making no conscience of breaking promise and faith with us, or any of our religion; their nakednesse herein is discovered in the face of all Christendome: let them that are wise be warned of it. They make great ostentation of their vowes, and of their care to performe them above any other religion: but it appeares hereby to be vile hypocrisie. For if they were conscionably, and not politikly and formally carefull of their vowes of chastity, poverty, and others made to God, they could not but be likewise carefull of their promises made to men: for the one of these is the fountaine and root of the other. But the neglect of the one, sheweth the formality and hypocrisie of the other.

Let all that feare God learne to make conscience of both these in their religion and service of God, and in all their dealings with men in the world: that so the world may judge us faithfull men when we have promised.

Secondly, let us here learne how to helpe and strengthen our weake faith in the great promises of God. Wee have a promise of salvation, Whosoever beleeveth in Christ, shall not perish, but have life everlasting. Of our resurrection, Dan. 12.2. They that sleepe in the dust shall rise againe. Of our glorification, Phil. 3.21. The Lord Iesus shal change our vile bodies, and make them like to his owne glorious body. Of a new world, 2 Pet. 3.13. We looke for new heavens, and a new earth, according to his promise.

These bee, as S. Peter cals them, great and precious promises, 2 Pet. 1.4. And surely it must be a great and precious faith that can constantly beleeve these. No better helpes of our faith can there be, than often and seriously to consider of the mercie and power of him that made them; if he be willing, and able, what can let the performance of them? let us therefore often say with holy Paul, Faithfull is he which hath promised, who will also doe it, 1 Thess. 5.24. and with Sarah here, We judge him faithfull which hath promised.

Now followeth the last effect in the next verse:

V. 12 And therefore sprang there of one, even of one which was as dead, as many as the starres of the skie in multitude, and as the sands of the sea shore, which are innumerable.

The third and last effect of Sarahs faith, is that by this sonne Isaac, whom she conceived, and brought forth by faith, she had a wonderfull great issue, and a posterity almost without number. This effect consists not of it selfe, but depends upon the former. Her faith gave her strength to conceive Isaac, though shee were barren, and to bring him forth, though she were old and weake; and so her faith brought him out, by whom she was made the mother of many millions of men.

The matter of this third effect is the multitude of men, that came of Abraham and Sarah by Isaac.

This posterity or multitude is described by two arguments:

1. By the beginning or root of it; One that was as dead.
2. The quantity or greatnesse laid downe:
   1. Generally, to be a multitude and innumerable.
   2. Particularly, by two comparisons:
      1. As many as the starres in the skie.
      2. As the sands by the sea shore.

The first point is the root and beginning of this multitude, in these words:

And therefore sprang there of one, even one that was as dead.

One; that is, one woman Sarah: or at the most, one couple, Abraham and Sarah. And this one was no better than dead. Not dead properly and fully: for none are so dead whose soules and bodies are not separate: but, as dead, that is, as good as dead, or halfe dead; meaning that they were altogether unfit for generation of children, the strength of nature being decayed in them; Abraham being an hundred, and Sarah ninety yeares old. And if this be true of Abraham, who was past age; how much more is it of Sarah, who was both past age, and was also barren in her best age.

Here we are to note and learne many things:

First, Multitudes came of one. See here the powerfull, and yet the ordinary works of God, to reare up goodly and huge buildings upon small and weake foundations. So did he in the beginning, and ever since. Indeed, hee made at the first thousands of starres because they must be no more than at the first they were; and millions of Angels intending they shall not multiply; he could also have made millions of men in a moment: he would not, but only one couple, Adam and Eve. And of them came the infinite race of mankinde. When sinne had made an end of that world, hee founded not the second that yet continueth, upon a thousand couples; but by three men and their wives hee multiplied the whole race of mankinde, which since have growne from three to millions of millions. And so here of one old man, and a barren old woman, spring innumerable multitudes.

This God doth to magnifie his owne power in the eyes of the sons of men: and so he did also in matters heavenly. The number of Christians since Christ, that have growne to millions, began in a poore number at the first. For when Christ himselfe was ascended, the number of knowne beleevers was but 120. Act. 1.15.

The consideration hereof should teach us all these duties;

First,

First, not to measure God by our lengths, nor to tie him to our rules; but to esteeme of his power and might, as wee see it deserves: and to entertaine high and honourable thoughts of him and his Majesty, who can reare up so great workes upon so poore foundations.

Secondly, not to despaire of our selves or our estates, though we thinke our selves never so weake, so poore, so sicke, either in soule or body: but to remember him, that of one made multitudes to spring out. Therefore when thou art brought never so low, either in soule or body, by any miseries, either inward or outward; faint not, but goe forward in the strength of the Lord thy God. Particularly: If God have afflicted thee with poverty that thou have nothing to begin withall: or for thy soule, is thy knowledge in religion small, thy meanes poore, thy feeling of Gods favour but weake? yet faint not, but lay fast hold on Gods power and promise, use carefully the holy meanes God hath ordained, remembring and relying on him who made millions grow out of one: and assure thy selfe, as Job saith, Though thy beginnings be small, yet thy latter ends shall greatly increase.

Secondly, observe here how old persons are called halfe dead, or as good as dead; and that is true of them many wayes:

First, their yeares and dayes limited them, are as good as gone. For suppose a man should be as sure to live an 100. yeares, as the sunne is to r[illegible]all the day long his course, and at night to g[illegible]e downe: yet as when the sunne is past the heighth, and drawing downward, we say it goeth fast downe, and the day hasteth away; so when a man is past his middle age, when the sunne of his life is past the noone stead, he decli-neth daily, and draweth fast away, and the night of his life approacheth, with haste and much horror, unlesse he prevent it.

Secondly, their strength and vitall powers, by which their life is continued, and their soules and bodies kept together, are so much weakned, that they are almost extinguished: whereby it comes to passe, an old man may feele a manifest defect in all powers of minde and body.

Thirdly, sicknesses or diseases grow upon old age: and as their strength faileth, so the force of diseases is redoubled on them: and looke what diseases have lurked in their bodies which either naturally were bred in them, or accidentally taken, they now shew themselves more sensibly; and the weaker a man is, the stronger is his sickneſſe. In these three respects an old man or woman is as good as dead.

The use hereof is profitable;

First, they must therefore be advised to prepare themselves for death. Every man is to prepare, I confesse: then if every man, especially they that bee old. The young man may die, the old man must die; the youngest cannot live alwayes, the old man cannot live long; the aged mans grave is as it were made already, and his A one foot is in it. And this is not mans conceit alone, but Gods owne judgement, who as we see here, cals an old man as good as dead: and that not so much in regard that he is sure to die, as that he is neere it. Therefore as every man young or old is to make ready, because his time is unknowne, and no man is sure that hee shall live to be old; and as the Psalmist singeth, Every man in his best estate is altogether vanity, Psal. 39.6. so especially he to whom God hath beene so gracious as to let him see old age, he should thinke of nothing but his end, and prepare every day to die in the Lord. His gray haires, his wrinkled skin, his withered face, his ill stomacke, his weake memory, his crooked body, and the manifest and most sensible alte-ration and decay of his whole state of mind and B body, should hourely all cry in his eares, I am halfe dead, I will therefore prepare to die in the Lord.

It is therefore a miserable sight to see that those, who of all men should be most willing to die, are for the most part most desirous to live. And those who should be most ready to die, are generally, most ignorant, most covetous, and their hearts most of all wedded to the earth and earthly things.

Secondly, old persons must here learne S. Pauls lesson; 2 Cor. 4.16. That as the outward man perisheth, so the inward man may be renued daily. The outward man is the body, the in-ward man is the soule and the grace of God in C it. They must therefore labour, that as the strength of their bodies decay, so the grace of God in their soules may quicken and revive. But alas, the common practice is contrary. For old men have generally so misspent their youth, and in their old age are partly so backward, partly so unfit to learn religion, that when they come to their death-beds, they are then to bee Catechised in the very principles of religion: so that when the body is halfe dead, religion hath no being in them; and when the body is a dy-ing, religion and grace scarce begin to live in them: such men cast all upon a desperate point. But let them that desire a joyfull departure, thinke of these things aforehand: and as yeares draw on, and so draw life to his end, and the D body to the grave; so let them weane their hearts from the world, and lift them up to God, and so spend their last dayes in getting know-ledge, and in serving God; that when their bo-dies are weakest and fittest for the earth, their soules may be the holiest and ripest for heaven. To such men shall it never be discomfort to see their bodies halfe dead, when for recompence thereof they finde their soules halfe in heaven. Thus wee see the root or foundation of this po-sterity, how poore and weake it was. Now let us come to the greatnesse of it.

Thereof sprang as many in number, &c.]

This one old couple, Abraham and Sarah, are made by Gods power the father and mother of many nations: and he and shee, of whom the world would have pronounced, they should not have left a name upon the earth, have now millions of children that sprang out of them. Here we may learne, that though God worke ordinarily, according to the course of Nature, which himselfe hath established; yet that he is not bound to it, nor will be: he bound it, therefore there is no reason it should binde him. Here we may see the power and prerogative of Gods Majesty.

As in the beginning hee made to bee, those things which were not: so still he calleth things that are not, as though they were, Rom. 4. 17. and turneth and altereth the state and nature of his creatures as pleaseth him. Hee can take life from the living man, and leave him dead; he can give life to the dead man, and make him live againe. So hath he dealt for the body, and for the soule hee hath beene no lesse wonderfull.

Saul, of a bloudy persecutor, he can make a zealous Preacher, Act. 9. even a glorious instrument, and a chosen vessell to carry his name unto the Gentiles, even he who thought to have blotted out the name of Christ, and all that called on that name from under heaven, Act. 9. 14.

Rahab, an harlot, and a common woman, yet by Gods worke so farre altered, that her faith is registred in the 31. vers. amongst the most excellent beleevers that have beene in the world. Let this teach us, when we see our owne sinnes, how hideous and monstrous they be, yet not to despaire. And when we see other men live in extreme dissoluteneese, yet not to judge of them before the time: but even then, with hope and comfort, remember that God who quickeneth the dead, and calleth things that are not as though they were.

And in that hope let us perswade our selves that hee may quicken our dead hearts, and revive us by his grace. And therefore in that hope let us raise up our selves to use all holy meanes of Gods Words, Sacraments, and Prayer: which if we carefully and continually doe, we shall see wonders wrought in us; that as they said of Paul, This man preacheth the faith which afore he destroyed, and therfore glorified God for him, Gal. 1. 22, 23. so shall men say of us, This man hates the profaneneese that he lived in, and loves the religion that afore he mocked. Such miracles will the Lord worke in us, if with faith and diligence we use the holy meanes; that so all that see us, shall Glorifie God for us.

Thus we see generally how great the issue and posterity of Sarah was.

But it is more particularly inlarged by two comparisons:

As many as the starres in the skie, or the sands by the sea shore, which are innumerable.]

His comparisons are two: One taken from the heavens, as many as the starres in the skie: The other from the earth, as the sands in the sea. And these two are used by the holy Ghost, being things of incredible number, to expresse the multitude of the Israelites that came all from Sarah.

Not but that other things also are of as great number; as the drops of water, dust of the earth, and haires of mens heads, &c. but these two are most common and proverbiall phrases, whereby to expresse a multitude. And againe, the starres of the skie are rather named than any other, because God in the beginning pleased to use it to Abraham, when hee had never a child, Gen. 15. 8. God carried Abraham forth in the night, and bade him count the starres if he could, and said, so shall thy seed be. And Moses afterwards useth the same comparison, Deut. 10. 22. Our Fathers went downe into Ægypt seventy persons, and now the Lord hath made us as the starres of the skie in multitude.

Now because all men are not Astronomers, as Abraham and Moses were, and that ignorant men might say, they can perceive no such matter in the starres: Therefore hee useth another comparison, which every Countreyman may discerne how innumerable they be; namely, the sands of the sea shore. And lest any should say, I dwell in the mid-land Countrey and never saw the sea sand, and am ignorant and so cannot judge of the starres, therefore to put him out of doubt, the holy Ghost assures him in the end of the verse, that they are both innumerable; that is, not in themselves, or to God; but in regard of man and mans skill unable to be counted.

Concerning these two comparisons, let us observe the manner or the phrase of speech in them used:

For the first, we are to know, that the speech is not proper, but figurative. For properly, they were not as many as the starres, or as the sands: neither are the starres or sands innumerable: but it is a figure called by the Rhetoricians ὑπερβολή, which is an excesse of finenesse of speech, or an excessive elegancy. And as it is ordinarie in all Writers, and even in common speech: so it is not refused by the holy Ghost, but used both here, and in the two forenamed places: and the like also of the same nature (but in other phrases) in other places; as S. Joh. 21. 25. I suppose, saith he, if all the sayings and doings of Christ were written, the world could not containe the bookes that would be written. Meaning, they would bee exceeding many, and more than would be needfull for salvation. And Deut. 9. 1. Moses saith, That the Cities of the Canaanites were great, and walled up to heaven. Meaning that they were very high, and so high as was possible for City wals to be, and as was impossible to have been scaled in all mens reasons, had not God fought for them.

These and such like are common in the Scripture: and seeing wee allow that liberty to all Writers, and to our selves in common speech; no reason to deny it to the Scripture, which was written for all mens underſtanding, and therefore in ſuch phraſes as are uſuall and ordinary with all men.

And the like liberty is here taken alſo in another figure, as many as the ſands by the ſhore of the ſea: the word properly ſignifieth and ſoundeth, the lip of the Sea. Now the Sea hath no lip, but it is a ſpeech taken or borrowed from man or beaſt who have lips, and the ſea ſhore reſembleth a lip. For looke what a lip is to them, the ſhores are to the Sea: as the two lips doe incloſe the mouth, ſo the two ſhores on both ſides doe incloſe the Sea, which lieth as in a mouth betwixt them. From hence wee may learne profitable inſtructions:

First, that therefore Rhetorike is a warrantable, good and lawfull Art; and it ariſeth thus; That which the holy Ghoſt practiſeth, muſt needs bee not onely not evill, but good and warrantable. But the holy Ghoſt uſeth and practiſeth Rhetorike, here and in many other places elſe of the Scripture: Therefore it is a good and lawfull Art. The propoſition is undoubted, the aſſumption is cleare both by theſe places, and almoſt the whole body of the Scripture: many of S. Pauls Epiſtles, many of Chriſts owne Sermons, S. Iohns Goſpell, many of the Prophets, eſpecially Iſaiah, have as much and as elegant Rhetorike in them, as any writers in the world: and beſide all other vertue and divine power in them, doe even for figures and ornaments of Art, match any Oratours that have written in the Greeke or Latine. Nor would it bee any hard taske to undertake to prove and illuſtrate every approved rule of Rhetorike, out of ſome part of Scripture. Now if it be lawfull to practiſe the rules of Rhetorike, then it is lawfull alſo to collect thoſe rules together, to pen them, and to make an Art of them. They therefore that holding the contrary, doe ſay, or teach, or write, it is unlawfull, goe againſt the ſtreame and common practice of the Scripture, and rules of common reaſon.

Secondly, here it is apparant, that in preaching Gods Word it is lawfull and warrantable for a Miniſter to uſe Rhetorike and eloquence. And the reaſon is good: for that which the holy Ghoſt uſeth in penning of the Scripture, the ſame may Gods Miniſters uſe alſo in preaching the ſame. They therefore that deny that libertie to Miniſters, are too rough and rugged, and pull out of the hand of the Miniſters one of his weapons, and out of the wings of the Scripture one of her feathers.

Yet we muſt know, that all, or any kinde of eloquence is not permitted to a Chriſtian Miniſter; For Saint Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 2. 13. Wee ſpeake the words of God, not in the words which mans wiſdome teacheth, but which the holy Ghoſt teacheth, comparing ſpirituall things with ſpirituall things: So that there is a holy, a ſanctified, a ſpirituall eloquence, an eloquence fit for ſpirituall things, and that eloquence muſt be uſed. As the Iſraelites might marry the Midianite women, whom they had taken in war, but not till they had purified them, Numb. 31. 18, 19. And more plainly and particularly, Deut. 21. 11, 12, 13. Moſes explaineth what that purifying is: And thou ſhalt bring her home into thine houſe, and ſhe ſhall ſhave her head, and pare her nailes, and put off the garment ſhe was taken in, and then thou maiſt marry her: So, humane eloquence muſt be brought home to divinitie, and be pared and ſhaved with ſpirituall wiſdome, and then may lawfully and profitably be uſed.

For our more ſpeciall direction herein, theſe cautions may be obſerved:

First, the more naturall it is, and the leſſe affected, the more commendable is it in the doer, and more profitable to the hearer.

Secondly, it muſt be grave, ſober, and modeſt; remembring the height and holineſſe of the place a man ſtands in, and of the worke he doth. Therefore it muſt not conſiſt in telling ſtrange tales, or uſing ſuch geſtures or words, manner or matter as may move laughing and ſmiling in the Auditors. There may bee wit in ſuch doing; but it can hardly be the ſanctified and ſpirituall eloquence, which Saint Paul there ſpeakes of.

Thirdly, it muſt be ſuch as may be an helpe, and not an hinderance to the underſtanding of Gods Word: for it is a Damoſell to Divinitie, but not her Miſtreſſe. Gods Word therefore muſt not bow and bend to her; much leſſe be wrung and wreſted to her, but ſhe to Gods Word.

It muſt in a word be ſuch, as may moſt lively, purely, plainly, and ſignificantly expreſſe the meaning of Gods Word. Therefore a man muſt endevour that all his ſpeech bee in one language, at leaſt, in ſuch as his hearers underſtand: for elſe if he ſpeake the body of his ſpeech in one, and peece out the members in other, which the people underſtand not; hee may indeed in his owne ſpirit ſpeake myſteries, but to the hearer he ſpeaketh parables. And to his own underſtanding, he may preach well, but the hearer is not edified: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 14. 2, 17. Therefore let not eloquence be an hinderance to the underſtanding of the hearers, which God hath ordained to be an helpe and furtherance. And with theſe or ſuch like qualifications, eloquence may be uſed with good warrant and much profit. And for cautions or qualifications herein, hardly can any man ſet downe better rules than every mans conſcience will unto himſelfe.

Thirdly, in as much as the holy Ghoſt here and elſewhere uſeth ſo much Rhetorike, Divines may learne where the fountaine of Chriſtian eloquence is; namely, in the Scriptures of the old and new Teſtament. Which being compiled by the wiſdome of God, wee are to aſſure our ſelves they containe in them true wiſdome of all ſorts. Precepts of Rhetorike, I confeſſe, are to be learned out of other bookes, which purposely doe teach them; but the practice of those rules in examples, can be no where better than in Moses, the Prophets, and the Evangelists. And this must needs follow upon that, that hath already beene granted. For if we yeeld, that Rhetorike is good and lawfull, and practised in the Scripture; then it must needs follow, that it is there practised in the best manner: for shall the Divinity there taught be the soundest? the History there reported the truest? the conclusions of Philosophy, Astronomy, Geometry, Arithmeticke, Cosmography, and Physicke, there delivered, the surest? the Musicke there practised, the exactest? the Logicke there practised, the sharpest? the Lawes there enacted, the justest? and shall not the Rhetoricke, there practised, be the purest? Surely, if Moses had written a booke of his owne, as hee was a meere man, and as hee was Moses, brought up in Ægypt: or Paul writ a booke, as he was a Pharisie, and Doctor of the Law; they would have beene full of all excellent learning: for Paul was brought up at the foot of Gamaliel, Act. 22. 3. And Moses was exceedingly learned in all the learning of the Ægyptians, and mighty in word and deed, Act. 7. 22.

Shall they then be the Secretaries of the most high God, the fountaine of wisdome, and learning; and shall not their bookes be filled with the most excellent learning in all kindes? Doubtlesse, who ever searcheth it, shall finde it to be so.

Seeing therefore Eloquence is lawfull, and that Preachers may lawfully use it; let them also know, where to have it: let them study Gods bookes, and there they shall finde not onely Divinity, but knowledge and learning of all sorts, and that most exquisite: and as excellent patternes and presidents of Eloquence, as are to be found in any Authors in the world. And let them, if they would preach with spirituall power and eloquence; looke how Moses, the Prophets, our Saviour Christ, and his Apostles preached: for to follow them is the true way.

Thus we see the manner here used by the holy Ghost, in these two comparisons, to describe the greatnesse of this her posterity.

Now the matter in them contained is, that here is the performance of one of the greatest promises made to Abraham. The promise is, Gen. 22. 17. I will surely blesse thee, and greatly multiply thy seed, as the starres in the heaven, and as the sands by the sea shore. There is the promise; and behold here the performance, in the very same words, and that most true and effectuall: For, at the time when the holy Ghost wrote these words, the Israelites were multiplied to many millions; yea, to a number past number.

So that here we learne, God is true in all his promises, be they never so great or wonderfull: if he speake the word, if the promise passe him, it is sure: Heaven and earth shall rather passe away, than any one peece of his promise shall faile.

The use is to teach us, first, to beleeve God when he promiseth, what-ever it be; for, he is worthie to bee beleeved, who never failed to performe what he promised. He promised these Millions to Abraham, when hee had but one childe; nay, when he had never a one: Gen. 15. 8. and Abraham beleeved. Such a faith was excellent indeed, and deserves eternall commendation (as here it hath.) Let us be children of this faithfull Abraham, and the rather, seeing we see the performance which hee saw not. We thinke it a disgrace, if we be not beleeved; especially, if we doe use to keepe our word: Let us then know thereby, what dishonour it is to the Lord not to beleeve him, which never failed in the performance to any creature.

Secondly, we must here learne of God to be true and faithfull in our words and promises. God spake plainly, and deceived not Abraham: and after at the time performed it; so must wee deale plainly and simply in our words and bargaines, and thinke that to deceive and overreach by crafty words and double meanings, and equivocall phrases are not beseeming Christianity. And we must make conscience of a lie, else we are like the devill and not God. Also a Christian man must take heed what, how, and to whom he promiseth: but having promised, he must performe, though it be losse or harme to himselfe: if it be not wrong to God, or to the Church or State. Wrong to himselfe must not hinder him from performance. Christian mens words must not be vaine, they should be as good as bonds, though I know it is lawfull, and very convenient in regard of mortality, to take such kinde of assurances.

Lastly, Abraham had the promise his seed should be so, Gen. 15. 8. and here wee see it is so, but he himselfe saw it not: so that Abraham had the promise, and we the performance. So Adam had the promise of the Messias, but wee see it performed: the Patriarks and Prophets, the promise of the calling of the Gentiles, but we see it performed.

See here the glory of the Church under the New Testament above the Old. This must teach us to be so much better than they, as God is better to us than he was to them: and to excell them in faith, and all other vertues of holinesse; or else their faith and their holy obedience shall turne to our greater condemnation, which have had so farre greater cause to beleeve and obey God, and so farre better meanes than they. Which if it be so: then alas, what will become of them who come behind them, nay, have no care to follow them in their faith, nor holinesse, nor any duties of holy obedience.

Thus much for the example of this holy womans faith, and of the commendation thereof.

Now before he come to any more particular examples

examples of faith, the holy Ghost gives a generall commendation of the faith of all those joyntly which are spoken of already.

VERSE 13.

All these died in faith, and receiued not the promises, but saw them afarre off, and beleeued them: and receiued them thankefully, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

HItherto the holy Ghost hath particularly commended the faith of divers holy beleevers. Now from this verse to the 17. he doth generally commend the faith of Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Iacob together; yet not so much their faith, as the durance and constancy of their faith. Particularly the points are two:

1. Is laid downe their constancy and continuance; All these died in faith.
2. That constancy is set forth by foure effects:
   1. They receiued not the promises, but saw them afarre off.
   2. They beleeued them.
   3. Received them thankefully.
   4. Professed themselves strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

The first point touching these beleevers is; that as they begun, so they held on: as they lived, so they died in faith.

All these died in faith.] The truth of the matter in the words, may bee referred to all afore-going, saving Enoch who died not; yet he continued also constant in his faith, and in that faith was taken up: but as for Abel and Noah, they died in faith. Yet I take it, that principally and directly, the holy Ghost intended no more than these foure I named: and my reason is, because the particular effects in this verse, and the points where this their constancie is amplified in the three verses following, doe all agree, especially with these foure; and not so properly with Abel or Noah: so that I take, he meaneth by all these, all these men that lived in the second world since the flood. All these died in faith; that is, in assurance that the promises made unto them should be performed in Gods good time.

These promises were principally these two:

1. Salvation by the Messias,
2. The possession of the Land of Canaan.

In this faith they died; that is, they held it (thorow all assaults and temptations to the contrary) even to the last gaspe, and died therein.

In this their practice is commended unto us a most worthy lesson of Christianity: namely, that we must so live that we may die in faith. Many say they live in faith: and it is well if they doe so: but the maine point is, to die in faith. There is none so ill, but howsoever he lives, yet he would die well: If he would die well, he must die in faith. For miserable is the death that is without faith. And herein faith and hope differ from other graces of God; Love, joy, zeale, holinesse, and all other graces are imperfect here, and are perfected in heaven: but faith and hope are perfected at our deaths; they are not in the other world, for there is nothing then to bee beleeved nor hoped for, seeing we then doe enjoy all things: but as they are begun in our life, at our regeneration, so they bee made perfect when wee die; and they shine most gloriously in the last and greatest combat of all, which is at the houre of death. So that the death of a Christian, which is the gate to glory, is to die in faith.

Besides, as life leaves us, so death findes us; and as death leaves us, so the last judgement findes us: and as it leaves us, so we continue for ever and ever without recoverie of alteration.

Now to die in faith, is to die in an assured estate of glory and happinesse; which is that that every man desireth: therefore, as wee all desire it, so let us die in faith, and we shall attaine unto it.

Saint Paul tells us, 1 Cor. 15. 55. Death is a terrible serpent, for hee hath a poisoned sting: Now when we die, we are to encounter with this hideous and fearefull serpent. Hee is fearefull every way, but especially for his sting: that sting is our sin: and this sting is not taken away, nor the force of it quenched, but by true faith, which quencheth all the fiery darts of the devill, Eph. 6. 16. If therefore we would be able to encounter with this great enemie, (in the conquering of whom stands our happinesse; and by whom to be conquered is our eternall misery) wee must then so arme our selves with faith, that we may die in faith; for he that dieth in faith, that faith of his kills his sinnes, and conquers death: but hee that dieth without faith, death and sinne seaze on him, and his sins live for ever, and his misery by them.

Now, if we would die in faith, we must live in faith; else it is not to be expected: For, so these holy Patriarchs lived long in this faith, wherein they died. For their holy lives shewed plainly, that they lived in that faith which the Apostle ſtle ſaith) doth purifie our hearts, Act. 15. 9. Now if we would live in true faith, the meanes to attaine it, ſet downe by Gods Word, are theſe:

First, we muſt labour to get knowledge of the fundamentall points of Religion; of God, of the Creation, the Fall, the immortalitie of the Soule, the two Covenants, of Works by the Law, of Grace by the Mediator; and ſuch other ſubſtantiall points touching God, his Word, Sacraments, Law, Goſpel, Prayer, good Works, &c. as the Scriptures, and the Creeds, and Catechiſmes out of the Scripture, doe yeeld unto us. Herein the caſe of the common people of all nations is miſerable. In Popery their Clergy is ſo fat and full, they will not; in our Churches the Miniſtery (a great part of it) ſo poore and ill provided for, they cannot teach. Betwixt both, the people of the world doe periſh for lacke of knowledge; for how can they but periſh that die not in faith? How can they die ſo that live not in faith? And how can they ever have faith that haye no knowledge, ſeeing knowledge is the foundation of faith? Therefore it needs the helpe of thoſe that may, and the prayers of all, that our Church may have Teachers, and our people Catechiſers: for without learning the Catechiſme, it is impoſſible to learne Religion.

Secondly, when wee have got knowledge, and ſo laid the foundation; then muſt we learne the promiſe of God for ſalvation, and wee muſt hide them in our hearts, as the Jewels of life, of ſalvation. We muſt beleeve them to bee true and effectuall to all that will take hold of them; and we our ſelves muſt therefore take hold of them, and apply them to our ſoules.

Thirdly, after both theſe, we muſt conforme our ſelves thorowout (heart, and life) unto the holy lawes of God: we muſt leave all bad waies and ungodly courſes, though they be never ſo deare unto us, or ſo common in the world; and muſt make conſcience of all ſinne, and endevour to doe all duties to God and man.

The firſt of theſe is the ground of faith: the ſecond is faith it ſelfe: the laſt the fruit and effect of it, and an aſſured teſtimony of it to God, to his Church, and to a mans owne conſcience. And to doe theſe three things is to walke in the old and holy way, conſecrated by Chriſts bloud, and troden in by all the holy Fathers: and Popery, nor any other religion can appoint ſo ſafe, ſo ſure, nor ſo direct a way. Thus lived Abraham, Sarah, Iſaac, and Iacob, and after this courſe they died in faith, and now live in glorie: and ſo ſhall we with them, if we will live in faith as they did; but elſe we may long looke for Heaven before wee come there. Indeed God can make a man that lived not in faith, die in faith; but the matter is not what hee can do, but what is his ordinary courſe; and that is this; They that live in faith die in faith. Therfore let us take the ordinary courſe, and repent, and turne betimes, and live the life of faith; and leave the late repentance to them that thinke it but a ſport to venture a ſoule: that courſe may ſpeed; but this courſe is ſure to ſpeed: he that lives in ſinne, may hope to die in faith; but he that lives in faith, is ſure to die in faith, and to live in glory for ever.

Secondly, obſerve how it is ſaid, All theſe died in faith: not ſome, but all. Abraham the father, and the root, and with him the wife, the child, and the grand-child: behold a true noble bloud, a holy kindred, a bleſſed generation: worthy is Abraham of all the honour he hath, who was the root of ſuch a noble and bleſſed brood. And worthy are Iſaac and Iacob of ſo good a father, who ſtained not their bloud by forſaking their faith: but held it as they received it, and lived and died in it. Let this teach us firſt, if we be fathers, to ſhine before our children in a holy religion, true faith, and good life; and it is great hope that our wives and children will follow us in the ſame.

Secondly, if we be ſonnes, to looke which of our forefathers and anceſtors embraced the moſt holy Religion; and to chuſe, and live and die in their faith. Moſt of our young Papiſts can ſay no more for their religion but this; my father, and grand-father were of that religion. But they muſt looke all to their fore-fathers: Iſaac and Iacob would not bee of their great grand-fathers (Nahors or Terahs) religion, but of their father Abraham: and Abraham himſelfe would not be of his father Terahs, or his grand-father Nahors religion; but he went up a great deale higher, to his forefathers to the tenth generation Noah, and Shem, and embraced their religion. So that we ſee, it is nothing to ſay, I am of my fathers, or grand-fathers religion; unleſſe firſt I prove that theirs was of God: and then hee is a noble Chriſtian man, which knowing that, will not forſake it, but will live and die in it.

Thirdly, ſee here true honour and gentry is to live and die in the true faith and holy religion of our Anceſtors; here is the fountaine of honour, to do as theſe did. Abraham perceives hee is wrong, and erred with his fathers; he therefore leaves his fathers and grand-fathers religion, and goeth up higher, and takes a better. Iſaac his ſonne makes himſelfe heire, not of his land alone, but of his fathers religion alſo: Iacob the grand-child followes both, and dieth in faith with them. Behold here Iacob, a true gentleman in bloud, his holineſſe and religion is in the third deſcent: Let us all learne to adorne our gentility and nobility with theſe enſignes of true honour.

And let all them that ſhame to ſtaine their bloud by treaſons, or miſdemeanours; ſhame alſo, to let their fore-fathers religion, holineſſe, or vertues falle in them: but let them all ſo live in them, that with Iacob they may die in their fathers faith.

Laſtly, obſerve how it is ſaid, they died in faith: they afore lived in it; but now their principall ciall commendation is, they died in it.

Let us learne here to hold on in a good courſe when wee have entred into it: for conſtancy and continuance is the true commendation: he that dieth in faith, is he that receives the crowne. To this end, let us ſtirre up our ſelves with the Apoſtles exhortation, Gal. 6. 9. Let us not be weary of well-doing, for in due time we ſhall reape if we faint not.

And further, let this teach us all to chuſe that faith to live in (with theſe holy Patriarchs) that we may boldly die in. It is a true obſervation, that Popery is a good religion to live in, but ours to die in. The Papiſts uſurpe this ſaying, and turne it the contrary way; but they have as much right to it, as the theefe to the true mans purſe. The liberty, the pardons, diſpenſations, ſanctuarie, the pompe and outward glory of their Church; and their faſting and outward auſterities, being foule and feined hypocriſies, and indeed open licentiouſneſſe: theſe and many things more, may allure any naturall man in the world, to live in their religion; but when they come to die, then they all know, and ſome confeſſe, it is ſureſt and ſafeſt to die in our religion. Let us therefore cheerefully and comfortably live in that religion and faith wherein we may ſo boldly die, that even our adverſaries confeſſe it to be ſafeſt.

Now follow the foure effects and fruits of their faith:

The firſt is this: that

They received not the promiſes, but ſaw them afarre off.

By Promiſes we underſtand, firſt, the promiſes of the Land of Canaan. Secondly, the ſpirituall promiſes of the Kingdome of Chriſt. Theſe they did not receive; that is, fully; though in part they did: for true faith doth alwaies receive, apprehend, and apply unto it ſelfe truly, though not fully, the thing promiſed. God ſaid, he would give them the Land of Canaan: but they did not fully enjoy and poſſeſſe it. So likewiſe the Meſſias was promiſed unto them, but they never ſaw his comming in the fleſh, and yet they beleeved Gods promiſe, and died in that faith.

Where wee may ſee the invincible force of their faith that cleaved faſt unto the promiſe of God, even unto death; though they never enjoyed the things promiſed in this life: which plainly condemnes our age of unbeleefe, for we have more accompliſhed unto us than ever they had. Abraham never ſaw Chriſt, but afarre off; yet wee have him exhibited in the fleſh: we ſee and know he lived and died, roſe againe, and aſcended, and now makes continuall interceſſion for us: and we have the true Sacraments, which ſhall laſt for ever pledges of him, and of life everlaſting by him. And for temporall promiſes, we have farre more accompliſhed unto us than ever we had. But though we goe before Abraham in the fruition of Gods

A promiſes, yet we come farre behind him in beleefe; for faith worketh by love, and love is ſeene in true obedience: but generally, this is too true, men make no conſcience of obedience; which ſheweth undoubtedly, that there is little ſound faith among us. And it may bee feared that theſe notable men, Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob, ſhall ſtand in judgement againſt us to our further condemnation, for they never received the accompliſhment of Gods promiſes, and yet they beleeved: but we doe ſee the ſame fulfilled and exhibited unto us, and yet we will not beleeve.

But ſaw them afarre off.

Here is the property of their faith, and the B power of it: the promiſes were afarre off, and yet they ſaw them. The phraſe here uſed is borrowed from Mariners; who being farre on the Sea, cannot deſcry townes and coaſts afarre off, but onely by helpe of ſome tower or high place, which their eye will ſooner diſcerne, although it bee afarre off: And ſo Abraham, Sarah, Iſaac and Iacob, being long before the day of Chriſts incarnation, could not otherwaies ſee Chriſt, but afarre off, by the eye of faith in the promiſes of the Meſſias: for this is the propertie of faith, to make a thing abſent to bee preſent, after a ſort: Faith being the ground of things hoped for, and the evidence of things which are not ſeene.

D Here wee may learne a difference betweene
C the Church in the old Teſtament, and in the new. Wee in the new Teſtament have greater meaſure of knowledge, more lively diſcerning of the Meſſias, and a clearer light of underſtanding in the myſterie of our ſalvation by Chriſt, than the Church had under the old Teſtament: howſoever they excelled in faith, yet in the knowledge and diſcerning of Chriſt they were inferiour unto us. And therefore the Lord made this promiſe to the time of the Goſpell long before; that then the earth ſhall be full of knowledge of the Lord, as the waters that cover the Sea. And Saint Paul proves this performed, when he affirmeth of the Church of the new Teſtament, 2 Corinth. 3. 18. But all we as in a mirrour behold the glory of the Lord with open
D face. And Chriſt, Joh. 6. 45. They ſhall bee all taught of God.

If this be true, that knowledge ſhould ſo abound in the time of the Goſpell; then all ignorant perſons of this latter age of the world muſt know, that they have much to anſwer for at the laſt day of judgement: for God in the new Teſtament hath made his Church to abound in knowledge, ſo that their ignorance (for which they thinke God will hold them excuſed) ſhall bee a bill of inditement againſt them at the laſt day, to their further condemnation: becauſe the light of the Goſpell is ſo cleerely and plentifully revealed in theſe daies, that whereas the moſt excellent Patriarchs of all, could then but ſee Chriſt afarre off, the most ſimple may now ſee him neere unto them.

Againe, where is more knowledge, there ſhould be more obedience: therefore it concerneth all thoſe that profeſſe themſelves to bee Chriſtians, and ſubmit themſelves to heare and learne the word of God taught unto them; not to content themſelves with bare knowledge, though it be never ſo much: But withall, to bring forth the fruits of obedience in their lives and converſations. For though Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, in regard of faith did goe farre before us; yet ſeeing we have more knowledge than they had in the Meſſias, we muſt labour to become like unto them in the obedience of our lives; their faith was ſtronger than ours: but our obedience ſhould be greater than theirs, becauſe we have more cauſe to beleeve than they. S. Paul ſaith, We all behold as in a mirrour, the glory of the Lord with open face. And the end thereof is this, that we may be transformed into the ſame image from glory to glory, as by the ſpirit of the Lord. So that the more knowledge we have, the more ſanctification we ought to have, and the more hatred of ſin, and more obedience to Gods commandements. But the more is the pitie, the caſe goeth farre otherwiſe with the World: for even many among us that are no Students by profeſſion, have great and commendable knowledge in religion. But where is the fruit hereof in holy obedience to the Lawes of God? God by calling hath made us a pleaſant vine: but the ſowre Grapes of ſinne are our ordinarie fruit, they be the grapes of gall (as Moſes ſaith.) For Atheiſme, blaſphemy, contempt of Gods word and worſhip, with open profaning of Gods Sabbath, doe every where abound; to omit the heinous crimes againſt the ſecond Table, as oppreſſion, adulterie, and bloud touching bloud: for all which we may juſtly feare, that the Lord will either remove his Candleſticke from us, and ſo of a Church and people of God make us no Church; or elſe ſweepe us away by ſome fearefull judgement, as with the beſome of deſtruction, becauſe we with-hold the truth in unrighteouſneſſe, Rom. 1. 18. For better it were not to have knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, than to turne from the holy commandement given unto us: let us therefore joyne with our knowledge obedience, that ſo wee may ſhew forth our faith in doing our duties of pietie unto God, and of brotherly love and Chriſtianitie unto our brethren. Thus much of the firſt fruit of their faith.

2 Cor. 3. 22.

Deut. 32. 33.

The ſecond fruit of their faith is noted in theſe words; And beleeved them. Where by beleeving, we muſt underſtand not ſo much the act of faith, for that was noted before, as the growth and increaſe of their faith: for the word imports a confirmation of their hearts, and a reſolution in aſſurance of the promiſes made unto them: which is not unuſuall in Scripture; for Paul prayeth for the Churches who had

A true knowledge, faith, and love, that they might increaſe and abound therein more and more, Ephe. 3. 16, 17. Phil. 1. 9, 11. Coloſſ. 1. 9, 11.

Here then wee may obſerve in the example of theſe Patriarchs, that it is the duty and property of every true beleever, to goe forward and increaſe in faith, till he come to a full perſwaſion and aſſurance in Gods promiſes. All the gifts of God (and therefore faith) are the Lords talents, and every true beleever is the Lords ſervant, called to occupy therewith. Now God, having put his talent into any mans hand, doth require the increaſe thereof, as the Parable ſhewes, Luk. 19. 13. And this Paul teacheth: for praying for the Epheſians that they may goe on, and be ſtrengthened by the Spirit in the inner man, Ephe. 3. 16. hee ſignifieth, that hee that doth truly beleeve in Chriſt muſt goe on from grace to grace, till he be a tall man in Chriſt: as a childe groweth from yeare to yeare till hee come to bee a ſtrong man. The nature of faith is like unto fire, which will not goe out ſo long as wood or other fuell is put unto it, but will take hold thereof, and grow unto a greater flame; and ſo will faith grow up to a full perſwaſion in all thoſe that conſcionably apply themſelves to the Word and Prayer.

But goes the caſe thus with us in the matter of faith? Nay verily, generally it is farre otherwiſe: for many among us have no regard of faith at all, but think they may live as they luſt, their good meaning will ſerve the turne: others and thoſe not a few, are ſo farre from going forward in faith, that they are every day worſe and worſe, and ſtill goe backward more and more. A third ſort we have that will heare the Word and receive the Sacraments; but yet their growing in grace is very ſlender, they ſtand at a ſtay, and profit little.

Now howſoever it may bee thought but a ſmall fault, not to profit in religion; yet undoubtedly it is a fearefull judgement of God, when the hearers of the Word in any Congregation are daily taught, and doe not profit thereby; and therefore the holy Ghoſt noteth thoſe women to be laden with ſinne, which are ever learning, and yet never are able to come to the knowledge of the truth, 2 Tim. 3. 7. If a childe lately borne, like not well nor grow, when it hath good keeping: the common ſaying is, that it is a Changeling. So if a man heare the Word of God, and doe not increaſe in knowledge, faith and obedience, we may moſt truly ſay of him, that he is a ſpirituall Changeling, and therefore that we may avoid this fearefull judgement of God, wee muſt labour for faith; and having gotten faith, increaſe therein, and in other graces of God, till we come to be ſtrong men in Chriſt.

It is here ſaid, that thoſe Patriarchs increaſed in faith: But it may bee demanded, how and by what meanes they did attaine hereto?

Anſw.

Answ. In the booke of Genesis, we may finde three waies whereby they were confirmed in the faith, and did grow up in grace. The first meanes was from God himselfe; for, when he had made his covenant with Abraham, mercifully renuing the same during his life, as occasion served sundry times, hee stayed not there, suffering it to die with Abraham: but when Abraham was dead, God renued his covenant with Isaac and Rebecca, and with Iacob also after them. Now the tongue of man cannot utter what a wonderfull furtherance it was unto their faith, to have the Lord himselfe to renue his gracious promises unto them. The second meanes of increasing their faith, was their holy conversing one with another: for the manner of the Patriarchs was to teach and instruct their children, and to nurture them up in the true worship and feare of God, by which meanes they did not onely implant Gods promises in the hearts of their children; but were themselves confirmed in the same: for hee that teacheth another from a feeling heart, greatly strengtheneth his owne soule. Now God himselfe doth testifie this thing of Abraham, saying, Gen.18.19. I know him that he will command his sons, and his household after him, that they keepe the way of the Lord, to doe righteousnesse and judgement. Now look what Abraham herein did to Isaac, that no doubt did Isaac unto Iacob. The third meanes to increase their faith was, from each one to himselfe: for they gave themselves oftentimes in their owne persons to muse and meditate upon the promises of God: so it is said of Isaac, that he Gen.24.63. went out to pray or meditate in the field towards evening: and we may perswade our selves it was concerning this and other promises of God, and the accomplishment thereof. And we need not to doubt but that Abraham and Iacob did the like.

These are the meanes by which these godly Patriarchs were strengthened in their faith. All which must be marked of us diligently, and put in practice: for the cause why wee heare the word often, and yet profit little by it, is chiefly this: because the meanes by which men should grow up in faith, are so slenderly used among us. For the first meanes, which is on Gods behalfe to man; is through his great and unspeakable mercy, plentifully afforded in many parts of the Land, in the holy Ministerie of the Gospell: wherein Gods gracious promises of mercie are opened and applied to mens hearts, and his judgement against sinne sharply denounced, to drive men to lay hold on Gods mercie in Christ. But if we regard the second meanes; which is mutuall instruction of father to childe, of master to servant, and of one neighbour to another; together with mutuall conference about that we are taught; Or else if we regard the third meanes, which is private meditation upon Gods word and promises taught unto us; (which meditation is to a Christian soule like the chewing of the cudde unto a beast, for as the chewing of the cudde turnes that which was eaten into true feeding; so doth holy meditation make Gods words and promises spirituall refreshing, by digesting them in the heart:) If, I say, we take a view of these two latter, we shall finde them seldome used of very many or not at all. Blessed bee God, we need not to doubt, but there bee some who use these meanes with care and reverence: but alas, these some are very few. And because this duty is so slackly performed, hence it is, that though the covenant of mercy in Christ bee oft repeated, yet men reape little profit by it. So that we must learne to follow this notable practice of these godly Patriarchs, and looke what meanes they used for the increase of their faith, the same also must we use, and that diligently; so shall we grow and increase and wax strong in faith, as they did.

The third fruit of their faith is this, And received them thankfully.

Ασπασάμενοι, the word in the originall doth signifie to salute; and that not only by speech, but any way else, as by embracing, &c. and therefore in this place it is not unfitly translated, And received them thankefully: that is, they tooke them kindly at Gods hands.

This is a notable fruit of faith, whereby they are commended: that seeing the promises of God afarre off, did take them most kindly at Gods hands. But here wee must consider how they tooke them kindly; namely, by doing two things: First, by an action of their heart. Secondly, by an action of their life. The action of their heart was this, that howsoever the promise was not accomplished in their daies, yet they were wonderfully glad thereof: for our Saviour Christ said to the Jewes, Your father Abraham rejoyced to see my day, and he saw it, and was glad. It did Abrahams heart good to see Christ afarre off; and so we may safely thinke of Sarah, Isaac, and Iacob, and their hearts were also ravished with joy, to heare the wonderfull promise of God concerning the Messias; and to thinke of the most joyfull performance which they knew should follow in due time. Ioh.8.57.

Secondly, they tooke this promise kindly by the practice of their life; for when they came to any strange place (as wee often reade in the storie) there they built up altars, and offered sacrifice unto God, and called on his Name. All which they did, to testifie their inward joy, and thankfull acceptance of Gods promises in Christ, and of the promised land, though neither were accomplished in their dayes. Gen.12.8. & 26.25 & 33.20.

Now as touching our selves, the same maine promises of God, that were made to Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, hath the Lord made and continued unto us: nay, wee have the same already accomplished: and wee see the same verified verified more evidently and plainly than any of the Patriarchs did. Which being true, our duty is to take the same much more thankfully and kindly at Gods hands, than they did or could doe; because wee have more light and knowledge in the promises of God than ever the Patriarchs had.

But we have just cause to bewaile the daies and times wherein we now live: for whereas we should take the promises of God most joyfully and kindly; the case is farre otherwise. For generally, it may bee said of our nation and people, that in regard of the mercies and promises of God wee are an unkinde people. And that this is true (for the most part) in all of us, if we will but a little examine the matter, we shall finde it too apparant by many evidences: for first, let any of us be brought to a place where wee may behold some vaine Enterlude, or a Show: a man would not thinke how wonderfully we are ravished there withall, so as wee could finde in our hearts to spend whole dayes in beholding them. But let us bee brought to heare the Gospel of Christ, his holy Word preached and taught; as it was unto Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, (wherein they much rejoyced) and there we sit heavy and drowsie, so as the word seemes loathsome unto us, and one houre is so tedious as wee hardly hold it out without sleeping: and if it passe the houre a little, O how impatiently our natures take it! All which shew plainly, that we have no such joy to heare of Christ and his mercifull promises, as these godly Patriarchs had: so that we are both hard-hearted and unkinde, and altogether insensible of so great favours and mercies of our God towards us.

Secondly, consider mens behaviour in Gods worship: It is evident, that the greatest part of people worship God but in formall shew, for fashions sake. These godly Patriarchs, Abraham, &c. built altars in every place where they came, and offered sacrifice unto God, to signifie their kindnesse and willing heart towards God for his promises. But now men worship God formally, not in way of thankfulnesse; but either because the Law compels them to it, or else because it is a custome and order which must be kept. For proofe thereof take some one of the common sort, and aske him why hee commeth into the Congregation? he will say he commeth to doe as other men doe; but what they do he knoweth not: nor what he himselfe should doe he cannot tell, nor careth much to know. Others also come to worship God; but aske them how they doe it, they will say, by saying over the ten Commandements, the Lords Prayer, and the Beleefe. But, if the word be either preached, or read, they regard it not, thinking all Gods worship stands in the repeating of those three things. Which sheweth that they worship God but for fashion-sake, and with little more than a plaine lip-labour.

A

Another sort there are, which come neere to God with their lips, but their hearts are farre from him; for though their bodies be present in the Congregation, yet their hearts are wandring about their worldly busines, or the works of sinne; so that we may truly say, God is not worshipped with faith in the heart. And therefore we are unkinde people, and quite degenerate from the faith of our fore-fathers, the holy Patriarchs, who received Gods promises so kindly and thankfully.

B

Thirdly, wee have the Word of God daily preached and taught unto us: but how many be there that make conscience of obeying the same in their lives and callings? Men doe come and heare, and should learne: but when they come home, they do flat contrary to that which is taught. Now there can bee no greater unthankfulnesse nor unkindnesse towards God than this, that men should heare and not obey, for disobedience is as the sin of witchcraft: nay, the Lord himselfe saith, that he that maketh no conscience of obedience in his life, is in his actions of Gods worship no more acceptable unto God, than a murtherer is when he kils a man. 1 Sam. 15.23. Isay 66.3.

Wherefore, seeing obedience is so rare to be found among us, and disobedience aboundeth every where, it is a plaine argument that wee take not the promises of God kindly, nor thankfully at his hands: for if we did, we would at least endevour our selves to doe what God commands in his Law, and desireth in his Gospell, and so bee thankfull unto God for his mercies, shewing forth our thankfulnesse by our obedience. So that it standeth us in hand, every man to looke unto himselfe for his owne part, seeing God hath given us his Gospell, the meanes of our salvation, that therefore we receive and embrace the same, lest God doe either take the same from us, or us from it: for we may be sure that the one of these two will follow, if we doe daily heare and make no conscience to obey. And thus much of the third fruit of the Patriarchs faith.

The fourth fruit of their faith followeth; And confessed that they were strangers and Pilgrims on the earth.

D

Herein we are to consider divers points: First, the Text saith, They confessed; that is, they professed openly what they were, and what their religion was; and that not only amongst themselves, but before the face of Gods enemies, and heathen men. Gen. 23. 4. Abraham told the people of the land of Canaan, that hee was a stranger and a forranner among them. And when Iacob came before Pharaoh, he confessed, that both his daies, and the daies of his Fathers, were daies of pilgrimage: Gen. 47. 9. Now affirming so openly that they were strangers in those Countries, they intimated a plaine denial and dislike of the religion and idolatrie of those heathen Countries, and proclaimed themselves to be of another religion: so that this is true which is here ſaid of them, that they made confeſſion and profeſſion of their eſtate and their faith, and that to the enemies of God.

Hence we learne that we are not to be aſhamed of that holy profeſſion of Chriſtian religion to which we are called. Our calling is to profeſſe the Goſpell and religion of Chriſt; now to many it is a reproach and ignominie; but we muſt learne this ſpeciall leſſon by the example of theſe men, that howſoever the world judge of Chriſt and his religion, yet we having entred into this holy profeſſion, and being called hereunto, muſt never bee aſhamed of it; much leſſe deny or forſake the ſame. In the Primitive Church it was a contemptible thing, both among the Jewes and Grecians to be a Chriſtian: to the one, the Goſpell was a ſtumbling-blocke, to the other a laughing-ſtocke, 1 Cor. 1. 23. And yet Paul profeſſed openly, that hee was not aſhamed of that holy Goſpell, Rom. 1. 16. And ſo it ought to bee with us, wee profeſſe Chriſts religion, and therefore we muſt not be aſhamed of it. Some there be that know but little, and yet have a good minde to religion; but when they do ſee ſome doe nothing elſe but make a mocke and a jeſt of religion, they are thereby daunted and held backe from the open profeſſion, and embracing of it.

But if we looke to be ſaved by faith, as theſe men were, we muſt learne by their example, not to be aſhamed of the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, whereto wee are called: but muſt follow this notable example of Abraham and the Patriarchs, who were not aſhamed, nor afraid to teſtifie their profeſſion among the Heathen, whenſoever any occaſion was offered; for whoſoever is aſhamed of Chriſt in this world, Chriſt will be aſhamed of him at the laſt Iudgement, before his Father in the world to come, Luke 9. 26.

To goe further: Theſe Patriarchs profeſſe two things: 1. That they were ſtrangers. 2. That they were Pilgrims. A ſtranger is one that hath his abode not in his owne, but in a ſtrange Country, though he travell not.

And a Pilgrim is one that is going thorow a forren Countrey to his owne home. Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob were ſtrangers, becauſe they dwelt as ſtrangers in Tents, not in their owne Countries where they were borne; but in that ſtrange Countrey whither God had called them; and they were Pilgrims, becauſe they were alwayes ready to goe whitherſoever God would call them: and in all places whereſoever they were, ſtill they waited on God, and ſought to him for the kingdome of heaven.

Now this was not proper to theſe Patriarchs, but is alſo common to all Chriſtians, that looke to be ſaved by the ſame faith: for David, long after them, confeſſeth unto God, Pſalm. 39. 12. that hee is a Stranger, and a Pilgrim, or ſojourner with him, as all his Fathers were. And even

A wee alſo muſt follow their faith in the practice of this profeſſion: dwelling here on the earth, we muſt teſtifie and profeſſe our ſelves to be both ſtrangers and Pilgrims.

But how (will ſome ſay) ſhall we be anſwerable to this profeſſion? Anſ. For the practice hereof, we muſt doe theſe three things: 1. We muſt uſe this world and the things thereof, as though we uſed them not, 1 Cor. 7. 31. The temporall bleſſings we here enjoy, we muſt ſo uſe, as though they were not ours; but as ſtrangers doe, onely for the preſent occaſion: but wee muſt not ſet our hearts thereon. And the rather to perſwade us hereunto, let us conſider the practice of theſe godly Patriarchs. They had the promiſe of the land of Canaan diſtinctly and abſolutely; ſo as no man in the world B hath more right to any thing that he poſſeſſeth than they had to this land; yet when they came into it, they enjoyed it, and all things therein as ſtrangers; and poſſeſſed nothing, but did even buy ground to bury their dead in. And, ſo muſt we uſe the things that wee have in this world; for our houſes, wee muſt ſo uſe them as Strangers do an Inne: and for our goods, we muſt uſe them as Pilgrims doe other mens goods, where they ſtay for a night: wee muſt ſo uſe them alwaies, as being ready and willing to leave them the next morning, or at any time when God ſhall call us away.

Secondly, wee muſt caſt off all things in this world, that may any whit hinder us in our journy to the kingdome of heaven; like unto good C travellers, who will carry nothing with them in the way, but that which may further them to their journies end; and if any thing hinder them in the way, they will caſt it from them, and rather loſe it than be hindered from their home. But what is that which is burthenſome unto us in this our journey to heaven? This S. Paul ſheweth, when he ſaith, 2 Tim. 3. 6. that certaine ſimple women are laden with ſinne. Behold, ſin is that that ladeth us: and the Author to the Hebrewes calleth ſinne, the thing that hangeth on ſo faſt, and preſſeth us downe, Heb. 12. 1. Therfore if we will be good travellers and pilgrims toward the kingdome of heaven, we muſt take heed of ſinne: for that will hold us downe D that wee cannot get one ſtep forward, but will draw us backward unto hell: for the way is ſtrait that leadeth unto life, and the gate narrow, and few there be that can enter into it, Matth. 7. 13. Hee that would come hither, muſt come with an humble and pure heart: for the gate will not ſuffer any that is laden with ſinne, to enter therein. The proud man, whoſe heart is puffed up with pride: and the covetous man, whoſe heart is inlarged with a deſire of gaine; The ambitious man, who is with childe with worldly pompe and ſtate: and the luxurious and voluptuous man, who feedeth and fatteth himſelfe with earthly and carnall pleaſures; all theſe are growne too bigge to enter into this ſtrait gate. But the meeke in ſpirit, who lead an humble and innocent life, theſe ſhall tread in this path, although it be narrow; and enter in at this doore, though it be ſtrait. And therefore wee muſt caſt off every ſinne, by the practice of true repentance; and ſo make our ſelves fit pilgrims for the way to heaven.

Thirdly, wee muſt learne contentation of heart in every eſtate of life, which God ſhall ſend upon us: wee muſt be contented as well in ſickneſſe, as in health; in poverty, as in plenty; in trouble, as in peace; and in good report, and ill report; and in all eſtates of life and death. A Pilgrim in his way taketh all things patiently that befall him; and if he be injured any way, he puts it up quietly, without ſeeking revenge or making complaint, till he come home; where he knowes he ſhall have audience and redreſſe. Even ſo muſt wee behave our ſelves in this our pilgrimage to heaven: in hope of that redreſſe and reſt we ſhall have, we muſt beare all things patiently that befall us in this life, which is the way: and doing theſe three things, wee ſhall ſo become good pilgrims and ſtrangers in this world.

Here two queſtions offer themſelves to bee conſidered: Firſt, if every man both in profeſſion and practice, muſt ſhew himſelfe to bee a pilgrim and ſtranger in this world. Whether then is it not a good ſtate of life for a man to contemne the world and all things in it, and to betake himſelfe to perpetuall beggery and voluntary poverty? Anſw. The world in Scripture is taken divers wayes: firſt, for the corruptions and ſinnes in the world: and theſe muſt be contemned by all meanes poſſible: yea, that is the beſt religion which teacheth beſt how to contemne theſe; and he the beſt man who moſt forſakes them in what calling ſoever he lives.

Secondly, for temporall bleſſings, as money, lands, wealth, ſuſtenance, and ſuch like outward things as concerne the neceſſary or convenient maintenance of this naturall life. And in this ſenſe the world is not to be contemned, for in themſelves theſe earthly things are the good gifts of God, which no man can ſimply contemne, without injury to Gods diſpoſing hand and providence, who hath ordained them for naturall life.

The Papiſts eſteeme it an Angelicall ſtate of perfection, approaching neere to the ſtate of glory, when a man forſaketh all, and betakes himſelfe to voluntary poverty, as begging Friers doe: But indeed it is a meere device of mans braine, and hath no warrant in Gods Word, which decreeth thus; that hee that will not labour (in ſome lawfull calling) ſhall not eat. Obiect. But here they will ſay, that our Saviour Chriſt ſpeaking to the yong rich man, bade him go and ſell all that he had, and give to the poore, and he ſhould have treaſure in heaven, Mar. 10. Anſ. That commandement was not ordinary but ſpeciall, belonging to that young man: It was a commandement of triall given to him one-

A ly, as this was to Abraham, when God ſaid, Abraham kill thy ſonne, Gen. 22. 2. And the reaſon of that commandement was peculiar to him; namely, to ſhew him his corruption, and to diſcover his hypocriſie. Againe, howſoever the young man was commanded to ſell all, yet hee is not commanded to give all; but onely thus, Sell all, and give to the poore. 2. Obiect. Againe, they object that Chriſt himſelfe was a beggar, and his Diſciples alſo, and had nothing of their owne, but went up and downe in the world as beggers; and lived of that which others miniſtred unto them. Anſw. This is a meere forgery and cannot be proved out of the word of God. The bag which Iudas carried doth prove the contrary: for hee was (as it were) the ſteward in Chriſts family, who looked to their proviſion, and to their contributi-
B on to the poore: as may be ſeene, Joh. 13. 27, 28, 29. Yea, Chriſts Diſciples, though they left the preſent uſe of their houſes and places; yet they gave not over their title and poſſeſſion in them; for Chriſt went to Peters houſe, where he healed his wives mother, Matth. 8. 14. And after the time of Chriſts paſſion, Peter and the other Diſciples returned to their ſhips againe, and became fiſhers for a time. For Chriſt (Joh. 11.) after his reſurrection, appeared to them while they were fiſhing.

2. Queſt. Whether may a man lawfully ſeek to be rich, ſeeing we muſt profeſſe our ſelves to be pilgrims and ſtrangers in this life? Anſ. Ri-
C ches are taken two wayes: 1. for things ſufficient. 2. for abundance. For the firſt, by things ſufficient, I meane things neceſſary and meet for a mans eſtate to maintaine him and his family; and thus a man may ſeeke to be rich: for ſo we are taught to pray in the fourth petition, Give us this day our daily bread, that is, things meet and needfull for the day. From whence I reaſon thus: That which we may lawfully aske at Gods hand, we may lawfully ſeeke for: But we may lawfully aske of God all things neceſſary to this life; Therfore we may lawfully uſe the meanes to attaine unto them. And this Aguis prayer ſheweth alſo, Give me not poverty, Prov. 30. 8.
nor riches, feed me with food convenient for me.
Where wee ſee, it is requiſite a man ſhould la-
D bour for things neceſſary to this life. Now, becauſe mans corrupt nature is ſo gripple, that he would not be contented with the whole world though it were all his; therefore we muſt learne this rule of contentation for worldly things: namely, to follow the counſel of wiſe and godly men, who are neither covetous nor riotous, but reſt contented with that which is ſufficient. As for the wearing of apparell, we have no ſpeciall rule nor precept in Gods word; and therefore our direction muſt be the example and faſhion of the moſt grave and godly in that calling of which we are: whoſe preſident muſt be our direction in all caſes, whereof we have no precept nor rule in Gods word.

But if riches be taken in the ſecond ſenſe, for abundance, above that which is competent and sufficient; then it is not lawfull for a man to seeke to be rich: for proofe hereof, we have the plaine testimony of the word of God; Paul saith, Tim. 6.8,9. When wee have food and rayment, we must therewith be contented: for they that will be rich fall into temptation and snares, and into many foolish and noysome lusts which drowne men in perdition and destruction. Where the Apostle doth not simply condemne a rich estate, but rather the desire to be rich, that is, a desire to have more than is necessary for the maintaining of a mans estate. Yet this is the common sin of the world, men are so covetous that they wil not be contented with that which is enough, but still toile and moile for more, till they have gotten so much under their hands as would honestly and sufficiently maintaineten men of their estate and calling. But all such are condemned by the testimony of the holy Ghost, in the place aforenamed.

Quest. What if God give abundance to a man by lawfull meanes; what must such a man doe? Ans. When God sendeth riches in abundance to any man, he must thinke himselfe to be appointed of God as a steward over them, for the good disposing of them to the glory of God, and the good of his Church; alwayes remembring this rule of the Prophet David, Psal. 62.10. If riches increase, set not thy heart upon them. Hee saith not, If riches increase, refuse them; but set not thy heart on them: and thus much of these Questions.

Now this practice of the Patriarchs is as necessary for us in these dayes as ever it was; for the cause why wee profit little after much hearing of Gods word, is this; we have not behaved our selves like Pilgrims and strangers in this world, but the cares of the things of this life have choked it up, Matth. 13.12. that it could take no ground nor root in our hearts: when we have heard the Word we remember it not, because our hearts and the affections thereof are set on the pleasures and commodities of the world. We therefore must shake off this filthy sinne, and learne to behave our selves like Pilgrims and strangers, not intangling our selves with the things of this life, but using them as though we used them not; so as they be no hinderance to the growth of Gods graces in us.

For they that say such things, declare plainly that they seeke a Country.

In the former verse was set downe the constancy of Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Iacob, in the faith. Now in the 14, 15. and 16. verses, the holy Ghost proceedeth to amplifie and inlarge the commendation of their perseverance in the faith: for the scope of all these verses is to prove, that all these particularly were constant in the faith unto the end. The proofe is made by one substantiall reason; the summe whereof is this: Abraham, Sarah, Isaac and Iacob sought for their Country which was heaven, and therefore they were constant in the true faith.

But some may thinke that this reason is not substantiall, for men may seeke for heaven that never had true saving faith. As, Balaam desired that his end might bee like the end of the righteous, Numb. 23.10. wherewith no doubt hee desired the state of the righteous after this life.

I answer, that this desire of Balaams was not grounded upon any constant perswasion, nor setled resolution, but upon some sudden motion. Secondly, though hee desired to die the death of the righteous, yet he would not live the life of the righteous: he had no delight to walk in the way to come to that end which they walked in; without which no man ordinarily can come to it.

Yet further some will say, Many shall seeke (as our Saviour Christ saith) to enter in at the strait gate of the kingdome of heaven, and shall not be able, Luke 13.24. Therefore to seeke for heaven is no sufficient argument of true faith.

Answer. True indeed, many shall seeke to come to heaven, and shall not be able to enter: because they seeke when the doore of mercy is shut, and when the day of grace is past: for there is a time of grace wherein the Lord will bee found. Now if men seeke him not in this time, though they seeke him never so long after, yet they shall not find him. But the seeking of these Patriarchs was a sound and constant seeking, and so a notable fruit of their true faith. For 1. they sought an heavenly Country: 2. they sought it in due time; not for a time, but thorow the whole course of their lives: 3. they went the right way; denying themselves and their estate in this life, as being strangers upon earth: and they were willing to forsake all things in this world, to attaine heaven, esteeming it as their true dwelling place, and their eternall rest.

Now more particularly, the holy Ghost divideth this reason into two parts, and handleth the same severally: 1. hee proveth that they sought a Country, in this verse; and 2. that this Country which they sought was heaven it selfe, verse 15,16. For the first part, that they sought a Country, is thus proved:

They which say they are Pilgrims and strangers, they shew plainely that they seeke a Country.

But Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob said of themselves that they were Pilgrims and Strangers.

Therefore they shew plainly that they seeke a Country.

The first part of this reason is evident in it selfe: for he that saith hee is a Pilgrim and a stranger in any place, sheweth plainely that he is forth of his owne Country, and therefore seeketh one. The second part of the reason is assumed from their confession, in the end of the former former verse; and confessed, that they were pilgrims and strangers on the earth: from whence the conclusion is laid downe in this 14. verse, that therefore these Patriarchs sought for a country.

In this reason observe, first, that the Author of this Epistle had diligently read the Historie of Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Iacob, penned by Moses in the booke of Genesis: and in reading had observed that which they particularly confessed of themselves in many places of that booke; namely, that they were Pilgrims and strangers: yea, also he gathered from their confession this most heavenly meditation, that therfore they were not in their owne country, but sought another. These three things then the author of this Epistle used about the holy Scriptures: Reading, meditation, and observation.

1 Whence we learne, that all Gods Ministers, and those which prepare themselves to the worke of the Ministery, are diligently to reade and study the holy Scriptures, and to meditate therein. No doubt, the author of this Epistle was an Apostle, and had most notable gifts by vertue of his calling, and yet hee bestowed paines in viewing the particular words of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, recorded by Moses in the booke of Genesis. Daniel also was an extraordinary Prophet, yet (as we may reade) Daniel 9. 2. hee studied with admirable diligence the prophecies of Jeremy and Ezekiel. And Timothy, though he were a Disciple (Act. 16.1.) and well learned, yet Paul chargeth him to give attendance to reading, to exhortation, and to doctrine, 1 Tim. 4.13. And Ezekiel is commanded to eat the role, and to fill his belly with it, Ezekiel 3.3. And S. Iohn likewise is commanded to eat up the little booke, Revel. 10.9,10. which thing he did: all which strongly inforce the former duty, shewing that Gods servant in the Ministery, must as it were, eat up Gods booke; that in judgement and understanding, he may digest as farre as is possible the deepe things of God, and the hardest places of the Scripture: here must he lay his foundation, and hither have recourse from all other writings whatsoever in any matter of doubt.

This direction is most necessarie for the Schooles of the Prophets, and for all Gods Ministers: and yet notwithstanding, the contrary practice beareth sway in the world. For in the Popish Universities most of their Divines apply themselves to study the bookes of certaine Schoole-men, and the Expositors or Commenters thereupon. These are applied day and night though they bee both many and large, and full of needlesse quiddities; and oftentimes they be also publikely expounded, whereas in the meane time the Bible lieth neglected, or little regarded: wherein we may see the notable worke of the Devill, and his malice toward the Church of God; for the Schooles of the Prophets are A the fountaines of learning. Now when as Satan by this meanes doth steale away from them the study of the Bible, and in stead thereof foisteth in corrupt humane writings; hereby he poysons the fountaines, to the danger of infecting the whole Church. And as this is common in the places of Popery; so likewise some fault is this way committed among us that be Protestants; for many in their private studies take little paines in the booke of God, but apply themselves wholly to the writings of men; as Councels, Fathers, Schoole-men, and other Expositors; and in the handling of the Scripture, they glory more to prove a point of doctrine by multiplicity of humane testimonies, than by the written Word. But the truth is, thus to B doe is to preferre the handmaid before the Mistris: and as for the opening and expounding of Scripture by other Writers, it is no such point of deepe learning: a man of ordinary capacity and diligence, may easily deliver what others have done before him. But to open the Scripture soundly and purely, as it ought to be, is of another nature than these men take it: and hereto the sound study of the Text it selfe will prove the best helpe, as they will confesse who have tried most of all. And though the best mens workes bee but base stuffe to the pure word of God, yet the writings of holy men must not be contemned; but must be read and regarded in their place, for our furnishing and enabling to the study of the Scriptures, for C the helping of our knowledge and judgement in the word of God: they that hold or practise the contrary, know not what helpes they bee, and what light they yeeld to many darke places of Scripture: But still above and beyond, before and after all, the Word of God must be eaten up of us, and studied with all diligence.

2 Secondly, in that the author of this Epistle noteth their particular sentence, and by consequence gathereth this meditation out of it, that they sought a Countrey: Hereby all men are taught to exercise themselves in hearing and reading all the places of the Bible, even the Histories of men therein, and out of the words to gather godly meditations. So Paul saith to D the Colossians, Let the word of God dwell plentifully in you, Col. 3.16. The Prophet David also noteth it for the propertie of a good man to meditate in the Law of God day & night: And the practice of the blessed virgin Mary is registred as an example for us to follow: that she kept all the sayings of Christ in her hart. But pitty it is to see how reading the Word of God is laid aside; for it is so little practised, that men now adayes will not bee at charge to buy a Bible for bookes of Statutes, men will not onely have them in their houses, but at their fingers ends; but Bible they have none: and if they have, it lieth on the deske or table, and they reade it not; and if sometime they read, yet they never meditate theron, as we are taught in this place.

Further, whereas the holy Ghost reasoneth thus upon these examples; Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, were strangers and Pilgrims, therefore they sought a Country: Herein he teacheth us this speciall point, to wit; that a doctrine, though it bee not expressed in plaine words in the Bible; yet being gathered thence by right and just consequence, is no lesse to be beleeved and received, than that which is plainely expressed: and therefore they are farre to blame which mislike these termes in Divinity, person, nature, sacrament, consubstantiall, trinity, &c. because they are not expressed in the Word. But they may with good conscience and much profit be retained; because, though not litterally, yet in sense and meaning they are contained in the Scripture, and may by just consequence be gathered thence. And we deny not transubstantiation, because the Word is not in the Scripture; but because the matter is not there: nor can by necessary consequence be derived from it, but rather the contrary.

Againe, many refuse these doctrines, the proceeding of the holy Ghost from the Sonne; and the baptizing of children, because they are not expressed in the Scripture. But hence wee answer, that though they bee not expressly set downe in so many words, yet by just consequence they may bee soundly gathered out of Scripture, and therefore are true doctrines, no lesse to be beleeved, than that which is plainely expressed. And thus much of the first part of the reason.

And if they had beene mindefull of that countrey, whence they came, they had leasure to have returned.

But now they desire a better, that is, an heavenly: Wherefore God is not ashamed of them to be called their God. For hee hath prepared for them a City.

Here the holy Ghost proveth the second part of the former argument, by two reasons: the first is contained in the 15. verse, and the beginning of the 16. It is taken from the distinction of Countries, and may bee framed thus;

They either sought an earthly Countrey, or an heavenly Countrey:

But not an earthly: Therefore they sought an heavenly Countrey. The first part of this reason is cleare of it selfe. The second part is in the 15. verse: from whence followeth the conclusion in the beginning of the 16. verse.

To come to the first part in these words: And if they had beene mindefull of the Country, &c. That is, if they had regarded, or thought upon Mesopotamia, or Chaldea, from whence they came, and where they were borne; with any desire to have enjoyed the profits or pleasure thereof; they had leasure enough to have returned backe thither, by reason of the length of their dayes which they lived, in the land whither God called them.

A Here observe two points: first, that they are not mindefull of, or (as the word imports) they remember not the Country from whence they came: but when God gave them commandement to depart thence, and not to returne to Mesopotamia againe; after this commandement given, they came forth, and did forget their owne countrey.

Whence we learne, that howsoever usually Forgetfulnesse be a vice; yet some kinde of forgetfulnesse is a notable vertue: namely, to forget the things that displease God, and which he would not have us to thinke upon. Psal. 45. 9. the Church is commanded to forget her owne people, and her fathers house: that is, her owne will and desires; she must never thinke thereof
B (nor of any other thing whereby God is displeased) unlesse it be with dislike.

This condemneth the practice of many aged persons, in these dayes, who delight themselves among the younger sort, to tell of their bad practices of their youth; in wantonnesse, contentions, and breaking Gods commandements: But in so doing they sinne grievously; for a man must not remember his sinnes, but with dislike and detestation; being grieved with them, and angry with himselfe for them; or else to teach others how to avoid them.

And as this kinde of forgetfulnesse is a good vertue, so there is also a vertuous and good remembrance: namely, to be mindefull of that which may please God: as of Gods Iudgements,
C to be humbled thereby: and of his Mercies, to be thankefull unto Almighty God for them: and of his Commandements, to become obedient to his will. These things therefore wee ought to imprint by diligence in our memories.

Secondly, here observe, God calleth them out of their owne country, and biddeth them live in the land of Canaan as strangers and pilgrims; and so they doe, abiding there without any purpose to returne; nay, they are not mindfull of their former home.

Hence wee are taught to be constant in that calling whereunto God hath called us. It is a fearefull sinne for a man to goe backe from that calling, in which God hath placed him.
D When the Israelites abode not patiently and constantly with God in the wildernesse, but desired to shake off the calling of God, and to turne to Ægypt, there to sit by the flesh-pots againe; they had Gods hand upon them grievously: as we may reade at large, Psal. 78. Lots wife for looking backe when shee was commanded to the contrary, was fearefully and strangely punished, being turned into a pillar of salt, Gen. 19. 26. And our Saviour Christ saith, Luk. 9. 62. No man that putteth his hand to the Lords plough, and looketh backe againe, is apt to the kingdome of God. As though he had said, He that flarteth from the plough, is not fit for the field: no more is he that shifteth from his calling, fit for Gods service.

Abrahams, Sarahs,

To apply this to our ſelves: God hath called us to profeſſe Chriſtian religion, whence we are called Proteſtants; We therefore muſt profeſſe the ſame conſtantly and hold it faſt, without wavering or doubting; (even without being mindefull of that ſpirituall Ægypt of darkneſſe and ſuperſtition, whence wee are delivered) much more, without turning to any other; this being the true religion, which is grounded on Gods word.

Againe, in this our calling of Chriſtianity, wee have vowed unto God for our ſelves, to renounce the fleſh, the world, and the devill. Now, this being our calling; as we have promiſed, and undertaken it: ſo we muſt obey it in our lives, fighting manfully every day againſt the world, the fleſh, and the devill. For, if wee profeſſe religion in word, and doe not obey it in deed; we make our ſelves unfit for the kingdome of heaven. But alas, men are like to the Swine that returneth to the puddle, though he be waſhed never ſo cleane: and to the Dogge that returneth to his vomit; for moſt men doe but ſerve the fleſh, and the world, and the luſts thereof; therein is their joy, and their hearts eaſe: take away theſe things from them, and take away their lives: ſo farre are they from ſeeking the kingdome of heaven as theſe Patriarchs did.

Thus much for the firſt part of the reaſon.

Now followeth the ſecond part, which is this; But they ſought not a place in earth: and therefore the concluſion followeth, That they deſire a Countrey, which is heaven: in theſe words,

But now they deſire a better.]

But ſome will ſay, the Patriarchs were dead many hundred yeares before this was written; How then can they bee now ſaid, to deſire a Countrey? Anſw. The Author of this Epiſtle here obſerveth, and followeth the manner of them that write Hiſtories; who ſpeake of things paſt long agoe, as though they were now preſent.

Now it is ſaid, they deſire a better Country: Theſe Patriarchs had laid before them two countries, the Land of Canaan, and the kingdome of Heaven; and of theſe two, they might chuſe whether they would, to be their portion and inheritance, upon which they would beſtow their hearts: Now, they eſteemed heaven (though it was to come) better than Canaan, though preſent; and therefore made choyce of heaven, and longed for it.

Where we learne, that as we muſt be thankfull to God, for all his bleſſings; ſo among them all, wee ſhould chuſe the beſt. This David doth: for being put to chuſe, whether he had rather live in ſafe-guard, and in ſolace, with the wicked and ungodly, than in baſe eſtate, and in great danger neere to Gods Sanctuarie: Hee ſaith, Pſalm. 84. 10. Hee had rather bee a doore-keeper in the houſe of his God, than to dwell in the Tabernacles of wickedneſſe. And

A Salomon is highly commended by the holy Ghoſt, 1 King. 3. 10, 11. for chuſing a wiſe and underſtanding heart, before riches and honour. Moſes alſo (as we ſhall ſee afterward) had his choyce, whether he would live gloriouſly, and at eaſe, in Pharaohs Court; or with the Church of God in adverſity; now Moſes having the gift of diſcerning, refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaohs daughter, and choſe rather to ſuffer adverſity with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſinne for a ſeaſon. Which holy examples doe all teach us; that when God ſetteth before us divers ſorts of his bleſſings, wee in ſpirituall wiſdome, muſt make choyce of the beſt. On the contrary, Eſau had this choyce ſet before him; his brothers red broth, and his B birth-right: but he choſe the worſt, and therefore in the new Teſtament, the holy Ghoſt noteth him with this marke, to be profane Eſau for his labour. And the Gaderens alſo are branded with a note of infamy to all ages, for chuſing their hogs before Chriſt, and his ſalvation. And the like choyce is ſet before us every day: for God of his mercy, in the preaching of the Word, for his part, doth ſet forth unto us Chriſt Ieſus crucified: and in him remiſſion of ſinnes, and ſalvation: Now, on the other ſide, commeth the devill, and ſetteth before us all ſorts of vaine pleaſures and delights; ſhewing to every man thoſe ſinnes to which he is given; and with them all the profits or pleaſures that uſually accompany ſuch ſinnes. Now, moſt men C having this choyce ſet before them, doe leave the true and ſubſtantiall bleſſings of God, and come to Satans painted Pageants, and there make choyce of ſinne, with thoſe baſe companions that doe attend her. This is too apparant to be denied: for howſoever the word of God bee preached unto us, and wee doe heare the ſame, yet we preferre the vanities and pleaſures of the ſinnefull world, before Chriſt crucified: making no account of him, nor of our owne ſalvation by him, in compariſon of the preſent profits and pleaſures of ſinne. But we muſt pray to God to give us ſpirituall wiſdome, and the gift of diſcerning, that now when God ſets before us things ſo farre differing, wee may have grace to diſcerne betweene them: and withall, D to preferre and make choyce of the beſt, and to refuſe the worſt. But as for them that are ſo mad in their choyce, that they now preferre ſin before the bleſſings of God in Chriſt, they ſhall ſee the day, when they would wiſh themſelves to be Dogges, Toades, or Serpents, rather than men and women: and yet (though they would be glad of that exchange of ſtate) they ſhall never compaſſe it, but ſhall remaine woefull men and women for evermore, becauſe that once they made ſo profane a choyce: when the path of life was ſet before them, they choſe the way of death rather than of life; and therefore when they would deſire death, they ſhall not have it, but ſhall live a life more bitter for ever, than any death in the greateſt pangs.

Thus

Thus wee see in generall their choice was of the better. Particularly the Text addeth,

This is, an heavenly.]

In which words is laid downe the last and chiefe point in this reason, to wit, that the Patriarchs desired a better Countrey than the land of Canaan, and that was an heavenly Countrey, even Heaven it selfe; the proofe whereof is principally intended in this place.

Now whereas the Patriarchs, being our fore-fathers in faith, and patternes whom wee must follow, did desire Heaven: by their example everie one of us is taught the same dutie, to aime at another and a better Countrey, than that in which we live, even at the Kingdome of Heaven: and not to thinke that this world is the countrey wee are borne for. This better Countrey we must all seeke for, whatsoever we be, high and low, young and old, learned and unlearned, if wee will follow these godly Patriarchs. And this wee must doe not at death only, seeking this world all our life long, for that is to despise Heaven: but even in the time of our youth, and strength of our dayes, must wee set our hearts on Heaven: endevouring so to use this world, and the things thereof, that when wee die wee may come to Heaven, that blessed Countrey, which we desired, and fought for in our lives.

And to perswade us hereunto, consider the reasons following: First, worldly wisdome teacheth this: If a man dwell on his owne land, and in his owne house, he is careless: But if in another mans house, whereof he hath no lease, but contrariwise is certaine to bee put out, hee knoweth not when: this man in time will provide himselfe of another, that so he may remove into it, and not be destitute: and if it be within his power, hee will provide a better, that so he may not remove for the worse. Behold, while we live in this world, our bodies are tents and tabernacles wherein our soules doe dwell for a time: and besides, this time is uncertaine; for there is no man that can say certainly, hee shall live to the next houre. Therefore, we must everie one of us, provide for himselfe a dwelling place in Heaven, where we may abide for ever in all blessednesse.

Againe, consider the state of all sorts of men in the world; for sinne, Atheisme, and profanenesse abound everie where, the blaspheming of Gods holy name, and the breaking of his Sabbath: besides daily sinne against the second Table: Now all these cry continually for vengeance, and for Gods judgements to bee inflicted upon us, and we know not how God will deale with us for our sinnes; whether hee will take from us our goods, and good name, our health, friends, or life it selfe; and therefore it standeth us in hand, to provide for our selves a resting place, wherein we may abide for ever, after this fraile life full of miserie is ended.

Thirdly, if we shall not doe this, marke what followeth: this, and no other, is our estate; By nature, we are the children of wrath, and of the Devill: and by our manifold sinnes, wee have made our case farre worse: Now, what is due unto us, for this corruption, and for these transgressions? Surely, not Heaven, but another place; even the contrarie, the place of eternall woe and destruction, the bottomlesse pit of Hell. Now, if this bee our due by nature, then let not sinne, nor Satan deceive us; perswading us, that we may come to Heaven, and still continue in the state of our corrupt nature; but let us labor by all meanes to eschew this place, which is due unto us by nature; that through the gift of faith in Christ, we may come to the heavenly Citie, which these godly Patriarchs so seriously sought for. But if wee remaine in our sinnes, and so die, we are sure to goe to the place of destruction, and there to remaine in woe and torments, with the Devill and his Angels for evermore: so that it stands us in hand, to use all good meanes to come to Heaven, or else our case will be most miserable of all creatures; for, perdition and destruction will bee our portion world without end.

This must awake and stirre up our dead and drowsie hearts, that are so besotted with sinne, that though we heare, yet we neither learne, nor practise. In worldly things; we can take care and paines: but if we will doe any thing for our owne everlasting good, let us labour by all meanes to come to Heaven; for if wee misse of that Citie, it had beene good for us, wee had never beene borne: or that wee had beene the vilest creatures in the world, rather than men. For, when the unreasonable creatures die, there is an end of all their miserie; but if we die, and bee not prepared for that place, our death will bee unto us the beginning of all woe and miserie.

Wherefore God is not ashamed of them to bee called their God, for hee hath prepared for them a Citie.

In these words is laid downe a second reason, whereby is proved that these Patriarchs died in faith, seeking their country in Heaven. The reason is drawen from the testimony of God himselfe, recorded by Moses in the booke of Exodus, where God saith, He is the God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, Exod. 3. 6.

The Exposition. Wherefore] that is, that this might appeare and be evident, that these Patriarchs died in the faith, and sought this countrey of Heaven, God was content to vouchsafe and grant unto them this favour, to bee called their God.

Was not ashamed] To be, or not to bee ashamed of one, properly belongs to men; and it cannot be affirmed properly of God, that hee is ashamed or blusheth (as the word signifieth;) but the meaning is, that God vouchsafed unto them this favour, and shewed them this honour and dignitie. Quest. What was this honour and dignitie which he shewed unto them? Answ. To be called their God. By which is meant thus much, that God accepteth them in his mercy, to be such, with whom he would make his covenant of salvation, and not with them alone, but with their seed after them. Secondly, that he chose them to make the covenant in their names for all the rest. Thirdly, he vouchsafed them a speciall and extraordinary favour, even that himselfe would beare their names, and they should beare his; making his glorious name renowned to the worlds end, by this title, The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. Hereupon the reason is framed thus; God would not bee called in speciall manner the God of unfaithfull men, but rather would bestow such a speciall favour upon Beleevers; but that favour did God vouchsafe to these three Patriarchs; therefore doubtlesse they lived and died in that holy faith.

A In that it is said, God was not ashamed to be called their God; Here first we learne, that God doth not vouchsafe his mercy equally to all men, but some men have more prerogative in his favors and mercies than others. Kings make choyce among all their subjects, of some men, whom they will preferre to be of their counsell or guard, and to whom they will give speciall countenance, and dispense their favours more liberally than to all: Even so God among all Abrahams kinred maketh choice of these three persons, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, to bestow on them such speciall honour, as he vouchsafed not to any of their fore-fathers afore them, nor posterity after them. No marvell therefore though he bestow not his speciall mercy upon all, seeing hee dispenseth not his inferiour favours unto all alike. And yet for all this, hee is no accepter of persons: for hee onely is properly said to bee an accepter of persons, that preferreth one before another, in regard of some quality in the person: but God vouchsafed this honour unto these three, onely of meere mercy and good will, and not for any thing he respected in them.

This confuteth the conceit and errour of many men, broached abroad in this age, that God doth equally love all men as they are men, and hath chosen all men to salvation, as they are men, and hath rejected none: for (say they) it standeth with equity and good reason that the Creator should love all his creatures equally; and this opinion they would build upon the generall promise made to Abraham: because that in him God said all the nations of the earth should be blessed, Gen. 22.18. But we must understand that (All) is not alwayes taken generally, but sometime indefinitely for many: and so Paul speaking of this covenant of grace in Christ, saith, The Lord made Abraham a father of many nations, Romans 4.17. where repeating the covenant recorded by Moses, hee putteth many for all. Againe, grant that Abraham were the father of all nations, and that in him All the kindreds of the earth were blessed: Yet it followeth not, that therefore God should love all men equally and alike: for hee may love the faithfull of all nations, and yet not love all men in all nations: for, in his bountifull mercy in Christ, hee preferreth some before others. And this answer seemes the better, because we may have some reason to thinke, that God will save of every nation some, but no ground to imagine he will save all of any nation; much lesse all of every nation.

2 Here wee may see, That God honoureth those his servants that honour him, as hee saith to Eli the Priest, 1 Sam. 2.30. Which is a point to be marked diligently; for this God is the glorious king of heaven and earth: yet he abaseth himselfe, and is content to be named by his B creature, advancing them by abasing himselfe to be called their God, The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. Where we may apparantly see, rather than God will not have them honoured that honour him, hee will abase himselfe, that they thereby may be honoured.

Hence we may learne many things: First, that D all that professe religion truly, must inure themselves to goe through good report and ill report, and in all estates to bee content, for Gods honours sake, as Paul saith; I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content: I can be abased, and I can abound; every where in all things I am instructed, both to be full, and to bee hungry; to abound and to have want. Thus spake that holy man of God: and so must we all endevour to say, and accordingly to practise. And C the reason is good, because if a man honour God, howsoever he be contemned, or not regarded in the world, yet God will honour him, and esteeme highly of him: that will prove the way to all true honour, as it hath done, even in this world to all that tried it. Phil. 4.11.

D Secondly, hence we learne which is the true way to get sound honour amongst men; namely, to honour God. Good estimation in the world is not to bee contemned, for the Lord commandeth all inferiours to honour their superiours, whereby hee also bindeth every man to preserve his owne dignitie. Now God honoureth them that honour him: therefore the surest way to get true honour amongst men is D this: Let a man first lay his foundation well, and begin with God, and set all the affections of his heart and thoughts on this, To honour God. Quest. How may a man honour God? Answ. By forsaking the rebellious waies of sinne and ungodlinesse, and walking in the way of righteousnesse thorow the course of his life. This doth God take to bee an honour unto his high Majestie. And when a man doth thus unfainedly, then God will honour him, even among men, so farre forth as shall be for his good: for God hath all mens hearts in his hand, and will make them to honour those that honour him: so S. Paul saith, If any man therefore purge himselfe from these, hee shall bee a vessell unto honour: not onely in glorie eternall after death, but 2 Tim. 2.21.

but also in grace and favour with Gods Church. This confuteth the opinion, and condemneth the practice of many, who would faine have good report in the world, and bee spoken well of by all men: but what course (I pray you) take they to come by this good name? They doe not begin with God, and lay their foundation by honouring him; but they strive to please men, whether it bee by doing well or ill they care not, their only care is to please all; for that is their rule and resolution, all must bee pleased; and because most men are ill, they rather chuse oftentimes to doe ill than they will not please the greater sort. But hee that beginneth to get honour by pleasing men, beginneth at a wrong end; for by the testimony of the holy Ghost in this place, the way to get sound approbation before men, is first to begin with God, and to honour him.

Thirdly, if God will honour them that honour him, then by the contrary, consider what a miserable case many a man is in: For those that dishonour God, God will dishonour them againe; as we may see at large and very plainly in the example of Eli and his two sonnes: for them that honour me (saith the Lord unto him) I will honour, and they that despise mee shall be despised, 1 Sam. 2. 30. And in Zachary we may reade, that the man that by blasphemy, theft, or perjury, dishonoureth God, the firing curse of the Lord shall enter into his house, and remaine in the middest thereof, and consume it with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof: Zach. 5. 4. And because Eli did more honour his children than God, 1 Sam. 2. 31. therefore the Lord threatneth the destruction of him and his family: and according as the Lord had threatned so it came to passe. For when the Israelites fought with the Philistims, chap. 4. 11. his two sonnes were slaine, and he at the hearing of the newes fell downe and brake his necke.

Now if this be so, what shall we say of our owne nation and people, amongst whom it is as common to dishonour God, as ever it was amongst the Papists or Pagans; partly by light using of his holy titles, and taking his name in vaine: and partly by swearing, and open blasphemy; and sometime even by abominable perjurie. Nay, it is many mens rule, that they may sweare, dissemble, lie, and forsweare for advantage. These sinnes are some of them rife in all sorts of people, and hardly shall you talke with a man that doth not by vaine oaths dishonour God: yea, it is so common, that children, so soone as they can crawle or lispe out a word; the first thing they can speake is to curse, or sweare, and take Gods name in vaine, whereby God is dishonoured every way: so as it is a wonder that the earth doth not open, and swallow up many men quicke, for their swearing and blasphemy. And whereas Gods judgements are often grievously inflicted upon us in many places of the land; wee may perswade our selves, that among other sinnes it is for

A our blasphemie and taking Gods Name in vaine. And if it be not speedily redressed, it is to bee feared left God will raine downe his judgements upon us, and in his wrath sweepe us all away; and take away the father with the childe, the good with the bad, because there is no reformation of so vile, and yet so needlesse a sinne.

To be called their God.]

Observe here further, that Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, could all of them say, God is my God. Now that which these worthy Patriarchs could say of themselves, wee must every one of us in our owne persons labour for; for their example is and must bee a rule for us to follow. We therefore must labour for this assurance, by B Gods grace to say as the holy Patriarchs did say, The true Iehovah is my God: and of this I am resolved, and undoubtedly assured in mine owne conscience.

Quest. How shall we be able to say unfeinedly, God is my God? Ans. By becomming his servants and people in deed and truth; for to him who is one of Gods people, God is alwaies his God. But how shall we become Gods true servants? Ans. By setting our hearts upon the true God, and giving them wholly unto him and to his service; and restraining our selves from all occasions of sinne, because sinne displeaseth him. Quest. But how shall a man set his heart wholly on God? Answ. This hee doth when he loveth him above all, and feareth him
C above all, and above all things is zealous for Gods glory; when hee hath full confidence in Gods word and promises, and is more grieved for displeasing God, than for all things in the world besides. Or more plainly thus; then a man doth set his heart on God, when his heart is so affected, that when God commands, hee is alwaies ready to obey: So the Lord saith, Hosea 2. 23. I will say to them that were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God. And in the Psalmes the Lord saith, Psal. 27. 8. Seeke yee my face: then the holy mans heart as an Eccho giveth answer, I seeke thy face, O God. And such an one is the heart of him that is indeed the servant and childe of God, and one of Gods people.

D For he hath prepared for them a city.]

These words are a reason of the former, proving that God was not ashamed to bee called their God, because he prepared a citie for them. And indeed, this shewes evidently, that God was greatly delighted with them, rather than ashamed of them; for had he beene ashamed of them, hee would have shut them out of his presence. Herein therefore he declared his love and favour, that by preparing this city, hee procured that they should live in his sight for evermore.

Hence wee learne, that hee which hath God
E for his God, hath all things with him, according to the common proverbe, Have God, and have all. And on the contrary, Lacke God, and lacke

lacke all. And therefore David saith, Psal. 145. 15. Blessed are the people whose God is the Lord. Other things which here might be added have beene handled before.

Abrahams Faith.

Verse 17.

By faith Abraham offered up Isaac when he was tempted, and hee that had received the promises offered his onely begotten sonne.

18 To whom it was said, in Isaac shall thy seed be called.

19 For hee considered that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead: from whence hee received him also after a sort.

IN the former verses wee heard the faith of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob commended jointly together. Now the holy Ghost returneth to the commendation of their faith severally. And first, he begins with Abrahams faith, whereof he had formerly propounded two works or actions: First, his going out of his owne country. Secondly, his abode in a strange Land. Now here followeth the third, which is the most notable worke of all, wherein his faith shines most gloriously; and his example herein is unmatchable. The particular points herein are these: First, the worke of his faith is plainly laid downe in his offering up of Isaac. Secondly, the same worke of faith is notably commended by three speciall arguments: to wit, first, by three great impediments that might have hindered the worke of faith: as we shall see in their place, v. 17, 18. Secondly, by his victory over these impediments, v. 19. Thirdly, by the issue of this temptation, and his work of faith therein, in the end of the 19. verse.

For the first. The fact of Abrahams faith here commended is this: That he offered up Isaac his sonne. It may first of all bee demanded, How Abraham could offer up his sonne by faith, considering it is against the law of Nature, and the Law of God, for a man to kill his owne sonne: which Abraham must doe, if he did offer him up in sacrifice unto God. For answer hereunto, we need goe no further than the Story, Gen. 22. where wee may see, hee had a ground for his faith: for though the generall commandement be, Thou shalt not kill, yet he had a speciall commandement, Abraham, kill thy son: and by vertue of that, he did it: and did it in and by faith. But if that be so, then thereupon riseth another and a greater doubt: namely, How can these two commandements stand together, one being contrary to the other? Ans. Here a speciall point is to bee observed: namely, that whensoever two Commandements are so joyned, that a man cannot practise both, but doing the one, the other is broken; then one of them must give place to the other: For howsoever all Gods Commandements binde the conscience, yet some binde it more, some lesse, because some are greater, and some lesser than others. Whence this rule may be set down; that when two Commandements of God crosse one another, then a man must preferre the greater. As for example, this is Gods Commandement, Honour God, commanded in the first Table. Againe, the fifth Commandement saith, Honour Parents and Magistrates. Now if Parents or Magistrates command any thing, the doing whereof would dishonour God, being contrary to the first Table; then the fifth Commandement giveth place unto the first: and a man must rather disobey Magistrates and Parents, than dishonour God: for the maine duties of the first take place before the maine duties of the second. And therefore Christ saith, If any man come to mee, and hate not his father and mother, wife & children, brethren and sisters, yea, and his owne life also, he cannot be my Disciple; meaning, that if father or mother, wife or children, would draw us from God, we must hate them rather than disobey God. Againe, a commandement ceremoniall, and a commandement of love and mercy concurre together, and it so falleth out that they should be both kept and cannot: in this case therefore the ceremoniall Law of the first Table, must give place to the law of Charitie and Love in the second Table: because the ceremonies are the inferiour duties of the first, but charitie and mercie the principall duties of the second Table. For example: the Lord injoyneth us in the fourth Commandement to rest on the Sabbath day. Now it falls out that our neighbours house is on fire upon the Sabbath day: whether then may I labour with my neighbour that day to save his house? Ans. I may; for the strict observation of rest on the Sabbath day is a ceremony: but the quenching of fire in my neighbours house is a worke of mercy, and a maine duty of the second Table, and therefore must take place before a ceremoniall duty of the first Table.

Thirdly, God hath given us ten Commandements, concerning all ordinary duties both of pietie and mercie: yet if God give us a particular and speciall Commandement contrarie to any of the ten, that must stand, and the ordinary commandements must give place and and yeeld unto it: as for example, the ſecond commandement forbiddeth any man to make any graven Image; yet Moſes by a ſpeciall commandement made a brazen Serpent in the wilderneſſe to bee a figure of Chriſt. So the ſixth commandement, Thou ſhalt not kill, is an ordinarie Commandement, and bindeth the conſcience of every man to obey the ſame; yet God comes with a ſpeciall Commandement to Abraham, and ſaith, Abraham, kill thy ſonne: and therefore the ordinarie commandement of the ſecond Table giveth place for the time. And ſo all the Commandements, Thou ſhalt doe thus and thus, unleſſe God command otherwiſe: for God is an abſolute Lord, and ſo above his owne Lawes, hee is not bound unto them, but may diſpenſe with them, and with us for the keeping of them at his will and pleaſure. And thus was Abraham warranted to ſacrifice his ſonne; namely, by vertue of a ſpeciall and perſonall commandement to himſelfe alone.

But if Abraham had not had this particular commandement, the ſacrificing of Iſaac had beene unlawfull and abominable; for the killing of a man is a heinous ſinne: much more is the killing of a mans owne ſonne without a ſpeciall commandement; for that is againſt nature: and therefore the Lord by Ieremie doth ſeverely condemne the Jewes for burning their ſons and daughters in ſacrifice, Jer. 7.31. without any warrant from him; though it may bee they would pretend their imitation of Abraham in the ſacrificing of Iſaac: yea, and to ſhew his deteſtation of that fact, hee changeth the name of the place, calling it the valley of ſlaughter, v. 32. and in the new Teſtament it is uſed to ſignifie hell, Mat. 5.29, 30. And becauſe this ſinne is ſo odious, it is rather to be thought that Iephte did not kill his daughter in ſacrifice to the Lord, (as ſome thinke he did) eſpecially being a man commended for his faith by the holy Ghoſt: but thereof we ſhall ſpeake when we come to his example, ver. 32.

Thus we ſee Abraham had ground for this fact to doe it by faith, even Gods ſpeciall command. But here it will be ſaid, that Abraham did not offer up his ſonne indeed; for though he had bound him, and laid him on the Altar, yet when hee lifted up the knife to have killed him, the Angel ſtaied his hand, and ſuffered him not, Geneſ. 22. 11, 12. How then can it bee true which is here ſaid, that he offered him up? for the writer of the ſtory muſt make true reports; but it ſeemes the writer hereof is deceived in the very principall point, affirming Iſaac was offered, when in truth he was not. Anſ. God is the Author and inditer of this Storie, and in Gods ſight and eſtimation hee was offered, though not in the worlds: and therefore it is ſo ſaid in regard of Gods acceptance, becauſe Abrahams purpoſe was to have done it; and if he had not beene ſtaied, he had done it.

Where we note a point of ſpeciall comfort, to wit, that God in his children and ſervants doth accept the will for the deed: ſo Paul ſaith, 2 Cor. 8.12. If there be a willing minde, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not: ſpeaking of their releeving of the poore; he telleth them, that God regardeth not ſo much a mans worke, as the heart wherewith he doth the worke. And therefore the poore widow in the Goſpell, Luk. 21.3. is ſaid by our Saviour Chriſt, to have caſt more into the treaſury (though it were but two mites) than many rich men that caſt in great abundance: more in heart, not in ſubſtance.

This ſerveth to ſtay the heart of many a man that is found bruiſed in conſcience; for ſeeing his weake obedience, and the greatneſſe of his ſinnes paſt, hee begins to call his election into queſtion: now what muſt a man doe in this caſe? Anſ. Surely he muſt goe on forward in obedience, and endevour himſelfe to continue therein: and then though he faile many times through infirmity, yet for his endevour, God will accept of him, and be pleaſed with the ſame.

This doctrine is very comfortable to a diſtreſſed conſcience; but yet it muſt not make any man bold to ſinne: for many abuſe this doctrine, and ſay, that though they live in ſinne, yet God will accept them, for they love God in their heart. But they deceive themſelves: for this mercifull dealing of God in accepting the will for the deed, is onely towards thoſe that endevour themſelves ſincerely to leave their ſinnes, to beleeve in God, and to walke in obedience; but ſuch as flatter themſelves lying in their ſinnes, God will not be mercifull unto them, Deut. 29.19, 20.

Here further it may well bee demanded; How Abraham could take Iſaac and bind him, and lay him on the Altar to have offered him: for though the common opinion bee, that he was but 12. yeares old, yet the more received opinion of the beſt Writers is, that Iſaac was 25. or 27. yeares old. How then could Abraham being an old man of more than 120. yeares, be able to binde Iſaac being a young and luſty man, and lay him on the Altar to kill him? For though Abraham had a commandement to kill Iſaac, yet we finde not that God commanded Iſaac to ſuffer himſelfe to be killed; now Nature moves every one to ſeeke to ſave his owne life, and to reſiſt ſuch as would kill us. How then was Iſaac brought to yeeld thus far to his Father?

For anſwer hereunto, we are to know, that Abraham was no ordinary man, but a Prophet, and that an excellent and extraordinary Prophet: ſo God himſelfe teſtifieth of him to Abimelech; He is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee: yea, he was eſteemed and reverenced as a Prophet, and an honourable man, even of the Heathen. The Hittites tell him, Thou art a Prince of God among ſt us; Gen. 23.6.

Now being a man of ſo high place, and ſo great regard even in the world; doubtleſſe he he was of much more authoritie in his owne house. It is therefore very likely that hee tells Isaac his sonne, that he had a speciall commandement from God to kill him in sacrifice. Now Isaac being an holy man, and well brought up, hearing this, is contented to bee sacrificed, and obeyes his Father herein.

This I speake not as certaine, but as most probable; and it is the judgement of the best learned, who have good experience in the Scripture.

This circumstance well observed, serves greatly for the commendation of them both: of Abraham the father, that had so religiously brought up his onely sonne, that was most deare unto him, that hee would not resist the will of God revealed unto him, though it cost him his life. Oh that Parents would follow Abraham in so doing to their children; then would it goe well with the Church of God. Againe, Isaacs behaviour is here admirable, that hee would not resist his weake and aged father, but suffered him to binde him, and to lay him on the Altar; yeelding himselfe unto death when his father told him, My sonne, God will have it so.

This example must bee a patterne of obedience, not onely for children towards their parents; but for us all towards Gods Ministers, when they shall tell us what God would have us doe: wee must submit our selves and yeeld, though it turne to our bodily paine and griefe; for Isaac yeelds, though it were to the losse of his life. But alas, who will follow Isaac? For let the Minister speake against our carnall pleasure and unlawfull gaine; let him crosse our humour and affections, then wee refuse to heare and will not obey. Nay, if the Minister of God, as the Lords Priest, come with the sacrificing knife of Gods word to the throat of our sinne, to kill the same in us, that so wee may be pure and acceptable sacrifices unto God; doe we not resist him, and say in our hearts, We will none of this doctrine? Or, if hee like a Prophet of God, come and offer to binde our consciences with the cords of obedience, and to lay our affections on the altar of the Law; then we resist, and are either too young, or too old; too rich, or too learned; or too great to bee taught and bound to obedience. But let us know, that if wee will bee true Isaacs, even the sonnes of faith and obedience, and the true heires of Abrahams faith, (as we would beare the world in hand) then as hee did submit himselfe to bee bound of his father, so must we yeeld our selves to the Ministers of God, to bee bound by his Word: and suffer the same Word to bee in us, the two edged sword of the Spirit, to cut downe sinne and corruption in us, and to make us new creatures; that so both in body and soule wee may become pure and acceptable sacrifices unto our God. Thus much of the fact it selfe, wherein Abrahams faith is set forth.

Now follow the arguments or reasons whereby the same worke of faith is commended unto us: The first argument is taken from the great impediments which might hinder his faith; and they are in number three: First, that he was brought to this worke, not by ordinary command, but by an extraordinary course in temptation: Being tempted. Secondly, that he was to offer his owne childe: yea, his only begotten sonne. Thirdly, that hee who had received the promises, must offer him and kill him, in whom the promise was made.

For the first impediment. In the ordinary translation it is read thus, When hee was tried: But that is not so fit, being rather an exposition of the meaning, than a translation of the word. For the very word signifieth, to be tempted: and the meaning is, when hee was tried. I would therefore rather reade it thus, when hee was tempted: or being tempted, as the word signifies.

In the handling hereof, first wee will intreat of the nature of this temptation, and then come to the circumstances belonging to the same.

Temptation (as it is here used, may bee thus described:) It is an action of God, whereby hee proveth, and makes experience of the loyaltie and obedience of his servants. First, (I say) it is an action of God: This is plaine by the testimony of Moses in Gen. 22. 1. where (if wee reade the history) we shall finde, that God did prove Abraham. Object. But against this it may bee objected, that Saint Iames saith, Jam. 1. 13. God tempteth no man: and therefore no temptation is the action of God? Answ. That place in Iames is thus to be understood; God tempteth no man: that is, God doth not stirre up, or move any mans heart to sinne. Yet further it will be said, That temptation is an action of Satan: for so in the Gospel we may reade (Mat. 4. 3.) that he is called the tempter? Answ. Some temptations are the actions of God, and some the actions of Satan: God tempteth, and Satan tempteth: but there is great difference in their temptations: first, in the manner: for Satan tempteth a man to sinne against the will of God, and to doe some evill; God tempteth a man to doe something, which shall be onely against his owne affections or his reason. Secondly, God tempteth for the good of his servants: but Satan tempteth for the destruction both of their bodies and soules.

Againe I say, Whereby he maketh triall, &c. Here some will say, God knowes every mans heart, and what is in them, and what they will doe long before; and therefore hee needeth not to make triall of any man? Answ. God makes triall of his servants, not because hee is ignorant of that which is in their heart; for he understandeth their thoughts long before: but because hee will have their obedience made knowne; partly to themselves, and partly to the world: so that he makes triall of his servants, not for himselfe, but for our sakes.

Now further, God tempteth men three waies; wayes; first by his judgements and calamities in this world: so the Lord saith to the Israelites, Deut. 8. 2. Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God lead thee this forie yeares in the wildernesse, for to humble thee, for to prove and to know what was in thy heart. That journey might have beene gone in forties dayes, but God did leade them in it fortie yeares, to prove and trie by this unwonted calamitie, whether they would obey him or not. So likewise, God suffered false Prophets, and Dreamers of dreames to come among the people, for this end, To prove them, and to know whether they loved the Lord their God, with all their heart, and with all their soule, Deut. 13. 3. Now this first kinde of temptations, by outward Iudgements, is most grievous, when the Lord layeth his owne hand upon his servants so heavily, as they shall thinke themselves to be quite forsaken. In this temptation was David, as we may reade at large Psalme the 6. and Psalme 38. and Iob being afflicted, not onely outwardly in bodie, but inwardly in minde, cryeth out, that the arrowes of the Almightie were in him, Iob 6. 4. and through the whole chapter hee bewaileth his grievous estate by reason of this temptation.

Secondly, God tempteth his servants by withdrawing his graces from them, and by forsaking them in part; and this temptation is as grievous as the former: herewith was good King Hezekias tempted, for as we may reade, God left him to a sinne of vaine-glory, and the end was to trie him, and to prove all that was in his heart, 2 Chron. 32. 31.

Thirdly, God tempteth his servants by giving unto them some strange and extraordinarie commandement: As in the Gospell, when the young man came to our Saviour Christ, and asked him what good thing hee might doe to have eternall life? Matth. 19. 16. Christ biddeth him, Goe and sell all that he had, and give to the poore. This commandement had this use, to be a commandement of triall unto the young man, whereby God would prove what was in his heart, that the same might bee made manifest both to himself, and unto others. And under this kinde we must comprehend this temptation of Abraham: for when God said, Abraham, offer up thy sonne in sacrifice; it was not a commandement requiring actuall obedience, (for God meant not that Abraham should kill his sonne) but only of triall, to see what he would doe. And these are Gods temptations, whereby hee proveth his servants.

Yet further, the temptations of God whereby hee tempteth his children have two ends. 1. They serve to disclose and make evident the graces of God, that be hidden in the hearts of his servants: so S. Iames saith, My brethren, count it exceeding great joy when ye fall into divers temptations, Jam. 1. 2. The reason followeth: Knowing that the triall of your faith bringeth forth patience, vers. 3.

Where wee see this end of temptation set downe; To manifest the gift of patience wrought in the heart. And S. Peter saith to the Church of God, That they were in heavinesse through manifold temptations, that the triall of their faith being much more precious than gold that perisheth (though it be tried with fire) might be found unto their praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of the Lord Iesus, 1 Pet. 1. 6, 7. Where temptations have this use, to make manifest the soundnesse of mens faith in God, as the fire doth prove the gold to be good and precious. So in this place, The temptation of Abraham serveth for this end, to make manifest his notable faith and obedience unto God, with a reverent feare of his Majestie, as the Lord himselfe testifieth, saying, Now I know that thou fearest God, seeing for my sake thou hast not spared thy onely sonne, Gen. 22. 12. Meaning this: Now I have made thy faith, and love, and feare of me so manifest, that all the world may see it, and speake of it.

Secondly, Gods temptations serve to manifest hidden sinnes and corruptions, partly to a mans owne selfe, and partly to the world. And for this end God tempted Hezekias. For being recovered of his sickenesse, after that the King of Assur his great enemie was vanquished, especially when the Embassadours of the King of Babel came to inquire of the wonders which were done in the Land; God left him that he might see his sinnes, and the corruptions of his nature, as pride, and vaine-glory, wherewith he was puffed up at the comming of the Embassadours to him. And thus he, who little thought that pride and vaine-glory could have taken such hold on him, perceiving how his heart was lift up in him, was doubtlesse much humbled at the sight of his so great corruption: for when the Prophet came unto him, hee submitted himselfe to the word of reproofe, Esa. 39. 8. 2 Chr. 32. 31.

First, whereas Abraham the servant of God was tempted, that is, was proved and tried by God himselfe; Here we are taught, that if we perswade our selves to be the servants of God, as Abraham was, then wee must looke to have temptations at Gods owne hand: for his example is a patterne for us: and therefore in him we must see that which we must looke to have; for it could not be needfull for Abraham, but it may be also needfull unto us. In regard whereof Saint Peter counteth it a thing necessary, that men should fall into sundry temptations, that the triall of their faith might bee unto their praise. So that in this life we must looke for triall: and the more glorious our faith is, and the more like to our father Abrahams, the more trials shall we undergoe. 1 Pet. 1. 16.

Againe, seeing we must be tried, therefore every one of us must labour for soundnesse of grace in our hearts; as of faith, repentance, hope, and of the love of God, (though they bee but little in measure:) for we must come to triall, and it must appeare, whether we be hot or cold. Now if we have not soundnesse of grace in us, in the time of triall, then looke, as the drosse consumeth in the fire, when as gold commeth out more cleare; so shall hypocrisie, formalitie, and all temporizing profession, come to nothing, in the midst of tentation; when sound grace, and a good conscience shall passe thorough, and shine more pure and perfect after than before.

Thirdly, considering wee are to looke for trialls and temptations from God: therefore we must be carefull to remember, and practise that counsell of Christ to his Disciples, before his passion: Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation, Matth. 26. 41. And because they were careless in practising this dutie, therefore they fell into temptation: especially Peter fell most grievously, by denying his master. We must perswade our selves, that the same commandement is given to us: for God will prove us by temptations, to make manifest the corruptions that be in our hearts: we therefore considering our owne estate, we must pray for Gods assisting and strengthening grace, that when temptations shall come, we may be found sound and stedfast in the triall.

Thus much of the nature of Abrahams temptation; now follow the circumstances to be considered therein: And first, of the time when Abraham was tempted. Hereof we may reade, Gen. 22. 1. After these things, saith Moses, God did prove Abraham. The words will admit a double reference. But this I take to be most proper and fit for that place, to wit; that after God had made most excellent promises unto Abraham, and given him most wonderfull blessings and privileges, that then he tempted him.

Hence we learne this notable lesson: That those people in Gods Church, which receive from God more graces than others, must looke for more temptations. This we shall see to be true in Christ Iesus the head of the Church: for when he was baptized, and had received the holy Ghost, Matth. 3. in the forme of a Dove, and had this voice of God the Father pronounced upon him, that he was his wel-beloved Sonne in whom he was well pleased: then presently followeth this, that he was led into the wilderness to be tempted of the Devill: Matth. 4. 1. being full of the holy Ghost, as Saint Luke saith: So likewise when God had testified of Iob, that he was an upright and just man, one that feared God, and eschewed evill, Iob 1. 8. then Satan tooke occasion thereby to tempt him: as in all the whole course of that booke we may plainely see, wherein are set downe most wonderfull temptations and trialls whereby he was proved. So Iacob must wrestle with the Angel, Genes. 32. 24, 28. and by the power of God, overcome God himselfe. This was a notable prerogative, to prevaile with the Lord; but yet he must prevaile with his foile, (v. 31.) and at the same time, and ever after draw

Luke 4. 1.

A one of his legges after him, even to his dying day. Saint Paul was rapt up into the third heaven, into Paradise, and heard words which cannot be spoken; yea, which are impossible for man to utter: yet lest hee should be exalted out of measure, through abundance of revelations, there was given unto him a pricke in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet him: 2 Cor. 12. 7. God will honour him with revelations, but yet Satan shall have leave to buffet and beat him as it were blacke and blew. In all which wee may see, to whom God vouchsafeth a greater measure of grace, to them he appointeth singular trialls and temptations above other men. And the reason is: First, because Gods graces doe better appeare in temptations than out of them: as gold is best tried in the fire, and thereby proved most pure and perfect: Secondly, temptations serve to abase the servant of God, and to bring him downe in his owne conceit, that he be not proud of those things that are in him, or puffed up with conceit that there is more in him, than indeed there is. This we saw in Pauls example; He was buffeted of Satan, lest hee should be exalted with abundance of Revelations. We may see a type hereof in worldly affaires: The best Ship that floateth on the Sea, when it carrieth in it most precious Jewels, is ballaced with gravell or sand, to make it sinke into the water, and so saile more surely, lest floating too high, it should be unstable: even so dealeth the Lord with his servants, when he hath given them a good measure of his graces, then doth hee also lay temptations upon them, to humble them, lest they should be puffed up in themselves.

The second circumstance to bee considered in this temptation, is the greatnesse thereof. It was the greatest that ever was, for ought we reade of; That God should command him to kill his owne sonne. For if God had told Abraham, that his sonne Isaac must have died, it would have beene very grievous and sorrowfull newes unto him: and yet more grievous, if he had told him that he should have died a bloody death. But yet this was most grievous of all, that Abraham himselfe with his owne hand should sacrifice his owne sonne; nay, his onely sonne; and that which is more, he must kill his onely childe, in whom the promise was made, that in him should his seed be called: this must needs be a great wound unto his heart; and yet to augment his griefe, he must not doe it presently, nor where he would, but goe three dayes journey in the wildernesse. During which time Satan undoubtedly wrought mightily upon his naturall affections to dissuade him from obedience: which could not chuse but be farre more grievous unto his soule.

Out of the grievousnesse of this temptation wee may learne this lesson: that God in tempting a man, doth sometime proceed thus farre. Not onely to crosse his sinnes and corrup-

tions,

tions, but even to bring him to nothing, in regard of humane reason and naturall affections. For this Commandement (Abraham kill thy sonne) might have made Abraham (if he had consulted with flesh and blood) even distracted in himselfe, and without reason, not knowing which way to turne himselfe. And accordingly, let all Gods children, especially such as have the greatest graces, looke for such temptations, as shall lay their humane reason flat upon the ground, and bring them to this point, even utterly to denie themselves.

The third circumstance in this temptation, is this; What Abraham did, when he was tempted? the Text telleth us, that by faith he offered up Isaac, being tempted.

Abraham being thus tempted, whether he would obey Gods Commandement, or not; obeyes God in offering up his sonne, and yet layes hold upon Gods promise made in him. For we must know, that Abraham had a promise of blessing, in Isaac: and being now commanded to kill Isaac, he did not now cast off his hope, and desperately thinke it could not be performed, if this Commandement were obeyed; but by the great power of faith, he both obeyes the Commandement, and yet still beleeves the promise: For so saith the Text, By faith he offered up Isaac: Therefore in the very action of killing Isaac, he beleeved the promise, that Isaac should live. And this was the excellencie of Abrahams faith. For if God should with his owne voice bid a man kill his sonne, it may be some would be found, that would doe it; but to doe it, and still to beleeve a contrary promise made before, betokeneth the vertue of an admirable faith.

In this circumstance we may learne a good instruction; to wit, in all temptations that befall us, still to hold fast the promises of God. Though in the Devils purpose, they tend to the loosening of our hold; and in all common reason, we have good cause to let them goe: yet for all that, wee must never let goe, but still hold the promise fast, and rather let goe all reason in the world, than Gods promise. And this is not onely true faith, but even the excellencie of faith. For example: Gods promise is (John 3.16.) God so loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne into the world, that whosoever beleeved in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. Now when we are in the extremitie of all temptations, we must still hold fast this promise, and venture our soules upon the truth of it. This was Abrahams practise; for in this temptation, Gods meaning was to trie Abraham, and to see what he would doe: Now Abraham, he holds fast the promise, and yet obeyes God; though all the reason in the earth, cannot tell how that promise, and that commandement could stand together. But this was Abrahams faith, though I know not, nor reason knoweth not; yet God knoweth: and therefore, seeing I have his commandement, I will obey it; and seeing I have his word and promise, I will beleeve that also, and never forsake it. And even thus must we strive to doe in all temptations whatsoever; yea, even in those that come from Satan, which are full of malice and all violence. In our heart and conscience we must still hold and beleeve the promise of God: and this is ever the surest and safest way to get the victory over Satan, to hold, That Gods promise shall be performed, though we know not how, but rather see the contrary. And though in humane reasoning, it be a note of ignorance, and want of skill, to sticke alwayes to the conclusion and question; yet in spirituall temptations and trialls, this is sound divinitie, Alwayes to hold Gods promise, and to sticke fast to that conclusion: and not to follow Satan in his arguments, neither suffer him by any meanes to drive us from it.

Further, in that this fact of offering up Isaac, was onely Abrahams triall; we may observe, that it did not make him just before God, but onely served to prove his faith, and to declare him to be Just. And therefore, whereas Saint James saith, James 2.21. That Abraham was justified through workes, when hee offered his sonne Isaac upon the Altar. His meaning is, that Abraham did manifest himselfe to be just before God, by offering up his sonne; and not, that by this fact Abraham of a sinner was made just; or, of a righteous man, was made more just: For indeed, good workes doe not make a man just, but onely doe prove and declare him to be just.

Thirdly, God gave Abraham this commandement; Abraham kill thy sonne: but yet he concealed from him, what was his purpose and intent herein; for God meant not that Abraham should kill his sonne indeed, but onely to trie what he would doe; whether he would still beleeve and obey him, or not. Whereuppon we see, that God, who is truth it selfe, reveales to Abraham his will; but not his whole will: whence ariseth this question:

Whether it be lawfull for a man, according to this example of God, when he tels a thing to another, to conceale his meaning, in whole, or in part? For answer hereunto, we must know, there are two extremities, both which must be avoided in this case: 1. That a man must alwayes expresse all that is in his minde. 2. That in some cases a man may speake one thing, and thinke another, speaking contrary to his meaning. But this latter is no way lawfull, and the other is not alwayes necessary. We therefore must hold a meane betweene both; to wit, that in some cases a man may conceale his whole meaning, saying nothing, though he be examined: namely, when the concealing thereof, doth directly stand with the glory of God, and the good of his brother.

Thus godly Martyrs have done: for being examined before tyrants, where and with whom they worshipped God; they have chosen rather to die, than to diſcloſe their brethren: and this concealing of their mindes was lawfull, becauſe it touched immediately the glory of God, and the good of his Church.

Secondly, a man may conceale part of his minde: but that muſt be alſo with theſe two caveats: Firſt, that it ſerve for Gods glory: Secondly, that it bee for the good of Gods Church.

Thus did Ionas conceale the condition of mercie from the Ninivites, when he preached deſtruction unto them, ſaying; within fortie dayes and Ninive ſhall be deſtroyed: though it is evident by the event, that it was Gods will they ſhould be ſpared, if they did repent. But that condition God would have concealed, becauſe, it would not have beene for the good of the Ninivites to have knowne it; ſith the concealing of it cauſed them more ſpeedily, and earneſtly to repent.

But out of theſe caſes, a man (being called to ſpeake) muſt declare the whole truth, or elſe he ſinnes greatly againſt Gods commandement, forſaking the propertie of the godly, Pſal. 15.2.

And thus much of the firſt impediment of Abrahams faith.

The ſecond impediment to Abrahams faith, is contained in theſe words:

Offered his onely begotten ſonne.]

We know that the love of Parents deſcends to every childe naturally, but eſpecially to the onely begotten; upon whom (being but one) all that is beſtowed, which, when there are many, is divided among them. And therefore in all reaſon, this might greatly hinder Abrahams obedience, That God ſhould command him to offer his ſonne, yea, his onely begotten ſonne: But yet by faith he overcommeth this temptation, breakes through this impediment, and offers up his onely ſonne.

Where we note, that true faith will make a man overcome his owne nature. Love is the ſtrongeſt affection in the heart, eſpecially from the father to the childe, even his onely childe; And a man would thinke it impoſſible to overcome this love in the parent, unleſſe it were by death; there being no cauſe to the contrarie in the childe. But yet behold, Abraham by faith ſubdued this ſpeciall love which he bare to his onely childe: God himſelfe teſtified of Abraham, that his love to Iſaac was great, Geneſ. 22.2. and yet by faith he overcommeth this his love.

This point is carefully to be marked, as declaring the great power of true ſaving faith; for, if faith can overcome created and ſanctified nature, then undoubtedly the power thereof, will inable man to overcome the corruptions of his nature, and the temptations of the world: for it is an harder thing to overcome our nature which we have by creation, than to ſubdue the corruption thereof, which comes in by tranſ-

A greſſion. And hence ſuch excellent things are ſpoken of faith: it is called the victorie that overcommeth the world, 1 John 5.4. And God is ſaid by faith to purifie the heart: faith ſtrengtheneth the heart: Acts 15.9. And through faith we are kept by the power of God unto ſalvation. 1 Peter 1.5.

Is this the power of faith to overcome nature, and the corruption thereof? then howſoever religion be received, and faith profeſſed generally among us, yet undoubtedly there is little true faith in the world: for even among the profeſſours thereof, how many be there that ſubdue the ſinnes of their lives, and ſuppreſſe the workes of their wicked nature? ſurely very few. Now where corruption beareth ſway, and ſin reigneth, B there ſound faith cannot be: for if faith were ſound in men, it would purifie their hearts, and cleanſe the corruptions thereof, and bring forth obedience in life.

Secondly, this power of true faith in mans heart muſt teach us, not to content our ſelves with a generall faith and knowledge in religion, but to goe further, and to get a ſound faith that may purifie the heart, at leaſt in ſome true meaſure, for ſaving faith will cleanſe a man in every part of ſoule and body, and ſtrengthen his ſoule in temptations.

Queſt. Here it may be asked, how it can be truely ſaid, that Iſaac was Abrahams onely begotten ſonne, ſeeing Iſmael was alſo his ſonne, and was borne before Iſaac, as is evident, Gen. 16? I anſwer, two wayes: firſt, that C Iſmael by Gods appointment was put out of Abrahams houſe, for it was the expreſſe commandement of God, to put forth the bond-woman and her ſonne, (Geneſ. 21.10.) and ſo was made no childe of Abraham. Secondly, Iſmael was his childe indeed, yet not by Sarah, but by Agar a bond-woman; and ſo was (as I may ſay) baſe borne, whereupon he is reputed for no ſonne; but Iſaac is his onely begotten lawfully: which may be an Item to beware of the bed defiled, ſeeing ſuch off-ſpring is ſo debaſed with the Lord.

Now followeth the third impediment of Abrahams faith; which is alſo a notable circumſtance whereby the ſame faith is commended: and it is taken from the perſon of Abraham, D in theſe words, who had received the promiſes.

The meaning of the words. Who] This muſt be referred to the perſon of Abraham of whom the holy Ghoſt here ſpeaketh. Received the promiſes] That is, by faith; for when God made his promiſes unto Abraham, he did not onely heare them; but (which is the principall point of all) he beleeved them, and applied the ſame effectually unto his owne ſoule; ſo much doth the word [received] import. Now it is ſaid that he received (not one promiſe) but the promiſes plurally; for theſe cauſes: firſt, becauſe God having made one maine promiſe unto him touching Chriſt, did repeate and renue the same divers times. Secondly, because God had made divers particular promises unto him; as first, that he would be his God, and the God of his seed: Genes.17.7. Secondly, that he would give him a childe in his old age: Genes.17.19. Thirdly, that unto him and his seed, he would give the Land of Canaan for ever: Genes.12.15. Fourthly, that in Isaac he would blesse all the Nations of the earth. Gen.21.12.

And because the receiving of Gods promises in generall could seeme no great impediment to Abrahams worke of faith; therefore the holy Ghost annexeth his receiving of a particular promise in Isaac in the 18. verse, To whom it was said, in Isaac shall thy seed bee called. Which might seeme impossible to stand with the doing of this worke in sacrificing his sonne; and therefore the consideration of it in Abraham, must needs bee a great impediment to him in this worke: for hee goes about to kill Isaac (in obedience to Gods command) in whose life hee beleeved to receive the blessings promised of God.

Here then observe a most wonderfull impediment to Abrahams faith, which above all might have hindred him from obeying God: for, how could he choose but reason thus with himselfe? God hath made unto me many gracious promises, and that which is more, he hath said, That in my sonne Isaac the same must be accomplished: and in him all the Nations of the earth must be blessed: Now then, if I shall kill and sacrifice my sonne, how shall these promises be accomplished? And reason in this case would say, I see no way, but that the promise is gone, and all hope lost. But what doth Abraham in this case? for all this, he doth sacrifice his sonne, and that by faith; still beleeving and holding assuredly, that though Isaac were sacrificed and slaine, yet in him should all the Nations of the earth be blessed.

Here then we note this speciall point, wherein the faith of Abraham doth notably appeare; That when Abrahams case, in respect of enjoying the promise of God, might seeme desperate, and void of all hope and comfort, then he beleeveth: for when Isaac was dead, in all reason he could have no hope of the accomplishing of Gods promises unto him, because they were made to him in Isaac: Isaac was the man in whom all the Nations of the earth should bee blessed; and yet when all hope is past in mans reason, then good Abraham set his heart to beleeve.

This practice of Abraham must be a patterne for us to observe and follow, all our lives long, in the matter of our salvation: if it fall out that we shall doubt of our salvation, and feele many things in us that would carrie us to despaire; when we are in this case, and feele no comfort, then let us call to minde Abrahams practice, who beleeves Gods promise, when the foundation thereof is taken away: even so let us doe at the same instant, when the promise of God seemes to be frustrate, and we have no hope of the accomplishment thereof, then we must cast our soules upon it. For we must not onely beleeve, when we feele comfort in our conscience concerning Gods mercies; but even then when God seemes to stand against us, and when we feele in our soules the very gall of hell, then (I say) we must beleeve.

In Pauls dangerous voyage towards Rome, when he was in the Ship with the Mariners and Centurion, there arose a great tempest, and neither Sunne nor Starres appeared for many dayes: so that as the Text saith, All hope that they should bee saved was taken away, Acts 27.20. Now what saith Paul in this extremitie of danger? Now I exhort you to be of good courage: for there shall bee no losse of any mans life, save of the Ship onely, (Verse 22.) and so perswaded them to take bread. Even so, when our case falls out to be this; that either by reason of sinne and of the temptation of Satan, or else by reason of some outward calamities and troubles, we feele our soule (as it were) overwhelmed with sorrow, and even entring into destruction, and can neither see (as it were) light of Sunne or Starres; then we must set before us Gods promises, and labour to beleeve the same. So David being in great affliction, and grievous temptation, saith thus of himselfe, Psal. 77.2.7,8,9,10. In the day of my trouble I sought the Lord, my sore ranne in the night, and ceased not, my soule refused comfort. Yet at the very same instant he prayed, When his spirit was full of anguish; and though hee seemed (as it were) to despaire, (when he said, Will the Lord absent himselfe for ever? and will he shew no more favour? Is his mercie cleane gone? Doth his promise faile for evermore? And hath God forgotten to be mercifull, &c?) yet he checkes himselfe, and saith, This is my death and my weakenesse. Even so, everie true member of Gods Church, in the extremitie of all temptations, and in the time of desperation, is bound to beleeve the promises of God; and indeed, that is the fittest time for faith to shew it selfe in: for faith (as we have before heard) is the ground of things hoped for, and the subsisting of things which are not seene.

Now further it is said, Abraham received Gods promises; that is, he applied them to his owne soule and conscience, and beleeved them, and made them his owne by faith. This is a notable point, and worthy the marking: God made his promises to Abraham: now Abraham he doth not onely heare, and learne the promises; but applies them to himselfe, and by faith makes them his owne. And thus ought we to doe with all the gracious promises made in Christ. But the manner of our dayes is farre otherwise; for when the mercifull promises of God are laid downe unto us in the ministerie of the Word, we are content to heare, and (it may be) to learne, and know the same: But where is the man to be found, that will apply them them to his owne conſcience, and by faith make them his owne? Men commonly are like unto way-faring men, or travellers on the Sea, that paſſe by many goodly faire buildings, rich Townes, and Iſlands; which, when they behold, they admire, and wonder at: and ſo goe their way, without making purchaſe of any of them. And thus deale the moſt men with Gods merciſull promiſes. In the miniſterie of the Word, God layes open unto them his rich mercies, and bountifull promiſes in Chriſt; and men approve thereof, and like them well: whereupon, many doe willingly apply themſelves to know the ſame, but for all this, they will not receive them by faith, and ſo apply them to their owne ſoules.

But we muſt take a better courſe: and when we heare of the promiſes of God made unto us in Chriſt, we muſt not content our ſelves with a bare knowledge of them, but labour to beleeve them, and apply them unto our ſelves, to our ſoules, and conſciences: and ſo by faith make them our owne. As it is ſaid of Abraham, and in him, of all the faithfull; The bleſſing of Abraham came on the Gentiles, through Ieſus Chriſt, that we might receive the promiſe of the ſpirit, through faith, Galat. 3. 14.

Further obſerve, the holy Ghoſt ſetteth downe that particular promiſe which God made to Abraham, in his ſonne Iſaac: To whom it was ſaid, in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called, Geneſ. 21. 12. Rom. 9. 7. In which places it is ſaid, that in Iſaac ſhould his ſeed bee called. The meaning whereof is plaine, and thus much in effect: Iſmael ſhall not be thy ſonne and heire, but Iſaac is the childe which ſhall be thy heire; he it is, in whom I will accompliſh the promiſes of life and ſalvation made to thee.

From the words thus explaned, firſt wee muſt obſerve Pauls collection gathered from Gods dealing with thoſe two perſons (Rom. 9. 7.) namely, that God before all worlds hath choſen ſome men to ſalvation in his eternall counſell, to manifeſt the glory of his grace; and hath refuſed and rejected others, leaving them unto themſelves, to ſhew forth his juſtice upon them.

This doctrine is gathered out of this place, after this manner: Such as is Gods practice and dealing towards men, in time; ſuch was his eternall counſell and decree, (for as God before all time determined to deale with men, ſo in time hee dealeth with them.) Now Gods practice and dealing with Iſaac and Iſmael is this; Iſmael is vouchſafed to bee made partaker of temporall bleſſings; but yet he is cut off from the ſpirituall Covenant of grace, and Iſaac is the man that muſt receive the Covenant, and by vertue thereof be made partaker of life everlaſting. And ſo accordingly it is with others; God hath decreed to chuſe ſome men to ſalvation, and theſe are admitted into the Covenant: others he hath decreed to reject, and they are cut off from the Covenant, and from life everlaſting. Theſe two perſons, Iſaac and Iſmael, are Types of theſe two ſorts of people whom God doth elect, and reject: Iſaac repreſenteth thoſe that are choſen to ſalvation, who become the true members of Gods Church; and Iſmael is a Type of thoſe that are rejected. Now in regard of this different dealing of God with mankinde, chuſing ſome, and refuſing others, we muſt all put in practice Saint Peters leſſon with feare and trembling being very carefull, and giving all diligence to make our election ſure, 2 Peter 1. 10. for all be not elected to ſalvation, but ſome are rejected; all bee not Iſaacs, but ſome are Iſmaelites. If all were elected and choſen to ſalvation, then no man needed to care for it; but ſeeing ſome are rejected, and never vouchſafed to come within the covenant indeed, therefore it ſtandeth us greatly in hand to take the good counſell of the Apoſtle, and to give all diligence to make our election ſure.

Secondly, whereas it is ſaid, Not in Iſmael, but in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called: We may note the ſtate of Gods Church in this world, in regard of the different ſorts of men that live therein. For Abrahams family was Gods Church in thoſe dayes, and therein were both Iſaac and Iſmael; though both his children, yet farre differing in eſtate before God. Iſmael indeed was borne in the Church, and there brought up, taught, and circumciſed; but yet he was without the Covenant in Gods ſight: Now Iſaac was not onely borne, and brought up in the Church, and circumciſed, but alſo received into the Covenant; and herein differed farre from Iſmael: for, he is the ſonne of Abraham in whom God will continue the Covenant of grace unto life everlaſting, to his poſteritie. And ſo it is with Gods Church at this day, in it there be two ſorts of men; one, which are baptized and brought up in the Church, heare the Word, and receive the Sacraments; but yet are not ſaved, becauſe they have not the promiſe of the Covenant effectually rooted in their hearts. The other ſort are they, which being baptized in the Church, heare the Word effectually, and receive the Lords Supper worthily to their ſalvation; becauſe God doth eſtabliſh his Covenant in their hearts. This difference is plaine in Scripture, in the parables of the draw-net, (Matth. 13.) of the Sower, and of the tares: as alſo by Chriſts behaviour at the laſt judgement, (Matth. 25. 32.) ſevering the ſheepe from the goats, both which live together in the Church. And by Saint Paul, who ſpeaking of thoſe which are borne and brought up in the Church, ſaith; that ſome are children of the fleſh, and ſome children of the promiſe, Rom. 9. 8.

This being ſo, that every one which lives in the Church is not of the Church; that is, is not a true member of the Church, and the true childe of Abraham; it muſt make us all carefull, to uſe all holy meanes, whereby we may be fully aſſured that the Covenant of grace belongs longs unto us; for, it is not enough for us to dwell in the Church, to heare the Word, and to receive the Sacraments, (for so did Ismael, and yet never was saved) unlesse therewithall we have the Covenant of grace belonging unto us, and the assurance thereof sealed in our consciences, by Gods holy Spirit.

Againe, consider who spake these words; But in Isaac shall thy seed be called: We shall finde in Gen. 21.12. it was God himselfe. Let it not (saith God unto Abraham) be grievous in thy sight for the childe, and for the bond-woman: in all that Sarah shall say unto thee, heare her voyce; which was, to cast out the bond-woman and her sonne Ismael. For (saith God) in Isaac shall thy seed be called.

Here observe a notable practice of Abraham, as a good direction how wee ought to judge of all those that live in the Church, submitting themselves outwardly to the ministerie and regiment thereof. Abraham here hath two sonnes, Isaac, and Ismael; hee circumciseth them both, and instructs them both (for hee taught all his household to know God, and to feare, and obey him, Genes. 18.19.) he judgeth them both to be in one state, in regard of Gods Covenant; though they were not: but that difference is made by God. Abraham doth not on his owne head, and by his owne will, put Ismael out of the Church, which was in his family; but God bids him put him out, and then he put him out, and not before: till such time he kept him in, and held him to be within the Covenant, as well as Isaac was. Even so must we deale towards those that live in the Church: secret judgement must be left to God; and (till God manifest the contrary) in the judgement of charitie, we must hold them all elect. This is the practice of Saint Paul in all his Epistles: writing to the Corinths, (1 Cor. 1.2.) hee calls them all sanctified: and to the Galatians, (Gala. 1.2.) he calls them all elect: speaking so in the judgement of charitie, although he knew that among them there were many profane and wicked men; and though he reprove many great errours and heinous sinnes among them.

And thus much of the first argument whereby Abrahams faith is commended unto us; namely, the great impediments which might hinder the same.

Now followeth the second argument or reason, whereby his faith is commended; to wit, Abrahams victory over these impediments, or the meanes whereby hee overcame them, and induced himselfe to obey God, in these words:

VERSE 19.

For he considered, or reasoned, that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead.

HEre is the true cause that made Abraham to offer his sonne, and yet beleeve the promise, that in him his seed should be called. We may perswade our selves, that Abraham had rather have died himselfe (if it might have stood with the will of God) than to have sacrificed his sonne. How then doth he induce himselfe to offer him up? Answ. By this which is here set downe: he reasoned that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead.

Here are divers points to be considered of us: First observe, the Text saith not, that Abraham murmured, or reasoned against God: but reasoned with himselfe, that God was able to raise up his sonne againe: and thereby induced himselfe to sacrifice his sonne unto God.

Hence we learne, that when God layes upon us any hard commandement, we must not plead the case with God, or murmure against him: but with all quietnesse and meeknesse obey. This is a notable grace of God commended unto us by God himselfe: In rest and quietnesse (saith God, Isay 30.15.) shall be your strength: in quietnesse and confidence shall yee be saved. Many thinke it impossible to endure or doe some things, which God imposeth on his children: But our spirituall strength stands in these two, in silence, or rest, and in quietnesse; by these we shall be enabled. When Nadab and Abihu, the sonnes of Aaron, offered strange fire before the Lord, which he had not commanded, There went out a fire from the Lord, and devoured them; so they died before the Lord. Now when Aaron their father asked Moses a cause hereof, Moses said, It was that which the Lord spake, hee would be glorified in all that came neere him; which when Aaron heard, the Text saith, He held his peace, and said not a word: so David behaved himselfe in the case of distresse; I held my peace, and said nothing, because thou Lord diddest it. And this is a speciall point for us to learne and practise; we must not grudge or repine at Gods hard Commandements, nor plead the case with him, but in all quietnesse and silence obey God in all that he saith unto us.

Againe, whereas it is said, that Abraham reasoned, that God was able, &c. Here we learne, that it is a necessarie thing for a man that beleeves, to have good knowledge in Gods word: that when a temptation comes against his faith, by knowledge and reasoning out of Gods word, he may be able to put backe the same; for, all our reasoning in matters of faith, must bee grounded on the Word: so doth Abraham in this place, against this strong temptation, reason out of Gods Word to stay himselfe: so that knowledge in the Word of God, is necessarie to him that beleeves. And therefore that Doctrine of the Church of Rome is erroneous, and here condemned, which saith; that if a man become devout, and beleeves as the Church beleeveth, (though he know not what the Church beleeveth) yet this faith will save him: but this is a meere device of their owne, and hath no ground in the word of God: for (as we see here) knowledge in the word is necessary for him that hath hath true saving faith.

But what is Abrahams argument, whereby he moves himselfe to obey God? Surely this; He reasoned that God was able to raise up Isaac from the dead. One part of his reason he takes for granted, which here he conceales: for this promise was made unto him, In Isaac shall thy seed be called. Now this he takes for granted, that God will never change his promise. From whence he reasoneth thus: God is able to raise up Isaac my sonne from the dead to life againe; and therefore I will sacrifice my sonne according to his commandement: for this I know certainely, that in Isaac shall my seed be called, seeing God hath promised that, as well as he commandeth this other.

In this example, we see a meanes set downe unto us to induce us to obey God in all hard and difficult cases imposed by God: which is a point to be considered carefully of every one of us. For say that any of us shall be so touched in conscience for our sinnes, that we even despaire of our owne salvation: what must we doe in this case? we must take Abrahams course, and dispute with our selves for our selves, and we must draw our arguments from the promise of God, and from the power of God; we must joyne the promise and power of God together. As for example: thus we must say; God hath made this promise, this I have heard, and I doe beleeve it, that God so loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne, that whosoever beleeved in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. This is Gods promise, and it shall never be changed. Now therefore howsoever my case be heavie and desolate, yet God is able to comfort me, and to bring my soule out of hell, and from this case of desperation; therefore though he kill me, I will trust in him, and I will use all holy meanes whereby I may overcome this hard and grievous temptation. So, if it shall please God to call us to suffer any thing for the name of Christ, and his holy profession; flesh and blood we know is weake, and Nature will make this objection, that life is sweet: what course therefore shall we take? we must doe as Abraham here doth; unto the certainty of Gods promise we must adjoyne his power, and reason thus; God hath made this promise, that he will be with them that suffer any thing for his owne name sake, and I know that he is able to deliver me: and though he will not, yet he can make me able to beare it; therefore I will patiently suffer and abide whatsoever his holy hand shall lay upon me. Thirdly, is a man so troubled with some sinne, that he cannot get out nor overcome it? Then also let him set before him this fact of Abraham; and unfeinedly endevour to doe hereafter. For that which is past, let him labour to beleeve this promise of God, At what time soever a sinner doth repent him of his sinne, he will put all his wickednesse out of his remembrance. And for the time to come (being first resolved, that God can inable him to leave his sinnes) let him strive by good meanes to leave his sinne, avoiding the occasions of it, and praying against it; and this will be as a cable-rope to draw him out of the pit of sinne. This course we must take, and this doe, in every hard case that shall befall us.

John 3.16.

And thus much of the meanes whereby Abraham induced himselfe to obey God.

The third and last reason whereby Abrahams faith is commended unto us, is the issue and event thereof, in these words:

From whence he received him also after a sort.

From whence; that is, from death. After a sort, or (as it may be read) in some shew. This is said, because Isaac in the thought and purpose of Abraham, was but a dead man: for Abraham was fully resolved with himselfe upon Gods command, to have sacrificed him; yea, he had gone so farre, as to put the sacrificing knife unto his sonnes throat, and had slaine him indeed, had not the Angell of God stayed his hand: and therefore when the Angell said, Lay not thy hand upon the childe, neither doe any thing to him, even then did Abraham in some shew receive Isaac from death.

Here we learne divers points: 1. That whosoever shall rest on Gods providence, and good pleasure, even in cases of extremitie, when he shall be out of all hope with himselfe, shall at the last have a good issue. This we see to be true by Abrahams example in this place. As we said before, he himselfe (no doubt) had rather have died tenne thousand times, than to have Isaac slaine, in whom the promise was made: but yet, beleeving Gods promise, that that should never change, he rests himselfe on Gods good pleasure and providence, and goes on in obedience; and so in the end received a blessed issue. This is very cleerely set downe unto us in the Historie recorded by Moses. For when Abraham had gone three dayes journey in the wildernesse, and had built an Altar, then Isaac said unto Abraham, Gen. 22.7. Father, here is the fire and the wood, but where is the lambe for the burnt offering? Then Abraham said, My sonne, God will provide him a lambe for a burnt offering, verse 8. And thus yeelding himselfe to Gods good pleasure and providence, he received his sonne againe; as a dead childe restored to life. So, when we are in cases of extremitie, when all goes against us, and when we can see no hope of any good issue or end, and all good meanes seeme to faile us; if we can then cast our selves on Gods providence, and rowle our selves upon God; we shall have comfort in the end, and a good issue out of all. We doe all of us in word acknowledge Gods providence: but when we come to the pinch, that we fall into cases of extremitie: then we use unlawfull meanes, and doe not with Abraham cast our selves upon God, but seeke helpe of the devill, and wicked men. But all such persons must looke for a cursed issue. They therefore, that feare the Lord, being

being put to any plunge, or extremitie, must cast themselves upon God wholly, and wait for his good time & pleasure, and then will the issue be both joyous and comfortable unto their soules.

Here some circumstances of this fact are to be considered out of the larger storie. The first is this: What did God unto Abraham at this time, when he was about to kill his son? Ans. God now gave him a commandement, to stay his hand, and not to slay his son: by vertue whereof, Abraham stayes his hand. God before commanded him to goe three dayes journey in the wildernesse, and there to sacrifice his sonne: Hereupon Abraham goes; but now being come to the place, having bound his sonne, and being readie to cut his throat; God bids him stay his hand: and then also Abraham obeyeth God, and doth not kill his sonne. Here we see Abraham is at Gods command, and as we say, at his becke: Hee doth not follow his owne will and pleasure, but when God cals, hee is wonderfull pliable to doe Gods command, what soever it be, one way or other.

This practice of Abraham must be a looking-glasse for us, wherein to see, what manner of persons we ought to be. Look what God commands us to doe, that we must doe; and what he forbids us, that we must not doe. But this is a rare thing to be found in these dayes: our practice generally is contrarie; for in our lives we follow our owne humours and affections, never regarding what God doth either will or nill. But if we will be Abrahams children, we must follow Abrahams practice in this place; For the sonnes of Abraham will doe the workes of Abraham, Joh.8.39. Good servants will come and goe, doe and undoe, at their Lords pleasure: and forget themselves to obey their Masters: And so must it be with us, if we call God our good Lord and Master.

Matth.8.9.

Luke 6.46.

The second circumstance to be considered, is the time when Abraham received his son from death; to wit, at the verie same time when his knife was at his sonnes throat, and he himselfe readie to offer him up for a sacrifice unto the Lord: at the same instant God spake unto him by his Angell from Heaven, and said, Abraham stay thy hand, Gen.22.10. This circumstance is worth the marking: for God lets him alone three whole dayes in great perplexitie, and Abraham goes forward, according to Gods command, even to lay his knife to his sons throat.

Here then we see, what is the Lords dealing with his servants; He lets them alone for a long season in temptation and pitifull distresse: and at the length, when it comes even to the extremitie, and when the knife is (as it were) at the throat; then hee shewes himselfe, and brings comfort unto them.

The Spouse (in the Canticles) which is the Church of God, or a true Christian soule, whether you will (for it is true both in the generall and particular) Cant.3.2,3. Shee seekes Christ everie where, in the streets and open places, but she findes him not; then she goes to the watchmen (which are Gods ministers) and there enquires after him whom her soule loved, and they cannot tell her where she might finde him: so that now all hope of finding him might seeme to be past: but when she was a little from them, then she found him, and Christ comes to her when she was most in feare not to have found him at all.

The people of Israel, were many yeares in bondage in Egypt: and when the time came that Moses was sent of God to fetch them thence, and to be their guide and deliverer, when he had brought them out, and carried them to the red Sea, then came Pharaoh with a huge armie after them to destroy them, Exod.14.25. Before they had been in great affliction and bondage: but now they were quite past all hope of recoverie; for they had before them the red Sea, and on each side of them great hills and mountaines, and behinde them the huge hoast of Pharaoh; and therefore they cried out unto Moses; who then by Gods commandement did divide the red Sea, and made it drie land, and delivered them through the midst of the red Sea: but as for their enemies, Pharaoh and all his hoast, the Lord drowned them in the midst thereof.

So for our selves, when God shall exercise any of us in cases of extremitie, we must looke to be so dealt withall at Gods hand; He will let us alone for a time, and never helpe us till the pinch: and therefore, we must wait for his good pleasure with patience; for this he will doe to trie us to the full, and to make manifest the graces of God wrought in us.

The third circumstance to be considered, is this: In what manner did Abraham receive his sonne from the dead? This we may read of, Gen. 22.13. He must take a Ram that was caught behinde him in a bush, and offer him in stead of Isaac: so Isaac is saved, and the Ram is sacrificed and slaine.

Now whereas Abraham offered Isaac in sacrifice to God, and yet Isaac liveth, and the Ram is slaine in his stead: Hence some gather this use, and we may profitably consider of the same; to wit, that the sacrifices which we offer unto God, now under the Gospel, must bee living sacrifices: for Isaac he was offered in sacrifice to God, and yet he lived and died not, but the Ram is slaine for him. So must we offer our selves in sacrifice unto God, not dead in sinne, but living unto God in righteousnesse and true holinesse. And thus shall we offer up our selves living sacrifices unto God, when as we consecrate our selves unto Gods service, and obey him in our lives and callings. And looke as under the Law, the burnt offerings were burnt all to smoake and ashes; so must we in our lives, wholly and altogether, give our selves unto God, and renouncing our selves, be nothing to the world, but wholly dedicated to God. Neither must we come unto him in our sinnes: for sinne makes our sacrifice dead, lame, halt, and blinde, which God doth abhor; but we must bring our selves living ſacrifices unto God (as Paul ſaith, Rom. 12.1.) I beſeech you brethren, by the mercies of God, that you give up your bodies a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is your reaſonable ſervice of God.

Hence alſo ſome gather, that this ſacrificing of Iſaac was a ſigne and type of Chriſts ſacrifice upon the Croſſe. For as Iſaac was ſacrificed and lived, ſo did Chriſt; though he died, yet roſe againe, and now liveth for ever: but becauſe it hath no ground in this place, though it be true which is ſaid of both, therefore I will not ſtand to urge the ſame.

And thus much of this third reaſon, whereby Abrahams faith is commended, with the circumſtances thereof: and conſequently of all the examples of holy Abrahams faith.

Isaacs Faith.

By faith Iſaac bleſſed Iacob and Eſau concerning things to come.

IN the three former verſes, the holy Ghoſt hath particularly commended the faith of Abraham: Now in this verſe, he proceeds to ſet downe unto us the faith of Iſaac particularly alſo. Wherein we are to marke theſe foure points: Firſt, a bleſſing wherewith Iſaac bleſſed Iacob and Eſau: Secondly, the cauſe of this bleſſing, that is, his faith: Thirdly, the parties bleſſed, which are Iacob and Eſau: Fourthly, the nature and matter of this bleſſing in the end of the verſe; Concerning things to come. Of theſe in order.

Firſt, for the bleſſing. That we may know the nature and qualitie of it, we muſt ſearch out the kindes of bleſſings how many they be.

In Gods Word we finde three kindes of bleſſings; firſt, whereby God bleſſeth man. Now God bleſſeth man, by giving unto him gifts and benefits either temporall or ſpirituall: and ſo he bleſſed all his creatures in the beginning, but eſpecially man.

The ſecond kinde of bleſſing is that, whereby man bleſſeth God: and this man doth by praiſing God, and giving thankes unto him, who is the Author of all bleſſings. So Paul ſaith, Bleſſed be God even the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, which hath bleſſed us with all ſpirituall bleſſings in heavenly things in Chriſt: Eph. 1.2. beginning his Epiſtle, with this kinde of bleſſing, that is, by praiſing God. And ſo Zacharie after the birth of his ſonne, and the receiving of his ſight, he ſings unto God this ſong of praiſe, Bleſſed be the Lord of Iſrael, Luke 1.68. that is, praiſe and thankſgiving be unto the Lord, &c.

The third kind of bleſſing is that, whereby one man doth bleſſe another: and under this kinde we muſt underſtand Iſaacs bleſſing in this place.

A Now further, this kinde of bleſſing whereby one man bleſſeth another, is either private or publike. A private bleſſing is that, whereby one private man whatſoever he be in his place, prayes to God for a bleſſing upon another. And this is common to all men: for every man may bleſſe another, that is, pray to God for a bleſſing upon another; but eſpecially it belongeth to Parents thus to bleſſe their children, by praying to God for a bleſſing upon them. And therefore the Commandement goes thus, Honour thy father and thy mother, that they may prolong thy dayes in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, Exod. 20.12. Now Parents prolong their childrens dayes by bleſſing them; that is, by teaching and inſtructing them in religion, and by
B praying unto God for a bleſſing upon them, that he would bleſſe them. Secondly, there is a publike kinde of bleſſing, which is done by the miniſter of God, in the name of God. And after this ſort Melchiſedech bleſſed Abraham, as he returned from the ſlaughter of the Kings, Hebr. 7.1. and without all contradiction, (ſaith the Author of this Epiſtle) the leſſe is bleſſed of the greater, verſe 7. Further, theſe publike kinde of bleſſings are of two ſorts; either ordinary or extraordinary. An ordinary kinde of publike bleſſing is that, which is pronounced and uttered out of Gods word by an ordinary miniſter, upon the people. Example of this we have in the ordinary Prieſts in the old Teſtament; whoſe dutie was in the ſervice of God, to bleſſe the people
C before their departing. And the forme of bleſſing which they ſhould uſe, is preſcribed unto them by Moſes, after this maner from the Lord: Thus ſhall ye bleſſe the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them: The Lord bleſſe thee, and keepe thee, the Lord make his face to ſhine upon thee, and be merciſull unto thee: The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. Where we ſee the maner of the Prieſt was to bleſſe the people, not in his owne name, but in the name of God, ſtretching out his hand over the heads of the people. Numb. 6.23.

This kinde of bleſſing was then ordinarie, and yet ſome way figurative; ſignifying unto them the bleſſings which Chriſt Jeſus the Mediator, God and man, ſhould not onely pronounce, but
D even give unto the Church in the new Teſtament: which our Saviour accordingly performed to his Diſciples at his Aſcenſion. For the Storie ſaith; When he was riſen againe, he led them to Bethania, (where he aſcended) and lift up his hands and bleſſed them. And S. Paul declareth this bleſſing of Chriſt more at large, ſaying, Eph. 4.8, 11, 12. Chriſt aſcended on high, and lead captivitie captive, and gave gifts unto men: ſome to be Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, and ſome Evangeliſts, and ſome Paſtours and teachers; for the gathering together of the Saints, for the worke of the miniſterie, and for the edification of the body of Chriſt. Where wee ſee, that our Saviour Chriſt did not onely pronounce a bleſſing upon his Church, but was alſo the Author thereof from God his Father. And as the

Prieſts

Priests in the old Testament, had an ordinarie kinde of blessing the people: so the Ministers of God in the new Testament, they have the same in substance; for the Ministers may blesse their people two wayes: First, by praying unto God for them: Secondly, by pronouncing a blessing upon them, according to Gods holy Word. A forme of this blessing we have from the Apostle S. Paul, who blessed the Corinthians after this sort; The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion (or fellowship) of the holy Ghost be with you all. 2 Cor. 13.

Secondly, an extraordinary kinde of blessing is, when an extraordinary Prophet, or servant of God, doth set downe and pronounce a blessing unto any, and foretelleth their estate from God. Thus did Noah blesse his two sonnes, Shem and Iapheth, Gen. 9.25,26,27. and pronounced a curse upon wicked Canaan. This he did, not as an ordinary father, but as an extraordinary Prophet, not onely praying for a blessing upon his two sonnes, but also foretelling them what should be their condition or estate afterward. So in this place, whereas Isaac blesseth Iacob and Esau, it is no private blessing, but a publike; and yet indeed, not an ordinary publike blessing, but extraordinary, by telling unto Iacob and Esau before-hand, what should be their particular estates and conditions, and what blessings they should have from God, both in this life, and in the life to come. For we must not here conceive of Isaac, as an ordinary Father, but as an holy Patriarch and Prophet of the Lord, and an extraordinary man; foreseeing and foretelling by the spirit of Prophecie, the particular estate of his two sonnes; and also what particular blessings they and their posteritie should receive from God.

The meaning then of these words, Isaac blesseth Iacob and Esau, is this; that Isaac being a Prophet, an extraordinary man, and a famous Patriarch, did by the spirit of prophecie foresee and set downe, and tell before-hand, what should be the particular estate of his two sons, Iacob and Esau: and as he did foretell it, so likewise he prayed unto God that the same might come to passe; as it did afterward. And thus much for the meaning.

Now though this were an extraordinary kinde of blessing, which Isaac used; yet from hence, we may all of us learne an ordinary dutie; for looke as Isaac blessed his two sonnes, so we by his example must learne to abstaine from all wicked speeches; as cursing and banning, and exercise our tongues in blessing, not making them the instruments of sinne, to curse and revile, as many doe: for vengeance is mine, saith the Lord. He must curse, that hath absolute power and authoritie to inflict the same, when he will. But we are not absolute Lords over any man, nor any creature; and therefore we must remember Saint Peters lesson, 1 Peter 3.9. We must not render evill for evill, nor rebuke for rebuke; But contrariwise blesse: and he rendreth a reason, Knowing A that we are thereunto called, to be heires of blessing. Farre bee it from us therefore, to open our mouthes to curse either men or any of Gods creatures: and indeed vile and abominable is the practice of many, who exercise their tongues in cursing and banning, not onely men, but also other creatures of God. But let such as feare God, both learne and practise the contrary.

The second point to be considered, is the cause of this blessing; to wit, Isaacs faith; By faith Isaac blessed Iacob and Esau.

Here first we are to consider, how Isaacs faith blessed Iacob and Esau? surely thus: He did most notably gather together all the promises of God made to him, and to his two children, which were specially three: First, I will be thy B God, and the God of thy seed. Secondly, God had promised, that he and his seed should possesse the land of Canaan. Thirdly, that his two children should be two mightie Nations, and that the elder should serve the younger.

Now Isaac doth not consider these blessings a-part one from another, but hath them all in memorie; and on them all (receiving them by a lively faith) he builds his blessings; for by faith in these promises, he did certainely fore-see what should be the future estate of his two sonnes, and accordingly doth he pronounce particular blessings upon them both.

But it may be thought, that Isaac did not blesse his sonnes by faith; for if we reade the Historie in Genesis, we shall see, that he blessed C them by errour, and was deceived therein: for he was purposed to have blessed Esau onely with the speciall blessing, when as he gave the same to Iacob unwittingly; how then could he doe this by faith? For the answering of this, we must consider two things: First, it is true indeed, that Isaac was blinded overmuch with a fond affection, toward Esau, and loved him otherwise than he ought, and therefore was purposed to have blessed Esau with the speciall blessing. This was a fault in Isaac: but yet it takes not away Isaacs faith, nor makes it to be no faith; But it shewes that Isaacs faith was weake, and joyned with some infirmitie in forgetting Gods particular promises. Secondly, howsoever at the first Isaac erred in his purpose for the blessing of his children, yet afterward he corrects D himselfe for it. For as we may reade in the Historie, after he had indeed blessed Iacob, supposing it had beene Esau, when Esau came for his blessing with his Venison, the Text saith, That Isaac was stricken with a marvellous great feare, and said, I have blessed him, and therefore he shall be blessed: correcting his fault in his former purpose: yea, and though Esau sought it with teares, yet he could not move Isaac to repent himselfe of blessing Iacob, Hebr. 12.17. wherefore if is undoubtedly true, that he gave these blessings unto his children by faith.

Now from this that Isaac blessed his children by faith, we learne many instructions: The first concerneth Parents; that howsoever they cannot not as Isaac did, like Prophets and Patriarchs, pronounce blessings upon their children, and foretell what shalbe their particular estate afterward: yet if Parents would as farre as they may, follow the practice of Isaac, they should bring great comfort and consolation to their owne soules, both in this life and in the life to come.

Isaac set before his eyes all the promises that God had made both concerning him and his sonnes, and by faith in these promises, is moved to blesse his children; so if Parents would have true comfort in their children, they must search through the whole booke of God, and see what promises God hath made unto the godly and to their seed; and withall, they must by faith apply unto their owne soules, all those gracious promises, endevouring also to make their children to know the same, and to walke worthy thereof: and then as their obedience shall increase, so will their joy increase, not onely in God, but mutually one in another. This will stay their hearts in all assaults, yea, even in death it selfe.

Secondly, whereas Isaac blessed his children by faith: here we may take just occasion to speake of such wicked persons as are commonly called blessers; who are too much esteemed of, by many at this day, and their wicked practices counted blessings, and good meanes of helpe, when as indeed they are most vile and wretched creatures. This may bee thought a hard censure, because they are taken for cunning men and women, and for good people, following Isaacs example in blessing mens children and cattell: they are thought to doe no harme at all, but much good by helping strange mischances that befall men in their bodies, children, or goods. Thus would some excuse and defend these Wizzards and blessers, who are the wretched limbs of the Devill: but let us know, that if they will blesse aright, it must be by faith. Now what faith have they? hath God made any promise to them, that by their meanes he will helpe those that come to seeke helpe at them for their children and cattell? nay verily, there is no such matter: God never made promise to any such; nay, he hath flatly forbidden, not onely such practices as they use, but also for men to seeke to any such persons: and therefore they cannot blesse mens children and cattell by faith. But they say, they doe these things by faith: yet it is by faith in the Devill, and in his promises. For this is certaine, that as God hath his Lawes and Sacraments for those that enter covenant with him; so on the contrarie the Devill hath words, spells, and charmes, as his Lawes and rites, wherein he exerciseth his slaves: and by a Satanicall faith in the devils word and promise, doe these Wizzards and wise-women blesse mens goods and children. This is true by the common confession of many of them, to omit all other proofe. And therefore we must hold them for the limbs of the devill, and his wicked instruments to draw men from God; and so in no case goe to them for helpe: for in so doing, we forsake the living Lord and his helpe, and seeke for helpe at the Devill; than which what can be more odious? But say we receive some outward helpe by their meanes: yet marke the issue; the Lord hath said, Levit. 20. 6. If any turne after such as worke with spirits, and after sooth-sayers to goe a whoring after them, then will I set my face against that person, and will cut him off from among his people. Therefore unlesse we feare not the curse of God, we must be warned hereby, not to seeke for helpe at their hands. For they are graceless people, who have no feare of God before their eyes: but they set themselves against God and his Word. And indeed these common blessers which seeme to doe no hurt, but to blesse mens children and cattell, are more dangerous than notorious witches, who can only hurt mens bodies and goods, when God permits; whereas these blessers ensnare the soule, and draw whole Townes and Countries to the approbation and partaking of their wickednesse.

Isa. 8. 19, 20.

The third point to be considered is, the parties blessed, that is, Iacob and Esau. Here marke first the order which the holy Ghost useth: he setteth Iacob in the first place, and yet Esau was the elder brother: what is the reason of this? Ans. We must know, that the Scripture useth a three-fold order in the naming of persons:

1. The order of Nature, as when the first borne is put first. And thus Davids sonnes are numbred according to their age; first Ammon, then Daniel, the third Absalom, &c.

1 Chro. 3. 1, 2.

2. The order of dignitie, when as those are put in the first place, not which are the eldest, but which are the best, and most in Gods favour. This order the holy Ghost uses in naming Noahs sonnes, Genes. 5. 31. saying, Noah begat Shem, Ham, & Iapheth; when as Iapheth was the eldest, and by order of nature should have beene put first: yet with Shem God continued the covenant.

3. The order of Historie, when as one that is first, or chiefe in dignitie, is placed last, because his historie begins in the last place. So our Saviour Christ is mentioned last in the Genealogie made by S. Matthew, because his history began in the last place, though in dignitie he were the first and principall. To apply this to our purpose: The order which the holy Ghost here useth, is not the order of Historie, nor of nature, but of dignitie; because Iacob was chiefe in favour of God, therefore the holy Ghost putteth him in the first place.

Here then we see in this order of dignitie, that the first blessing (of life everlasting) belongs to Iacob: Esau must have his blessing, but in the second place.

Here observe these two things: First, Iacob is received into Gods Covenant, and Esau put by, Iacob gets the principall blessing, and Esau loseth it: but what? are these things so for Iacobs desert, or for the default of Esau? Nay verily: the good pleasure of God is the chiefe cause hereof: for as touching the blessing;

if

if we reade the history, we shall see, that Esau at his fathers commandement, went and hunted, and tooke paines, and got his Father venison, and told him nothing but truth. But Iacob never went to hunt, but gets a Kid dressed, and comes to his father with it, and while he talkes with his father doth foulely glose and lie: so that in all reason it might seeme, that Esau deserved the better blessing: yet God will have it otherwise, and the principall blessing belongs to Iacob. Wherein wee may note, that Gods speciall love to a man, whereby he receives him into his covenant, is not grounded on mans behaviour, but on his owne good will and pleasure.

Secondly, in that Iacob here had the principall blessing: wee learne that the counsell of God doth overrule the will of man. For Father Isaac had purposed to have blessed Esau with the chiefest blessing: but yet Gods counsell was contrary, and the same overrules Isaacs will. For though Isaac had cause to suspect that it was not Esau, both because hee came so soone, as also for that the voyce was apparant not to be Esaus, but Iacobs voyce; yet Gods counsell overruled his will: and when hee came to handle his sonnes hands, he could not discerne betweene a Kids skinne, and the skinne of a man: what's the cause hereof? Surely it was Gods will and counsell, that Iacob should have the chiefest blessing: and therefore hee overrules Isaacs will, and blindes his senses, and makes him to blesse Iacob with the chiefest blessing.

The consideration hereof is profitable unto us: for it is a received opinion with many at this day, that God did purpose to save all men. Now when question is made, Why then are not all men saved? They answer, because men will not though God will. But this opinion is erroneous: For, it makes mans will to overrule Gods counsell: as if they should say, God willeth it not, because men will it not: or else (which is worse) God willeth it, but it commeth not to passe, because men will not doe it. But Gods will and counsell is the highest and chiefest cause of all: and looke whatsoever hee willeth, that bringeth he to passe: and because all men are not saved, therefore wee may safely thinke and say, that God did never decree to save all men.

Now further, more particularly of Iacobs blessing: first, it may be asked, How could Iacob be blessed, seeing hee came dissemblingly and lying to his father?

Answ. Wee must know, that howsoever Iacob sought the blessing by fraud, yet hee might be blessed: for he failed not, neither did amisse in seeking for the blessing, but onely in the manner of seeking it: it was his duty to seeke it, though not after that manner which he did: he should rather have staied that leasure and time, wherein God had caused Isaac to blesse him, without his sinne in seeking it.

A Secondly, consider the manner how Iacob receives his fathers blessing; namely, in his elder brother Esaus garment.

Here wee may see a notable resemblance of Gods manner of blessing us: When wee looke for a blessing at Gods hand, we must not come in our owne garments, in the rotten rags of our owne righteousnesse; but wee must put on Christs garment, the long white robe of his righteousnesse. And so comming unto God, as Isaac said of the savour of Esaus garments, which Iacob had put on, (Genesis 27. 27, 28.) Behold, the smell of my sonne is as the smell of a field; God give thee therefore of the dew of Heaven, and the fatnesse of the earth, and plenty of wheat and wine: So will God say unto us, that B the righteousnesse of Christ, which we have put on by faith, is a sweet smelling savour in his nostrils, Eph. 5. 2. Now seeing all the blessings we enjoy, come to us in Christ, and our acceptance with God, is in his righteousnesse; wee therefore must labour to put on Christ every day, by becomming new creatures: wee must seeke to resemble him in knowledge, righteousnesse, and holinesse: so shall our assurance of Gods blessings increase upon us more and more.

Lastly, marke that howsoever Iacob was blessed otherwise than Isaac had purposed; yet after the blessing is pronounced, it must needs stand; for so when Esau came, Isaac said unto him, I have blessed Iacob; therefore hee shall bee blessed: Gen. 27. 33. Even so, the Ministers of C Gods word, in the assembly of the Church, who have power to pronounce Gods blessings upon the people; howsoever they be but weake men, and may bee deceived, being subject to errour, as other men are: yet when they pronounce Gods blessing upon their congregation in the ministerie of the word; if they doe it in sincerity of heart, and uprightnesse of conscience, that blessing shall stand. And so on the contrary, looke whom they curse, for just cause out of GODS Word, their curse shall stand.

Further, as Isaac blessed, but knew not whom; so the Ministers of God in the dispensation of the word, they must blesse Gods people, though they know not who they are particularly, that doe receive it. D

Thus much of Isaacs blessing Iacob. Now I come to his blessing of Esau: for hee also was blessed, as the text saith; yet in the second place though hee were the elder brother. Quest. How could Esau bee blessed at all, seeing Isaac had but one blessing? Answ. Esau was onely blessed with temporall blessings, and not with spirituall. Object. But some will say, Esau was a bad man, and wicked; now it is said, that to the impure, all things are impure: how then could the bestowing of temporall things bee blessings to him? Answ. Temporall things bestowed on the wicked are blessings, and no blessings: they are blessings in regard of God that gives them: but they are no blessings, in regard of men that receive them and use them amisse.

Quest. How came it to passe, that Esau being the elder brother, loseth his birth-right, and blessing both; how came it to be Iacobs?

Answ. The cause was his prophanenesse, as we may see and read in the next chapter; where it is said, Heb. 12.16. that he sold his birth-right for a portion of meat, even for a messe of red broth; and being so prophane, as to contemne so high an honour, he must be content to have his blessing in the second place. And hence wee may observe a good instruction.

There is many a young man in these our dayes baptized, as Esau was circumcised, and living in the Church, as he did in Isaacs house; who, during the prime of his youth, is given to nothing but to his pleasure; that is as good to him as Iacobs red broth was to Esau: take this pleasure from him, and take away his life: herein is all his joy, and he delighteth in nothing so much, as to spend his time in hunting, hawking, dicing, gaming, wantonnesse, and drinking. Now know for certaine, this is a right Esau; and yet many such have wee among us, who thinke of themselves, that they are the jolly fellowes, and they onely carry the brave mind: but as for Iacob, and such as make conscience of their wayes and word; those alas are silly fellowes. Now what is to bee said or thought of these? Surely this, if they doe not (and in that time) looke to their estates, and to themselves, it will cost them their lives, even the life of their soules. Esau lost his birth-right by his prophanenesse; and so will these men doe if they continue in this estate; they will blot their names out of the booke of life, and root themselves quite out of the kingdome of Heaven. Therefore let all young men whatsoever they bee, high and low, take heed how they live in sinne, and goe on in their wickednesse; for if they take Esaus course, and continue in prophanenesse, doubtlesse they will have Esaus end. How wonderfully doth Satan bewitch them, that while they goe on in sinne, they should thinke so highly of themselves, and so basely of those that make conscience of their wayes? Wherefore in the feare of God let such betime redresse their wayes and courses; lest when Gods curse is upon them, they crie too late for mercie. And thus much of the parties blessed.

The fourth point to be considered, is the nature or matter of this blessing, in the end of the verse;

Concerning things to come.

The meaning of these words is this: That old Isaac, their father did pronounce blessings upon his sonnes, not onely for the time present, but for the time to come; in blessings temporall and spirituall, (as we may reade, Gen. 27.28, 30.) where hee giveth to them both the fatnesse of the land, and plenty of wheat and wine; and especially to Iacob, that he should be Lord over his brethren. But some will say, it may seeme to prove otherwise; for while Iacob lived, hee was alwayes humble and subject to Esau: and when hee came to his owne countrey from among the Aramites, as he met with Esau: he sent presents to him: and when he saw him, he went before, and bowed himselfe to the ground 7. times, untill he came neere to his brother. Answ. That prophecie of Iacob and Esau, that the elder should serve the younger, must not be restrained to the persons of Iacob and Esau, but referred to their posterity; especially in the dayes of David and Salomon: for then were the Edomites who came of Esau, in subjection to the Israelites, the posterity of old Israel. Whereupon David speaking as a King, saith, Psal. 60.8. Moab shall be my washpot, over Edom will I cast my shooe: meaning thereby, that hee would bring the posterity of Esau into a base and low estate of subjection unto him; according as wee may see verified, 2 Sam. 8.14.

But some will say, that Isaac when he blessed Esau, pronounced that he should have a fertile soile, and the fatnesse of the earth should be his dwelling place, Genes. 27.39. whereas in Malachi the Lord saith, Malach. 1.3. he hated Esau. And a token thereof was this; that he had made his mountains waste, and his heritage a wildernesse for dragons: meaning that hee should dwell in a barren Land. How can these two agree? Answ. First, we may say thus: That the land of Edom was a fertile land; but yet in respect of the land of Canaan, but a barren and waste land. Secondly, Isaac speakes here of Idumea, as it was in his time; not as it was afterward: for it might be fertile in Isaacs time, and yet after become barren: for God will curse a Land, by turning fruitfulnesse into barrennesse, for the wickednesse of them that dwell therein, Psal. 107.34.

And thus much for the example of Isaacs faith. Now follow the examples of the faith of Iacob.

Iacobs Faith.

VERSE 21.

By faith Iacob when hee was dying, blessed both the sons of Ioseph, and worshipped on the end of his staffe.

IN these words, the holy Ghost laies downe the notable and worthy example of Iacobs faith: which is here commended by two actions. First, his blessing of the two sonnes of Ioseph: Secondly, his adoring or worshipping of God. In the first action consider these points:

1. The

1. The blessing it selfe: 2. The circumstances belonging to the same; As 1. The time when Iacob blessed them, that is, when hee was dying: secondly, by what meanes hee did bleese them, namely, by faith: thirdly, the parties blessed Ephraim and Manasses. Of these in order.

First, for the blessing: Of this kind of blessing wee intreated in the former verse, in the example of Isaacs faith; and therefore need not now repeat the same. Onely this wee must remember, that this blessing of Iacob is not the common or ordinary blessing of a father, but the extraordinary blessing of an holy Patriarch and Prophet of God. The blessing it selfe stands in three things: 1. Iacob makes the sonnes of Ioseph his owne sons, adopting them and taking them into his family. And this is the meaning of these words in Genesis, where Iacob saith as he is blessing them, Let my name be named upon them, and the name of my fathers, Abraham and Isaac, Gen. 48. 16. that is, they shall be received into my family, and be my children, called after my name.

2. Hee gives them two portions in the Land of Canaan: for Iacob was made an instrument of God, by way of prophecie to distinguish and divide the Land of Canaan among his children.

3. He doth as a Prophet, by the spirit of prophecie, foretell the condition and estate of Ephraim and Manasses in their posterity; to wit, that they should be great nations, and of them should come two great people: in these three things doth Iacobs blessing consist.

Out of this blessing of Iacob, we learne two things: first, that God alloweth this liberty to a master of a family, to adopt and chuse for the upholding of his house, a child or children, in the want of issue from his owne body. For here old Iacob for the continuance of his posterity, and the inlarging of the Church of God, adopteth his sonnes sonnes into his owne family, to be his owne sonnes: And this he doth by faith. And therefore a Lord and Master in his family may doe the like: but yet with this caveat; hee must ever take heed that in this adopting hee doe not unjustly hinder his owne issue or kindred.

D Againe, whereas Iacob blesseth these two sonnes of Ioseph, by fore-telling the particular estate of their posterity, for their portion in the Land of Canaan, here we learne, that in many things God doth vouchsafe to reveale his will and counsell in a speciall manner unto them that be his children: As in this place he revealeth unto Iacob the particular estate of the two sonnes of Ioseph. In like manner, when God was to destroy the Sodomites: Shall I hide (saith the Lord) from Abraham that thing which I doe, seeing that Abraham shall be indeed a mighty Nation? for I know him that hee will command his sonnes and his houshold after him, that they keepe the way of the Lord. And the Prophet Amos saith, (chap. 3. 7.) Surely the Lord wil

A doe nothing, but he revealeth his secrets to his servants the Prophets. So saith our Saviour Christ to his Disciples, Yee are my friends: and hee giveth a reason, because (saith hee) I have revealed unto you all that I have heard of my Father, John 15. 15. So that those which are (in Christ) the friends of God, they shall in a particular and speciall manner know those things which God wil not reveale unto others. And looke as this is here verified to Iacob in a speciall manner, so it is true generally in all Gods servants and children, he revealeth some particular things unto them, more than he doth unto others. For besides that generall knowledge which they have in his word, he reveales particularly unto them the knowledge of their

B owne election, of their justification, sanctification, and glorification to come: though not by way of prophecie, yet by the working of his spirit in the ministery and meditation of his word. And thus much of the blessing. Now follow the circumstances.

The first circumstance to bee considered, is the time when Iacob blessed the two sonnes of Ioseph, noted in these words, when he was dying, that is, being ready to dye, not in the act of dying.

In this circumstance we may learn two especiall duties: one for masters of families; the other for the Ministers of Gods word: for here Iacob beares the person not onely of a Father, but of a Prophet. First, masters of families are

C here taught to set in order their houses and families whereof they have charge, before they die: for Iacob having a great charge, and many children, cals for the sonnes of Ioseph, Ephraim and Manasses, before his death, and makes them his owne, to perfect his family.

Quest. How (will some aske) must a man set his house in order when he dies. Answer. By doing two things after Iacobs example: for first, hee disposeth of his temporall things, and distributeth his temporall inheritance in the Land of Canaan. Secondly, hee gives them charge of some duties concerning himselfe, and some others, especially concerning religion and Gods worship, and then he dies: and it

D is said, When he had made an end of giving charge unto his sons, he pluckt up his feet into his bed, and gave up the Ghost, Gen. 49. 33. So likewise, Masters of families, they must set their houses in order by the like two duties: 1. By a due disposing of their temporall goods and possessions: and 2. by giving exhortation and charge unto their children and family, concerning the worship of God, and the practice of true Religion. This (as wee may also reade 1 Kings 2.) was the practice of good King David: when he was about to die, and as he saith, to goe the way of all flesh, hee cals for Salomon his sonne, and makes him King in his stead, and gives him a most notable charge concerning Gods worship, Verse 3. reade the place, it is worth the marking. So the Prophet Isaiah, when he comes to Hezekiah from the Lord, he aimes at these two: and bids him set his house in order, for hee must die, and not live: Isay 38.1. and so ought every master of a family, after their example, both learne and practise these two duties.

Secondly, Gods Ministers must hence learne their duty: for Iacob was a notable Minister and Prophet in Gods Church, which was then in his family. Iacob hee blessed the sonnes of Ioseph, that hee might receive them into his family, and into the covenant; that so hee might continue and preserve the Church of God after his death: for looke as Isaac his father did call him into the covenant, and blessed him, so dealeth hee with the two sonnes of Ioseph. And accordingly every Minister of God, in his place ought to have speciall care to convey and derive true religion, and the Gospell of Christ from hand to hand, so much as they can while they live; that so after their death it may bee published and maintained. In the new Testament wee have a worthy Commandement for this purpose; S. Paul having instructed and taught Timothy in the wayes of godlinesse and religion, chargeth him, that what things hee had heard and learned of him, the same he should deliver to faithfull men, which should bee able to teach others also: that so Gods Gospell and religion going on from hand to hand, and from person to person, might increase from time to time. S. Peters practice herein, was notable, 2 Pet. 1. 15. I will endevour therefore alwayes, that ye may be able to have remembrance of the things of God after my departure: having professed before, that while he lived, he would stirre them up by putting them in remembrance, vers. 13. And in like sort, all Gods faithfull Ministers must doe their whole endevour before they die, that the Gospell may bee preached when they are gone.

2. Circumstance. By what meanes did Iacob blesse the two sonnes of Ioseph. Answ. By faith in the promises of God; so the Text saith, By faith Iacob blessed the two sonnes of Ioseph. And if we consider the matter well; wee shall see it was a notable faith: for he was now a poore pilgrime in Ægypt, and yet by faith gives them portions in the land of Canaan.

Quest. Why (will some say) did he not keepe himselfe in the land of Canaan.

Answer. Iacob indeed dwelt there for a time, but yet as a sojourner, having no more liberties than he bought for himselfe; no not so much as water for his camels, or a place to bury the dead: and besides, hee was driven out of this his owne Land by famine, and was faine to flie into Ægypt for food and sustenance; and there to live as a poore pilgrim and stranger, forth of his owne country: and yet for all this extremity (as though hee had beene some mighty potentate of the world, or some Emperour) he makes his will, and bequeathes unto his children the land of Canaan, allotting to every one his part A and portion; which must needs be a worke of a notable faith, wonderfully apprehending and applying the promise of God.

In his example we are taught a notable duty in the matter of our salvation; when as any of us (by reason of the rigorous temptation of sin and Satan, and by their assaults) shall seeme to our selves to bee (as it were) thrust out of our inheritance in the heavenly Canaan, what must we doe? We must not despaire; but even then set before our eyes, and call to remembrance the promises of God made unto us in Christ concerning life everlasting: and thereon we must rest and stay our selves. Then let temptations assault us, and drive us whether they can: still we must hold fast the promise with B both hands of faith; and above hope, by faith appoint and designe unto our selves, a part and portion in the kingdome of heaven. And so doing, we shall be true Israelites, and true followers of this faithfull Patriarch; who by faith (beyond all likelihood) allots the Land of Canaan to his posteritie.

3. Circumstance. The parties whom he blessed; namely, the two sonnes of Ioseph, Manasses and Ephraim. Hereof wee may reade at large, Gen. 48. 8, 9, &c. where among many things, observe this one: Ioseph brings his two sonnes Manasses and Ephraim, unto Iacob his father, that he might blesse them as he lay on his bed. Now Iosephs minde was, that Manasses (the elder) should have the chiefest blessing; and C therefore he set Manasses at Iacobs right hand, and Ephraim (the younger) at his left: But Iacob being to blesse them, layes his hands acrosse, putting his right hand on Ephraims head, and the left on the head of Manasses: whereby, hee gave the birth right (which was a principall prerogative) unto Ephraim, contrary to Iosephs desire. Unto Manasses hee gave a blessing also, but farre inferiour to Ephraims. Now here we may not think, that Iacob did this upon any fond affection, (as parents oftentimes doe, because they love one childe better than another) but he did it after a speciall manner: by the direction and instinct of Gods spirit, which so appointed it. For, when Iacob blessed them, hee knew not (of his owne knowledge, by the benefit of his senses,) which was Ephraim, and D which Manasses. Againe, looke as Iacob gave the blessing at this time, the principall unto Ephraim, and the lesser to Manasses; so afterward they came to passe. For (as we may read) the tribe of Ephraim was farre more populous, and more glorious than the tribe of Manasses. And therefore, in the bookes of the Prophets (Hos. 4. 16. and 5. 9. and 6. 4, &c.) wee shall finde, that the name of Ephraim is given to all the ten tribes: and they are called by that name because it was the most noble tribe of all, and the most valiant, and (as it were) the shelter of all the rest. Yea further, of this tribe came (1 Chron. 7. 27. Iehosuah, that noble captaine: and (1 King. 11. 26.) Ieroboam, and many other mighty Kings of Israel.

Where wee may learne, that God is the disposer of honours and dignities in this world hee giveth those to whom hee will, to some more, and to some lesse, as pleaseth him: yea, sometime hee raiseth up men of base and low degree, to great dignity; as David saith, Psal. 113.7. Hee raiseth the needy out of the dust, and lifteth the poore out of the dung. Now whence comes this? Is their hearing, their great strength, their beauty, or wonderfull skill, and knowledge, the cause of their preferment? or the wealth of their parents, or any thing in them? No surely: If we speake of the first cause, we see in this example, that the preferment of Ephraim above Manasses, was for no cause in Ephraim; for what was in Ephraim that was not in Manasses, when Iacob blessed them? Surely, nothing: for he was but a childe as the other was, and a younger child also; but he was preferred by reason of Gods good will towards him. And so it is with all those that are advanced to preferment in this world. Wherefore, seeing honour and dignity commeth not from themselves, or any thing in them: therefore they must not ascribe it to their owne wit, learning, strength, or friends; but wholly to the gift of God, as the first cause: and so must labour to use it to the honour of him that onely gives it, of his good pleasure; else they sacrifice to their owne net: Hab. 1.16.

Quest. Why doth the holy Ghost in this place put Iosephs name downe, who was not blessed, and conceale the names of the two children that were blessed? Answer. If wee reade the History in Genesis, wee shall see the reason hereof. For, when Ioseph heard that his Father Iacob was sick: though he was a mighty Prince and a noble Potentate among the Ægyptians, and his Father but a poore Pilgrime: yet hee comes to his sicke Father before his death, and brings his two sonnes with him, to have his father to blesse them before he died; and therfore the holy Ghost here nameth Ioseph, to shew unto us what respect hee had of his Fathers blessing: hee made more account thereof, and did more esteeme it, that so hee might have his sonnes within the covenant, than of all the Kingdomes in the world: and therefore hee brings them both to his Father to be blessed, a little before his death.

Now looke what minde and affection Ioseph beares, the same should bee in every one of us. Whatsoever our estate be, whether honourable, or base and meane; wee must with Ioseph esteeme more of Gods covenant, and to bee members of Gods Church, than of all the honour in the world besides; and we must esteeme our place and preferments that we have, or our children may have, to bee nothing in comparison of the blessing of God, and his favour. Yea, wee must chuse with Ioseph rather to leave our honours and dignities for a time, or (if it were) for ever, than to lose the blessing of Gods A grace: and blessed shall those Fathers be with Ioseph, who had rather have their children blessed of God, than advanced in the world. The second action of Iacobs faith is in these words, And worshipped on the end of his staffe: and it is a notable worke for the commendation of his faith. But before we come unto it, there are certaine questions which may profitably be considered: as first, for the translation; how the words should be read. The papists read theth thus; and adored the top of his rod: that is, (say they) the top of Iosephs Scepter who came to visit him. From whence they would gather and ground their abominable Idolatry, in the Adoration of creatures, and namely, of holy things, as Crucifix, Reliques, Images, as also of God at B and before such holy things. But we must know that their translation is false and erroneous, and cannot be justified, howsoever they may bring some mens witnesse and testimony for the same. For in reading it thus, and adored the top of his Rod; they leave out a substantiall word of the Text, to wit, this word upon; whereby they corrupt the Text, and deprave the meaning of the holy Ghost.

Againe, their observation and collection hence is most abhominable: for to worship an Image or other holy thing, or God himselfe in or at the same, is flatly forbidden in the second Commandement, Thou shalt not make thy selfe any graven Image, &c. Thou shalt not bow downe to them.

C But our translation in this place is true and right, according to the words of the Text, and the meaning of the holy Ghost, that he worshipped upon the end of his staffe.

Yet further there may be a question moved about the words: for if wee reade the History in Genesis, it is there said, that Iacob worshipped towards the end or top of his bed, Genes. 47. 31.

Now, there is a great difference betweene these two, To worship on the top of his staffe: and on the top of his bed.

How therefore can they stand together? Ans. They may stand well together, and bee both true: for when Iacob was about to give up the Ghost, and was ready to dye, hee raised up D himselfe upon the pillow towards the beds head, and thereon rested his body. Now because his body was weake and feeble, he staied himselfe also upon his staffe: and thus comparing the places together, wee see there is no repugnancy in them. Againe, this we must know, that the same sentence of Scripture may bee diversly read in divers places of Scripture, without any impeachment to the truth, certainty, or perfection of Scripture: for when the holy Ghost speaketh the same thing often, yet in different termes (as in this place) the diversity of words doth inlarge or open the sense and meaning, but no way corrupt or deprave the same. And thus much for the words.

Now to come to the fact it selfe: in Iacobs worship, three circumstances are to bee considered: 1. The occasion: 2. The time: 3. The manner of it.

The occasion of Iacobs worship here spoken of (as we may reade, Gen. 47.) was this: when the time drew neere that Iacob must die, he called for his sonne Ioseph, and charged him deeply, That he should not bury him in Ægypt when he was dead, but that he should carry him thence, and bury him in the buriall of his fathers; Ioseph consents unto his fathers request; and yet Iacob for certainty makes him to sweare that he shall doe so, and Ioseph sware unto him. Now upon this issue that Iacob had with Ioseph, the Text saith, that Israel worshipped towards the beds head: that is, he praised God, and gave thankes unto him for this benefit that he should be buried with his Fathers, Abraham and Isaac. And yet this benefit did not so much concerne himselfe as his children: for the carying of his bones thither, was to be a token and pledge, and a certaine assurance unto them, That the land of Canaan should bee theirs, and that God would bring them thither againe.

In this circumstance, observe a notable duty belonging unto fathers and Masters of families: they must in their life time have care of their posterity, and use all meanes to helpe them, and benefit them in their faith; not only while they are alive, but also after they are dead, after the example of this holy Patriarch: and when they have obtained this benefit for them, they must be glad in their hearts and rejoice, and thereupon take occasion to praise the Lord, as Iacob did in this place.

2. Circumstance. The manner how hee worshipped: Which is set downe in these words, on the end of his staffe. This circumstance is worth the marking: for good Iacob, by reason of the weakenesse of his body and old age, was not able to come forth of his bed, and kneele down or prostrate himselfe; but raiseth himselfe up upon his pillow towards his beds head: and by reason of feebleneesse, being not yet able to sit upright, he doth leane and beare himselfe upon his staffe.

Here wee learne, that wee must not onely worship God with our soules and hearts, but with our bodies also: for God hath created both, and therfore will be worshipped in both, 1 Cor. 6. 20. Old Iacob might have excused himselfe, that by reason of the weakneesse of his body, hee was not able to adore God with any bodily reverence: but yet wee see he leanes upon his staffe; and so, making supply to his bodily weakneesse, adoreth God with his body.

Quest. In what kinde of gesture then must we worship God with our bodies?

Answer. The word of God doth not prescribe any, by way of limitation. For sometimes our Saviour Christ prayed kneeling, Luk. 21. 41. sometimes groveling, Matth. 26. 59. sometimes standing, John 11. 41. as also did the Apostles.

A And the Scripture approveth the Publican, who stood afarre off and prayed, Luke 18. 13. Elias also, 1 King. 18. 42. is said to pray with his head betweene his legs; so that we have no certaine forme prescribed us: onely this, we must use that gesture which may best set forth and declare our humble heart, and holy affection unto God.

Here then is confuted an opinion of those, which thinke that a man may worship God with his heart, and yet worship images with his body; that hee may bee present at Idolatrous worship, yet keepe his heart unto God. But Iacobs behaviour, in this place, doth both confute and condemne them: for hee thought his body as due to God, as his soule; and therefore B worshipped God with both.

3. Circumstance: The time when hee worshipped God thus; namely, when hee was dying, even then he worshipped God. In this circumstance we may note divers things:

First, here behold the bad practice of the world; for many men when they are dying, now-adayes, are so farre from following Iacobs example in worshipping and praising God; that then they are faine to cal for men to teach them how they should worship God: having spent the former part of their life carelesly, in regard of their soules; following worldly profits and pleasures, never thinking of their duty to God till they die. But what a fearefull course is this, that men should thus brutishly goe on from day to day, not knowing how to worship God; C Well, all such as love their owne soules, and would be like to godly Iacob; or (as our Saviour Christ said to Nathaniel) would be true Israelites, John 1. 47. the naturall sonnes of old Israel indeed: they must have care so to live in this world, that they may worship God when they die: and therefore they must not deferre, but learne betime the knowledge and feare of God; that when death comes, they may be able to shew forth, and practise the same. It is a lamentable thing, to consider how the devill bewitcheth mens hearts, so as they live in the world, as though they should never goe out of it; never caring for religion till the day of death come upon them, and then it is too late to learne. But this is to follow Esau and not Iacob; D who is therefore condemned by the holy Ghost.

2. Againe, in this that Iacob worshipped God at his death, wee learne this; that as men live, so they die, for the most part: Iacob was brought up in Gods worship, and therein lived all his life long; and looke as he lived, so he died: for when hee died, hee worshipped God, resting his body on the end of his staffe. This same truth is verified now, and shall bee for ever; let a man worship God through the course of his life, and when hee dieth he shall be able to worship and praise God. On the other side (take notice of it) he that lives in covetousnesse, in prophanenesse, in fornication, and wantonnesse, neſſe, for the moſt part ſo dies: Come to a coverous man at his death, and talke with him, and you ſhall finde nothing in him ordinarily, but raving, and talking about his bargaines, his bils, and indentures, and other worldly things. And ſo we may ſay of other lewd livers: looke what minde they had while they were living, and that ſhall you finde moſt in their mouthes while they are dying: which ſhewes plainely, that as men live, ſo they die.

But ſome will ſay, that oftentimes the godly man raves and ſpeakes lewdly, and (it may be) profanely before his death. Anſw. It is true indeed: the beſt man is not freed from any kinde of bodily ſickneſſe, but is ſubject to them, as well as the wicked; as to burning fevers, and ſuch like: by the violence and rage of which diſeaſes, they are often driven to rave, to ſpeake fondly, and ſometimes lewdly; yea (it may be) profanely. But what is that to the purpoſe? for though a godly man (for the time of his fit) cannot expreſſe the grace of his heart, but rather corruption of his nature; yet when hee hath recovered himſelfe, hee is ſorrie for the ſame, and is then readie and willing to praiſe God with all his heart. So that if we would die well, as Iacob did, praiſing God, then let us lead our lives as he did, namely by faith, and the direction of his word and promiſes. Then come death when it will, and how it will: we may indeed bee ſore aſſaulted by ſickneſſe and temptation, but yet wee ſhall never be overcome: for God is faithfull that hath promiſed an iſſue to his children in temptation, 1 Cor. 10. ver. 13.

Laſtly, whereas Iacob worſhipped God at his death; Here we learne, that ſound zeale will never decay. Many men have zeale indeed, but it comes only from the ſtrength and ſoundneſſe of their bodily conſtitution: and looke, as ſtrength decayes, ſo doth that kinde of zeale. But ſound zeale will not decay and weaken with the body: but (as David ſaith of the righteous, Pſal. 92. 13, 15.) will flouriſh like a palme tree, and grow like a Cedar in Libanon, it ſhall ſtill bring forth fruit in a mans age, and flouriſh. This wee ſee was true in Iacob; for though hee were old and feeble with ſickneſſe, yet hee ſhewed forth ſound zeale in his heart, at the houre of his death. Even ſo will it be with us that profeſſe religion: if zeale be ſound in our hearts, it will ſhew it ſelfe: and the older wee are, the more fruits of grace wee ſhall bring forth: and then ſhew forth more true zeale, than in younger yeares. For though bodily ſtrength decay, yet ſound zeale will never decay: but when ſtrength faileth, then will zeale flouriſh (if it be ſound) like to the palme tree, which will bud and ſprout, though the roots of it be cut off. Wherefore, if we would ſhew forth zeale in our age, we muſt get ſoundneſſe of it in our youth: for that will put forth it ſelfe in the time of death. And thus much of Iacobs example.

Ioſephs Faith.

By faith Joſeph when hee died made mention of the departing of the children of Iſrael, and gave commandement of his bones.

WE have heard in the former verſes the ſeverall examples of the faith of the three Patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob. Now in this verſe the holy Ghoſt ſetteth downe the example of Ioſephs faith. The words in this verſe are plaine and eaſie, and need no expoſition: They are a plaine and briefe ſumme of the end of the 50. Chapter of Geneſis. Let us therefore come to the points of doctrine, and inſtructions which are to be learned and gathered forth of the words.

First, note in generall, the great reſemblance of this example with the former: of Ioſeph a godly ſonne, with Iacob a godly father: for both of them ſhew forth their faith when they die. For it is ſaid of both, By faith when he died: So that in ground and circumſtance of time, they both agree.

Herein we may obſerve: first, that the good examples of Superiors (whether they be civil or Eccleſiaſticall) are of great force to bring other men on, and to make them forward in the duties of religion: their zeale (as Paul ſaith to the Corinthians in this caſe of Almes) provoketh many. Iacob the father, a worthy Prophet and Patriarch, and giving an holy and bleſſed example unto Ioſeph and his children, doth ſhew forth at his death moſt notable behaviour: wherein he worthily expreſſeth the truth of his faith. Now his example works with Ioſeph, and hee in his death behaves himſelfe in the ſame manner that his godly father did before him: and therefore Superiours muſt looke to all their ſayings and doings carefully, that they may be worthy examples to their Inferiours, to draw them on in religion, and in the feare of God.

Secondly, hence inferiours alſo muſt learne to follow the godly, holy, & religious examples of their governours and ſuperiours (whether they be civil or Eccleſiaſticall:) as we may ſee in this place, Ioſeph doth imitate the godly example of his father Iacob. Hereof Saint Paul giveth ſtrait charge unto the Philippians, ſaying, Brethren, bee followers of mee, and looke on them them which walke so, as yee have us for an example, Phil. 3. 17. And in the next Chapter, exhorting them to honest conversation, hee bids them doe those things which they had heard, received, and seene in him. But are these duties practised among us? bee the elder sort teachers of good things to the younger? and do the younger follow their elders in well-doing? nay verily: but such are our times, too many among us, both those who give, and those which follow good examples, are as signes and wonders, as the Prophet speaketh; they are made a reproach, and a by-word among men, and are foully disgraced by odious termes, Esay 8. 18. But this indeed is a practice of Ismael, that mocked Isaac, Gen. 21. ver. 9. And we againe, must undoubtedly know, that unlesse it be reformed, that hand of God which hath beene stretched out against us in many fearefull judgments will not be pulled backe, but stretched out still, till it bring unto destruction: for God will not suffer his ordinance to be contemned, and his holy ones to be abused; he looketh for better fruits at our hands, and therefore wee must learne of these godly Patriarchs, both to give and to follow good examples.

In the example of Ioseph more particularly we are to observe two points: 1. Ioseph's faith: 2. The actions of his faith whereby it is commended.

For the first: it is sayd, that by faith Ioseph when hee died, &c. Ioseph for ought wee finde in Scripture, had not such meanes to come by faith, as his Ancestors had before him. For the three Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, had otherwhiles the appearance of God unto them, otherwhiles his holy Angels brought them messages from God, and sometime they had his will revealed unto them by dreams and visions; all which were notable helps and meanes both to beginne and to increase faith in them: but Ioseph wanted all these meanes, or at least many of them. For reade his whole Historie, and you shall not finde, that either Angel appeared unto him, or else that God by dreames and visions spake unto him: and no marvell; for he lived out of the visible Church where Gods presence was, in superstitious and Idolatrous Ægypt: and yet for all this, hee is here matched in the matter of faith, with the three worthy Patriarchs.

It is then a good question, how Ioseph should come by this faith?

Answ. We must know this, that though hee had not the like extraordinary meanes with the Patriarchs; yet he wanted not all meanes: for in his younger dayes, hee was trained up in his Father Iacobs family, & by him was instructed in the wayes of God, and in the practice of religion; and in his latter dayes also, he had the benefit of his Fathers company and instructions in Ægypt. Now Iacob was not an ordinary Father, but a notable Patriarch and an holy Prophet; in whose family God had placed his

A visible Church in those dayes, wherein Iacob was the Lords Prophet and Minister. Now Ioseph, both in his younger age, and also after his Father came to Ægypt, did heare and learne of him the wayes of God: and by that meanes came to that excellent faith, for which he is so commended here and matched with his Fathers the holy Patriarchs.

Here we learne, that the preaching of Gods Word by his Ministers (though extraordinarie meanes, as revelations and visions, be wanting) is sufficient to bring a man to faith; yea, to such a faith as the three Patriarchs had. Indeed in the Ministerie of the Word, he which speaketh unto us, is but a man as others are; but yet the Word which he delivereth is not his owne, but the mightie Word of God: and looke what is truly pronounced by him unto us out of Gods word, the same is as certainly sealed unto us by his Spirit, as if God himselfe from heaven should extraordinarily reveale the same. And howsoever in former times men had visions and dreames, and Angels from God himselfe to reveale his will unto them: yet this Ministerie of Gods Word in the new Testament, is as sufficient a meanes of the beginning and increasing of true faith, as that was then.

This plainly confuteth all those that neglect or contemne the Ministerie and preaching of the Word, and looke for extraordinarie revelations, and for visions and dreames, for the begetting and increase of faith and grace in their hearts. But our Saviour Christ doth notably checke all such in the Parable of the rich man, by the words of Abraham to Dives; saying of Dives brethren, that they had Moses and the Prophets; if they will not heare them, neither will they beleeve though one should come from the dead againe; (verse. 31.) insinuating, that if a man will not beleeve by the preaching of the Word, there is nothing in the world will make him to beleeve; neither revelations, nor visions, no not the words of them that rise againe from the dead.

Secondly, the consideration of the sufficiencie of Gods ordinance in the holy Ministery, to beget and to increase true faith, must stirre us up to all care and diligence, not onely to heare the Word of God preached unto us, but to profit by it both in knowledge and obedience: and thus much for the first point.

The second point to be handled, is the commendation of Iosephs faith by two actions thereof: to wit, 1. His mention of the departure of the children of Israel out of Ægypt: 2. His commandement concerning his bones. Of both which we will speake briefely, because the speciall points herein were handled in the former verse.

For the first, Ioseph when he died made mention of the departing of the children of Israel, that is, out of Ægypt into Canaan.

Here we may observe a most notable worke of faith: it makes a man to keepe in memorie the the mercifull promises which God hath made unto him. This is it which commends Iosephs faith for a lively faith, That being about to die, he remembreth this mercifull promise of God, made to his fore-fathers touching their posterity; to wit, that after they had continued as strangers in a strange Land 400 yeares, they should then have a good issue and a happy deliverance, and be brought into the Land of Canaan, Genes. 15.13. This is a notable worke of faith, as may appeare by two notable effects hereof in the life of a Christian. For first, by this remembrance of Gods mercifull promises, the servant of God in all times, and in all difficulties and extremities doth find comfort unto his soule. This brings to his minde the wonderfull goodnesse and mercie of God, by which he is comforted. When David was in a most desperate case, so as he cried out by reason of affliction and temptation, Will the Lord absent himselfe for ever, and will hee shew no more favour? Is his mercie cleane gone? doth his mercie fayle for evermore? Psalm. 77. with such like most fearefull speeches. How then did hee comfort himselfe in this distresse? Answ. Surely, by remembring the workes of the Lord, and his wonders of old, and by meditating on all his workes, and gracious acts which he had done for him. So likewise in another place, in great anguish of spirit, he saith to his soule, Why art thou cast downe my soule, and why art thou disquieted within me? Psalm. 43.5. Yet in the next words hee thus stayes himselfe; Waite on God, for I will yet give thankes unto him who is my present helpe, and my God. How came David to lay so in this distresse? Answ. By meanes of faith, which doth revive and refresh the death of man, by bringing to his remembrance the mercifull promises of God.

Saint Paul pressed with corruption, cryed out: O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the bodie of this death? Rom. 7.24. Yet in the next words he saith, I thanke my God through Iesus Christ our Lord: then I my selfe with my minde serve the Law of God, &c. How come the latter words to follow on the former? Ans. In the first words indeed, hee is cast downe with the view and sight of his naturall corruption, which drew him headlong into sinne: but yet the latter words are a remembrance of the mercifull deliverance from sinne, which God had wrought in him by Christ: and therefore hee breaketh out to this saying, I thanke my God therein Iesus Christ, &c.

Secondly, the remembrance of Gods promises serveth to bee a meanes to keepe a man from sinne: for mans nature is as readie and prone to sinne, as fire is to burne when fewell is put to it. But when by faith he cals to minde Gods mercifull promises, especially those which are made unto him in Christ; then hee reasoneth and striveth against temptation, and layes the Word as a shield unto his soule, to keepe out the firie darts of Sathan: yea, hee applyes the same word to his owne soule, as a corrasive unto corruption: whereupon it is said, that faith purifieth the heart, Act. 15.9. How? namely, beside the applying of Christs bloud, it brings to memorie Gods mercifull promises in Christ; which stayes a man from committing such things, as would pollute and defile the heart. And therefore is faith said to be our victorie over the world, 1 Joh. 5.4. because by applying to our soules Gods promises in Christ, we doe not only contemne the world, in regard of Christ; but also stand against the assaults thereof: so that it is a most notable and excellent worke of faith.

Lastly, observe the circumstance of time, when Ioseph made remembrance of their departing. The text saith, When hee was dying. Hereof we have spoken in the former verse; yet this one thing may here againe be well remembred: Ioseph cals to minde the promises of God at his death, which concerne the temporall deliverance of his people: and we by his example, when wee are dying, must learne to call to remembrance the gracious promises which God hath made unto us in Christ, touching our eternall deliverance from the spirituall bondage of the Devill. Oh! great will be the fruit hereof; not onely for inward comfort to our owne soules, and joy to such as love us: but also wee shall hereby give a worthy evidence to the world, that we have beene sound in the faith: wherein wee shall leave a good president to those that follow us.

The second fact of Iosephs faith is this: He gave commandement concerning his bones. The meaning thereof is this: that Ioseph lying on his death-bed, gave a solemne charge to his brethren, to have special care how and where they buried him: that his bones might not be lost, but so preserved while they stayed in Ægypt, that at their departure they might bee carried into the Land of Canaan, and there buried in the sepulchre of his Fathers. The causes why Ioseph gave this commandement were these: 1. Hereby to testifie unto his brethren and posterity, that how soever he lived a long time in the pompe and glorie of Ægypt, yet his heart was never set thereon: but hee had greater delight, and more esteemed to be counted a true member of the Church of God, than to be a noble Prince in the land of Ægypt. For if he had loved and liked the pompe of Ægypt, he would have had his sepulchre among them; but giving commandement to the contrarie, it sheweth plainly, that his heart was never set on that glorie and pompe in which he lived.

By whose example we are taught, that in using the world, and the things thereof, we must not set our hearts on them; but as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 7.31. Use them as though wee used them not: still have our affections set on heaven, which is our spirituall Canaan.

2. Hereby Ioseph would testifie unto his brethren, what he esteemed his chiefe happinesse: namely, namely, that in faith and hope hee was joyned unto his fathers, and ancestors, that beleeved in God, and that he was of their religion, and looked for a resurrection & another life as they did. And this he would have knowne, not only to his brethren and posteritie, but to the Ægyptians also, among whom he lived.

3. Ioseph hereby intended principally, to confirme the faith of his brethren and posterity in Gods promise, for enjoying and possessing the Land of Canaan after his death: and this was a notable way to strengthen their faith. For when they should see or remember his corps, it was unto them as a lively sermon, to shew them plainely, that howsoever they lived for a while in bondage in Ægypt: yet the day should shortly come, wherein they should bee set at libertie, and brought (as free-men) into the Land of Canaan. And undoubtedly, Ioseph would therfore have his bones kept among them, that they might be a pledge unto them of their deliverance.

Yea more further, the storie saith, (Gen. 50. 25.) that Ioseph did not onely charge his brethren generally; but binds them by an oath to carry his bones: hereby shewing, that it was a matter of great weight which he did injoyne them; even a signe and pledge of the truth of Gods promise in their deliverance. Whence we learne, that it is a matter of great moment, for every Christian, both carefully and reverently to use the Sacraments, which God hath given as pledges of his covenant of grace, made with us in Christ. For shall Ioseph cause his brethren and posteritie to sweare concerning his bones, that so they might more reverently regard that pledge and signe of their outward deliverance? And shall not we with reverence and good conscience, both esteeme and use those holy pledges of our eternall deliverance by Christ Jesus?

The Papists from this place would justifie their practice, in reserving and honouring the Reliques of Saints. Now by Reliques, they meane the parts of the bodies of Saints departed; as the head of John Baptist, the armes or bones of this or that Saint, the milke of the virgin Mary, and also the parts of the crosse whereon Christ suffered, with such like. Answ. First, let us know, that their Reliques are nothing else but forged devices of their owne, and no true Reliques of Saints; as by one instance may appeare. For the parts and parcels of wood, kept in Europe, which they say are parts of the crosse whereon Christ died, are so many, that if they were all gathered together, they would load a ship: which shewes plainely, that herein they use notorious forgerie, for it was no greater than a man may beare. And the like is their behaviour in the rest. Secondly, the keeping of Iosephs bones, was for a good end and purpose; namely, to testifie his owne faith, and to confirme theirs, in beleeving Gods promise for their deliverance out of the bondage of Ægypt: but their Reliques serve rather to extinguish faith in Christ, than to confirme it: for they nourish men in fond devices, and foule superstitions, and not in the truth of Gods promises. Thirdly, we doe not reade in all the Bible, that Iosephs bones were ever worshipped; and therefore from this place they have no ground whereon to build their superstitious worshipping of Reliques. And thus much of the example of Iosephs faith.

MOSES Parents Faith.

By faith, Moses when he was borne, was hid three moneths of his Parents, because they saw he was a proper child: neither feared they the Kings commandement.

In this verse the holy Ghost proceeds further, and setteth downe unto us a notable and worthy example of the faith of Moses Parents. If we would see the historie at large, we must reade the 2. Chapter of Exodus: of which these words are an abridgement, or briefe Epitome. Now, here the faith of Moses Parents is commended unto us by two notable actions: 1. The hiding of Moses their childe when he was borne. 2. Their courage and boldnesse in that action; in not fearing the Kings commandement. Of their hiding of him, we will first intreat generally, and then come to the circumstance thereof. In generall. Their hiding of the childe was this: They kept him close, and unknowne to the Ægyptians for three moneths space; because the King had given commandement and charge to all his people, that they should drowne every man-child borne among the Hebrewes, Exod. 1. 22. In this action of their faith, we may observe some speciall points:

First, Moses was to be a worthy Prophet, and Captaine or guide unto the people of Israel: and therefore, howsoever other men-children were drowned upon the cruell command of Pharaoh, yet the Lord provides for him so soone as he is borne, that he shall be hid, and so preserved from the tyranny & rage of Pharaoh.

Whence we learne, that God in the middest of all persecution, doth evermore preserve the seed of his Church. There bee two estates of Gods Church in the world: the first is quiet and peaceable, when the Gospell is publikely likely professed, taught, and received without hostile opposition, as by Gods great mercie it is in our Church at this day. The second is an hidden estate, when as it cannot shew it selfe visible, but the open profession of the Gospell is suppressed by the rage of the enemie the Devill, and by wicked and cruell men that be his instruments. Thus God suffered his Church sometimes to be shadowed, and in these times many of his deare children to be slaine and put to death for the sinnes of his Church, yet so, as that alwayes he preserves the seed of his Church. When Esay had shewed the Jewes the fearefull desolation of their Land; that the Cities should be wasted without inhabitant, and their houses without man; yet then hee saith, There shall bee a tenth in it, and the holy seed shall bee the substance or underprappe thereof, vers. 12. God doth not deale with his Church, as he doth with the enemies thereof: hee but loppes of the branches in his Church, when as hee stockes up the root of his enemies, Isay chapter 27. verses 7, 8. When hee visited Sodome and Gomorrha, hee destroyed them utterly out of the earth; but the Lord doth ever keepe fast the seed of his Church, that when the storme of persecution is blowne over, his Church may spring and flourish afterward.

Here some may say, Seeing God purposed to make Moses such a worthy mā over his people, why did he not by some wonderfull, powerfull, and mighty manner, preserve him against the rage of Pharaoh? Answ. God indeed was able to have sent a legion of Angels for his preservation, or to have done it after some strange visible manner; but yet he would not: for we must know and remember, that it is Gods pleasure to shew his power in weake meanes. Hee can preserve every servant of his from all kinde of injury: but hee will not alwaies doe so. When Christ himselfe our Saviour, was in his infancie persecuted by Herod, God his Father was then able to have preserved him in Judea, and to have overthrowne his persecutor by many legions of Angels; yet he would not, but only useth the poore helpe of Ioseph and Mary, with the ordinarie weake meanes of flight; and all this he did, that he might be glorified in the weaknesse of his servants; for when all meanes faile, then doth hee magnifie his power and providence in preserving those that trust in him. And thus much of this Action in generall.

The circumstances to be considered in the hiding of Moses, are foure: 1. The time when he was hid: the Text saith, When hee was borne. Moses (as we said) must be afterward a notable servant, and a worthy instrumente of God, whereby hee would worke the deliverance of his people, out of the bondage of Ægypt: and yet we see, he is faine to be hid so soone as hee is borne.

Hence we learne, that those that be the servants of God, & are in special favour with him, must looke for trouble and affliction in this life, from the cradle to the grave, from the day of their birth, to the houre of their death; Moses is in danger of his life by Pharaoh, so soone as hee is borne. And so was our Saviour Christ by Herod, when he was but a babe; whereupon his Parents fled with him into Ægypt for his safetie. And answerable to their infancie was the rest of their life; full of danger, full of trouble: And as it was with them, so is it with others; 2 Tim. 3. 12. He that will live godly must suffer persecution; and he that will be Christs disciple, must take up his crosse every day, and follow him. Luk. 9. 23.

This is a point which all of us must marke; we must not look to have ease and joy on earth; It is enough for us to enjoy that after this life. If Christ himselfe carrie his crosse out of the gate, we then with his disciples must take up our crosse and follow him every day.

The 2. circumstance to be considered is this, How long was Moses hid? namely, three moneths. Quest. Why was he hid no longer? Ans. Because they could not; for it is likely, there was search for him, and therefore they made a basket of reed, and dawbed it with slime and pitch, and laid the childe therein, and put it among the bulrushes by the rivers brinke. Exod. 2. 3.

Thus did the Parents adventure the childes life, for the saving of their owne: wherein we may see a great want & weakenes in their faith; for they kept their childe a while by faith; but afterward committed him to the dangers of the waters, of wilde beasts, and fowles of the aire. So that it is plaine their faith was weake, and mingled with feare, and with some doubting. For in keeping the childe three moneths, they shew forth lively faith: but when as they expose him to danger for their owne safetie, herein they bewray some want of love, and weakenesse of faith: and yet wee see they are here commended for their faith. Which sheweth plainely, that if a man have true and sound faith, though it be but weake, yet God in mercy will take knowledge of it, and commend it, passing by the weakenesse of it; yea, and more that faith will give the promises of life everlasting made in Christ.

The third circumstance to bee considered is this; Who it was that kept Moses three moneths. In Exodus it is said, that his Mother kept him: but here it is said, his Parents kept him; where the holy Ghost includes his Father also. How can both things be true? Answ. We must know, that the Mother was the chiefe doer in this worke; and the Father, though he was not a doer, yet he gave his consent. Now we must remember, that consent is a kinde of doing, whether it bee in good things or in evill: for when Saul did but keepe the persecutors cloathes that stoned Stephen, (Act. 7. 58.) whereby hee signified his consent; thereupon hee confesseth himselfe to bee guiltie of his death, Act. 22. ver. 20. Exod. 2. 3.

Lastly,

Lastly, observe the Cause, or rather the Occasion that moved the Parents to save their childe. It was a notable comelinesse and beauty, which did appeare in the bodie of the childe, when he was borne. This moved them to reason thus with themselves: Surely God hath given such beauty and comelinesse unto this child, that it is very likely he will use him hereafter, to bee some notable instrument of some great worke: we therefore will keepe him alive. This point must be marked of us: for beside their naturall affection, this also was a motive to make the Parents save the childe.

Hence we may learne, that those whom God will imploy above others in some speciall service for his owne glory, are usually endowed with some speciall gift above others; yea, many times with outward grace and comelinesse in the body. For this beautie in Moses bodie, moved his Parents to seeke to save his life; they perswade themselves that God had not imprinted that in him for nought. Saul (we know) was made King over Israel: and it is noted, that the Lord had given him a goodly stature; for he was higher than any of the people from the shoulders upward. And so David had a good countenance, and a comely visage: for the Lord purposed to make him King over Israel. Now as hee did excell his brethren in beautie and comelinesse, so he was to bee farre above them in this speciall service of God in governing his people.

1 Sam. 10. 23.

1 Sam. 16. 12.

Hence we learne, first, that comelinesse and beautie is a gift of God: Secondly, that those which excell others in these gifts of nature, must looke also that answerably they excell them in holinesse, and zeale in the service of God, and doing good unto men, as Moses and David did. But alas, wretched is the practice of these times: for commonly those which have comelinesse and beautie above others, doe use it as a bait and occasion unto all sinne and naughtinesse; as to whoredome and lasciviousnes, that therby they may more fully satisfie their owne wretched and Satanicall lusts: but this must carefully be looked unto, of all such as have the gifts of nature in more excellent manner than others. For if they use them, or rather abuse them to be meanes of sinne, and to set forth the pride and vanitie of their hearts they have much to answer for unto God, at the dreadfull day of judgement. Hath God given thee beautie and comelinesse: and doest thou use it as a bait to insnare others for the satisfying of thy lust? then looke unto it thou evill servant, for thou doest not hide but consume thy Masters talent, imploying it to his dishonour; therefore it shall be taken from thee: and in stead thereof, thou shalt have uglinesse and deformity, and so in soule and body be tumbled into hell with uncleane spirits. And thus much of the first action of their faith, with the circumstances thereof.

The second action, whereby the faith of

Moses Parents faith.

A Moses Parents is commended unto us, is this; They did not feare the Kings commandement. These words must not bee understood absolutely and simply, but with limitation. For many places of Scripture are spoken simply, which must bee understood with respect; as when it is said, Matth. 11. 18. Iohn came neither eating nor drinking, that is not, eating nothing at all, but eating little: and Christ saith, Matth. 10. 34. He came not to bring peace, but the sword: that is, (as Luke expounds it, Luk. 12. 51.) rather debate than peace. And so in this place, Moses Parents feared not the Kings commandement; that is, they did not feare it overmuch, or wholly, or onely, or so much as others did in this like case.

B Here then first wee may learne, how farre forth we must obey superiors and migistrates: wee must obey them not simply, but in the Lord, Ephes. 6. 1. that is, in all their lawfull commands; but when they command things evill & unlawfull, then we must stay our selves, lest obeying them we rebell against God. For this we have sufficient warrant in this place, as also in the Apostles; who being commanded (Act. 4. 18, 19.) that in no wise they should speake or teach in the name of Iesus: answered, Whether it be right in the sight of God, to obey you rather than God, judge ye. And the midwives of Ægypt are commended by the holy Ghost, Exod. 1. 17. for saving the young children alive against the Kings commandement. And

C the three men of the Jewes, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, are renowned with all posteritie, for disobeying the commandement of Nebuchadnezzar, (Dan. 3. 16, 17.) of worshipping the golden Image. By which examples, wee may see plainely, that our obedience to men, must be in the Lord only. Neither is our refusing to doe their unlawfull commands, any disobedience indeed: because the fifth commandement in this case ceaseth to binde, and gives place to the commandements of the first table, which are greater, as we shewed before, ver. 17.

Secondly, see here this godly boldnesse, in not overmuch fearing the Kings commandement, is made a worke of faith: whence wee

D learne, that true faith in the promises of God, doth serve to moderate a mans affections. There is no man, but if he be left to himselfe, hee will goe too farre in the sway of his affections: experience sheweth that many through anger and joy, have lost their lives; some for feare have forsaken religion, and sorrow hath cost many a man his life: yea, any affection, if it be not moderated and stayed, will bereave a man of his senses, and make him a beast, and no man.

But behold the use and power of true faith: It serveth to mitigate a mans affections: so as if a man be angry, it shall be with moderation: and so we may say of feare, joy, hatred, or any other affection: faith will asswage and stay the rage thereof. For undoubtedly, Moses Parents rents might have been overwhelmed with feare of Pharaohs tyranny and cruelty, but that God gave them faith, which did moderate this feare. There is none of us, but if wee looke well into our selves, wee shall see that wee are excessive in many affections, sometime in feare, sometime in anger, sometime in sorrow, and such like. Now would we know how to bridle these strong passions? Then get true faith: it is the meanes whereby a man may moderate and stay the rage of his affection, so as they shall not breake out in extremity. Is a man angry? Why, if hee have faith, he will bridle his anger. Is he sorrowfull? yet it is in measure: and so for the rest, faith will rule them all, and yet extinguisheth none. Which should greatly provoke us to labour for true faith, seeing it is of such use and power in the stay of our affections.

Vers. 24. By faith, Moses when hee was come to age, refused to bee called the Sonne of Pharaohs daughter.

25. And chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sinne for a season.

26. Esteeming the rebuke of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: For he had respect unto the recompence of reward.

HEre the holy Ghost comes to the commendation of Moses faith, and in these three verses propounds a most notable example hereof.

By Moses faith, in this place, wee must understand saving faith; which is nothing else, but a gift of God, whereby Moses received the promise of God touching salvation by the Messias, and of the promised land, made to Abraham and to his seed after him, and applyed the same unto himselfe particularly.

Now in the first entrance of this example, the holy Ghost setteth downe a wonderfull thing of Moses; namely, that Moses had faith; and by it did this great worke. This (I say) is strange, because hee was brought up by Pharaohs daughter in the Court of Pharaoh, where was no knowledge of the true God, and indeed nothing but idolatry, wantonnesse, and prophannesse. And yet here he is testified of him by the spirit of God which cannot lie, that he had faith; which is a wonderfull thing. And the like is recorded of others in the word of God: As in Ahabs Court, (who was a King that made sold himself to worke wickednesse) yet the Spirit of God testifieth, that even there was good Obadiah a man that feared GOD greatly. And Herod was a most deadly enemy to Christ: and yet Joanna the wife of Chuza Herods friend, ministred of her goods unto Christ. And Paul saith, The Saints which are of Cæsars household salute you: Where by Cæsars house, is meant the Court of Nero, who was a most bloudy man, and a wicked persecuter: and yet in his house were the professors of Christs Gospell. By these examples we learne, that Christ hath his children and servants in the middle among his enemies: for these three Courts, of Pharaoh, Herod, and Nero, may bee called a kinde of hell: and yet there were some of Gods servants in them all. Which sheweth us clearely the truth of Gods Word, which saith of Christ, that hee raigneth in the middle among his enemies. How-soever they rage, and seek to blot out his name, and root out his kingdome, yet maugre their throats, he will rule in the middle of their kingdomes, and there have those which truly serve him and feare his name. Revel. 2. 13. God had his Church in Pergamus where Satans throne was.

1 King. 18. 3.

Psal. 110. 2.

Againe, this fact of Moses serves to checke many a man in this age, that is brought up in the Church of God, and under godly Parents and governours, and yet is a hater and mocker of the religion of Christ. Surely Moses in the day of Judgement shall stand up against all such, and condemne them. For he had faith, though he were brought up in a most prophane place: and they are voyd of faith, nay, enemies unto it, though they live in the bosome of the Church.

Act. 18. 9

But let us come to the strange fact which Moses did, for which his faith is so commended. The Text saith of him first of all, That when hee was come to age, hee refused to bee called the sonne of Pharaohs daughter. How Moses became her sonne, we may read at large Exod. 2. where it is said, that she having found Moses in the basket, preserved him alive, and brought him up as her owne childe, purposing to make him her owne sonne and heire. But this honour of hers hee would not accept; this hee refused by faith, and this is that notable and famous act, for which his faith is here commended unto us.

But some will say, This fact of Moses may seeme rather worthy of blame than praise, as being a practice of great rudenesse and ingratitude: for shee preserved his life from death, and brought him up as her owne child, and vouchsafed him this speciall favour, to make him her heire; and therfore Moses should not thus have contemned her favour. Answ. Indeed it had beene Moses part to have shewed himselfe thankefull, in accepting this favour at her hands, and also enjoying the same, if hee might have done it with the feare of God, and keeping a good conscience. But that hee could not doe: for if hee had dwelled still with her, and beene her sonne and heire, hee should have beene undutifull unto God. Now this is a rule to bee remembred and practised alwaies; that in duties of like nature, the Commandements of the second table doe binde us no further than our obedience thereto may stand with obedience unto the Commandements of the first table: and when these two cannot stand together, then wee are freed from obedience unto the second table; as from performing honour and thankfulnesse unto men, when wee cannot therewithall performe obdience and service unto God. And this was Moses case; because hee could not both serve God, and continue his thankfulnesse to Pharaohs daughter, (for in staying with her, hee should have made shipwrack of true religion) therfore he forsaketh her favour and honour; and for this cause is here commended unto us. The like did our Saviour Christ: for when the people would have made him King, he refused it, and fled from among them, Jo. 6. 15. because it would not stand with that calling, for which hee was sanctified and sent into the world: therefore Moses fact was commendable, and doth greatly set forth unto us his holy faith.

In this fact of Moses thus generally considered, observe a notable fruit of true faith: It maketh a man esteeme more of the state of adoption to bee the childe of God, than to bee the childe or heire of an earthly Prince. This is plaine in Moses in this place. And the like wee may see in David: for though he were a King, yet he set all his royalty and majesty at naught, in regard of Gods blessing of Adoption; and therefore he saith, The Lord (not the kingdome of Israel) is my portion. And againe, when hee was kept from the Lords Tabernacle, and the company of Gods Saints, through persecution; he saith, The Sparrowes and the Swallowes were more happy than hee, Psal. 84. because they had nests where they might keepe their young, and sit and sing; but hee could not come neere the Lords altar. And yet more fully to expresse the earnestnesse of his affection this way; he saith, hee had rather bee a man of base office, even a doore-keeper in the house of God, than a man of renowne in the tents of wickednesse. But howsoever, these men were of one minde herein, yet come to our age, and seeke in Towne, Countrey and people, and wee shall see this fruit of faith is rare to bee found: for generally (though I will not say all) the most of those that are borne of good parentage, as the sonnes of Knights or Squires, and especially of Nobles, are so bewitched with the pride of their earthly Parentage, that they have scarce a thought after Adoption in Christ. Gods heavenly graces will take no place in their hearts, but they utterly contemne all other estates of life in regard of their owne. And this is the common sinne of the whole world: for at earthly preferments men will stand amazed; but seldome shall you finde a man that is ravished with joy in this, that hee is the childe of God, as Moses was. But this practice must be a president for us to follow: we must learne to have more joy in being the sonnes of God, than to be heires of any worldly kingdomes; and to take more delight in the grace of Adoption through Jesus Christ, than in the sonne-ship of any earthly Prince.

It is a great prerogative to be heire to a King or Emperour, but yet to bee the childe of God goes farre beyond it, even above comparison. For the sonne of the greatest Potentate may be the childe of wrath: but the childe of God by grace, hath Christ Jesus to bee his eldest brother, with whom he is fellow heire in heaven; hee hath the holy Ghost also for his comforter, and the kingdome of heaven for his everlasting inheritance. And therefore wee must learne of Moses, from the bottome of our hearts, to preferre this one thing, To bee the childe of God, before all earthly things, either pleasures, riches, or any other prerogatives whatsoever.

Now more particularly in this fact of Moses note two circumstances: 1. The manner how: 2. The time when hee refused to be called the sonne of Pharaohs daughter.

For the first; his refusall was not in word, but in deed: for if wee reade the whole History of Moses, wee shall not finde, that either hee spake to Pharaoh or to his daughter, or to any other to this effect, that hee would not be her heire, nor called her sonne: but wee finde that he did it indeed: for when hee came to age, hee left the Court oftentimes, and went to visit his brethren, to comfort them, to defend them, and to take part with them. And hence wee must learne, not so much to give our selves to know, and to talke of matters of religion, as to doe and practise the same both before God and men. This did Moses. It is the common fault of our age, that wee can bee content to heare the doctrine of religion taught unto us; yea, many will learne it, and often speake thereof: but few there bee that make conscience to doe the things they heare and speake of. But let us learne of Moses to put those things in practice which wee learne and professe, and in silente doe them: for the fewer words the better, unlesse our deeds bee answerable. If any of us were to walke upon the top of some high mountaine, wee would leave off talking, and looke unto our steps for feare of falling. Behold, when wee enter the profession of Christianity, ſtianity, wee are ſet upon an high mountaine: for the way of life is on high: and Chriſtianity is the high calling of God. We therefore muſt be wiſe, as Salomon ſaith, Prov. 15.24. and looke well to our converſation, having a ſtrait watch over all our wayes thorow the whole courſe of our lives, even to the end of our daies, and not ſtand ſo much on ſpeaking and talking, as on doing for the doer of his work ſhall be bleſſed in his deed, Jam. 1.25. This is the thing we muſt looke unto, as the onely ornament of our profeſſion, declaring that we have the power of godlineſſe but if deeds be wanting, our religion is vaine, we are like the Figtree which Chriſt curſed, having leaves and no fruit.

The 2. circumſtance to be conſidered, is the time when he refuſed this honour: namely, when hee came to bee a man of yeares and diſcretion. A man in common reaſon would judge thus of Moſes fact: Moſes hath rare fortune offered him, he might have beene ſonne and heire to a Princeſſe: Surely this is a raſh fact of his, and voyd of conſideration, to refuſe it; undoubtedly hee farre over-ſhot himſelfe herein, either through raſhneſſe or ignorance. But to prevent ſuch carnall ſurmiſes, the Spirit of God ſets downe this circumſtance of time; ſaying, that hee did not refuſe it in his youth: but when hee was come to age, that is, to perfect yeares of diſcretion, and by reaſon thereof muſt needs have conſideration and judgement to know what he did; then did he refuſe this honor, to be Pharaohs daughters ſonne and heire. In the ſeventh of the Acts, we ſhal ſee that he was fourty years old when he did this. And therefore this is true which is here ſaid, that when he was come to age and ſtaiedneſſe, then he refuſed this honour: for fourty yeares is a time, not onely of ripeneſſe for ſtrength, but of ſtaiedneſſe in judgement and diſcretion.

Out of this circumſtance wee learne two points: 1. That it is a common fault of young yeares, to be ſubject to inconſideration and raſhneſſe: for Moſes did not refuſe the honour of Pharaohs daughter, when he was young, leſt it ſhould ſeeme to bee a point of raſhneſſe: but when he was come to age, (as the text ſaith:) inſinuating, that if hee had done it when hee was young, it might have beene eſteemed but a raſh part, and done in ſome haſty paſſion of youth. Every age of man hath his faults: and this is the fault of youth, to be heady and raſh in their affaires, for want of conſideration and experience. And therefore all young perſons muſt have care of theſe ſinnes of youth, and watch the more againſt them, becauſe they are ſo incident to their yeares. Now the way to avoid them, is to follow Chriſts example, Luke 2.52. to labour to grow, as in yeares, ſo in wiſdome and grace: and to obey the counſell of Paul to Timothy, 2 Tim. 2.22. to flie the luſts of youth, following after juſtice, faith, charity, and peace, with all that call upon the name of the Lord with a pure heart.

A Secondly, this circumſtance of time, noting Moſes deliberate ſtaiedneſſe in this fact, doth plainely advertiſe us, what is or ſhould be, the vertue of old age, and the ornament of yeares; namely, ſtaiedneſſe and diſcretion: whereby I meane, not onely that naturall temper of affection, which old age bringeth with it; but ſuch religious diſcretion, whereby men of years doe all things in faith, ſo as their workes may be acceptable and pleaſing unto God. For when a man is growne in yeares, and hath had experience and obſervation in the Church of God, he muſt not onely have a generall knowledge and wiſdome, but a particular wiſdome, whereby he may do in faith, whatſoever he takes in hand and therein pleaſe God. But alas, this may bee B ſpoken of old men in theſe dayes, that in regard of this wiſdome they are very babes: a thing greatly diſgracefull to their condition: For Paul bids the Corinthians, 1 Corinth. 14.20. that they ſhould not be children in underſtanding, but of ripe age: yea, and he forbids the Epheſians, Eph. 4.14. to be children ſtill, wavering and carried about with every wind of doctrine. Whereby we may ſee, that aged perſons doe quite degenerate from that they ought to be, when they are babes in knowledge, void of ſpirituall wiſdome. Indeed wee muſt grant that our aged perſons are worldly wiſe; and hee muſt have a cunning head, and (as wee ſay) riſe early, that herein goes beyond them: But bring them to the booke of God, and to give a reaſon of C their actions, that they are done in faith; herein, they are meere babes, and ignorant: neither can they tell what it is to doe a thing in faith, ſo as it may be acceptable to God. Herein, many that are young in yeares, doe quite outſtrip them. What would we thinke or ſay of a child that being ſet to a good ſchoole, ſhould ſtill be in the loweſt forme, though hee had long continued at it? Surely we ſhould judge him either exceeding negligent, or deſtitute of ordinary capacity.

Behold the Church of God is the ſchoole of Chriſt: and if a man have lived long therein, (as twenty, or fourty yeares) and yet be no wiſer in religion, than a young childe; is it not a ſhame unto him? and ſhall wee not condemne him of D great negligence? Wherefore, let all aged perſons here learne their duty; which is, to grow to ripeneſſe in ſpirituall wiſdome, that ſo their age may be to them a crowne of glorie, being found in the way of righteouſneſſe, Prou. 16.31.

VERSE 25.

And choſe rather to ſuffer adverſitie with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſinne for a ſeaſon.

THe meaning of theſe words is this: Moſes caſt with himſelfe, that if he ſhould yeeld to become heire to Pharaohs daughter, he muſt live with her, and pleaſe her in all things, and ſo altogether leave Gods Church, and people, and Gods holy religion; which thing to doe, he abhorred in his heart: and withall, he must leave and lose the eternall blessednesse of Gods children, for the honours and sinfull pleasures of the Court, which were but momentany. These things considered, hee chuseth rather to bee in affliction and misery with the people of God, than upon these conditions, to live in Pharaohs Court, and to become his daughters sonne and heire.

And because this may seeme a strange choice the holy Ghost doth afterward render a reason hereof, which is this; Because Moses liked rather to enjoy the prerogatives of Gods Church (though it were in miserie) than to enjoy any honour in a wicked Court, such as indeed Pharaohs was.

In this verse therefore, wee are to note a second fruit of Moses faith; to wit, that he preferred the fellowship and communion of Gods Saints, before all other societies in the world. The same also was Davids practice, Psal. 16. 3. All my delight (saith he) is in the Saints that dwel on earth.

This fruit of Moses faith, doth discover unto us a grievous fault which raigneth in this age; to wit, the neglect and contempt of the communion and society of Saints. There is a society and fellowship that is loved and magnified among us: but what manner of societie is that? surely of such as give themselves to drinking, jesting, scoffing, riot, mirth, gaming. This is the common and generall good-fellowship: through which, God is greatly dishonoured. Formost men set their delight therein, and are never merry but in such company, wherein indeed they delight themselves in their sensualitie. True it is, men plead that this good fellowship is a vertue. But then was Moses farre overseene: for in Pharaohs court he might have had all kinde of such good fellowship and companie; yet hee likes it not, but rather chuseth affliction and misery with the people of God, than to enjoy such fellowship in Pharaohs Court. And as for the goodnesse of it, it is neither so esteemed, nor called by any, but by them that call good evill, and evill good. Wee see, Moses a man of wisdome and learning, Act. 7. 23. no childe, but a man of xl. yeares old, hates and abhorres this good fellowship, as the worst estate in the world: rather chusing the society of a miserable and persecuted Church, than the best of that fellowship which a Kings Court could yeeld. Let us therefore learne more wisdome out of his practice. Some say, this good fellowship is harmelesse; and such men, who thus merrily passe their times, doe no such hurt as many others doe. But I answer, men are borne to doe good. Againe, to mis-spend time, weaken, and wit, are not these evil and harmefull, both in themselves, and in the example? And which is worst of all, it is no fellowship with God, nor any part of the communion of Saints,

A but rather a fellowship with Satan; therefore, let all that will, like true Christians, have true comfort in that article of their Creed, the communion of Saints, esteeme the fellowship of good and holy men above all other. For by this communion with Gods Saints, a man reaps great profit, when as the other brings to a man the ruine both of his body and soule. By the society of the godly, we are first made partaker of their gifts and holy graces; and secondly, of their prayers, and the blessings of God upon them; which things, if there were no other, might move us to embrace this blessed societie before all other. And yet further, by being of this societie, a man avoids many of Gods judgments: If there had beene ten righteous men
B in Sodome, they had all beene spared from destruction. Wherein wee may see, that they that cleave to such as feare the Lord in deed, never receive harme, but rather much good: for, for the elects sake it is, that the world yet standeth: and if they were gathered, heaven and earth would goe together; but for the calling of the Elect, the hand of God is yet staied. Why then should not Moses example be our rule, Above all worldly pleasure to rejoyce in the society of Gods Saints. Gen. 18. 32.

Thus much in generall: Now in the particular words, are many notable points of doctrine, which we will touch in their order. And chuse rather, &c. Mark here a rare and strange choice as ever we shall reade of. There are two things
C propounded to Moses: The first is, honour and preferment in Pharaohs Court; to be sonne and heire to Pharaohs daughter: wherwith he might have enjoyed all earthly pleasures and delights. The second is, the milerable afflicted condition of Gods Church and people.

And of these two, Moses must needs chuse the one: well, what chuseth he? Surely he refuseth the prerogatives and dignity, that he might have had in Pharaohs Court, and makes choice of the misery and affliction of Gods people in adversity; that so hee may enjoy the privileges of God's Church. A wonderfull choice: for which his faith is here commended, and he renowned to all posterity. The same choice hath God set before all men in all ages. In former times God set before Esau two things: A messe
D of red broth, and his birth-right: but prophane Esau chuseth the worser; hee forgoes his birth-right, so he may have the broth. But far worse did the Gadarens: there was set before them Christ Jesus the Lord of life, and their hogs and cattell: Now they preferre their hogs before Christ; A most miserable and senseless choice. And is it not as ill with us? There is set before us on the one side heaven, and on the other side hell; but men for the most part chuse hell, and forsake heaven. Civill worldly men whose delight is all in riches, they prefer earth before heaven; the service of sinne, which is the greatest slavery, before the service of God, which is perfect freedome, and glorious liberty

ty of the Saints in light: and thus doe all men without Gods speciall grace. Whereupon Paul prayes in his Epistles for the Churches, that God would give unto them the spirit of wisdome, that they may bee able to judge betweene things that differ. And this wisdome wee must labour for, that when these different things are set before us, we may make a wise choice: otherwise, we shew our selves to be like bruit beasts without understanding, and do quite overturne our owne salvation. In the Ministery of the word we have life and death, good and evill set before us, as Moses said to the people, Deut. 30. 15, 19. Let us therefore endevour our selves to chuse life, by embracing and obeying the word of God: and so shall we follow both his precept and practice.

To suffer adversity with the people of God.]

Here wee may observe what is the ordinary state and condition of Gods Church and people in this world: namely, to be in affliction and under the crosse. Hence Paul saith, That wee must come to heaven through manifold afflictions, Acts 14. 22. The Lord knoweth what is best for his servants and children: and therefore hee hath set downe this for a ground, that all that will live godly in Christ Iesus, must suffer persecution 2 Tim. 3. 12.

Thus the Lord dealeth with his children for speciall causes: for first, all crosses, as losse of goods, friends, liberty, or good name, they are meanes to stir up and awake Gods people out of the slumbring fit of sinne; for the godly are many times overtaken this way. The wise virgins sleepe, as well as the foolish: Now afflictions rouze them out of the sleepe of security. See this in Iosephs brethren; who went on a long time without any remorse, for selling their brother: But when they were staied in Ægypt, then they are rouzed up, and can say, Gen. 42. 21. This trouble is come upon us for selling our brother.

Secondly, afflictions serve to humble Gods children, Levit. 26. 41. So the Church of God speaketh, I will beare the wrath of the Lord, because I have sinned against him. Micha. 7. 9.

Thirdly, they serve to weane the people of God, and to drive them from the love of this world: for if men might alwayes live in ease, they would make their heaven upon earth; which may not bee. And herein God dealeth with his children like a Nurse: when shee will weane her childe, shee layes some bitter thing upon the paps head, to make the child to loath the pap; so the Lord, to draw our hearts from the world, and to cause us to love and seeke after Heaven and heavenly things, hee makes us to taste of the bitternesse of affliction in this world. Fourthly, affliction serves to make Gods children to goe out of themselves to seeke sincerely unto God, and to relie onely upon him: which in prosperity they will not do. This Paul confesseth of himselfe and others: We (saith he) received the sentence of death in our selves, because wee should not trust in our selves, but in God, 2 Corinth. 1. 9. So good King Iehoshaphat, when hee was compassed of his enemies, He cried to the Lord, and said; Lord we know not what to doe, but our eyes are toward thee: 2 Chron. 20. 12. Yea, the rebellious Jewes are hereby driven to seeke the Lord, whom in prosperity they forsooke: as wee may see at large, Psal. 107. 6, 12, 13, 19.

Lastly, afflictions serve to make manifest the graces of God in his children. The Lord (saith Iob) knoweth my way and trieth mee, Job 23. 10. Deut. 8. 2. Remember all the way (saith Moses to the Israelites) which the Lord thy GOD led thee this fourty yeares, for to prove thee and to know what was in thine heart. Hence Iames calleth temptations, the triall of faith, Jam. 1. 2, 3. and Paul makes patience the fruit of tribulation, Rom. 5. 3. For looke as the showers in the spring time, cause the buds to appeare: so doe afflictions make manifest Gods graces in his children. Patience, hope, and other vertues, lie close in the heart, in the day of peace: but when tribulation comes, then they break forth and shew themselves.

Hence wee learne that it is not alwayes a token of Gods wrath, To suffer affliction. If any man or people be laden with crosses, it is no argument, that therefore they are not the children of God: for as Peter saith, Iudgements begin at Gods house, 1 Peter 4. 17. and any crosse upon a people, family, or particular persons, if it bring forth the fruit of grace in them, is a true signe, they belong to God. Yea, when men wander from God by an evill way, these afflictions are meanes to call them home to God: Psal. 119. 67. Before I was afflicted, I went astray. And they that forsake their sin, and returne to God in the time of affliction, are certainely Gods people: for the wicked man fretteth and murmureth against God when a crosse commeth, and hee cannot abide it. But the godly man is humbled thereby, and it makes him more obedient in all duties unto God.

This we should consider: for by an outward profession, wee beare the world in hand, that we are Gods children, and therefore wee come to heare Gods word, and to learne how to behave our selves as beseemeth his children. But if wee would bee knowne to be Gods children indeed, then when any of Gods judgements doe befall us, wee must make this use of them; namely, labour thereby to be humbled for our sinnes, and to forsake our sinnes, and to make conscience of all bad wayes for ever afterward: and then wee shew our selves to be Gods children indeed: but if under the crosse, or after the crosse, we be as dissolute as ever wee were, and still follow our old sinnes, then wee cannot bee judged to bee Gods people and children, but rather a wicked and stubborn generation, which the more they are corrected, the worse they are; like a stithy, the more it is beaten, the harder it is. Let us therefore by the use of Gods judgements, shew our selves to be Gods children: so shall wee say with David with much joy and comfort, It is good for us that we have beene in trouble, Psal. 119. 71.

Thus we see Moses choice: now come wee to the thing here refused, To enjoy the pleasures of sinne for a season. By pleasures of sinne, we must understand the riches and dignity that Moses might have had in Pharaohs Court and Kingdome. Which are called the pleasures of sinne, not because they were so in themselves; for so they were the good gifts of God: but because Moses could not enjoy them in Pharaohs Court, without living in sin; for hee must have refused the society of Gods Church and people, and so have beene a stranger from the covenant which God made with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and with their seed after them, if hee would have beene sonne to Pharaohs daughter.

Here then the holy Ghost setteth downe two notable reasons, which induced Moses to refuse these honours and dignities: First, because they were the pleasures of sinne; And secondly, because he should enjoy them but for a season.

The first reason affordeth unto us many notable points worthy our consideration: 1. Here wee learne, that riches, honour, and dignity severed from true religion, are nothing but the pleasures and profits of sinne. This was Moses judgement, as the holy Ghost here testifieth: and it is the plaine truth of God, as Salomon after lamentable experience disputeth, and proveth at large: concluding of riches, honour, pleasures, and all earthly things separated from the feare of God, they are nothing else but meer vanity and vexation of spirit. And Paul saith, To the impure all things are impure; his meat, drink, and apparell, which in themselves are otherwise the good gifts of God.

Eccles. all over.

Tit. 1. 15.

The consideration hereof is of great use: for first, it lets us see what is the state of these men which lay aside religion and good conscience, and betake themselves wholly to the world, to get riches and preferment: most men are of this disposition, and such indeed are onely counted wise. For let there be speech tending to a mans commendation, usually this is the first matter of his praise, that hee is a substantiall wealthy man; and one that lookes well to himselfe: as though riches, or honour were a mans chiefe happinesse. But howsoever the world judgeth of these men; yet hereby we may see and know that their case is miserable. For without religion and the feare of God, their riches and honours are but the pleasures and profits of sinne, and therfore the more they heap up riches after this sort, not regarding Christ, nor his Gospel; the more they heape up to themselves the treasures of sinne, and consequently the greater condemnation: for worldly treasures severed from religiō, are but the Mammon of iniquity, which causeth damnation. Hence Christ said

A unto his Disciples (upon occasion of the young rich man) that it was as easie for a great Camel to goe thorow the eye of a needle, as for a rich man to enter into the Kingdome of Heaven; that is, such a rich man as sets his heart to get riches and honour, not regarding the religion of Christ. Whence also in another place hee pronounceth this fearefull sentence against them: Woe bee to you that are rich, for you have received your consolation: Luke 6. 24. They therefore that lay aside religion, and give themselves wholly to seeke gaine and honour, are before God most wretched and miserable: and the longer they continue in this course, the more miserable they are; for the more sinne they heape up, and so the deeper shall be their condemnation. Wherefore if any of us have beene thus minded heretofore, let us now leave this course, as most dangerous to our soules: for what will it profit a man to gaine the whole world, if hee lose his soule?

Matth. 19. 24.

B

2. Hence we must all learne, especially they that have any measure of wealth more or lesse, to joine with the use of our riches the feare of God, and the practice of true religion: for sever these asunder, and riches are nothing else but sinfull pleasures. It is a good conscience which rectifieth the owner in the right use of his honour and treasures: but without that, he pollutes the blessings of God which he enjoies, and they being polluted shall turne to his greater woe. A man would have thought that King Belshazzer had been an happy man, when hee kept his royall feast, and dranke wine in golden bowles, before a thousand Princes that were under him, and before his Concubines: but the end of all that his jollity may shew us the nature of such prosperity. For so soone as he saw the fingers of a mans hand, writing upon the wall, hee became quite confounded in himselfe: his countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him; so that the joints of his loines were loosed, and his knees smote one against the other: What comfort had hee now from all his riches and pleasures? So Dives, while he lived, might seeme for his wealth and riches to be happy: yet all this did him little good; for he had but his pleasure for his life time, Luke 16. 25. and after this life, his soule went downe to hell. A worldly man would judge the rich man in the Gospell, a most happy man, that said to his soule, by reason of his great abundance of outward wealth, Luk. 12. 19. Soule, soule, thou hast much goods laid up for many yeares, live at ease, eat, drinke, and take thy fill: yet because herewith hee wanted religion, a good conscience, and the feare of God, this sentence was denounced against him; Oh foole, this night will they fetch away thy soule: then whose shall these things be? Wherefore unlesse wee will wilfully cast away our owne soules, let us sanctifie our interest in all earthly blessings, by a sincere endevour in all things, to shew forth the feare of God, with the keeping of faith and a good conscience:

C

ſcience: and let us begin with this, as Chriſt ſaith, Firſt ſeeke Gods Kingdome, and his righteouſneſſe, Mat. 6. 33. Let us hereby ſeeke to have our hearts acceptable unto God; and then all things ſhall be cleane unto us.

Thirdly, are riches and honour, being ſevered from true religion, but the pleaſures of ſinne? then undoubtedly all recreations, all ſports and paſtimes, ſevered from religion and a good conſcience, are much more the pleaſures of ſin. This Salomon knew well: for ſpeaking of ſuch mirth, hee cals laughter madneſſe; and to joy (he ſaith) what is it that thou doeſt? Eccl. 2. 2. Oh then how manifold be the ſins of all ſorts of men? for who almoſt doth not neglect religious duties for matters of ſport and pleaſure? Wherefore if we deſire joy indeed in any worldly things, let us firſt lay the foundation in our owne hearts, by getting and keeping true faith and a good conſcience.

Secondly, whereas Moſes refuſeth dignity and honour onely for this, Becauſe they would be unto him the pleaſures of ſinne; here we are taught in what manner and order we ought to enjoy worldly riches and honour. Moſes practice here muſt be our direction; wee muſt enjoy them and uſe them with thankfulneſſe to God, ſo farre forth as they will further us in the courſe of religion and true godlineſſe. But if the caſe ſtand thus, that wee cannot enjoy them both together, then we muſt follow Moſes example; chuſe religion and a good conſcience, and let honour and preferment goe. This is Moſes practice: and we may reſolve our ſelves, that if he might have enjoyed them together, he would have refuſed neither; but becauſe he could not have them both, therefore he preferreth the religion of Chriſt with a good conſcience before the honour and wealth of Ægypt.

Thirdly, note this, Moſes doth not onely refuſe the riches and pleaſures of Ægypt, when they would become unto him the pleaſures of ſinne; but rather than he will enjoy them, hee is content to ſuffer great miſerie and adverſitie with Gods people. Where, behold a ſingular vertue in Moſes: He judgeth it to be the greateſt miſerie, to live in ſinne; and therefore hee chuſeth rather to ſuffer any adverſitie and reproach in this world, than live and lie in ſinne: becauſe thereby, he ſhould diſpleaſe God, his moſt loving father in Chriſt. A moſt notable vertue in this ſervant of God: and the like minde beare all thoſe that have the ſame graces of ſaving faith, and true repentance that Moſes had. Saint Paul eſteemed the temptations unto ſinne, which Sathan ſuggeſted into his minde, to be as beatings and buffetings, and as pricks and thornes in his fleſh, 2 Cor. 12. 7. And David ſaith, Pſal. 119. 136. His eyes guſh out rivers of waters, becauſe men breake Gods Commandements. Was David thus grieved for other mens ſinnes? Oh! then what a griefe did hee ſuffer, when he himſelfe brake Gods Commandements, and thereby diſpleaſed God?

Now looke how theſe ſervants of God were affected, ſo muſt every one of us, that profeſſe the faith and religion of Chriſt, labour to bee affected towards ſinne; we muſt judge it the greateſt miſerie and torment in the world, to doe any thing that ſhal diſpleaſe God. But alas, come to our dayes, and the caſe is farre otherwiſe; for to moſt men, it is meat and drinke unto them to commit ſinne: ſo farre are they from counting it a miſerie. Yea, if a man be ordinarily addicted to ſome ſpeciall ſinne, you then may as ſoone take away his life, as bereave him of his ſinne: he will adventure the loſſe of heaven for ever, for the pleaſure of ſinne for a time. But all ſuch, are farre unlike theſe holy ſervants of God; for they counted it the greateſt croſſe and miſerie that could be, to doe any thing that diſpleaſed God, and did checke and breake the peace of good conſcience. And if we looke to enjoy the like peace and comfort with them, wee muſt ſtrive againſt our owne corrupt diſpoſition, and labour to finde ſinne to be our greateſt ſorrow. Worldly miſeries may affect us: but in reſpect of ſorrow for ſinne, all worldly griefe ſhould be light unto us. Indeed, we are otherwiſe minded naturally, but herein wee muſt ſhew the power and truth of grace, that to diſpleaſe God by any ſinne is our greateſt griefe.

The ſecond reaſon, that moved Moſes to refuſe the honours and pleaſures of Pharaohs Court, was becauſe hee ſhould have enjoyed them but for a time: for the time of his naturall life, was the longeſt that poſſibly he could have enjoyed them. And the ſame reaſon muſt move every one of us to uſe this world, and all things herein, (even all temporall benefits) as though we uſed them not: being alwayes willing and ready to leave them whenſoever God ſhal call. This ſame reaſon doth Paul render when hee perſwades the Corinthians to the ſame duty, 1 Cor. 7. 31. Uſe this world (he ſaith) as though you uſed it not; for the faſhion of this world goeth away. As if hee ſhould ſay, All things in the world laſt but for a time; and if a man would never ſo faine, he could but enjoy them to the end of his life: and therefore uſe them as though you uſed them not. But pitty it is to ſee, how farre men are from the practice of this durie; for they ſet their whole heart upon the world: and to get riches is their delight, and their god. This ought not ſo to bee, God hath not laid downe theſe precepts and examples in vaine: undoubtedly, if they draw us not to the like practice, they ſhall riſe up in judgement againſt us at the laſt day. And thus much of Moſes choice, and refuſall.

VERSE 26.

Eſteeming the rebuke of Chriſt greater riches, than the treaſures of Ægypt; for he had reſpect to the recompence of reward.

Moſes

Moſes faith.

MOſes (as we have heard) refuſed the honour and wealth of Ægypt, and choſe to live in affliction with Gods people. Now, becauſe this might ſeeme to be a ſtrange choice, and a naturall man would ſoone condemne him of follie for his labour: therefore here the holy Ghoſt layes downe a reaſon that moved Moſes thus to doe: to wit, Moſes choſe rather to ſuffer affliction with Gods people, than to enjoy the pleaſures and honour of Ægypt: becauſe he was perſwaded, that reproach for Chriſt his ſake, was greater riches than all the wealth in Ægypt. So that hee refuſed not abſolutely riches, honour, and other comforts: but choſe the beſt riches and honour, and left the worſer upon a ſound judgement betweene things that differ.

Hereby wee may obſerve in generall, how needfull a thing it is for every Chriſtian, to have ſound knowledge and underſtanding in the Word of God. For, hee that would walke uprightly, and approved of God, muſt bee able to judge between things that differ: not only between good and evill, but between good and good, which is the better: and ſo of evils which is the worſer. Which no man can do, but he that hath a ſound and right judgement in the Word of God: for therein is attained the ſpirit of diſcerning. Many there be that by the courſe of their lives chuſe hell, and refuſe heaven: which undoubtedly comes from their ignorance in the Word. But ignorance will excuſe none. He that will come to heaven, muſt be able to diſcerne good from evill: and accordingly, to chuſe the good, and to refuſe that which is evill; which without divine, and ſupernaturall knowledge no man can doe. And therefore all ignorant perſons, and all ſuch as are blinded through the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne, muſt ſhake off their ſecuritie, and get ſound knowledge in Scripture, with a good conſcience; that when things which doe differ are ſet before them, they may with Moſes chuſe the better.

But let us come to Moſes judgement more particularly. He eſteemed the rebuke of Chriſt, &c. that is, he was ſtiedly reſolved, that reproach and contempt for Chriſt his ſake, was greater riches unto him, than the treaſures of a whole kingdome. But ſome will ſay, This is a very ſtrange judgement: can it poſſibly be true and good? Anſ. Yes undoubtedly, it is moſt ſound judgement, and worthy eternall remembrance of every one of us; that to ſuffer reproach for Chriſt his ſake, is greater riches than all worldly wealth. The truth hereof is proved by many reaſons out of Gods Word: 1. God hath made a promiſe of bleſſednes to thoſe which ſuffer for Chriſts ſake. Bleſſed are you (ſaith Chriſt) when men revile you, and ſpeake all manner of evill ſayings againſt you for my names ſake, &c. And S. Peter ſaith, If yee be rayled upon for my names ſake, bleſſed are yee. And leſt any ſhould doubt how this can bee, Chriſt ſhewes wherein this bleſſednes conſiſts, ſaying; Hee that forſaketh houſes, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my names ſake; ſhall receive an hundred fold more, and ſhall inherit eternall life. A moſt worthy promiſe, aſſuring us that no man loſeth by ſuffering for Chriſts ſake; for he ſhall be rewarded an hundred fold over. In ſtead of earthly friends, and worldly comforts, he ſhall have the love and favour of God ſhed abroad in his heart; which will be an over-flowing fountaine of comfort for ſoule and body for ever, farre more worth than the wealth and treaſures of all the kingdomes in the world. A ſmall ſpringing fountaine (we know) is better to an houſe, than an hundred ciſterns full; becauſe of continuall ſupply from the ſpringing fountaine, when the ciſterns will be ſpent. Behold the love of God in Chriſt, with other ſpirituall graces, ſhall be in all that ſuffer for the name of Chriſt, as living ſtreams flowing unto life eternall; when as the ciſterns of all worldly pleaſures and treaſures, ſhall be ſpent and dried up. 2. By ſuffering affliction for Chriſts ſake, we are made conformable unto him in his humilitie; that ſo wee may bee made like unto him after this life in glorie. So Paul ſaith, our light affliction cauſeth unto us an eternall weight of glorie. 2 Cor. 4. 17. And againe, it is a true ſaying, If weebee dead with Chriſt, we ſhall alſo live with him: If we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo reigne with him. 2 Tim. 2. 11, 12. This aſſurance can no worldly riches give: and therefore we may boldly ſay, that the ſuffering of reproach for Chriſt his ſake, is greater riches than the treaſures of a whole kingdome. 3. To ſuffer for Chriſt his ſake, is a token of Gods ſpeciall love: and therefore Saint Paul bids the Philippians, Not to feare their adverſaries: which is a token of ſalvation unto them, and that of God; becauſe it is given unto you (ſaith he) for Chriſt, that you ſhould not onely believe, but ſuffer for his ſake. Wherefore if ſuffering for Chriſt have a promiſe of bleſſednes, if it make us conformable unto Chriſt, and be a ſigne of Gods ſpeciall love; then it is to be eſteemed above the riches and honours of the whole world.

Are afflictions for Chriſt to be eſteemed above the treaſures of a kingdome? then we muſt all learne to rejoyce in the troubles and wrongs which we ſuffer for Chriſts ſake. So did the Apoſtles, Act. 5. 41. They departed from the Counſell rejoycing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer affliction for his name. And Saint Paul brags thereof greatly, ſaying; I beare in my bodie the markes of the Lord Jeſus. Gal. 6. 17. And looke, as theſe ſervants of God rejoyced in their ſufferings for Chriſt; ſo likewiſe muſt we labour for the ſame heart and affections in the like caſe: for who would not rejoyce to be made partaker and poſſeſſor of the treaſures of a kingdome? Well, the rebuke of Chriſt is greater riches than the treaſures of a kingdome.

This leſſon is of great uſe: for howſoever many

Matth. 19. 29.

Matth. 5.

1 Pet. 4. 14.

Philip. 1. 28.

many among us come to heare Gods Word, yet there be many alſo that ſcoffe and mocke at religion, and at the Goſpel of Chriſt, and the profeſſors thereof; whereby the moſt are hindred in profeſſion, and many daunted, and quite driven backe. But wee muſt here learne, not to be diſcouraged by theſe mocks. Indeed wee muſt take heed, wee give them no juſt occaſion to mocke us; and then if we be ſcoffed at, we ſhall never be hurt by it: nay (though that be farre from their intent) yet in mocking us, they doe us great honour. For the Word of God that cannot lie, is this, that to ſuffer affliction for Chriſts ſake, is greater honour and riches, than the treaſures of a Kingdome. And if Moſes judgement be good, which God himſelfe doth here commend; then we are happy and bleſſed, in enduring theſe mocks and ſcoffes for Chriſt.

Secondly, wee muſt here learne inſtruction for the time to come: Wee have a long time, through the great goodneſſe of God, enjoyed peace and wealth, with the Goſpell of Chriſt; but undoubtedly, theſe dayes of peace wil have an end, they cannot laſt alwayes, Gods people muſt paſſe thorow the firie furnace of affliction. Well, when this is come upon us, how ſhall we be able to beare it? Surely, wee muſt now learne to be of this opinion that Moſes was of; we muſt judge it to be the greateſt honour and riches that can be, to ſuffer affliction for Chriſts ſake: and this will be the ground of all conſtancie, courage, and Chriſtian boldneſſe in the day of triall. For he that is of this minde, will never feare affliction, nor reproach for Chriſts ſake: nay, he will be ſo farre from fearing it, that he will rejoyce and triumph therein.

Further, whereas it is ſaid, Eſteeming the rebuke of Chriſt; here marke, the rebuke of Gods Church & people is called the rebuke of Chriſt. The people of God in Ægypt were laden with reproaches and rebukes: and behold, Chriſt accounts it his rebuke, and the holy Ghoſt ſo cals it. Where learne this, That Chriſt eſteemeth the reproach and affliction of his Church, as his owne affliction. When Saul went to perſecute the brethren at Damaſcus, Act. 9. 1, 4. Chriſt Jeſus cals to him from heaven, ſaying; Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou mee? Saul went to perſecute the Chriſtians, and yet our Saviour Chriſt taketh it unto himſelfe. And after his converſion he ſaith, 2 Cor. 4. 10. Every way wee beare about in our bodies, the dying of the Lord Jeſus. And againe, Let no man put me to buſineſſe: for I beare in my bodie the marks of the Lord Jeſus, Gal. 6. 17. This is a point of ſpeciall uſe.

First, hence we learne, that Chriſt hath a ſpeciall care of his Church and children, in that he judgeth their afflictions to be his owne afflictions; and therefore hee can no more forget, or leave off to helpe them in diſtreſſe, than denie himſelfe.

Secondly, here is a ſpeciall comfort for Gods children that be in affliction: their afflictions are not their owne alone, but Chriſts alſo; he is their partner, and fellow ſufferer. This may ſeeme ſtrange, but is moſt true: Chriſt puts (as it were) his ſhoulders under our afflictions, and takes them to himſelfe, as though they were his owne; than which what can be more comfortable? for though thou thy ſelfe cannot beare it, yet truſt undoubtedly, that Chriſt who beares with thee, will give thee ſtrength to undergoe it unto victorie.

Thirdly, if the afflictions of a Chriſtian, be the afflictions of Chriſt; then it is a fearefull ſinne for any man to mocke or reproach his brother, in regard of his profeſſion and religion, for mocking is perſecution, Gal. 4. 29. with Gen. 21. 9. And that reproach which is caſt upon a Chriſtian, is caſt upon Chriſt; and Chriſt takes it as done unto himſelfe: the perſecutor wounds Chriſt Jeſus thorow the ſides of a poore Chriſtian; which is a fearefull thing. For in ſo doing, hee ſets himſelfe againſt the Lord Jeſus, he kickes againſt the prickes; and if he ſo continue, hee muſt needs looke for ſome fearefull end: for who hath ever beene fierce againſt the Lord, and hath proſpered? Iob 9. 4. Wherefore if any of us be guiltie of any ſinne in this kinde, let us repent: for unleſſe we turne, our condemnation will be remedileſſe.

Againe, the afflictions of the Iſraelites are here ſaid to be their ſufferings for Chriſt: where note, that though Chriſt his comming were then afarre off, yet the Iſraelites then knew of Chriſt: for elſe they could not ſuffer for him.

This confuteth thoſe which hold, that every man may be ſaved by his owne religion, whatſoever it bee, if hee live civilly and uprightly therein. Their reaſon is taken from the Jewes, who (they ſay) had only the knowledge of outward ceremonies, and ſo were ſaved. But that opinion is here diſproved: for the Jewes knew Chriſt, and profeſſed him, or elſe they would never ſuffer for him: and therefore they were ſaved by him, and not by their obedience to outward ceremonies. And thus much of the reaſon, which moved Moſes to make ſuch a choice as hee did.

Now in the end of the verſe is added a reaſon, why Moſes was of this ſtrange judgement, to thinke the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures of Ægypt: namely, becauſe he had reſpect to the recompence of reward. This is, he often ſet his eye to behold, and his heart to conſider how God had made a promiſe of life everlaſting after this life, unto all thoſe that obeyed him, and truſted in him after this life: for the enjoying whereof, he preferred that eſtate wherein hee might live in the feare of God, though it were a ſtate of reproach, before all other whatſoever. Where we ſee, what it is will bring a man to eſteeme affliction, with the feare of God, better than the treaſures and pleaſures of an earthly kingdome: namely, as wee ſet the bodily eye to behold the affliction; ſo wee muſt lift up the eye of the minde by faith, to behold the recompence of reward; that is, the ſtate of glorie in heaven prepared for Gods children. Thus did the Chriſtian Hebrewes in the Primitive Church, Hebr. 10.34. They ſuffered with joy the ſpoyling of their goods: a very hard thing, but yet moſt true, for it is the Word of God. And the reaſon is rendred, They knew in themſelves how that they had in heaven a better and more enduring ſubſtance. And our Saviour Chriſt endured the Croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame, for the joy that was ſet before him, Heb. 12.1. that is, in conſideration of that joy in glory, whereto he ſhould be advanced himſelfe, and bring all his members. This we muſt make uſe of: for if we will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, we muſt ſuffer affliction. This fleſh and bloud will not yeeld unto: and therefore, to perſwade us to ſuffer with joy, we muſt with Moſes have reſpect to the recompence of reward. We muſt ſay thus to our ſoules, The day will come wherein we ſhall have life everlaſting in the Kingdome of heaven, if we now ſerve and feare him: Shall we not then for his ſake be content to ſuffer a ſhort affliction, ſeeing the greateſt of them are not worthy of the glory that ſhall be revealed? Rom. 8. 18.

Queſt. But why doth the holy Ghoſt call everlaſting life a reward? Anſ. It is not ſo called becauſe Moſes did procure it, and deſerve it at Gods hand by the dignitie of his workes in ſuffering: for ſure no man can merit any thing at Gods hands. The caſe is plaine: for Chriſt as he is man (conſider his manhood a-part from his God-head) could not merit any thing at Gods hands: for he that would merit of God by any worke, muſt doe three things: 1. Hee muſt doe the worke of himſelfe, and by himſelfe: for if he doe it by another, the other meriteth, and muſt have the reward and praiſe of the worke. Secondly, he muſt doe it of meere good will, and not of dutie: for that which is of dutie cannot merit, becauſe a man is bound to doe it. 3. The worke done to merit, muſt be of that price & dignity, that it may be proportionable to life everlaſting, which is the reward. Now, though Chriſt as he is man, be above all men and all Angels in grace and dignitie; yet conſider his manhood apart from his Godhead, and he could not doe a worke with theſe 3. properties: For firſt, the workes done of the manhood were not done of it ſelfe, but from that fulneſſe of the ſpirit wherewith hee was endued. Secondly, Chriſt as man is a creature: and ſo conſidered, his workes are of duty to the Creator, and ſo cannot merit. Thirdly, Chriſts works, as a man ſimply conſidered, are finite, and ſo could not merit infinite glory.

Queſt. How then did Chriſt merit at Gods hands? Anſ. Partly by meanes of Gods promiſes made in the Law, which was this, Do this and thou ſhalt live: but properly and chiefly, becauſe hee was not a meere man onely, but (withall) true and very God: for becauſe his obedience both in his life and death (though

A performed in his manhood) was the obedience of him that was God and man, even from the infinite excellencie of the perſon whoſe it is, it becomes meritorious. In his manhood he obeyed the Law, and ſuffered for our ſinnes: but the dignitie thereof came from the Godhead: for he that did theſe workes for us, was both God and man.

Now, if Chriſt conſidered as man only cannot merit; then much leſſe can any other man merit at Gods hands. And therefore Moſes, though he were a worthy man, yet becauſe he was but a man, and a ſinfull man alſo, he could not by any worke deſerve life everlaſting at Gods hands.

But life everlaſting is called a reward in the
B Scripture, becauſe it is the free gift of God, promiſed by God to his children in Chriſt; for this end, to allure and draw them on in obedience. And it muſt not ſeeme ſtrange that wee ſay a reward is a free gift: for ſo it may be, as we ſhall ſee by comparing two places of Scripture together; to wit, Matth. 5.44. with Luk. 6. 32. For whereas Matthew ſaith, If you love them that love you, what reward have you: Saint Luke repeating the ſame thing, ſaith, What thanke have you, (or as the word ſignifies) what favour or free gift have you? Secondly, there may bee another cauſe rendred, why life everlaſting is called a reward; to wit, not in regard of the worke done, but in regard of the worker conſidered in Chriſt: for Chriſts merit makes life
C everlaſting to be a reward. Now, every true beleever that endevours to doe the will of God, is in Chriſt; and ſo Chriſts righteouſneſſe with the merit thereof, is his, ſo farre forth as ſerves to make his perſon acceptable to God. Whereupon he hath a promiſe of reward made unto him upon his obedience; yet not for his worke, but for the worke of Chriſts obedience in whom he is: And ſo muſt theſe words here be underſtood:

1. The conſideration of this reward of life eternall given through Chriſt, to thoſe that ſuffer for his ſake, may make us joyfull and patient in our afflictions for righteouſneſſe ſake. A naturall man will endure much for a good recompence in the end. Now Chriſt ſaith, Great is your reward. And therefore let us rejoyce in Matth. 5. 12.
D ſuffering for Chriſt; holding faſt our confidence, which hath ſo great recompence of reward. Heb. 10. 35.

Secondly, is life everlaſting a recompence, that is, a giving of a reward? Then here is condemned the deſperate practice of many a one, who ſpend their whole life in a greedie purſuit after the profits and pleaſures of the world; as it were running themſelves out of breath in the way to hell, without all regard of their ſoules till death come; thinking, that if at the laſt gaſpe they can crie, God mercie, and commend their ſoules to God, all is well. But all ſuch perſons for the moſt part deceive their owne ſoules, not conſidering that life everlaſting is given as a reward. Now, we know know that no reward is given to any man, till the worke be done which he is set about; hee must come worke in the Vineyard some part of the day, that would have his penny at night: as for those that neither stirre hand nor foot to doe the worke, what reward can they looke for? And yet this is the state of carnall livers, they addict themselves wholly to earthly things. But if wee looke for any reward at the day of death, wee must labour in the works of godlinesse all the dayes of our life; for therefore were we redeemed, Luk. 1. 74, 75.

In the whole booke of God, wee finde but one man that lived wickedly, and repented at his end: that is, the theefe upon the Crosse. Which shewes that it is a most rare thing for a man to have the reward of life everlasting after this life, that labours not in the works of godlinesse in this life.

Thirdly, the consideration of this reward, must stirre up all Gods children unto all diligence in the duties of godlinesse, and that with cheerefulnesse, through the whole course of their lives. When we shall die, we will looke earnestly for this reward; and therefore while we live, we must diligently doe the works that God commandeth: and then when death comes, we may assure our selves that God will give us this reward; not because we did deserve it by our works, but because he hath promised it in Christ, upon our endevour in obedience and true repentance. And thus much for the reason of Moses choice.

VERSE 27.

By faith hee forsooke Egypt, and feared not the fiercenesse of the King. For he was couragious, as hee that saw him that is invisible.

IN this verse the Spirit of God proceedeth to another example of Moses faith: and hereto also in the verse following, hee addeth a third. Now he is thus large in the commendation of his faith for this end; to perswade the Hebrewes, to whom this Epistle is sent, that they were not to looke for any Justification by the works of the Law: and his reason is, because if any man could be justified by the works of the Law, it must be Moses, who gave the Law to the people from the Lord, and did excell in obedience to both Tables, and therefore is a renowned Prophet unto all posteritie in speciall favour with God, Numb. 12. 7, 8. But Moses could not be justified by the works of the Law; for here the holy Ghost proveth, that Moses was justified and saved by faith. The thing that commends Moses, and makes him stand before God, is not his works, but his faith: and therefore the conclusion is; that as Moses was not justified by his workes, but by faith; no more must they stand upon their workes to be justified thereby, but labour for such faith as Moses had. Now, this faith of Moses is a true saving faith, founded on these two promises of God: 1. On this great and maine promise made to Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed: 2. On another particular promise rising from the generall, made unto him when he was called to fetch the Israelites out of bondage; which was this: I will bee with thee, and guide thee. And in this place, Moses is said to have faith, not onely because hee beleeved that God would be his God, as hee was the God of all Abrahams seed; but because he beleeved particularly, that God would be his God, and defend and bee with him in the deliverance of the Israelites out of Ægypt. Exod. 3. 12.

To come particularly to this fact. By faith Moses forsooke Ægypt. Moses departed from Ægypt twice, First, when he had slaine the Ægyptian, and fled from Pharaoh unto Midian, and there kept Iethroes sheepe. Secondly, fortie yeares after, when he lead the people of Israel out of Ægypt into the land of Canaan: and here some make it a question, whether of these departures is meant in this place. Answ. It is most like, that this place is to bee understood of his second departure, rather than of the first: And the reason is taken out of Exodus, chap. 14. 15. where we finde that the first time, he fled for feare: for so soone as he heard that his slaughter of the Ægyptian was knowne to Pharaoh, he fled in such feare, as that he durst not returne againe of fortie yeares. Now these words are not to be understood of such a flight: for here it is said, He departed, not fearing the Kings wrath or fiercenesse.

Here some will say, This is no commendation: for malefactors and rebels doe flie their Country? Ans. They flie indeed, yet not in faith, but in feare. Moses fled in faith; and hereby his faith is commended, that he fled not fearing the King: but malefactors flie for feare of punishment. Moses departed with courage and boldnesse, and therefore fled not as a malefactor: for he feared not the King, as appeareth plainely in the Historie: for though Pharaoh had said unto him, Exod. 10. 28. Get thee gone, see thou see my face no more: for when thou commest in my sight, thou shalt die: yet Moses went once more, namely, the tenth time, and told him of the tenth plague, and said, That Pharaohs servants should come downe unto him, and fall downe and pray him to get him out, with the people and their cattell. And when the Israelites murmured against him at the red sea, when Pharaoh was at their heeles, and they had no way to flie, Moses encourageth the people, saying, Feare not, stand still, and behold the salvation of the Lord which he will shew you this day: for the Ægyptians whom ye have seene this day, shall yee never see againe, Exod. 14. 13. Whereby it notably appeares, that Moses departed in faith without feare of Pharaoh. Exod. 11. 8.

But

But some will say; For a man to come into another mans Kingdome, and to carie away his Subjects without the Kings consent, is a fact of rebellion and sedition; and therefore worthie no commendation, but rather shame & punishment. And this did Moses: hee comes from Midian, and caries away the Jewes which had beene a long time Pharaohs subjects; and for whose service he might plead possession, and a long prescription: therefore it seemes to bee no fact of faith. Answ. Indeed if Moses had done this on his owne head, he might worthily have beene thus censured. But when he came to Ægypt, he had a calling immediately from God to do as he did; and for the confirmation hereof, he had Gods promise of assistance, in working strange miracles: and when he carried the people out of Ægypt, he did it by commandement from a King that was higher than Pharaoh. Neither yet did Moses carrie them away as a private man, for he was a publike person, an high Magistrate, and no stranger, but one of themselves: yea, he was a King, as may appeare in Gods word: for Deut. 33.5. he is plainly called a King; and Genes. 36.31. it is said, There were so many Kings in Edom, before there reigned any King over the children of Israel. Now, the last of those Kings reigned at that time when Moses went with the Israelites out of Ægypt: so that Moses was their King, and had the authoritie and government of a King over them from the Lord: and therefore it was no fact of rebellion in him, but a worke that did greatly commend his faith, being grounded upon Gods Commandement and promise.

Thus we see how we must conceive of Moses fact. Now wee come to some particular points to be considered therein:

How came it to passe that Moses now had this courage to depart from Pharaoh, not fearing his commandement; whereas 40. years before, being called to shew himselfe unto the brethren, as one whom they were to respect as their deliverer, Act. 7.23,25. he fled immediately out of Ægypt upon the notice of one fact of defence in behalfe of the Israelites? why did hee not shew as much courage when he slew the Ægyptian, as at his second departure? Ans. The cause of his courage at this latter time was this: God now renued his commission, and confirmed his former calling. For when he was first called, he did his dutie, and revenged their wrongs: but yet being in danger, and his calling being as yet but a secret instinct, hee was fearefull, and fled. But now when God called him the second time and confirmed the same calling, both by promise and commandement, and power to worke miracles, then fearefull Moses becomes courageous and bold.

Here then observe, that there is a difference of Gods graces; there is a first grace, and a second grace. The first is that which God gives, to any man for any calling: the second is that which God addes to the first, for the confirming thereof. And the first is not effectuall without the second; As here we see, Moses first calling was not effectuall with him, till the second came. And so Gods first grace is not effectuall til the second come; by which the former is confirmed, strengthened, and increased. And the second is confirmed by the third; and so we must goe on from grace to grace, if we will be bold and courageous in any duty, either of our generall or particular calling. This must be well considered; for that any man stands in grace, or increaseth therein, either respecting his particular calling, or his Christian conversation, it comes from this, that God addes a second grace unto the first. And therefore whosoever is inabled for any dutie, hath great cause to praise God: for whether we continue in grace, or increase therein, it commeth from the goodnesse of God, who addeth grace to grace: which if he should not doe, we should fall away, and not be able to goe forward in the feare of God, and the duties of our calling: for the first grace would not suffice to strengthen us against temptation. And therefore howsoever God hath strengthned us for the time past, yet still wee must pray to God to deliver us from evil: which plainely imports, that our standing is from his daily supply of new grace.

2. Point. When went Moses out of Ægypt? The time is directly set downe, Exod. 12.41. Even the selfe same day when the promise of God was expired: for when the 400. and thirty yeares were expired, they went all the host of the Lord out of Ægypt: neither before nor after, but the very same day. Indeed Moses was chosen to be their Captaine 40. yeares before, and sent unto them by God: and S. Stephen saith, He thought they would have understood so much. But then they would not take him for their guide. Yet now 40. yeares after, when Gods determinate time of 430. yeares was expired, he comes againe unto them, to carrie them out of Ægypt; and then they acknowledge him and follow him out, according to Gods commission.

Hence wee learne, first, that no creature can alter the rule of Gods providence. Fourtie yeares before, Moses would have delivered the people; but hee must stay till the time of the Lords promise was accomplished, and then he caries them away. Secondly, this must teach us, not onely to beleeve, that God both can and will keepe his promises; but also by faith to wait for the time, wherein he will accomplish the same unto us. Moses is faine to wait forty yeares for the fulfilling of Gods promise. When Daniel understood how long the Israelites must be in captivity, he would not pray for the shortning of that time: but when he knew that the time of their returne drew neere, then hee prayed unto the Lord most earnestly, waiting for the accomplishment of Gods promise in their deliverance. And David thus waited on God for deliverance in all his troubles. And their examples must wee follow, for the fruition

Dan. 9.

tion of all Gods bleſſings.

3. Point. In what manner doth Moſes depart? The text ſaith, he went out, not fearing the Kings commandement: ſo that his departure was with courage. Whence wee learne ſundry inſtructions? Firſt, here is a notable preſident for the framing of our lives, which muſt bee a rule unto us. We muſt walke diligently in our callings, as Moſes did; and though croſſes doe meet us, ſo that Pharaoh fall out with us; if Kings become our enemies, yet we muſt not lay aſide the duties of our callings; but after Moſes example, go on therein with courage. Moſes without fearing the Kings wrath, went and led the people away. And ſo muſt every one of us do; although dangers come, we muſt not feare, but ſtand faſt in our profeſſion, and goe on in the duties of our callings: Eccleſ. 10.4. If the ſpirit of him that ruleth riſe up againſt thee, leave not thy place.

Secondly, hence we learne, that Magiſtrates which are to governe the people, ought to bee men of courage, in performing the duties of their calling. When too heavy a burthen lay on Moſes, in judging all the congregation himſelfe: Iethro his father in law bids him provide among all the people men of courage, fearing God, to be Rulers, Exod. 18.21. Now their courage muſt not be a proud ſtaunchneſſe, or an indiſcreet cruelty, but a godly boldneſſe, which may inable them to the duties of their calling, without feare of man. To this end, the Lord put of his Spirit upon the ſeventy, which were to rule with Moſes, Num. 11.17. Now the Spirit of God, is not the ſpirit of feare, but of power, and of love, and of a ſound minde, 2 Tim. 1.7. Which ſhewes, that in a Magiſtrate muſt bee courage to call, and (if need be) to compell others to the duties of their callings, how great ſoever they bee. And it is a matter of great weight and moment in Gods Church: for the Miniſter may teach and ſpeake as much as hee will, or can; yet unleſſe with the ſword of the Spirit, there be joyned the temporall ſword of the Magiſtrate to reforme mens lives, and to keepe them from open ſinne againſt the law of God, and to urge them to the duties which the Miniſter teacheth: ſurely, their teaching and preaching will be to ſmall effect.

Laſtly, Moſes went with courage out of Ægypt. This departure of his was a ſigne of our ſpirituall departing out of the Kingdome of darkneſſe: for ſo Paul applieth it, 1 Cor 10. And therefore after Moſes example, wee muſt with courage come every day more and more out of the kingdome of darkneſſe, marching forward with couragious faith and heavenly boldneſſe towards our bleſſed Canaan, the glory of heaven: we muſt not leave this to the laſt breath, and then thinke to have heaven gates ready open for us: but we muſt enter into Gods Kingdome in this life. Looke as Moſes by his faith did depart boldly out of Ægypt, ſo muſt wee in heart, by faith depart out of the kingdome of ſinne. This we ſhall doe, when we uſe meanes to eſtabliſh the kingdome of Chriſt Jeſus in our hearts, and doe forſake the workes of ſinne and darkneſſe. For looke where there is no departing from ſinne, there is no faith: and therefore let us ſhew our ſelves to have true faith, by departing more and more boldly and joyfully out of the kingdome of ſinne and Satan; that ſo it may appeare we love the light and hate darkneſſe. And in this journey, let us not feare any contrary commandement, nor the furious wrath of ſpirituall Pharaoh the devill, nor all the gates of hell: for Chriſt Jeſus is our guide.

Becauſe a man might thinke at the firſt, that it was a raſh and deſperate part in Moſes, thus boldly to take away the Iſraelites, not regarding Pharaohs commandement; therefore in the latter part of the verſe, the holy Ghoſt ſetteth downe a reaſon, that moved Moſes to doe ſo, in theſe words: For he endured, or was couragious, that is, he tooke heart to himſelfe. Why ſo? Becauſe he ſaw God that is inviſible. That is, he caſt the eye of faith upon God, who had promiſed the evidence of his power and preſence in their deliverance. So that it was the worke of Moſes faith, laying hold on the promiſe of Gods preſence and protection from the rage of Pharaoh, that made him thus confident and bold.

Hence wee learne, that the true valour and manhood that was in Moſes, and is in all Gods children, like unto him, is a gift of grace. Among many gifts of the Spirit, powred upon our Saviour Chriſt, the ſpirit of ſtrength or courage is one, Iſay 11.2. And Iethroes counſell to Moſes is notable this way; he bids him provide for Governours, men of courage, fearing God, Exod. 18.21. inſinuating, that true courage is alwayes joyned with the feare of God, and is a fruit of grace. But ſome will ſay, that many heathen men, who never knew the true God, nor what the gifts of the Spirit meant, had that courage. Anſ. True it is, they had courage indeed; but it was nothing but a carnall boldneſſe (not worthy the name courage; being onely a ſhadow of true fortitude) ariſing from ambition, pride, and other fleſhly humours; whereas Moſes his courage ſprang from the grace of faith, in the mercifull promiſes of God made unto him concerning his deliverance and ſafety. And indeed, howſoever wicked men have a notable ſhew of divers vertues, yet in the triall they prove but ſhadowes; for true valour and other vertues doe alwayes accompany regeneration.

As he that ſaw him that is inviſible.

Here is the cauſe that made Moſes thus couragious: and this will make any man bold, if he can bee perſwaded in his conſcience of Gods ſpeciall preſence with him, and providence and protection over him.

Here then obſerve a ſingular fruit of faith: it makes God, who is indeed inviſible, to bee after a sort visible unto us. Moses by faith saw him that was invisible: for by faith he was perswaded of Gods providence, and speciall protection in the delivery of his people, though Pharaoh should rage never so much. So Henoch is said to have walked with God, because he saw him by the eye of faith, in all his affaires. And when Ioseph was allured to sinne with his Mistris, what stayed him? surely the feare of God, whom he saw by faith. How can I do this great wickednesse (saith Ioseph) and so sinne against God? As if he should say; I am alwayes where God is present; how then shall I doe so wickedly, and God see it? and the same is the state of all true beleevers; their faith makes the invisible God to be after a sort visible unto them: so as a faithfull man may say, God is present with me, and protecteth me. Whereby we may see, what little faith is in the world: for few can truly say they see God; which faith inableth a man to doe. Yea, most men care so little to see God, that hee is farre from their very thoughts. Many have made meanes to see the devill; but where is he that labours for such a measure of faith, that hee may see the invisible God? If wicked men run to Conjurers to see the devill, whom they shall once see to their sorrow, let us labour for faith in the Word and Sacraments, and this faith will make us so to endure in all tribulation, as though wee saw God.

Gen. 5. 22.

Gen. 39. 9.

Furthermore, seeing Moses by faith endured as he that saw God: we learne, that the seeing of God by faith, takes away feare, and gives spirituall boldnesse. This is a point of speciall use: for naturally men are fearfull; some cannot endure the darke, nor solitary places, for feare of the devill: yea, the shaking of a leafe, or the crawling of a worme doth terrifie others. Now how soever some mens constitutions may helpe forward this feare, yet many times it doth come from an accusing conscience, as a fruit of sinne. And the way to remove it, is here to bee learned: namely, to doe as Moses did: that is, labour to bee resolved of Gods presence with us, and providence over us: and this will arme us, against all satanicall and foolish feare. For if God be on our side, who can be against us to doe us harme? Againe, the Souldier by his place and calling ought to bee a man of courage: for else the state of his life, and the thought of his enemies will much affright him. Now how may he become couragious? They use to sound the drumme and trumpet for this end: and it must bee granted they are good incitements and provocations unto battell: but when it comes to the point of danger, they cannot give heart. Others use against the battell to fill themselves with wine, and to make themselves valiant by strong drinke. This indeed may make them senselesse, and so desperate. But the true way is, to become Christian souldiers, knowing and fearing God; and with their bodily armour to bring also the shield of faith: whereby their

A hearts may bee assured, that God hath called them to that fight; and that hee is present with them to cover their heads in the day of battell. This will make them to take heart and courage to themselves, and to become truly valorous, though by nature they bee weake and timorous.

Thirdly, who knowes whether God will bring us to this triall: either to lay downe our lives, or forsake his truth for he may justly take from us these golden dayes of peace, for our ingratitude. Now, if such times come upon us, what shall we do? Shall we deny the faith of Christ? God forbid. But how shall we stand out in such triall? Surely, we must follow Moses, and labour to see him that is invisible, by faith. This will

B make us couragious, and without feare in Gods cause: remembring this also, that among those which are reckoned to goe downe to hell, the fearefull man is one, Revel. 21. 8. who dares not stand to the truth of God, but for feare of men denies it. Let us therefore now begin to settle our hearts in the assurance of Gods providence and protection: that so when triall comes, wee may be bold in the cause of God.

Him that is invisible.] That is God, who is a most simple essence, voyd of all composition, or corporall substance; for God is a Spirit, Joh. 4. 24. and therefore invisible, and not subject to mans senses. But some will say, God is said to have head, heart, hands, and feet, with other parts of mans body: and therefore he is visible.

C Answ. The holy Ghost so speaketh in Scripture of God, by way of resemblance of him unto man, that we might the better thereby conceive of his works: for therefore are the parts of mans body ascribed unto God in Scripture, that we might know he doth such works by his divine power, as man doth by the parts of his body. Man sheweth his strength and valour in his arme; and by resemblance unto man, God is said to have an Arme, to note out his power and valiant acts. And so God is said to have eyes, because wee should conceive that by his infinit wisdome he seeth all things more clearely, than man doth any thing at noone day, with his bodily eyes. And so of the rest.

But Moses is said, to talke with God face to

D face, and to see his backe-parts, Exod. 33. 11. 23. Answer. This imports not, that hee saw the substance of God; but onely that God did after a familiar manner reveale himselfe unto him, and in some resemblance shew him his glory, so farre forth as Moses was able to behold it: for the Text is plaine, My face cannot bee seene. There shall no man see me and live: vers. 20.

Here we learne, that when we pray to God, wee must not conceive of him by any forme or image in our mindes; for so we make an idoll of God. Quest. What then must we doe? for how (will some say) can I pray to him, and not thinke of him? Answ. When we thinke of God, or pray unto him, wee must conceive of him in our mindes, as hee hath revealed himſelfe in Scripture; that is, by his workes, and by his properties: we muſt thinke in our mindes of an eternall eſſence, moſt holy, wiſe, &c. who made all things, and governes them by his mighty power. For every image to reſemble God by, either to the minde, or to the eye, is a plaine lie; making him viſible, who is inviſible: as ſaith the Prophet Hab. 2. 18. The image, what profiteth it, for it is a teacher of lies? Which flatly overthroweth the opinion and practice of the Romiſh Church, who reſemble the true God, even God the Father, and the holy Trinity, in images: what elſe doe they herein, but make a lie of God?

in

But the Papiſts ſay, they deviſe no image to reſemble God in, but onely ſuch whereby hee hath ſhewed himſelfe, as the Scriptures teſtifies: as the Father, like an old man; the Sonne, as he was incarnate; and the holy Ghoſt, like a dove, Matth. 3. 16. Anſw. We muſt not conceive of thoſe formes, of an old man, or of a dove, to have beene ever any image of the Father, or of the holy Ghoſt: but onely ſignes and pledges for a time, whereby thoſe perſons did then manifeſt their preſence. Now, there being an expreſſe commandement againſt all repreſentation of God by images, not excepting thoſe very ſhapes, whereby it pleaſed God for a time to ſignifie his preſence; it muſt needs be idolatrous preſumption to make any image of God, or of the Trinity. And indeed God being inviſible (as the text ſaith) it is impoſſible to make any true image or reſemblance of him.

Verſe 28.

By faith hee ordained the Paſſeover, and the effuſion of bloud: leſt hee that deſtroyed the firſt borne, ſhould touch them.

IN the former verſes, the author of this Epiſtle hath ſhewed unto us the notable faith of Moſes by two worthy acts: 1. His refuſing to be called the ſonne of Pharaohs daughter. 2. His departing out of Ægypt. Now here in this verſe he commends his faith unto us by a third action, which is, the ordination, or celebrating of the Paſſeover. This verſe is the ſumme of the 12. Chap. of Exodus: the effect whereof is this: After that God had ſent nine ſeverall plagues upon the land of Ægypt, which were occaſions to harden Pharaohs heart: at laſt he ſends Moſes to certifie Pharaoh, that unleſſe hee would let the people goe, hee would ſend a tenth plague, which ſhould bee more grievous to them, than all the former: even the ſlaughter of all the firſt borne in Ægypt, both of man and beaſt. Yet Pharaohs heart was not ſoftned, neither did he let the people goe. Therefore Moſes departed from him, and (according to Gods commandement) aſſembles the Elders of Iſrael together, and cauſeth them to kill every man a lambe of a yeare old, and to eat it roſt with fire; and to take the bloud, and ſprinkle it upon the doore-cheekes, and upon the poſts of their houſes, for a ſigne unto them, that the Angell of the Lord (ſeeing the bloud ſprinkled upon their doores) ſhould paſſe over them, and touch none of their firſt borne, neither man nor beaſt. This is the ſumme and meaning of the hiſtory. Now let us come to the conſideration of this fact more particularly: and firſt, to the meaning of the words of this verſe, becauſe there is ſome difficulty in them.

B Through faith he ordained the Paſſeover.

The Paſſeover here named, may be thus deſcribed. It is one of the Sacraments of the old Teſtament, ſerving for a ſigne to the people of Iſrael, both of their temporall deliverance from the bondage of Ægypt, and from the ſlaughter of their firſt borne: and alſo of their ſpirituall deliverance from everlaſting death, by the ſacrifice of Chriſt Ieſus the immaculate Lambe of God.

Touching this deſcription: firſt, I call it one of the Sacraments of the old Teſtament: becauſe they had beſide this, Circumciſion, another ordinary Sacrament. Next I ſay, it ſerved for a ſigne to the people of Iſrael, to ſhew that it was properly a Sacrament unto them. For this is the nature of a Sacrament, to ſignifie and ſeale up ſome bleſſing of God to his people: now that the Paſſeover did ſo, is plaine, when the Lord cals it a ſigne or token of deliverance unto them. But ſome will ſay, this Paſſeover was a ſacrifice: for ſo it is called. That is the ſacrifice of the Lords Paſſeover. And, Thou ſhalt not offer the bloud of my ſacrifice with leavened bread, &c. Anſ. It is called a ſacrifice, becauſe it was killed, and the bloud thereof was ſprinkled, and ſome part of it, as the fat, with the two kidnies, were burnt in ſacrifice to the Lord. For when Ioſias kept that famous Paſſeover with all the people, the Prieſts that ſlew the Paſſeover, and ſprinkled the bloud thereof, did firſt take away that which was to be conſumed with fire, and then gave to the people according to the diviſions of their families, as Moſes appointed. Now in regard of theſe properties of a ſacrifice which were in the Paſſeover, it is truly called a ſacrifice. And yet more properly it was a Sacrament, becauſe it was a viſible ſigne of ſpeciall bleſſings from the Lord.

But what did this Sacrament of the Paſſeover ſignifie? Anſ. It did ſignifie a double deliverance: one temporall, as well from the deſtroying Angell, as alſo from the bondage of Ægypt; The other Spirituall, from the curſe of the Law, and from the wrath of God. The firſt is plaine, where the Lord ſaith, The bloud being ſprinkled upon the doore-poſts, ſhall be a token for you that I will paſſe over you. And ver. 13. Ye ſhall shall keepe the feast of unleavened bread: for this same day will I bring your Armies out of the land of Ægypt. And touching the second, that it was a signe of a more heavenly deliverance from the bondage of sin and Satan, Paul teacheth us plainly, when as he saith, Christ our Passeover is sacrificed for us: giving us to understand, that the Paschall Lambe in the old Testament, was undoubtedly a true signe of the true Paschall Lambe Christ Jesus: to which purpose Iohn Baptist saith, Behold the Lambe of God that taketh away the sinnes of the world: Joh. 1. 29. Where he calleth Christ the Lambe of God, making there an opposition betweene him and the Paschall Lambe of Moses, which may be called the Paschall Lambe of man; for herein also they differ. The Paschall Lamb was separated by men, though by Gods appointment; but Christ the true Lambe of God, was set apart before all worlds by God the Father. And thus we see briefly what this Passeover is.

2 Chron. 35. 12.

Exod. 12. 13.

It followeth, Ordained the Passeover. The word translated, ordained, signifieth, He made, or, did celebrate: for the better understanding whereof, we must have recourse to the Evangelists. Matthew setteth downe Christs speech to his Disciples about the Passeover, which hee kept with them a little before his passion, thus: My time is come, I will make my Passeover at thine house. Now S. Luke, repeating the same Story, mentioneth first the killing, and then the eating of it: by which two words hee explaineth what Christ meant by making (which here is translated ordaining) the Passeover; to wit, first, the killing and preparing of the Paschall Lambe, and then the eating of it as the Lords Sacrament. But this is a strange kinde of speech (will some say): how can the Passeover be killed or eaten? seeing properly the Passeover is nothing else, but the act of the Angell passing over the houses of the Israelites, when hee smote the first borne in every house of the Ægyptians. Ans. The phrase is improper: yet it must not seeme strange, because it is usuall in Scripture, intreating of the Sacraments, sometime to give the name of the signe to the thing signified: as 1 Cor. 10. Christ is called our Passeover; and on the other side, to give the name of the thing signified to the signe: as in this place, he ordained the Passeover; that is, the Paschall Lamb, which was a signe of the Angels passing over their houses. So, This is my body, that is, a signe of my body. The rocke was Christ. The reason of these figurative speeches, whereby one thing is put for another, is the Sacramentall union of the signe with the thing signified: which yet is not naturall according to place, either by change of the signe into the thing signified, or by including the thing signified in the signe, or fastning it upon it; but respective and analogicall, by reason of that agreement and proportion which is betweene the signe and the thing signified: which stands in this, that looke when

1 Cor. 5. 7.

Matth. 26. 18. Luke 22. 7, 11.

Matth. 26, 28. 1 Cor. 10. 4.

A the outward signe is presented to the outward senses, at the very same time the thing signified is thereby, as by certaine visible words, presented to the minde. And indeed looke what conjunction is betweene words, and the things spoken of, in the minde of the understanding hearer; the same is betweene Sacramentall signes, and the things signified, in the minde of a discerning receiver. But when words of sense are spoken to the eare, the understanding minde doth therewith apprehend the thing spoken of. And even so the mind of the discerning receiver doth inwardly apprehend the thing signified; and apply it to his soule, when the Sacramentall signe is presented to the outward sense. And this conjunction ariseth not from the nature either
B of the signe, or the thing signified; but from the institution of the Lord. The meaning then of the holy Ghost here is this, That Moses by faith did ordaine and appoint the killing and eating of the Paschall Lambe, which was the signe of the passing over of the Lords Angell, when the first borne in Ægypt were slaine.

It followeth: And effusion of bloud; that is, the sprinkling of the bloud of the Paschall Lambe; which was a notable rite and ceremony used in this first Passeover, after this manner; The bloud of every Lambe was put into a bason, and sprinkled with a bunch of Hyssope upon the doore-posts of every mans house among the Jewes. Now this rite did not continue alway, but was peculiar and proper to this
C first Passeover kept in Ægypt at the institution thereof, being then practised (but not after) in regard of that speciall deliverance then at hand, whereof it was an assurance: for it signified unto them, that the Angell of the Lord, comming to destroy the first borne of Ægypt, and seeing that bloud so sprinkled, should passe over their houses, and touch none of their first borne, of man nor beast. This end of the sprinkling of this bloud, is here likewise set downe in these words; Lest hee that destroyed the first borne, should touch them. Hee: that is, the Angell of the Lord, who was sent to destroy the first borne throughout all Ægypt both of man and beast, save onely of those who had their doore-posts sprinkled with bloud. And thus
D much for the meaning of the words.

First, observe what the holy Ghost saith of this fact of Moses, in ordaining the Passeover: namely, that he did it by faith. Hence we learne, that the Sacraments of the new Testament must be celebrated in faith: for herein we are to seeke to be acceptable to God as Moses was. The Lords Supper in the new Testament succeedeth the Passeover in the old: for, that was a signe to the Jewes, that Jesus Christ the immaculate Lambe of God, should afterward be sacrificed for their sinnes; and this is to us a signe of Christ already sacrificed. Now looke as that was ordained and received under the Law, so must this be administred and received under the Gospell. But in the old Testament Moses cele*celebrates the Passeover through faith*, and enjoynes the Israelites soe doeg, therefore accordingly must wee by faith celebrate and receive the Lords Supper under the Gospell. Cains sacrifice was fruitlesse to him, and odious to God, because hee offered not in faith; and so were all other faithlesse sacrifices, even every Sacrament and spirituall sacrifice received or offered in time of the Gospell, is unprofitable to man, and unacceptable unto God, if it be not received in faith. In every Sacrament we receive something from God, as in every sacrifice we give something to God. In the Lords Supper, as the Minister gives the bread and wine into the hand of the receiver, so the Lord God gives his sonne unto their hearts. Now if faith bee wanting, Christ crucified is not received: for faith is the hand of the soule, without which there is no receiving of Christ and his benefits; but contrariwise, an heavy and fearefull sinne, heaping up Gods wrath against us. Hereby wee learne, how sundry sorts of people sinne most grievously against God: for many come to receive the Lords Supper, who are altogether ignorant in the use and use thereof, not knowing what the Sacrament meaneth; and yet because it is a custome in the Church, they will receive at least once a yeare, though they know nothing touching what they ought. Now such persons must know they ought to make tryall by which they cannot doe, because they want knowledge: and therefore in receiving it so, they commit a grievous sinne, and so indanger their owne soules, because they receive it unworthily. And this is not the fault of young ones only, but of many, whose yeares might shame them for their ignorance, if they were not past all feeling of spirituall wants. A second sort there are, who receive the Lords Supper, and say they will doe so, because they have faith. But those are like the former: for their faith is nothing but honest dealing among men; thinking that if they bring that to the Lords Supper, though they have no more, yet all is well. The greatest sort are of this minde, taking fidelity for true faith: and it is a plaine point of Popery, so common, as almost in every place men doe embrace it. But these deceive themselves; for another kinde of faith is required of those that receive the Lords Supper worthily; namely, such a faith whereby wee doe not onely believe the remission of sinnes in Christs bloud, but also are assured, that the bread and wine received worthily, are signes and seales of the same blessing exhibited unto us by Christ. He that comes onely in a good meaning, deceives himselfe, and receives to his condemnation. And yet alas, many even of the ancient sort, have no other faith, but their good meaning.

A third sort there are, who yet goe further, and knowing the vanity of this opinion, that a mans fidelity in his dealing with man should be his faith to commend him unto God, they hold and know, that true faith is to believe their owne salvation in the bloud of Christ: and these are to be commended in respect of the former. But herein they faile; that coming to receive, they bring not with them a lively faith: for it is not onely required in a communicant, that he professe the faith of Christ aright, but also worthily to receive, he must looke to his owne heart, that his faith therein be a living faith, such as worketh by love, and shewes it selfe by obedience. Alas, alas, many that have good knowledge doe grievously offend. That now is forcerers, make a shew of faith, in their devout and religious carriage of themselves in the Communion day: yea when (that time is a little past) they returne to their former sinnes againe, never caring, (nay, not so much as making any shew of caring) to lay away their sinnes, save only at the receiving of the Lords Supper. And thus doe too many of those who make a fine profession. These may bring faith in profession, but yet their faith is dead, for if it were a lively faith, it would purifie their hearts, and cause a change in them from evill to good, and from good to better, every day more and more. But blessed bee God, by whose mercy it comes to passe, that there are some in his Church, who come with such a faith, and thereby communicate acceptably to God, and fruitfully to themselves. Yet we must confesse they are but few in comparison. But as for all the other three sorts of people, they come unfaithfully, because they bring not the meanes of a lively faith, to receive those things which their God offereth unto them. We are therefore in this example admonished to celebrate and receive the Lords Supper in such sort, as Moses did: namely, in faith, and not rest in a dead, but in a lively faith: which may both before and after the receiving of this Sacrament, bring forth good fruits to the reforming of our lives, in continuall obedience of Gods glory, and our owne comfort and salvation in Christ.

2. Observe further, Moses ordained and made the Passeover. We may not think, that Moses killed all the Lambes that were to bee slaine at this Passeover, but in his owne family he killed his owne lambe, and injoyned the people from God, to doe the like in theirs. The like phrase is often used in the Scripture. Joshua 5. 3. Iosuah is said to circumcise the sonnes of Israel: which was almost a thing impossible for one man to doe. But the meaning thereof is this: that Iosuah injoyned and procured that all the people should bee circumcised, and saw it done. And so we must understand this place.

Now in this that Moses did in this manner celebrate this Passeover, we are taught this lesson: that Governours and superiours in their place, must procure, that those which bee under their government, doe keep the commandements of God, and especially those which concerne Gods worship. It is the commandement of the Lord by Moses, that the King should have the Law written, that he may learne to feare his God, and keepe all the words of this Law written, to doe them. Now, how shall the King doe all the words of the Law? seeing there be many commandements that doe not concerne him, nor his place, but his subjects, and other particular men of their callings. Surely thus: He must doe those in his owne person, that concerne him in his place, and then see that his subjects and servants doe likewise such duties both towards God and man, as concerne them in their places. This is a speciall point concerning all Magistrates and Superiours whatsoever: and therefore Paul saith, Rom. 13. 4. The Magistrate beareth not the sword for nought, but for the terrour of Gods people: that is, for their good, not in body onely, but principally for the good of their soules. And therefore every Governour, either of province or kingdome, and every Master of a family, within the compasse of his calling, is to see that those which are under him keepe Gods commandements, especially, those that concerne Gods worship. When a Magistrate shall doe this, then the praise and honour of the whole is given to him; as here the killing of the Passeover is ascribed to Moses, because he saw that the people did it. So on the contrary, if the Magistrate bee negligent in his duty, hee becomes the greatest sinner of all: for then the sinnes that are committed through his default, are ascribed to him. Nehemiah reproving the Rulers, tells them that they brake the Lords Sabbaths, Nehem. 13. 15. when as not onely they, but the people also brake them: yet there hee charged the sinne of the people upon them, because it came through their negligence. As if any sinne bee committed in a familie, through the defect of the Governour of the familie, it is not onely the sinne of the particular parties, but the Governours sinne. And so, when any man sinnes in breaking the Sabbath, it is not onely the sinne of that particular man, but of the Governours to whom he is subject. And therefore Governours must see that Gods commandements be kept of those that be under their government. But here some may object (as indeed some abuse the place to this end) that it seemes no man may be barred from the Lords Supper: for the like reason is in the Lords Supper, that was in the Passeover: but Moses kept the Passeover himselfe, and commanded all the people of Israel so to doe: therefore no man is to be put from Gods table. Answ. It is true indeed, that in Egypt at the celebration of the first Passeover, Moses kept it himselfe, and commanded every Master of a family among the Israelites to doe the same: and the reason hereof was, because at the first institution the Passeover was both a signe and a meanes of a temporall deliverance, besides the spirituall: and therefore there was great reason then, why all the Israelites should eat the Passeover, and none be put backe, because all of them were to escape the temporall punishment, which God was to inflict upon the Egyptians. But afterward the Lord made a Law, that if any were but legally uncleane, hee might not eat the Passeover, but must stay till the next moneth, and then come, and onely the cleane must eat thereof: so that the Lord himselfe did inhibit some from that Sacrament: whereby it is plaine, that the celebration of the Passeover is so farre from giving warrant to that confusion, and carelesse admitting of all to the communion, that rather it proveth that there must be a distinction made, and a separation of the unworthy from the Lords Table. Those which are fitly prepared are to be received, but notorious offenders, who are morally and spiritually uncleane, are to bee put backe, till by repentance they have testified their worthinesse.

Moses saith.

1 Cor. 5. 7.

Luk. 22. 14.

Let us consider the signification of the Passeover. For the Paschall Lambe was a signe of Christ the true Lambe of God, shadowing out divers things worthy our observation: as first the Lambe, for the Passeover was to be a Lambe of a yeare old, without spot or blemish: which signified unto us, that Christ was that immaculate Lambe of God and without spot, as Peter calleth him, 1 Pet. 1. 19. Secondly, the Paschall Lambe when he was killed and eaten, had no bone of it broken: so was it commanded, Exod. 12. 46. and Numbers 9. 12. signifying, that Christ when he was crucified, should not have a bone of him broken, as Saint John applieth the former Text, Joh. 19. 36. Thirdly, the Paschall Lamb must be eaten with sowre herbs, Exod. 12. 8. signifying that no man can feele any sweetnesse in the bloud of Christ, till he have his heart full of bitternesse for his sinnes, and with Hanna be sore vexed and troubled in minde, so as he can powre out his soule before the Lord, 1 Sam. 1. 15. The want of this is the cause why so many doe heare Gods word, and receive the Sacraments, and yet reape no benefit by them. Fourthly, before the Paschall Lambe was eaten, all leaven must bee removed out of their houses. This had a notable signification: which wee need not to ghesse at, seeing the holy Ghost hath set it downe; namely, that we must remove all old leaven of corruption (Matth. 16. 12.) out of our hearts: and the leaven of sinne and wickednesse, out of our lives, if we professe communion with Christ. This is a point worth our marking: for unlesse we doe so, wee shall have no benefit by the sacrifice of Christ: for if we will live in this old leaven, we must never looke to receive Christ into our hearts. Lastly, every person receiving the Passeover in hast, with shooes on their feet, with staves in their hands, and their clothes girt up, Exod. 12. 11. yet this wee must understand onely of the first Passeover in Egypt: for Christ did eate sitting. Now this ceremony used in the first Passeover, signified thus much; that if we looke to have benefit by Christ, we must be of this minde to be alwaies ready to leave this world, and bee prepared to goe when and whither God shall call us. Wee must not have our hearts glued to earthly things, but alwaies ready to receive Gods command, and to goe at his call. These be the significations of the Passeover: which we must remember to make good use of in the course of our lives. And thus much of the first branch of this act of Moses faith, in ordaining the Passeover.

Christ,

The second branch of this worke is this, And the effusion of blood: that is, the sprinkling of the blood of the Lambe upon the posts of their houses, and upon the doore checks, which was a token to the Israelites, that the destroying Angell should not strike the first borne of the Israelites either man or beast. In mans reason this may seeme to bee a weake and simple meanes: yet God ordaines it to preserve all the first borne among the Israelites. And thus the Lord useth to deale, that his people, through the weakenesse of the meanes, might bee brought to acknowledge God to be their protector and defender. When the Israelites were stung with the serpents, a man would have thought it had beene the best way for their curing, to have given them cunning Surgeons: but the Lord ordaines onely a dead Serpent of braſſe which they must looke up unto, and bee cured. A weake meanes it was, and yet the Lord useth it, because he would have them to give all the glory unto him, and not to attribute the same either to themselves or to the meanes.

Further, this sprinkling of the blood upon the doore checks, and the posts of their houses, had a notable signification: namely, of the sprinkling of the blood of Christ upon the doores of our hearts: to which Peter alludeth, 1 Pet. 1. 2. Through the obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Iesus Christ. And David, when he saith, Sprinkle me with Hyssope, and I shall be cleane: David knew well that the blood of beasts could not take away sinne, and therefore no doubt by his saving faith, hee had a reye to the blood of the Messias under legall termes. Whence we are taught this lesson: that as the Israelites with their bodily hands did sprinkle the blood of the Paschall Lambe upon their doore checks, and the posts of their houses: so by the hand of faith, every one of us must sprinkle the blood of Christ upon our owne hearts: which wee shall then doe when wee doe not onely in generall beleeve that Christ is a Saviour and Redeemer, but particularly that he is a Redeemer unto us; and that the merits of his death, and the benefit of his blood are ours.

Object. But some will say, If this be so, then all is well, for I doe beleeve this. Ans. Herein very many deceive themselves, thinking that they have faith, when indeed they have none. For looke unto their waies, and see into their hearts by their lives; and it will easily appeare, that they have nothing in them but ignorance, security, and presumption of sinne. Now such men are deceivers of their owne soules; for after this sprinkling followeth sanctification, and rising from dead workes to newnesse of life: so that they that live in sinne, and yet say they have faith, deceive themselves. For if a mans heart bee sprinkled with the blood of Christ through faith, it will change his life and conscience, and make him a new creature; for Christs blood is a cleansing and purifying blood, inasmuch as where it is truly sprinkled, it certainly cleanseth. 1 Iohn. 1. 7. And thus much of this ceremony of sprinkling.

Now followeth the end of both these actions in these words, Lest he that destroyed the first borne should touch them. Let us examine the words in order. First, by the destroyer is meant the Angell of God, as we may see in the story, Exod. 12. 29. who at midnight smote all the first borne of Egypt both of man and beast. Where by the way we may take a view of the wonderfull power and strength of Gods Angells, and also of their admirable vertuelesse and readinesse in doing the will of God, that in one night, even at midnight, one of them could passe thorow the land of Egypt, and kill all the first borne of man and beast, in every place of the Egyptians. The like wee may see in the destruction of Sennacharibs host, by one Angel in one night.

The first borne: that is, both of men and beasts. So it is in the story, Exod. 12. 29. But being so, it may not unfitly bee demanded, How this Passe-over could bee a Sacrament when as even the beasts of the Israelites had benefit by it; for they were spared by reason of this sprinkling of the blood of the Paschall Lambe, Ans. That hindreth not why it should not be a Sacrament. For we must consider this Passe-over two waies: First, as a meanes of temporall deliverance, and so the beasts had benefit by it. Secondly, as a signe and seale of our spirituall deliverance from hell by the sacrifice of the Lambe of God, Iesus Christ, which is the thing signified, and so it is a Sacrament for mans salvation: and thus the beasts had no benefit by it. The water that flowed from the rocke in the wildernesse was a Sacrament, and the beasts dranke of the water, but yet they did not partake of the Lords Sacrament: for we must consider that water two waies: first, as a meanes to quench thirst, and consequently as an outward benefit to preserve the life of the creature, and so the beasts had a benefit by it; but consider it as a signe and seale of the water of life, and so their beasts had no benefit by it, but onely the beleeving people.

It followeth, Should touch them. Here is the very use and end of both the former actions, That the Angell might not hurt them, but passe by the Israelites houses. Here consider a notable point concerning Christ the true Passeover: namely, that they which have their hearts sprinkled with his bloud, shall bee preserved from everlasting damnation; and not onely so, but hereby they shall have deliverance from all temporall judgements in this life, so farre forth as they are curses and hurtfull unto them. So wee may reade before the destruction came to the citie of the Jewes, the Angel of God went thorow the citie with a writers inkhorne, to set a marke upon those that did mourne and cry for their sinnes. Ezek. 9. 4. And David saith, the righteous man standeth fast as a rocke, so as the floods of many waters shall not come neere him. Psal. 32. 7. This is a point of great use: and the consideration hereof should move all persons that have been careless in religion, now to become carefull and desirous to have their hearts washed in the bloud of Christ; and those also which have any care, must have double care hereof; for they have freedome and security both in temporall and eternall judgements.

Object. But many of Gods deare children are taken away in common judgements. Ans. True: but yet they are never hurt thereby; but the judgement and affliction is sanctified unto them, because they have their hearts sprinkled with the bloud of Christ. And as for those whom God knoweth it good for, they are delivered in generall judgements; and preserved for his glory, and use of the Church.

But how did the Angell destroy the first borne in Ægypt, both of man and beast? Ans. By taking from them their temporall lives, by destroying or killing their bodies. That is the sense and plaine meaning of the holy Ghost: and to this signification answereth the word in the originall. Now some doe abuse this place, and such like, for the overthrowing of the ancient censure of the Church in excommunication: for (say they) the practice of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 5. is the principall ground of excommunication: where Paul bids that the incestuous man bee given to Satan for the destruction of the flesh. Now they that deny excommunication, would have that place to be interpreted by this, because the same word is there used: and therefore (say they) Pauls words must be understood, of destroying the incestuous mans body, and taking away his temporall life. This interpretation doth quite overthrow excommunication: for if nothing else be there understood, but onely the tormenting of the body, then excommunication is not thence proved. But the truth is, that the censure which the Apostle urgeth there, cannot be understood of the punishment of the bodie: which I prove thus. In that place Saint Paul opposeth the flesh and the spirit. Now usually when he maketh this opposition, Flesh signifieth the corruption of the whole man; and the spirit signifieth the grace of God in the man: so that his plaine meaning is this, Let him be delivered to Satan for the destruction of the flesh; that is, for the destruction of his naturall corruption, and of the body of sinne.

A Further, where it is said, the first borne; wee must understand it of the first borne among the Ægyptians, both of man and beast. And whereas he saith, should touch them; hee meaneth the Israelites, who were not touched in this destruction.

Hence we learne two points further: First, the first borne of Ægypt are destroyed, both of man and beast. This is markable: for the Ægyptians in former times destroyed the Israelites children, and especially their first borne; for they slew all the Males, lest they should increase in their land: and now it comes to passe, that their children, even the principall of them, their first borne are slain for the Israelites sakes: and when they are preserved. Where we may B observe a most righteous, and yet an usuall kinde of judgement with God. He doth often punish the wicked in their kind, with their own D sinnes: This is true even in the best, so far forth as they are sinfull. The same injurie which David did to Vriah, was done unto him by his owne sonne, even by his sonne Absalom, 2 Sam. 12. 10, 11. and 16. 22. And this our Saviour Christ teacheth us, saying, (Matth. 7. 1.) Judge not, that ye be not judged. Wee finde this true likewise by experience: that they that give themselves to back-biting, railing, and slandering, by the just judgement of God, have for the most part the same done unto themselves by others: so that men are often punished in their owne sinnes. For God hath his storehouse full C of judgements, and hee can punish men what way he will. But he oft observeth this order, to punish men by their owne sinnes, and to catch the wicked in their owne devices.

This must be a motive to make us to looke unto our selves, and to have care against all sinnes of the second Table: for looke wherein thou takest thy pleasure to Gods dishonour, therein thou shalt feele and see Gods judgements upon thee, to thy correction and confusion. Psal. 109. 17. As he loved cursing, so shall it come unto him: and as he loved not blessing, so shall it be farre from him. This Adonibezek felt and confessed when his thumbs were cut off; Judg. 1. 6, 7. As I have done, so God hath rewarded me.

D Lastly, in that the destroyer killeth the first borne of Ægypt, marke a strange kinde of Gods judgements. King Pharaoh and his people sin, because they will not let the Israelites goe; but the punishment of their sinne is laid upon their children and cattell. The like we reade of 2 Sam. 21. 14. when David had committed those grievous sinnes of adultery and murther, a part of his punishment was the death of his child. When he numbred the people the plague light on them, 2 Sam. 24. Now wee must not too curiously pry into the reason of Gods judgements; for he is not bound to give account of his actions, and yet in reason we may see the equitie thereof. For wee must consider of kingdomes and societies, and of townes and families, families, as of bodies; every ſociety is a body, and the particular perſons therein are members of that body. Now looke, as it is in the naturall bodie, ſo it is in the body civill or politike: Oftentimes in the naturall body, when the ſtomacke is ſicke, the head aketh; the braine is wounded, and the heart aketh; the foot is hurt, and the head aketh; and the offence of the tongue may be puniſhed with ſtripes upon the backe: Even ſo it is in civill ſocieties, the Prince ſinneth, and the people are puniſhed; or the people ſinne, and the Prince is puniſhed. This is no injuſtice with God: for ſith Prince and people make but one body, and ſo Parents and children; God may juſtly lay upon any member the temporall puniſhment of ſinne committed by another. And thus much of this example, and of the faith of Moſes alone.

The Israelites Faith.

VERSE 29.

By faith they paſſed thorow the red Sea, as by dry land: which when the Ægyptians had aſſayed to doe, they were drowned.

HItherto wee have heard the faith of Moſes alone highly commended in two examples. Now followeth a commendation of his faith with others; ſo that here is a new example of faith; to wit, of the Iſraelites together with Moſes. For Moſes is here to be conſidered not onely as one of them, but as a principall agent in this worke of faith. And here their faith is commended unto us by a wonderfull ſtrange action which they did, through the power and goodneſſe of God; namely, by their paſſing thorow the red ſea: not by paſſing over it, for that might have beene by Art; but thorow it: which is above Nature and Art, and meerely miraculous. This fact of theirs is largely ſet downe, Exod. 14. And that it might appeare to bee every way wonderfull, as it is indeed, the Author of this Epiſtle commends it by two circumſtances: which notably ſet forth unto us the ſtrangeneſſe hereof: Firſt, by their manner, how they paſſed thorow; namely, as by dry land. Secondly, by the time when; namely then, when the Ægyptians following them were drowned. Here firſt we will ſpeake of the fact it ſelfe, and then of the circumſtances.

The fact is ſet downe in the firſt words; By faith they paſſed thorow the red Sea. The words are plaine of themſelves, and offer unto us ſundry points worthy our obſervation: And firſt, it may be asked who they were that here paſſed thorow by faith? The anſwer is, the Iſraelites. But ſome will ſay, we reade in the Hiſtory that when the people came to the red Sea they were wonderfully afraid, and murmured againſt Moſes, ſaying, That it had beene better for them to have lived in the bondage of Ægypt, than to come into the Deſart and there die. Now how can they murmure impatiently and fearefully, and yet paſſe thorow by faith? Anſ. At the firſt indeed they murmured, when they ſaw the danger they were in, having the huge army of Pharaoh following them, and the red Sea before them, and hils and mountaines on each ſide. But howſoever they murmured at the firſt, yet when Moſes ſpake words of comfort unto them in the name of the Lord, bidding them not to be afraid, &c. and when hee held up his rod and entred into the red Sea before them, then they followed him by faith: and hereupon the holy Ghoſt gives unto them the title of true beleevers. Exod. 14. 11, 12.

Here we may learne, that true faith in Gods children is mingled with unbeleefe. The Iſraelites faith was true faith, but yet it was very imperfect and weake: for if it had beene perfect and ſound faith, they would never have murmured, nor have beene impatient and fearefull. But looke as it is in nature, ſo it is in grace. In nature we cannot paſſe from one contrary to another, but by the mixture of the contraries: as in light and darkneſſe, the one doth not follow the other immediatly; but firſt, there is a mixture of them both in the dawning of the day, and cloſing of the night: and ſo it is in other contraries, even in thoſe which concerne the ſoule; unbeleefe is a ſinne, faith is a vertue and grace contrary to it. Now unbeleefe cannot be expelled by faith, before there be a mixture of them both, and ſo when faith prevaileth, unbeleefe decaieth: neither can faith bee ever perfect, becauſe it is ever mingled more or leſſe with unbeleefe.

This plainly overthrowes the opinion of the Church of Rome, who ſay, that after a man is regenerate and beleeves, there is nothing in him that God can hate. For they imagine that he is foundly ſanctified, that there is nothing in him which may properly bee called a ſinne: but here wee ſee their doctrine is falſe, ſeeing faith and unbeleefe are alwaies mingled together.

Secondly, as it falls out with faith, ſo it is with the reſt of Gods graces: looke as faith is not perfect, but mixed with unbeleefe; ſo are all all other graces of God whatsoever. The feare of God is not perfect in a man, nor the love of God: for the feare of God is mingled with the feare of men: and the feare of God for his mercy, is mingled with the feare of God for his judgements. And hereby many are deceived; for when they feare God for his punishments, they thinke themselves to bee most miserable and void of grace, but they deceive themselves. For there is no man upon the earth that feareth God onely for his mercies, and doth not feare God also for his punishments in part: for Gods graces in this life are ever mingled with their contraries. And therefore to imagine that a man may feare God for his mercies onely, and not for judgements also, is to conceive of such a man as none is, nor can be in this life; for the best feare that is in any man living, is a mixt feare.

Further, when Moses had spoken words of comfort unto them, the unbeleeving and fearefull Israelites, doe stirre up their hearts to beleeve. So we accordingly must labour and strive against that in-bred unbeleefe which is in us: for every man hath innumerable sinnes in him that resist faith; and if they be not checked and suppressed, they will master his faith; but hee that would have faith to continue and last, must strive against naturall unbeleefe, as the Israelites doe in this place; and as the man in the Gospell, Mark. 9. 24. when hee saith to Christ; Lord, I beleeve, helpe my unbeleefe, knowing that his unbeleefe did suppresse his faith. And so did the Disciples of our Saviour Christ, when they prayed, Lord increase our faith, Luk. 17. 5. And David being oppressed with deadnesse of heart, stirres up his faith, saying, Why art thou cast downe, my soule, &c? wait on God, Psal. 42. 11. For he that hath faith, is troubled with unbeleefe; and the more it troubles him, the lesse he beleeveth, unlesse he strive against it manfully.

2 Quest. But how many of the Israelites beleeved and went over by faith? Ans. Not all: for Paul saith, With many of them God was not well pleased, for they were overthrowne in the wildernesse: 1 Cor. 10. 5. Which shewes, that all that passed over had not true faith; for some beleeved: and by the force of their faith, all went over safely.

Hence we note this (which hath beene often taught us) that an ungodly man receiveth many temporall benefits by the societie of Gods people which beleeve: as here the unbeleeving Israelites had this benefit, to goe thorow the red Sea safely, by reason of those that beleeved. And in the former example, the brute beasts were freed from killing by the Angell, because they belonged to the host of the Lords people. Now shall a brute beast have benefit by being with Gods people, and shall not a man much more? Yes undoubtedly: for so we may reade, that for Pauls sake all the Mariners and Souldiers that were in the Ship, were saved from drowning, Acts 27. 24. This point must perswade every one of us to make choice of the godly for our societie and company, with whom wee live and converse; for by them wee doe reape many benefits, and freedome also from many heavy judgements.

The third point is this: When did the Israelites beleeve? This circumstance is worth the marking: They beleeved when they passed thorow the red Sea: for they beleeved not onely in generall, that God was their God, as hee had promised to their fathers; but they beleeved that God would be with them. And give them life in the middle of the red Sea. A notable point. They beleeved (as it were) in the middle of their graves, (for so might the red Sea be well called) that God would give them life everlasting, and preserve them safely thorow the Sea, and from their enemies.

In their example we are taught the same dutie, to doe as they here did. The childe of God in this life hath innumerable causes of desperation: and sometimes his owne conscience will take part with Satan, in charging the soule to bee in state of damnation. In this heavy case what must be done? Surely at this time, when a man is a cast-away in himselfe, he must even then beleeve: being in hell (as it were) hee must beleeve that God will bring him to Heaven. It is nothing for a man to beleeve in prosperity and peace: But in time of desperation to beleeve, that is a most worthy faith: and indeed, then is the right time for a man to shew his faith, when there is in himselfe no cause of beleeving. Object. But when a man is in this case, he cannot beleeve. Answ. Indeed to beleeve then is a wonderfull hard thing, and a miracle of miracles. But yet this is the property of true faith so to doe; and if there bee but one dram of true faith in the heart that despaires, howsoever it may for a time lie hid as dead; yet at length it will make him to hope, and wait for mercie and life at the hands of Almightie God. And therefore, if it shall please God at any time to lay a torment upon our consciences, so as we shall strive with the wrath of God, thinking that he hath cast us away; yet for all that, then we must beleeve Gods promises, and set before us his mercies, and therewith refresh us. And if this faith were not, the childe of God many times were in a most miserable case: the Lord therefore hath most mercifully provided to helpe him by the grace of faith. When a man is past all hope of life, he must then beleeve and hope for life, as the Israelites did in the red Sea for preservation. And undoubtedly this is a most comfortable signe of grace, if a man in the horrour of conscience can shew forth the least sparke of true faith.

Fourthly, note the effect and issue of this faith; They passed thorow the red Sea. We say usually that water and fire bee unmercifull creatures:

and therefore the naturall man feares them both: but the Israelites faith makes them not to feare the water; but it makes them bold, even to passe thorow the Sea. The like we may see for fire in the three children, Dan. 3. 16, 23. who were not afraid of the hot burning Oven, but were as bold in it as out of it. Ravenous and wilde beasts are terrible unto men: but faith makes a man not to feare them: and therefore Daniel feares not the Lions, though hee were throwne into their den to bee devoured; Dan. 6. 22. Great is the fruit and force of faith: it takes from a man the feare of those creatures which by nature are most terrible. And here wee see a cause why the holy Martyrs of God died most cheerefully. A man would thinke it strange, that one should goe into the fire rejoycing, as many of them did: but the reason is, Because they had faith in their hearts, which taketh away the feare of the most fearefull creature.

But if it be so (may some say) that the Israelites by faith went thorow the red Sea, not fearing the water; why may not wee that beleeve now doe the same? for we have the same faith that they had. Ans. We have indeed the same faith, and yet we cannot passe thorow waters as they did. For their faith rested on two promises: first on this made to Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed: secondly, on a particular promise made to Moses. For when hee commanded him to goe thorow the red Sea, withall he made a promise to keepe and preserve them: and this they beleeved, and so went thorow. Now howsoever wee have justifying faith, having the same generall promise; yet wee have not the like particular promise, That if we passe thorow the red Sea, God will be with us and save us. And therefore, if any man shall adventure to doe so, let him looke for nothing but death; for it is not an action of faith, but of presumption. And therefore Peter sunke when he would needs walke unto Christ upon the Sea, having no such hold upon Gods speciall promise as here they had; and the Ægyptians following presumptuously were all drowned. Wherefore let us here be warned, not to attempt to doe extraordinary workes without Gods speciall warrant: for a particular faith requires a particular promise besides the generall promise of God in Christ.

Further, let us here observe a wonderfull worke of Gods mercy and power. When these servants of God were brought into extremitie of danger, so as they were in a desperate case for their temporall life; yet then the Lord finds a way of deliverance. And indeed, if a man consider aright of it, hee must needs acknowledge that these Israelites were in a pitifull case; for they had the red sea before them, and mountaines on each side, and themselves hindered from flight by their bag and baggage, and with their children, and the huge host of Pharaoh behinde them; so as to mans reason there was nothing but present death to bee looked for; yet the Lord in mercy to save them, makes a way where there was no way, and openeth them a gap to life, when naturall reason could lay before them nothing but violent death. Which shewes the wonderfull mercy of God to his owne people and servants. And the like thing we may reade of David, when he abode in the wildernesse of Maon; for there Saul followed him, and he and his men compassed David and his men round about, 1 Sam. 23. 26, 27. Now what hope of deliverance was there for David? Ans. Surely this only; David was the servant of God, and the Lord preserved him, that he might rule his people after Sauls death; and therefore he escapeth, though wonderfully: for a messenger comes to Saul, and bids him haste, for the Philistims invaded the land; and so Saul returned from pursuing David, and went against the Philistim.

Hence we learne this generall rule, that in the extremitie of all danger, God hath meanes to preserve and save his owne children and people. Which must teach us to commend our case to God, and to rest on him in all dangers: for when our case is desperate in our sight, then are wee fittest for Gods helpe. Let us therefore in such cases learne to practise our faith: and then especially to cast our selves upon God. This Iehoshaphat did most notably: for being assaulted with the huge armies of the Moabites, Ammonites, &c. he prayed unto the Lord most fervently, saying, 2 Chron. 20. 12. Lord, there is no strength in us, wee know not what to doe, but our eyes are towards thee: and thus doing, was preserved: for God will in no extremitie whatsoever forsake them that trust in him.

The red sea. In many places of the old Testament, it is called the sea of rushes, Psalme 106. 7, 9. or the sea of sedges, Jer. 49. 21. It is a corner of the Arabian sea, that parteth Ægypt and Arabia. Those which have seene it in travell, say, it hath no other colour than all other seas have: Why then is it called the red sea? Answ. To omit many supposed causes hereof, there be two especially, for which it is so called. First, because of the red sand: for both the bottome of the sea, and the shore, are full of redder sand than ordinarily is elsewhere. Secondly, Some thinke it is called the red sea, by reason of the sedges and bull-rushes which grow much at the sea side, and bee of a red colour: which by reflection, may make the same colour appeare on the water. But this need not to trouble any man: for the holy Ghost useth the same name which commonly the men of that countrey gave it. And thus much of their fact, that they by faith passed thorow the red sea. Now we come to the two circumstances, whereby it is commended.

The first circumstance is the manner of their going thorow the red sea: they went thorow as on dry land. This must not be conceived to be, be by helpe of Bridge or Ship, nor by meanes which men use, as swimming, sailing, or wading; but their passage was miraculous: for the waters stood like walls on both sides of them. And the channell of the sea was as a pauement or dry land, Exod. 14. 22. which notably setteth forth the strangenesse of this fact, shewing that it was a wonderfull worke of God. And this also confuteth certaine enemies of the Scripture, who have cavilled at all the miracles which are recorded therein, accounting of Moses but as a Magician and Sorcerer, and of the miracles which he did, as of illusions: and for this miracle they make no account of it; for say they, Moses being a great Scholler, and a wise man, knew the time of the rise and fall of the waters, and knew the foords and shallow places: therefore he tooke his time, and found a place so shallow, that when the tide was past, the sands were bare and dry, (as the Marshes in England are) and then hee led the host of Israel thorow. But Pharaoh and his host following them were drowned, because they went thorow at the flowing of the Sea. Answ. Whereas they say that this their passage was no miracle, here wee see it is overthrowne by this circumstance of the manner of their passing over: for the bottome of the Sea was a pavement, and as ground on which no waters fall. Now in most places of the Sea, where the waters ebbe and flow, the ground is never fully dry, but watery and full of moist places.

Againe, the waters passed not away as at an ebbe: but stood as walls on each side of the host of Israel, both on the right hand and on the left: both which shew plainly, there was no vantage taken by the ebbing and flowing of the water, (as ungodly Atheists doe cavill, deriding Gods workes to their owne destruction) but a mighty and miraculous worke of God, first making the waters stand like two walls, and then making the earth under it firme and dry, contrary to nature in them both.

Exod. 14. 22.

The second circumstance is concerning the time when he passed thorow; even then when the Egyptians assaying to doe the same were drowned. Marke the words, for the thing is strange: The Ægyptians come armed after the Israelites with a huge great army. Now the Israelites they take into the Sea, and the Ægyptians seeing them, stand not still upon the banke, but adventure after them, not by Ship, but the same way that the Israelites tooke before them; but yet without any warrant or commandement from God: so great was their malice against them; and yet a man would have thought they durst never have adventured into the Sea after them, especially as they did.

Here by this fact of Pharaoh and his men, we learne, that when God forsakes a man, and leaves him to himselfe, he doth nothing else but run headlong to his owne destruction. God (as Moses saith) raised up Pharaoh to shew his power upon him: and now it pleaseth God to leave

A him to himselfe, and hee pursueth the Israelites to his owne destruction. And this is the course and state of all those that are forsaken of God. The consideration whereof must teach us a speciall clause to be used of us in our prayers: wee must ever remember to pray for this, That God would never wholly forsake us nor cast us off. This condition is more fearefull than the state and condition of any creature in the world besides: for when God forsakes a man, all that he doth, is hastening himselfe to his owne destruction. David knew this well, and therefore he prayes, Oh knit my heart unto thee, that I may feare thy name, Psal. 86. 11. And againe, hee prayeth that the Lord would not forsake him over-long, 119. 8. as if he should say, If it bee
B thy pleasure to try mee by leaving me to my selfe: yet O Lord, let it be but for a while, forsake me not over-long. This is the scope of the sixth Petition, Leade us not into temptation: where we are taught to pray, that God would not forsake us or leave us to our selves, or to the power of Satan; but that he would be with us, and shew his power in our weaknesse continually. And this may enforce us unto this Petition: for the consideration, That men forsaken of God, doe nothing but worke their owne destruction, is many times a cause of great trouble of minde. For some desiring to see such as hang or drowne themselves, by beholding of them get this conceit in their heads, that God will likewise forsake them as he hath
C done these whom they behold; and so shall they make away themselves: whence followeth great trouble and anguish of soule for a long time. Now how must a man or woman in this case helpe themselves? Ans. The best way is by prayer to crave at Gods hands; that he would ever bee with them, and never wholly forsake them. And further, this must bee remembred withall, that God will never forsake any of his servants before they first forsake him: and therefore they that can say truly and unfeinedly that they desire to serve God, and to be his servants, and seeke his blessing by prayer, they may stand fast on this ground, That God wil never forsake them till they first forsake him. And therefore
D Azariah the Prophet saith notably to King Asa, 2 Chron. 15. 2. The Lord will bee with you while you be with him; and if yee seeke him, he will be found of you: but if ye forsake him, he will forsake you. And Iames saith, Draw neere to God, and he will draw neere to you, Jam. 4. 8. It was never heard that God did ever forsake any that did seeke him. And if the causes were knowne why men make away themselves, it would prove (generally) to bee thus, because they first by some fearefull sinnes have forsaken God; and then hee in his justice forsakes them. And therefore they that are troubled with this temptation, must pray earnestly that they may sticke fast unto God by faith and holinesse: and so will hee never forsake them.

Second-

Secondly, in this circumstance, that the Ægyptians following the Israelites were drowned, we have a notable patterne of the state and condition of all persecutors of Gods Church. In Pharaoh and his host we may see their end, which is usually destruction: that is their reward for persecuting Gods Church. Caine slayes Abel that notable servant of God; but his reward was this, hee was cast forth of Gods Church, Gen. 4.11,13. and stricken in Gods just judgement, with finall desperation. Saul persecuted David: but his end was to kill himselfe with his owne sword, 1 Sam. 30.4. And Iesabel, she persecutes the Prophets and children of God; but her end was this, the dogges did eat her flesh. The whole storke of the Herods were great enemies to Christ, but their name was soone rooted out: and Herod called Agrippa, that slew Iames, and persecuted Peter, was eaten up of wormes. Many great Emperours in the Primitive Church were persecutors; but they died desperately. And Iulian, for one, once a Christian, died blaspheming Christ; and casting his blood up towards heaven, cryed, Thou hast overcome, O Galilean, thou hast overcome. And to come neere these times; what reward from God the persecutors of the Church have had, we may reade in the booke of Acts and monuments, which was penned for that purpose. And to come to these our dayes, the whole band of those that call themselves Leaguers, in France, Italie, Spaine, &c. like the Tabernacles of Edom and the Ismaelites, Moab and the Agarims, &c. Psal. 83.5,6. they vow the destruction and persecution of Gods Church: but yet Gods Church stands; and he so contrives the matter, that they draw swords against themselves, and slay and poyson one another. Herein doth God graciously make good his promise to his Church, that the weapons made against her shall not prosper. And Zachariah 12.3. there is a prophecie of the Church in the new Testament: the Lord saith, He will make Ierusalem (that is, his Church) an heavie stone: for all people that lift it up shall be torne, though all the people of the earth be gathered against it: where the Prophet setteth downe notably, what shall be the condition of those that persecute Gods Church: the more they persecute her, the more they shall have Gods hand against them to confound them. Daniel 2.34. There is mention made of a stone hewne out of a rocke without hands, which smote the image upon the feet, which were of iron and clay, and brake them to peeces. By that stone is meant the kingdome of Christ, which shall dash in peeces the kingdomes of the earth, which set themselves against Christ, and his kingdome. For Christ must reigne till he have put all his enemies under his feet: so that destruction is the end of the enemies of Gods Church. For the hand of the Lord shall bee knowne among his servants, and his indignation against his enemies, Isay 66.14. And thus much of the second circumstance.

Now in this whole fact of the Israelites passing through the red Sea, towards the land of Canaan, there is a notable thing signified; namely, Baptisme. So Paul saith, The Israelites were baptized unto Moses in the Sea; 1 Cor. 10.2. Yet we must remember, it was not ordinarie Baptisme, but extraordinarie; never administred before, and never shall be so againe, for ought we know. The minister of this Baptisme, was Moses; an extraordinarie minister, as the Baptisme was extraordinarie. The outward signe was the red sea; or rather the water of the red Sea. The departing of the children of Israel out of Ægypt through the red Sea, signifieth the departing of the children of God out of the Kingdome of darkenesse, from the power of sinne and Satan. And the drowning of Pharaoh with all his host in the red Sea, signified the subduing of the power of all spirituall enemies, with the pardon and death of sinne; which stands partly in the abolishing of sinne, and partly in newnesse of life. And to this alludeth the Prophet Micah, saying, He will subdue our iniquities, and cast all their sinnes into the bottome of the Sea, Mic. 7.19. As if he should say; looke as God subdued Pharaoh, and all his host, in the bottome of the Sea; so will he cast, and put away the sinnes of his people.

From this we learne two points: First, that the Baptisme of infants hath warrant in Gods Word, howsoever some men be of a contrarie opinion: for here we see all the Israelites were baptized in the Sea; and among them no doubt were many children. If it be said, this baptisme was extraordinarie, and is no ground for ours. Answ. True, it was extraordinarie for the manner; but yet herein, the matter and substance, and the thing signified is ordinarie, and the end all one with ours: and therefore the baptizing of infants in the red Sea, is some warrant for the baptisme of infants in the Church now a dayes.

Secondly, here wee may learne another instruction. As the Israelites went through the red Sea (as through a grave) to the promised land of Canaan; so we must know, that the way to the spirituall Canaan, even the kingdome of heaven, is by dying unto sinne. This is a speciall point to be considered of every one of vs: we professe our selves to be Christians, we heare Gods word, and receive the Sacraments, which are the outward badges of Christians, and we perswade our selves of life everlasting after death: well, if we would have that to be the end of our journey, then wee must take the Lords plaine way in this life; which is to die unto all our sinnes. So it is said, They which are Christs, have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts thereof: where this dutie is injoyned to every Christian; hee must crucifie the lusts and affections of the flesh, and not live in sinne. For a man cannot walke in sinne, and so runne the broad way to hell, and yet wait for the kingdome of heaven; these two will not stand together:

together: and therefore, if wee would walke worthy the calling of Christianitie, we must have care that all our sinnes, whether they be of heart or life, little or great, new or old, may be mortified and abolished. Many will for a time become civill, and seeme to be religious, especially when they are to receive the Lords Supper: but when that time of the Sacrament is past, then they returne to their old custome in sinning againe: whereby it appeares, that their change was but in shew, to blinde the eyes of men. And doe wee not each Sabbath professe our selves good Christians, and seeme to glorie in it, by keeping this day with such solemnitie? But alas! as soone as that day is past, many (and some even this day) run into all ryot. This is not Christianitie; this is not the way to heaven: but if ever we thinke to come to Canaan, we must kill and burie our sinnes, we must die unto them; or else we shall never come to the end of Christianitie; namely, eternall life. And thus much of this circumstance, and also of the example it selfe.

Iosvahs Faith.

Verse 30.

By faith the walls of Jericho fell downe, after they were compassed about seven dayes.

From the beginning of this Chapter, to this 30. verse, we have heard two sorts of examples of faith: the first, of beleevers from the beginning of the world to the flood. The second, of such as were from the time of the flood, to the giving of the Law in Mount Sina: and of both these, we have hitherto intreated. Now here, and so forward to the end of this Chapter, is set downe a third order of examples of faith; namely, of such as lived from the time of the giving of the Law, to the time of the reigne of the Maccabees.

This 30. verse containes the first example of this ranke; namely, the example of Iosuahs faith, and of those that went with him into Canaan. And their faith is commended unto us by a notable fact of theirs; the causing to fall the walls of Iericho: the Historie whereof we may reade at large, Josh. 6. The summe of it is this; Whereas the Israelites came unto Canaan, and could not enter into the land, by reason of the strength of Jericho, by which they must needs passe, nor could win it by reason of the huge walls of Jericho; the Lord promiseth to deliver Jericho into their hands: onely the people must doe this; A they must compasse about the walls seven dayes, and carrie the Arke of the Lord with them, sounding with Rammes hornes, and shout, and so the walls should fall downe. Now the Lord having made this promise unto them; the Israelites, and specially Iosuah, obey his commandement, and beleeve his promise: and thus doing, By faith the walls of Iericho fell downe, after they were compassed about seven dayes. Indeed the power of God was the principall cause of this ruine of the walls; but yet because upon their beleeving, God shewed this power, therefore is the downe-fall of them ascribed unto their faith.

Here are many notable points to be learned. First, whereas the Text saith, By faith the walls B of Iericho fell downe; we may observe the wonderfull power of true faith. Iosuah and the Israelites beleeved Gods promises, that he would over-turne the walls of Iericho; and as they beleeved, so it came to passe. So our Saviour Christ saith, Matth. 17. 20. If a man had but as much faith as a graine of Mustard-seed, he shall say unto the mountaine, remove hence, and it shall remove, and nothing shall be impossible unto him: signifying, that by the power of true faith, such things as are impossible unto mans reason, shall bee brought to passe, if God have promised them: as we see in this place, the mightie walls of Jericho fall downe by faith, which to mans reason is impossible. So, the Lord promiseth to Abraham, That he should Gen. 17. 2. & 18. 18. C be the Father of many Nations: yea, that all the Nations of the earth should bee blessed in him. This was strange; but Abraham beleeved it: and as hee beleeved, so it came to passe: for many Nations descended from him: and after the time of Christs ascension, when all the Nations of the World were called to the light of the Gospel, they were blessed in Christ, the promised Seed of Abraham: and therefore is he called the Father of the faithfull in all Nations. And to come unto our selves: To miserable men it may seeme a strange thing, that the power of the Devill, and the strength of the flesh, should bee overcome in us; yet let a man beleeve this promise of God; God so loved the World, that he gave his onely begotten D Sonne, that who so beleeved in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life, John 3. 16. I say, let him beleeve this effectually, and he shall finde by faith the kingdome of sinne and Satan, in his heart and conscience, weakened everie day more and more. And therefore Saint John saith not without cause, This is the victorie that over-commeth the World, even our faith, 1 John 5. 4.

Secondly, here observe, that among the causes of the change and overthrow of Townes, Cities, and Kingdomes, this is one; namely, faith in Gods promises. Many men have written of the change of Kingdomes, and doe give divers reasons thereof: But most of them omit the principall, and that is faith; by vertue whereof many times Kingdomes and Townes are brought to ruine and overthrow. God promiſed to Abraham and to his ſeed, that he would give them the land of Canaan for their inheritance: now, they beleeved this promiſe, and here we ſee it comes to paſſe as they beleeved; Iericho by faith is overturned, and the reſt of their Cities, and the people of Canaan diſpoſſeſſed. So that we ſee, faith in Gods promiſes, is a meanes to Gods people, to overturne Cities and Kingdomes, that are enemies to Chriſt and to his Goſpel. God hath made a promiſe unto his Church, that the whore of Babylon, Revelation 18.2. that is, the Kingdome of Antichriſt ſhall flouriſh for a while, but after it ſhall be deſtroyed; yea, ſuch a ruine ſhall come unto it, that the Kings of the earth, and all great men and Merchants ſhall bewaile the deſtruction thereof. Now this promiſe being received by faith, and beleeved of Gods Church, ſhall undoubtedly come to paſſe. It is in ſome part verified already, (for we ſee, ſome Kingdomes and people have renounced the curſed Doctrine and tyrannie of Rome; and many Chriſtian Princes have already ſhaken off the Popes yoke:) yea, and this promiſe ſhall come to paſſe daily more and more. Let all the Kings of that ſort doe what they can, and let the people ſet themſelves never ſo much againſt Gods Church, yet Babylon ſhall downe: for God hath promiſed ſo to his Church, and his Church beleeveth the ſame; and therefore by their faith it ſhall be brought to paſſe, in deſpite of the Devill.

Thirdly, here we learne, that when any Citie, Towne, or Kingdome, is to make warre either in defence of themſelves, or in lawfull aſſault upon their enemies; a ſpeciall meanes for good ſucceſſe herein, is true faith. Chriſtian policie is a commendable thing in this caſe: but if policie be ſevered from faith, it is nothing. Faith in Gods promiſes of protection and aſſiſtance, doth farre ſurpaſſe all worldly wiſdome. And therefore good King Iehoſaphat, when he was to fight againſt the huge Armies of the Moabites, and Ammonites, gives this counſell to his people, 2 Chron. 20.20. Put your truſt in the Lord your God, and yee ſhall be aſſured: Beleeve his Prophets, and ye ſhall proſper: giving a moſt notable inſtruction, and ſhewing that the beſt helpe for our defence, is faith in God, whereby we reſt upon his Word and promiſe, that he will helpe us: yet this taketh not away the uſe of meanes, but it gives the bleſſing and efficacie unto them. Faith we know, is called a ſhield, among the ſpirituall armour of God, whereby a man awards the blowes of Satan: and though that be the principall vertue of it, yet is it alſo a notable ſhield to defend men, even againſt their outward viſible enemies, and a moſt ſtrong engine againſt them, to worke their overthrow. Hence David ſaith, Hee will not be afraid for ten thouſand of the people, that ſhould beſet him round about. They therefore that would defend themſelves againſt their enemies (yea, and overcome them in lawfull aſſault) muſt embrace and obey true religion; and with Chriſtian policie, joyne faith in Gods promiſes: for by faith we make God our Captaine, and through him we ſhall doe valiantly, and beat downe our enemies on every ſide.

Laſtly, here we may learne, what a vaine thing it is to truſt in outward worldly meanes. The walls of Iericho were both ſtrong and high, and hard it had beene to have overthrowne them by ordinary meanes: but yet we ſee, it proved but a vaine thing to truſt unto them, as the men of Iericho did: for they found but little releefe and defence in them: for the Lord layes them flat to the ground; and ſo the people of Iſrael went ſtraight forward and tooke the Citie. So likewiſe it is a vaine thing to truſt to mans ſtrength, or in the ſtrength of an horſe, or in the number of men, or in riches, or in gifts of wiſdome and learning, or in any other outward meanes whatſoever: the reaſon is, becauſe God can over-turne them with the leaſt breath of his mouth.

Iohuah 6.20.

This muſt admoniſh us, that howſoever we uſe ordinary meanes of our preſervation and helpe, yet ever we muſt caſt our whole care on God, and put all our confidence in him for helpe and ſafetie: for without him all other outward meanes are nothing but vaine helps; For vaine is the helpe of man. And thus much for the fact it ſelfe.

Further, this fact is ſet out unto us by two circumſtances; to wit, by the meanes which they uſed, and by the time which they obſerved for this exploit. For the firſt, when they come to Jericho, this ſtrong Citie, which they muſt needs ſubdue, (or elſe they could not this way enter and poſſeſſe the Land) they doe not goe about to over-turne the Citie by undermining, battering, or ſcaling the walls; but according to Gods appointment, they goe one by one in order round about the Citie walls day by day for one weekes ſpace: and on the ſeventh day, they compaſſe it ſeven times; during all which time they kept great ſilence, ſave onely that ſeven Prieſts ſounded upon ſeven Trumpets of Rammes-hornes before the Arke, till Ioſuah bade them ſhout. Now in common reaſon, a man would judge this rather to be ſome childiſh ſport, than a meanes to fling downe theſe great walls. Nay, conſider it well, and it may ſeeme a courſe tending rather to overthrow themſelves, than the walls of Jericho: for they marched not in battell-ray, as though they would pitch a field againſt the people of Jericho, or lay ſiege to their Citie; but they went in length one before another, ſo as they might compaſſe the Citie about. Now if the men of Jericho ſhould have come forth, and made aſſault upon them, in all likelihood the Iſraelites had beene overthrowne; ſo weake and feeble were the meanes. And yet the Lord for weightie cauſes, preſcribes this courſe unto them: to wit, Firſt, hereby to trie the faith of his people, whether they will beleeve his promises or no, when they are injoyned to use weake and feeble meanes, and in mans reason fooliſh.

Secondly, to make manifeſt in the weakneſſe and inſufficiencie of the meanes, his owne all-ſufficient power and wiſdome, for the furtherance of his glory: for through weakneſſe is Gods power made perfect, 2 Cor. 12.9. Hence our Saviour Chriſt, when he was to cure the man that was borne blinde, tempers clay of ſpittle, and layes it to his eyes, John 9.6. A meanes in common reaſon, rather fit to make a man blinde, than to recover his ſight: and yet Chriſt uſeth it for the furtherance of Gods glory, in the manifeſtation of his divine power, whereby the people might know he was able in himſelfe, to doe whatſoever he would.

Now looke what courſe the Lord here takes for the battering of the walls of Iericho, the like he uſeth in overthrowing the kingdome of the Devill, the ſpirituall Iericho; eſpecially in the new Teſtament. For after Chriſts aſcenſion, when hee intended to deſtroy the kingdome of darkneſſe, under which all the Nations ſate, he ſets apart a few fiſher-men, ſimple perſons, wanting worldly wit and policie, neither did he put a ſword of fleſh into their hands, but the Word of God into their mouthes: and thus ſent them to diſpoſſeſſe the Devill out of all the World, and to batter downe the kingdome of darkneſſe by their preaching. And now in theſe latter dayes, wherein the Antichriſtian kingdome of the Pope had ſpread it ſelfe thorow all places almoſt, God uſed the ſame weake meanes to overthrow it. For he ſet apart a ſilly Monke, and indues him with gifts to preach the truth: by which meanes, the kingdome of Antichriſt received a greater wound, than if tenne Princes had ſet themſelves againſt it. And ſtrange it is to ſee, how God over-turneth all the ſtratagems deviſed againſt his Church, and how he vanquiſheth the power of ſinne, by the weake meanes of the Goſpel preached, and by the prayers of the Church; than which, to the World nothing ſeemes more feeble or fooliſh.

The conſideration hereof, is of ſpeciall uſe: for it may be we ſhall ſee Kings and people of great power and number, to make revolt from the Goſpel of Chriſt, and to fall to Antichriſt, embracing Popery: hereat indeed, wee muſt be grieved, but yet withall, here is good cauſe of comfort unto us; for we muſt know, that Satans kingdome muſt be battered downe, not ſo much by the power of Kings, as by the breath of Gods mouth: not ſo much by the ſword of fleſh, as by the ſword of the ſpirit. So it is ſaid, that the man of ſinne, even Antichriſt muſt be aboliſhed: not by the power of Princes; yea, let all the Princes and Potentates in the World doe their beſt for him, yet his kingdome muſt downe in Gods good time: for God will conſume him with the breath of his mouth, and aboliſh him by the brightneſſe of his comming, 2 Theſ. 2.8. that is, by the preaching of the Word, in the mouths of his Miniſters, who are men void of all worldly power and policie.

Yet further, obſerve the meanes. They walke about the walls of Iericho ſeven dayes together. If men ſhould attempt the like enterpriſe at this day, in all likelihood it would coſt them their lives; for now there are deviſed ſuch inſtruments of warre, I meane great Ordnance, and field-peeces, that will kill afarre off: and undoubtedly, if there had beene ſuch inſtruments of warre in this Citie, the Iſraelites could not ſo ſafely have compaſſed the walls ſo many dayes together. Whereby it appeares more than probable, that in thoſe dayes there were no gunnes knowne; no not amongſt the heathen, which at this day are ſo rife amongſt Chriſtians. Whence may be gathered, that theſe latter dayes are perillous times; for now mens heads are ſet to deviſe more hurtfull meanes againſt the life of man, than ever the ſavage heathen knew. For beſide the invention of gunnes, which put downe all evidence of proweſſe and valour ſeene in ancient warres; our age exceeds in contriving ſuch ſtrange kindes of poyſons, as were never knowne in former times. For men have now deviſed poyſon of that ſort, that will kill a man, not preſently, but a weeke, or a moneth, or a quarter of a yeare after; as appeares by the confeſſion of thoſe, that have given themſelves to ſtudie and practiſe ſuch hurtfull devices. And it is worth the marking, that the principall inventors and practicers of ſuch hurtfull inventions have beene of the Romiſh religion.

The ſecond circumſtance to be obſerved, is the Time of this exploit. It was not on any of the ſix dayes, but on the ſeventh; and that after they had that day compaſſed the Citie about ſeven times: then when the Prieſts blew the Trumpets, and all the people ſhouted as Ioſuah bade them, the walls of Jericho fell downe; for this was the time which God had appointed for this exploit. The reaſon why God appointed ſeven dayes, and ſeven times compaſſing on the ſeventh day, is not revealed unto us in the word of God: and therefore we may not curiouſly prie into it, nor yet (as ſome doe) hence gather, that ſeven is a perfect number. But from the conſideration of the very time wherein the walls fell downe, we may learne this; that if we would have God to accompliſh his promiſes unto us, wee muſt wait for that time and ſeaſon which he hath appointed: we muſt not thinke that God will accompliſh them when we appoint. But we muſt beleeve Gods promiſe, and alſo wait his good leiſure, and then will it come to paſſe. The Iſraelites compaſſed about Jericho one day, and the walls never ſtirre; yea, they doe ſo ſix dayes together, and ſix times more on the ſeventh day, and yet they ſtand faſt: The reaſon is; Becauſe Gods appointed time was not yet come. But on the ſeventh day, when they had compaſſed them about the ſeventh time, time all the people gave up the shout, and then they fell downe; because that was the particular set time, wherein God would accomplish his promise.

Further, whereas they compasse about the walls seven dayes together; it must needs be, that they went about them on the Sabbath day, for that was one of the seven. Now here a doubt ariseth: for this was a servile worke upon the Sabbath, contrarie to Gods commandement; which injoyneth so strict a rest upon the Sabbath day, that they might not kindle a fire thereon: how then could they lawfully compasse the Citie on the Sabbath day? Answ. All Gods Commandements in the morall Law, must be understood with this exception; Thou shalt doe thus and thus, unlesse I the Lord command thee otherwise: for God is an absolute Lord, and so above the Law; and therefore may lawfully command that which the Law forbiddeth. In the second commandement he saith, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any graven Image, &c. and yet Moses by Gods speciall appointment set up a brasen Serpent, which was a figure of Christ. Upon such a speciall command, Abraham lawfully offers to kill Isaac; the Israelites at their departure spoile and rob the Ægyptians: and Iosuah with the people, here compasse the walls of Jericho on the Sabbath day.

RAHABS Faith.

VERSE 31.

By faith Rahab the harlot perished not, with them which obeyed not, when shee had received the Spies peaceably.

IN this verse the holy Ghost proceeds further, in declaring the power of faith; and for this end, commends unto us the Faith of Rahab. The words containe the summe and abridgment of the second and sixth chapters of Iosuah: the meaning of them is plaine.

The points herein to be considered, are three: 1. The person beleeving; to wit, Rahab. 2. The reward of her faith given by Iosuah: She perished not, but was preserved in the destruction of Iericho. 3. The testimonie of her faith, so called by S. Iames 2.25. and set downe in the end of this verse, When she had received the Spies peaceably.

For the person: Rahab was a woman of Canaan, dwelling in Jericho; as we may reade, Iosuah 2. there she lived and had her abode: she was no Israelite, but a forreiner in regard of her birth, and a Stranger from Gods Church. How then comes it to passe, that she is commended for her faith, and here put into the Catalogue of these renowned beleevers? Why are not the rest of the Canaanites preferred to this honour as well as she? Answ. We must know this, that from the beginning of the World to the time of Christs ascension, the Church of God was small; sometime shut up in some few families, as from the flood, to the giving of the Law; and after limited to a small Kingdome and people in the Land of Canaan, where the Lords people dwelt. During which time, all other Nations and people of the world, besides this little companie, were no people of God, but strangers from the Covenant of promise, and (as Paul saith) Without God in the world. Ephes. 2.12. And how soever Gods Church was thus shut up, as it were in a corner; yet now and then it pleased God to reach out his mercifull hand to some of the heathen, calling them into his Church, and receiving them into his Covenant: and they are called in the new Testament, Proselites. In Abrahams family, his bond-men and servants were circumcised, Genes. 17.27. and made members of the Church of God. And in Moses dayes, Iethro Moses father in law, a Priest of Midian, obtained this at Gods hands, to be joyned unto Gods Church: Exod. 18.11,12. and so was Ruth the Moabite, Ruth 1.16. and Naaman the Assyrian, 2 Kings 5.17. and as some thinke Nebuchadonozer, Daniel 4.2. but that is not so certaine. And so was the Eunuch of Ethiopia, Candaces the Queene of Ethiopias chiefe governour, Acts 8.27. Now as God in mercie dealt with these, so did he in like mercie call Rahab the harlot above all the people of Jericho: for they trusted to their strong walls, and therefore died: but Rahab beleeved, that the God of Israel was the true God, and so had mercie shewed unto her. Now after the time of Christs ascension, God dealt more bountifully with the world: for he sent the light of his Gospel into all Nations: and (as the Scripture saith) their sound went thorow all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world, Rom. 10.18.

The consideration of this limited estate of the Church of God for so long a time, serves to discover unto us the errour of those, that maintaine and hold universall calling of all and every man to the estate of grace and salvation: but if that were so, then in former ages the Gentiles would have beleeved; whereas we see, that before the ascension of Christ, the Church of God was but a small remnant, among the people of the Jewes onely: and not one of ten thousand beleeved among the Gentiles. Now if all men had beene effectually called, then all would have received the promise of the Gospel: but many Nations in former ages never heard of Christ: and therefore there was never in all ages a generall effectuall calling of all men.

Object. Paul saith, God reconciled the world unto himselfe by Christ, 2 Cor.5.19. and if that be so, then he called all men effectually. Ans. We must understand the Apostle according to his meaning: for Rom.11.15. hee expounds himselfe, and shewes what he meanes by the world; saying, That the falling away of the Iewes, is the reconciling of the world: which cannot be understood of men in all the ages, but in the last age of the world after Christs ascension, wherein God offered to all the World life everlasting by Christ.

Further, Rahab is here noted by a notorious vice, she is called an harlot; whereby she was infamous among the men of Jericho. Certaine of the Iewes which are enemies to the new Testament, say, That the Author of this Epistle, and S. Iames doe great wrong unto Rahab for calling her an harlot: for (say they) in Iosuah she is called but a Tavernar or Hostesse.

Answ. We must know that the word which is used in Iosuah, signifieth two things; a Tavernar, and an harlot. Now take the word properly, as it is generally used in the old Testament, and then most commonly it is put for an harlot. And therefore in the new Testament, Rahab hath no wrong done her by this title. For it is the thing that Iosuah intended, to shew what an one she had beene: and therefore in speaking of her to the spies, he bids them goe into That harlots house, Iosuah 6.22. using such an Article as implies, that she had beene infamous and notorious in that kind. And yet we must not thinke that she plaid the harlot, after she had received grace to beleeve, but long before; for faith purifieth the heart; neither will it suffer any sinne to raigne therein. She is called an harlot therfore, in regard of her life past; for which she was infamous among the men of Jericho, before her calling to the faith.

Quest. How could she beleeve, being a harlot in former times? for it is said, That neither fornicatours, nor adulterers, shall inherit the kingdome of heaven, 1 Cor.6.9. Ans. That is true according to the Law: but the Gospel gives this exception, unlesse they repent. And so are all legall threatnings to be understood in the word of God.

In this circumstance of the person, and in the qualitie of her sinne, we may note the endlesse mercie of God towards sinners; for hee hath vouchsafed to call most notorious and grievous sinners to the state of salvation: as Isay saith, The Lord is verie ready to forgive, Isay 55.7. yea, with the Lord is plentifull redemption, Psal.130.7. This appeares, by vouchsafing mercie to Rahab a notable harlot: and as he dealeth with Rahab here, so hath he shewed like mercie to other notorious sinners. King Manasses had sold himselfe to Idolatrie and Witchcraft, and had shed innocent blood exceeding much, and caused Iudah to sinne, 2 Kings 21.6.16. for which he was led captive: yet when he humbled himselfe and prayed, God was intreated of him, 2 Chro.33.13. And Paul saith of himselfe; When hee was a blasphemer and a persecuter, and an oppressour, he was received to mercie, though he were the head of all sinners; that Christ might first shew on him all long suffering, unto the example of them, which shall in time to come beleeve in him unto everlasting life, 1 Tim.1.13,16.

The consideration of this exceeding mercie of God toward sinners, is of great use. First, it armeth a poore soule against despaire, whereinto the Devill would draw it upon the view of the multitude and greatnesse of his sinnes: for many reason thus; My sinnes are so heinous, so many, and so vile, that I dare not come to God, neither can I be perswaded of the pardon of them. But behold here the endlesse mercie of God, in forgiving sinnes to them that repent though they be like crimson and scarlet, and never so many. This must comfort the wounded soule; and encourage all touched hearts, to repent, and to sue to the Lord for mercie and pardon.

Secondly, it must move every one of us now to begin to repent, if we have not repented heretofore: and if we have begun, to doe it more earnestly; for God is most mercifull, and with him is plentifull redemption. Yet we must beware that wee take not occasion hereby to live in sinne, because God is mercifull: for this is to turne the grace of God into wantonnesse; which S. Iude makes a brand of the ungodly, and a signe of the reprobate, who (as the Apostle there saith) are appointed to condemnation: yea, that is a despising of the bountifulnesse of God, which should lead them to repentance: and hereby they heape up unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath, Rom.2.4,5. Iude 4. Let us therefore remember this counsell of Paul, Shall we sinne that grace may abound? God forbid. We must all, but especially young men take heed of this course: for if we blesse our selves in our heart, and say we shall have peace, though we live in sinne, God will not be mercifull unto us, but his wrath shall smoake against us. Deut.29.19,20.

Further note, that howsoever she was a sinner, and a most infamous harlot: yet when she repents, God doth honour and grace her with the title of a beleever; and that among those most renowned beleevers that ever lived before Christ: even to bee one of that cloud of witnesses, in whom faith is commended to the Church for ever. Hence also it is, that S. Matthew reckons her in the Genealogie of Christ, to be one of his predecessours: when as Amasiah, Achas, & such like, who (for ought we know) did never repent, are not once named. Herein we may see Gods wonderfull mercie in honouring sinners, if they doe repent. The consideration whereof must move us, not onely to learne the doctrine of Repentance, and to have it in our mouths, but to labour that it may be setled in our hearts; Hebr.11.1. Matth.1.5.

that we may ſhew forth the power thereof in our lives. All of us deſire honour and reputation among men. Well, if we would be honoured indeed, we muſt repent, and then God himſelfe will honour us; neither have our ſinnes made us ſo infamous, as by our repentance God ſhall make us honourable.

Further, concerning the partie: How could Rahab come by faith? ſeeing ſhe lived out of the Church, where the word was never preached unto her.

Anſw. If we reade the Story, we ſhall finde that ſhe came to beleeve, by a report of Gods marvellous acts: for when the Lord delivered the Iſraelites out of Ægypt through the red ſea, and drowned Pharaoh therein with all his hoſt; and they went further, he delivered the Kings of the Nations into their hands: as Og the King of Baaſhan, with the Kings of the Amorites and Amalekites.

Now, the report hereof came to the people of Iericho; whereupon they were ſtricken with a wonderfull great feare. And howſoever the men of Iericho made no other uſe of it, but to arme and prepare themſelves to reſiſt and beat backe the Iſraelites, yet this report wrought further with Rahab; and therefore ſhe came to the Spies, whom ſhe had received, and hid upon the roofe of her houſe, and there confeſſed the God of Iſrael to be the true God, in heaven above, and in the earth beneath.

Here wee may note, that when ordinarie meanes faile, for the beginning and increaſe of faith; as the Word preached, and the Sacraments, then God can worke faith extraordinarily, even by reports, and rumors. For thus Rahab, and many of the heathen came to beleeve. We ſay of the Church of Rome, that it is no true Church, and that their religion cannot ſave a man: Hereupon many that favour that way, reply and ſay; Will you therefore condemne all your forefathers, that lived and died in time of Popery? We anſwer, no; we dare not give ſuch cenſure upon them: but rather judge charitably of them: yea, we have great hope that many of them were ſaved. For though they wanted preaching and reading, yet God might worke faith in them extraordinarily, and bleſſe even good reports and ſpeeches unto them, with the reading of other godly bookes, beſides Gods word, which ſome of them had. We need not then give ſo hard a cenſure of them: becauſe God is not tied to ordinarie meanes, but can ſave extraordinarily, when meanes faile.

Further, concerning Rahabs faith, it may be demanded whether it was weake or ſtrong? becauſe before ſhe had done this fact of faith, her whole abode was among the heathen. Anſ. We muſt know, that there is in the childe of God a certaine ſeed, or beginning, or preparation to a true and lively faith; which our Saviour Chriſt in the Scriptures, doth honour with the title of a true and lively faith: as when a man knowes no more but this, that Chriſt Ieſus is the true Meſſias; having withall, a care and conſcience to profit and increaſe in the true knowledge of the Goſpel, and to joyne practice therewith, in his life and calling. Examples hereof, we have many in Gods word: A certaine Ruler came to Chriſt, and beſought him to goe downe and heale his ſonne, John 4.49, 50, &c. Jeſus but ſaid unto him, Goe thy way, thy ſonne liveth; and the Ruler beleeved the word that Ieſus ſpake unto him, and his ſonne lived. Now, inquiring of the houre, and finding it to be the ſame when Jeſus ſaid, Thy ſonne liveth; the Text ſaith, He beleeved and all his houſhold. Now what was this mans faith? Surely, hee onely acknowledged, that Chriſt was the true Meſſias: and withall, reſigned himſelfe and his family to be inſtructed further therein. And though they knew nothing particularly, of the meanes whereby Chriſt ſhould be a Saviour; yet for this willingneſſe in embracing Chriſt, and readineſſe to be taught, the holy Ghoſt ſaith, they did beleeve. So in the ſame Chapter verſe 29. the woman of Samaria (being convicted in her conſcience, of the things that Chriſt told her) runnes to the towne, and ſaith; Come ſee a man that hath told me all things that ever I did: Is not he the Chriſt? Then the Text ſaith, Many of the Samaritans beleeved, becauſe of the ſaying of the woman. Now what faith had theſe Samaritans? Surely, they did onely acknowledge him to be the true Meſſias, and were willing to be further inſtructed in his doctrine; which they teſtified, by going to heare him in their owne perſons. So likewiſe, Chriſt gives a notable teſtimonie to the confeſſion of the Apoſtles faith, (Matth. 16. 17, 18.) in the perſon of Peter, ſaying; Thou art Peter, and upon this Rocke (that is, upon this your faith, which thou confeſſeſt) will I build my Church; and yet the Apoſtles were ignorant of ſome maine points of the Goſpel. For a little after, when Chriſt tels them of his going to Jeruſalem, and of his paſſion, for the redemption of them, and all the elect, Peter perſwades him to the contrarie, ſaying; Maſter, ſpare thy ſelfe, theſe things ſhall not be unto thee. Whereby it appeares, that Peter did not know how Chriſt ſhould be a Saviour; neither did the Apoſtles particularly know Chriſt his reſurrection, till he was riſen againe: yea, at the verie time of his aſcenſion, they knew not the nature of Chriſts Kingdome; and therefore they asked him, Lord, wilt thou now reſtore the kingdome to Iſrael? (Acts 1.6.) dreaming ſtill of a temporall kingdome: for which Chriſt rebukes them. And notwithſtanding all theſe wants, Chriſt ſaith, they had true faith; yea, ſuch faith as the gates of hell ſhould never prevaile againſt. This then is a moſt comfortable truth, That if a man (in the want of meanes of further knowledge) doe hold Chriſt Jeſus to be the true Meſſias, and yeeld himſelfe willing to learne the doctrine of the Goſpel, and (withall) joyne obedience to his knowledge, the Lord is willing for a time, to accept of this as of true faith.

Now

Now to apply this to Rahabs faith: Her faith was but a weake faith, or rather the ſeed and beginning of a lively faith afterward. For as we may reade, all that ſhe knew was this, that the God of Iſrael was the onely true God, and that he would certainely deliver the Land of Canaan into the Iſraelites hands. This was a notable perſwaſion wrought by a report; and accordingly ſhe joynes her ſelfe to Gods people, and reſignes her ſelfe to obey the God of Iſrael: but whether ſhe knew the particular doctrine of ſalvation by Chriſt, it is not here ſet downe, and it is very like, that as yet ſhe was altogether ignorant of it. For here are all things ſet downe, that tend to her commendation. So that her faith was very weake, and onely the ſeed of a lively faith; and yet here the holy Ghoſt doth commend her for her faith, amongſt the moſt renowned beleevers that ever were.

Iosuah 2.11.

Hence we may learne many good inſtructions: Firſt, that God makes much account of a little grace: if he ſee in a man but the ſeeds of grace, he doth highly eſteeme thereof. When the young man came to Chriſt, and asked him what he ſhould doe to be ſaved; Chriſt tells him he muſt keepe the commandements: the young man anſwers, that he had kept them from his youth: at which anſwer it is ſaid, Chriſt looked upon him, and loved him. Thus he did for the ſhew of Grace, which appeared in his anſwer: much more then will he like of that which is true grace indeed. So, likewiſe Chriſt reaſoning with the Scribe, concerning the firſt and great Commandement, and perceiving that he had anſwered diſcreetly, hee ſaid unto him; Thou art not farre from the kingdome of God, Marke 12.34. ſhewing hereby how deeply hee tenders the ſparkes and ſeeds of true grace: nay, he makes much of a very ſhew of grace: which if it be ſo, then if God have given to any of us but one ſparke of true grace, how ought we to tender it, and cheriſh it, and to rejoyce therein with all thankfulneſſe to God for it? yea, we muſt ſeeke to increaſe the ſame; for according to our grace is our acceptance and reſpect with God in Chriſt.

Marke 10.17.

Secondly, whereas Rahabs weake faith is thus commended, here is comfort for all thoſe that are willing to learne Gods Word, and to obey the ſame. Many are willing to learne: but they are ſo wonderfully troubled with dulneſſe and want of memorie, that they cannot learne; and hereupon they grow to doubt much of their eſtate towards God. But theſe men muſt comfort themſelves: for though they have but little knowledge, yet if they have care to increaſe in knowledge, and make conſcience of obedience to ſo much as they know, God will account of them as of true beleevers: and in truth ſuch are to be commended above thoſe which have much knowledge, and ſo ſeeme to have much faith, and yet ſhew forth no obedience anſwerable to their knowledge; for they have a ſhew of godlineſſe, but want the power of it.

Thirdly, this confuteth our ignorant boaſters, who ſay they have as much knowledge as any man needs to have; for they know, that a man muſt love God above all; and that Chriſt Ieſus is the Saviour of the world; and this (ſay they) is enough; and hereupon they take up their reſt for matters of religion, and ſeeke to goe no further. But theſe men know nothing at all: for if they would adde to this which they know, though it be but little, a care to increaſe in knowledge, and with their knowledge joyne obedience, then it were ſomething. But whiles they have no care neither to get more knowledge, nor to ſhew forth obedience to that they know, they doe hereby ſhew plainely, that there is no drop of ſaving knowledge, nor true faith in their hearts.

Fourthly, ſeeing God commends the ſeeds of true faith, for true faith indeed; This muſt encourage all men to uſe all good meanes to come by true faith and repentance. For though as yet thou haſt but little knowledge, and therefore but little faith and repentance: yet if thou joyne hereto an endevour to get more knowledge, and have alſo a care to practiſe that which thou knoweſt; then will the Lord increaſe thy knowledge and thy ſmall faith, till thou have ſufficient, and in the meane time accept of thee as a true beleever. And thus much for the meaſure of Rahabs faith.

The ſecond point to bee conſidered, is the reward which Rahab received at the hands of Ioſuah and the Iſraelites for her faith; She periſhed not with them that obeyed not: that is, ſhe with her family was preſerved alive, when as Ioſuah deſtroyed all that lived in Iericho, young and old, man, woman and childe.

But ſome will ſay; The Iſraelites were the people of God, a religious people: now it may ſeeme to be a cruell part to deſtroy all; for what had the young infants done? Anſw. In mans reaſon it may ſeeme ſo indeed: yet it could not be a cruell part, becauſe they did no more than that which God commanded them. For it was Gods ordinance, that the Canaanites ſhould be rooted out, and that the Iſraelites ſhould ſhew no compaſſion on them, Deutero.7.3. Beſides, even in reaſon the Iſraelites had ſome cauſe to deale thus: for God gave this charge to the Iſraelites, that when they came to any Citie or people: Firſt, they muſt offer peace, and if they anſwered peaceably, then they muſt be ſaved, and become their tributaries and ſervants: Deuteron. 20.10. but if they would not make peace, then they muſt put them to the edge of the ſword, (verſ.17.) man, woman, and childe, being inhabitants of Canaan, or neere adjoyning. And thus no doubt Ioſuah dealt when he came to Iericho: firſt, he offered peace, if they would become their tributaries: but they truſted to their ſtrong walls, and would not yeeld to become their ſervants; for which cauſe hee put them all to the edge of the ſword: and therefore fore it was no crueltie, becauſe it was Gods commandement; for Gods will is the rule of juſtice.

But was not this partiall dealing, to ſpare Rahab with her family, who were inhabitants of Jericho as well as the reſt? Anſw. There were two cauſes why ſhe ſhould eſcape: Firſt, becauſe ſhe yeelded her ſelfe to the people of Iſrael, and joyned her ſelfe unto them, and was content to become one of their religion; and therefore the commandement of putting all to death, did not take hold of her. Secondly, Rahab obtained this of the Spies, and bound them to it by an oath, that when they came to deſtroy Jericho, they ſhould ſpare her and her family: and therefore alſo did ſhee eſcape.

In this preſervation of Rahab, wee may learne ſundry points: firſt, whereas ſhe is ſaved alive, becauſe of the oath of the Spies, we ſee what ſpeciall care every one ought to have for the doing of thoſe lawfull things whatſoever they are, whereto hee bindes himſelfe by an oath. Ioſuah knowing this bond of the Spies to Rahab (as wee may reade) gives ſpeciall charge for her preſervation. Hence David ſaith, if a man binde himſelfe with an oath, he muſt keepe it, though it be to his owne hinderance, Pſal.15.4. Every ſingle promiſe bindes a mans conſcience, if it be lawfull: but when an oath is adjoyned, then there is a double bond. And therefore the Author to the Hebrewes ſaith, that God to make knowne the ſtableneſſe of his counſell promiſed, bound himſelfe with an oath: that by two immutable things (to wit, Gods promiſe, and oath) we might have ſtrong conſolation: ſo that an oath bindes a man double to the performing of his promiſe. And that this conſcience is to be made of a lawfull oath, appeareth thus; If a man make a lawfull oath, and yet be induced to doe it by fraud; he muſt performe it, and not faile: as appeareth by Ioſuahs fact to the Gibeonites, Joſuah 9.19. For when they came to the Jewes craftily, as though they had beene men of a farre countrey, and had brought them to ſweare that they would not hurt them: though the hoaſt of Iſrael murmured at it, when they came to their Cities; and though they might have reaſoned thus, that they got it of them by fraud, and therefore they would not keepe it: yet, this is the anſwer of Ioſuah and the Princes unto the people, That they had ſworne unto them, by the Lord God of Iſrael, and therefore they might not touch them. And when King Saul, in zeale to Iſrael, had broken this oath of Ioſuah, and the Princes, by deſtroying the Gibeonites, 2 Sam.21. there came a plague upon the Land, for three yeares ſpace; and was not ſtayed, till ſeven of Sauls ſonnes were hanged for Sauls fact. So that the breach of an oath is a moſt dangerous thing: and therefore, he that hath bound himſelfe thereby, muſt have great care to keepe it.

Yet here ſome caſes may bee propounded, worthy our conſideration. For firſt, what if a man have taken an oath to doe an unlawfull thing, muſt he then keepe his oath? Anſ. If his conſcience tell him out of Gods Word that the thing is not lawfull, then he muſt not keepe it; for an oath may not be the bond of iniquitie: the keeping of it is a doubling of the ſinne. David in his anger, had ſworne to ſlay Nabal, and all the men of his family, for denying reliefe unto his ſervants, 1 Sam.25.22. This was a raſh oath; and therefore afterward, when hee was prevented by Abigals good counſell, he bleſſeth God for it, and breakes his oath which he had made, verſe 32.

Queſt. 2. What if a man take an oath, and yet afterward in conſcience doubts of the lawfulneſſe of that which he had ſworne to doe: what muſt be done in this caſe? Anſw. So long as he doubteth, he muſt deferre the performance of it. For he that doth a thing doubtingly, condemneth himſelfe in the thing he doth, becauſe he doth it not of faith: and whatſoever is not of faith, is ſinne, Rom.14.23.

Queſt. 3. What if a man be urged by feare to take an oath, muſt he afterward keepe it? As for example; a man is taken of theeves: now wanting money, they charge him on paine of death, to fetch them money, and they binde him hereto by an oath: what muſt be done in this caſe, conſidering there muſt ſuch great care be had in keeping of an oath? Anſ. So long as the thing which he is bound by oath to doe, reſpecteth his private dammage onely, he muſt keepe his oath; yet ſo as he declare his caſe to the Magiſtrate, becauſe their courſe is againſt the common good; now the Magiſtrate hearing of it, is according to equitie, to provide for his defence, and for the ſafetie of his goods.

A ſecond point to be conſidered in Rahabs preſervation, is this: Rahab eſcaped a common danger (but not without all meanes) onely ſtaying her ſelfe on the bare promiſe of the Spies: but as ſhe beleeved in the true God, ſo ſhe uſed meanes, whereby ſhe might be ſure of her preſervation; and that is this; Shee bindes the Spies by an oath to ſave her life, and to ſpare her houſhold: alſo ſhee keeps within, and ties the cord of red threed in her window, according to the mutuall covenant. Thus ſhe uſeth meanes for her temporall ſafetie: and ſo have other of Gods children done in like caſe. When King Hezekiah (2 Kings 20.6.) was ſicke, hee was certified by the Prophet from God, that hee ſhould live fifteene yeares longer; yet he neglected not the meanes whereby he ſhould be healed, and live; for he applied drie figges to his bile, and uſed food, and raiment for his bodily life, during the whole ſpace of thoſe fifteene yeares. So the Apoſtle Saint Paul, in his voyage by Sea to Rome, was aſſured by a viſion, that none of them that were with him ſhould periſh, but all come ſafe to land: and yet notwithſtanding, when as the Mariners would have gone out, he tells the Centurion, that unleſſe

Iohns faith.

Iohn 6.22.

Iohn 19.18.

Iohuah 2.18, 21.

unleſſe thoſe ſtayed in the ſhip (that ſo they might uſe ordinary meanes) they could not bee ſafe. Now as it fareth temporally for the ſaving of the body; ſo it is in the ſpirituall caſe, for the ſalvation of the ſoule: men muſt uſe meanes to come by grace, and ſo to ſalvation. But many in this regard be great enemies to their owne ſoules; they ſay, God is mercifull, and Chriſt is a Saviour, and I hope he will ſave me; yet they will not uſe the meanes to come to ſalvation. But if we would be ſaved, then with our inward faith, we muſt joyne the obſervation of the outward ordinary meanes whereby God uſeth to ſave mens ſoules; as namely, the hearing of Gods word, calling upon God by prayer, and the receiving of the Sacraments; that thereby our ſinfull lives may bee amended, and our faith ſtrengthened. This muſt be remembred of us; for they that contemne or neglect the meanes, deſpiſe the grace and mercie of God offered therein: and therefore Paul ſaith of the Jewes, when they put the Goſpel from them, that they did judge themſelves unworthy eternall life, Acts 13.46. It followeth;

With them that diſobeyed: That is, with the people of Jericho. Queſt. How did they diſobey? Anſ. Thus: When Ioſuah and the people came unto them, and offered them peace, if ſo be they would become their tributaries and ſervants, the inhabitants of Jericho would not yeeld unto them, but ſet themſelves againſt the people of Iſrael, and ſo againſt God, in that they would not undertake that eſtate which God offered unto them: and therefore they are here eſteemed diſobedient.

Hence we learne, that if it ſhall pleaſe God at any time, to put us out of theſe temporary benefits which we enjoy in goods and poſſeſſions; we muſt be contented with Gods will and providence, and ſeeke to obey God therein. The inhabitants of Jericho pay deerely for their diſobedience in this caſe: God ſets the Iſraelites as Lords over them: and becauſe they will not yeeld to become their ſervants, they die for it. Davids practice was commendable in this caſe; for when hee was put out of his owne Kingdome, by his owne ſonne, he murmured not, but ſaid thus; If I ſhall finde favour in the eyes of the Lord, he will bring me againe: but if he ſay thus, I have no delight in thee; behold, here I am, let him doe to me as ſeemeth good in his eyes, 2 Samuel 15.25,26. In other countries, we ſee Cities and Townes ſpoiled and ſacked; what muſt the people doe? Anſ. They muſt ſubmit themſelves to the Lords pleaſure; knowing that hee permitteth it, who may doe what he will. And ſo, if it ſhall pleaſe God to bring us into the like caſe; as to ſuffer our enemies to have dominion over us, and to diſpoſſeſſe us of our places: wee muſt ſubmit our ſelves to Gods good pleaſure, when we ſee no helpe by lawfull meanes: we muſt not murmur or rebell; for that is but to diſobey, as the people of Jericho did: and ſo ſhall we be deſtroyed as they were. And thus much for the ſecond point.

The third thing to be conſidered in this example, is the teſtimonie of her faith, in receiving the Spies peaceably. This was a notable worke of faith, as Saint Iames noteth, James 2.25. and the more commendable, becauſe ſhe received them into her houſe, and entertained them; yea, ſhe preſerved them in danger of her owne life; for ſhe did it contrary to the pleaſure of the State under which ſhe lived. But againſt this may be objected, firſt, that ſhe lied in this fact: for when the King of Jerichos meſſengers came to ſearch for the Spies, whom ſhe had hid in the top of her houſe, ſhe ſaid to the meſſengers, they were gone another way. Now, how can it be a good worke, which was done with lying; eſpecially to our Superiour, who hath power to aske us, and to whom we are double bound to ſpeake the truth? Anſw. We muſt know that the worke was good which ſhee did; and a worke of mercie, to preſerve Gods people, although ſhe failed in the manner of doing it: ſhe received them by faith, though ſhe ſhewed diſtruſt, in lying for their ſafetie. It was a notable worke of Rebecca, Geneſis 27. to cauſe her ſonne Iacob to get his fathers bleſſing, for ſo God had determined, and yet ſhe failed in the manner.

Queſt. But how could this worke be good, being faultie in the manner of doing it? Anſw. It might: for Rebeccas perſon ſtood righteous before God in Chriſt. Now the worker being acceptable unto God, the worke muſt needs be good alſo; and though the worker failed in the circumſtances, yet the evill of the worke, was covered in the obedience of Chriſt; and ſo the goodneſſe of it was approved, and the fault thereof covered.

The uſe of this doctrine is two-fold: firſt, it ſhewes that the workes of Gods children, are partly good, and partly bad; even the beſt workes they doe are imperfect. Secondly, this ſhewes the true meaning of S. Iames, when he ſaith, that Rahab was juſtified by her workes: hereby he meanes, that by her workes ſhe declared her ſelfe to be juſt. For that ſhe was not juſtified by her workes appeareth plaine; becauſe the worke which ſhe did, was faultie in the manner, and not perfectly good: and therefore could not be anſwerable to the perfect juſtice of God.

But ſome will ſay further, that this concealing of the Spies, and lying to the Kings meſſengers, was a worke of treacherie againſt her owne countrey; and therefore was a notorious fault, and ſo no worke of faith? Anſw. Treacherie indeed, is a great villany, as one man can practiſe againſt another; and therefore ought to be abhorred and deteſted of all men: but yet we muſt know, that Rahab in this place is no Traytor. For ſhe had a plaine Certificat in her conſcience, that the Land of Canaan, and the Citie Jericho were given by the Lord to the people of Iſrael, and that they were the right

Lords

Lords thereof, and ſhould enjoy them: ſo that ſhe hid the Spies, not in treacherie, but in faith.

Thus we ſee her fact. The duties which we learne hence are theſe: Firſt, it is ſaid that this harlot Rahab, being by calling an Hoſteſſe and a Victualer, received the Spies peaceably. Hence, Inne-keepers are taught their dutie. Firſt, if they will ſhew themſelves faithfull, they muſt have ſpeciall regard and reſpect unto ſuch gueſts of theirs, as be the ſervants of God, and feare him. This was the worke of Rahabs faith towards the Spies of Gods people. David makes this the propertie of every godly man, That in his eyes a vile perſon is contemned, but he honoureth them that feare the Lord, Pſal. 15.4. And therefore, if Inne-keepers will ſhew themſelves godly, they muſt ſo doe. And to encourage each one hereto, our Saviour Chriſt maketh this notable promiſe, Mat. 10.41. He that receiveth a Prophet, in the name of a Prophet, ſhall receive a Prophets reward: and he that receiveth a juſt man, in the name of a juſt man, ſhall receive a juſt mans reward. And, If any ſhall give to one of theſe little ones to drinke, a cup of cold water onely, in the name of a diſciple: Verily I ſay unto you, he ſhall not loſe his reward.

Alſo Strangers are here taught, that in ſeeking places for their abode, they muſt make choice to be with thoſe that feare the Lord: ſo God directs theſe Spies to doe. And when Chriſt ſent his diſciples to preach, he bade them, Mat. 10.11. when they entred into a Citie, To inquire who is worthy in that Citie, and there to abide till they departed. But alas, theſe duties are little performed; eſpecially the firſt. For Inne-keepers and ſuch as entertaine ſtrangers, doe make moſt of thoſe that give themſelves to riot and good-fellowſhip: they are beſt welcome that ſpend moſt in gaming, drinking, and laſciviouſneſſe. Theſe might learne otherwiſe of Rahab, who did better though ſhe had beene an harlot.

Thirdly, Inne-keepers muſt here learne, that when a man comes into their houſe, (if he be no malefactour) they muſt give him protection. Thus Rahab doth here to the Spies of the Iſraelites, even with the danger of her owne life. The like alſo we may reade of Lot: for when two Angels in the likeneſſe of men came into his houſe, and the men of Sodome would have had them out; Lot beſought them not let them alone, Gen. 19.8. and his reaſon is, becauſe they came under the ſhadow of his roofe.

Againe, hence we may learne another generall dutie; to wit, that a Chriſtian man in the time of perſecution and danger, is not to diſcover his fellow brethren, or to detect them; but muſt rather indanger his owne life by concealing them for their preſervation. This was practiſed by good Obadiah: when Ieſabel killed the Lords Prophets, he hid them by fifties in a Cave; which if it had beene knowne, would have coſt him his life. And ſo did the Apoſtles and brethren in the Primitive Church; when the Jewes would have ſlaine Paul in Damaſcus, the brethren tooke him by night, and let him downe through the wall in a baſket to ſave his life, Act. 9.25. And ſince thoſe times, in the Hiſtorie of the Church under the Goſpel, we may finde, that when the Chriſtians were urged by perſecuters to reveale their brethren, they rather choſe to lay downe their owne lives, than to betray their brethren into their enemies hands. And this is true love indeed, ſuch as the holy Ghoſt commendeth, When a man will give his life for his brother, 1 John 3.16.

Laſtly, whereas Rahab received the Spies peaceably, we note that it is a ſpeciall fruit of faith, to be peaceable and kind. The holy Ghoſt, repeating the fruits of the ſpirit, names peace and meekeneſſe among them. Now this peace is, when a man is kinde and peaceable to all, but eſpecially to thoſe that be of the houſhold of faith. And undoubtedly it is a fruit of faith, which the Prophet Iſay foretold ſhould be under the Goſpel, Iſay 11.6. that then the Wolfe ſhould dwell with the Lambe, and the Leopard lie with the Kid: ſignifying, that howſoever men by nature were as ſavage as Wolves, yet being converted to the kingdome of Chriſt, they ſhould become gentle as Lambes, being kinde and peaceable one to another. This peaceableneſſe is eſpecially to be ſhewed in the place and calling where a man lives: for there did Rahab ſhew forth hers, when the Spies came unto her. And where this is truly in outward action, there is faith in the heart: it is a good token that a man is at peace with God, when he lives peaceably with men. Which being ſo; we muſt learne, not to give place to our heady affections, but muſt rather bridle rage of malice and anger, and endevour to live peaceable with all, eſpecially with thoſe that be members of Gods Church. And thus much of this example.

Galat. 4.22

The Iudges Faith.

VERSE 32.

And what ſhall I ſay more? For the time would be too ſhort for me to tell of Gedeon, of Barac, and of Sampſon, and of Jephte; alſo of David, and Samuel, and of the Prophets.

Which through faith ſubdued kingdomes, wrought righteouſneſſe, &c.

HItherto, the Author of this Epiſtle hath ſet downe unto us examples of faith, more at large. But from this verſe to the end end of this Chapter, he heapes up briefly together many examples of faith, one upon another. The reason whereof is; First, because the number of true beleevers, which are mentioned in Scripture, is very great, and therefore he could not here ſtand to ſet them downe in order one by one. Secondly, by handling all the examples at large, which the Author propoundeth in this ſhort Epiſtle, he ſhould have ſeemed to have reſtrained the name and title of faith to a very few; for all that are here named and commended for their faith, are but few, in compariſon of all that truly beleeved in the old Teſtament. And therefore he heapes up the reſt together, to intimate that the number of beleevers, was more than he could record. And this he doth, by a Rhetoricall preterition or paſſing over, called in Schooles Paralepſis; whereby matters are briefly diſpatched and paſſed over, with the very naming onely.

What ſhall I ſay more?] That is, as if he had ſaid, I have propounded divers worthy examples of faith: and beſides theſe, there are alſo many more; but the time of writing an Epiſtle, will not ſuffer mee to handle them all at large.

Firſt, in this particular quicke diſpatch of beleevers by our Apoſtle, we may obſerve a difference betweene the infinite underſtanding of God, and the created underſtanding that is in mans minde. Man indeed underſtands the things that are revealed to him of God; but yet in a manner and order, farre different from that which is in God: for man cannot conceive in his minde all the things he knowes, at once, by one act of his underſtanding; but muſt have diſtinct time to conceive of them, one by one diſtinctly. For looke as hee utters them diſtinctly, one by one (as we ſee in this place,) ſo likewiſe doth hee apprehend them in conceit, and underſtanding. But with God it is not ſo; for God at once, by one act of underſtanding, without diſtinction of time, doth conceive of all things at once, both paſt, preſent, and to come: and ſo could utter and expreſſe them, if any creature were able in conceit ſo to comprehend them.

Secondly, whereas the holy Ghoſt ſaith, The time would be too ſhort, &c. he gives us to underſtand, that the number of beleevers is verie great, and that a long time would not ſerve to repeat them, or to write of them. This directeth us unto a good anſwer to a queſtion, which much troubleth our common people; to wit; How great is the number of them that ſhall be ſaved; whether it is greater than the number of them that ſhall be damned? Anſ. We muſt conſider the number of the Elect two wayes: firſt, in compariſon of them that ſhall be condemned: ſecondly, in themſelves. If we compare the Elect with the reprobate, the number of the Elect is but a ſmall number: for in moſt ages, the Church of God hath beene but an handfull, to the reſt of the world. And in the Church this likewiſe is true, Many are called, but few choſen, in reſpect of them that are called. But yet conſider the Elect, as they are in themſelves, and they are a huge great number; yea, innumerable, as Saint Iohn ſaith, ſpeaking of the Elect among the Gentiles, beſides the choſen Jewes: for all that doe truly beleeve, ſhall be ſaved. Now beleevers are innumerable: This the Author of this Epiſtle would inſinuate unto us by his phraſe of ſpeech, What ſhall I ſay more, &c?

In handling theſe examples, we muſt obſerve the order here uſed by the holy Ghoſt: for in this 32. verſe he ſets downe the names of the perſons that beleeve, all joyntly together, rehearſing them one by one: and in the 33,34,35. verſes, he layes downe briefly the fruits of all their faith; in number tenne moſt notable actions, ſerving all and every one of them, moſt worthily to commend their faith. In handling of them, we will follow the order obſerved by the holy Ghoſt: and firſt ſpeake of the perſons; then of their actions.

The foure firſt are theſe: Gedeon, Barac, Samſon, and Iephte: theſe foure were Iudges in Iſrael: the fifth is David, who was both a Prophet and a King: the ſixth is Samuel, both a Iudge and a Prophet: laſtly, the Prophets generally; by whom wee muſt underſtand eſpecially theſe three, Elias, Eliſeus and Daniel.

In ſpeaking of theſe perſons here commended unto us; firſt, we will intreat of them generally, and then in particular. In generall, let us firſt obſerve the order which the holy Ghoſt here uſeth in naming them. Gedeon for time was after Barac; and yet here he is firſt named: ſo Samſon was after Iephte, and yet here he is put before him. This the holy Ghoſt would never doe, without ſome ſpeciall cauſe. We therefore muſt know, that the Scripture uſeth a two-fold order in reckoning up of perſons: to wit, the order of time: when as hee that lived firſt, is firſt named: and the order of dignitie; when the moſt worthy and excellent is named firſt, though he were later in time. Now the Scripture accounteth beſt of them that did excell in faith, and in the fruits thereof: ſo in this place whereas Gedeon is ſet before Barac, and Samſon before Iephte; the holy Ghoſt obſerves not the order of time, but the order of dignitie, according to the excellencie of their faith: naming them in the firſt place, that were moſt famous for this grace of faith, and did exceed the other in the fruits thereof.

Here we learne this ſpeciall point: That the more men excell in faith, and other graces of God, the more God will honour them: for looke who moſt honour God, ſhall be moſt honoured of him: but the more a man excells in grace, the more he honours God. And for this cauſe is Gedeon preferred before Barac, and Samſon before Iephte; becauſe they were more plentifull in the fruits of faith. This muſt move us, not onely to seeke to have faith, but to labour every day more and more for the increase of faith, and of obedience: for the more a man abounds in grace before God, the more wil God honour him, both here and in heaven. And thus much for the order wherein they are propounded.

Secondly, let us consider what manner of persons these were, Gedeon, Barac, and the rest: They were extraordinary men, in their time, raised up by God, for the speciall good of his Church, and the common-wealth of the Jewes, that they might helpe and defend them in distresse. And therefore, as their calling was extraordinary; so God indued them with extraordinary gifts of wisdome, strength, zeale, and authority: for which they are here renowned in this Catalogue of most worthy beleevers.

In their example we may observe this point: That whom God doth raise up extraordinarily, for some speciall good in his Church, them hee endues with extraordinary gifts to discharge that calling: and withall, hee gives them the spirit of grace, with a true and lively faith. This (besides the instance we have in hand) appeares plainely in Christs Apostles; they were called by Christ to preach the Gospel to all the world, and to plant his Church universally; and thereupon (howsoever they were simple men before) were furnished with extraordinary gifts of wisdome, zeale, and knowledge, and with this excellent grace of saving faith, which did sanctifie their other gifts; for howsoever Judas was numbred among them, having beene a Disciple; yet he never came to the execution of the Apostleship, but went astray from that ministration, Act. 1. 25. And in these latter dayes, when God restored his Gospell to light, out of the darke mist of Popery; he raised up extraordinary men whom hee endued with wisdome, zeale, and judgement: which gifts also he sealed up in them by a lively faith, which they testified by their piety and godlinesse in life and conversation. And this course he observeth usually, in all those whom hee raiseth up extraordinarily for the good of his Church.

This wee must observe, to acquaint us with a speciall difference, betweene those whom God raised up extraordinarily for speciall good, and all arch-heretikes and traytors that set up themselves, unsent of GOD. For many such wretches have excelled in wisdome, in worldly policy, in zeale and authority: whereupon they have pretended and perswaded many, that they were called of God. But hereby especially they are to be discovered, that they are void of this rare gift of true saving faith: for looke at their lives, and ordinarily for impietie they have beene and are arch-devils. So that though they wanted not authority, or outward zeale and wisdome: yet they wanted faith, which should purifie their hearts; or else they would never have lived in such notorious sinnes, as they were discovered to doe. And this is the triall which our Saviour Christ directs us unto; saying, Ye shall know them by their fruits, Mat. 7. 16. Let them therefore pretend what knowledge, what zeale, or authority soever they will; if the fruits of faith appeare not in their lives by obedience, they are not called of God, for the speciall good of his Church.

Thus much of these men in generall: now wee come to intreat of them severally, as they are propounded in the Text.

THe first person here commended unto us, is Gedeon: the History of whose acts is laid downe at large, Judg. 6. In his example note one point especially, to acquaint us with the manner which God useth in begetting and increasing true faith in the hearts of his children. If wee reade the story wee shall see, that the Lord in the likenesse of an Angel, called Gedeon, once, twice, yea, thrice to bee a Judge to his people. But Gedeon greatly doubts of his calling; and therefore desires a signe of the Lord: which God gave him: For the sacrifice which he offred, was burned up with fire from heaven: yet still he doubted, and was in a greater feare than before, even of death it selfe: but being confirmed by the Angel, and set a worke, he brake downe the Altar of Baal, and built one to the true God, and thereon offered sacrifice as God commanded, though with some feare. And when the Midianites and Amalekites came armed against Israel, he is stirred up by the spirit of God for their defence: but yet still he doubted of his calling, and therefore againe asked a signe at Gods hands, and had it; and after that asked another, which God also granted. Now having all these one in the necke of another, at length hee knowes his calling, and so goes in faith, and defends Israel: so that he got the assurance of his calling, by sundry particular signes and confirmations of his faith. And although he doubted greatly at the first; yet after he beleeveth, not onely that hee should bee a Judge and deliverer of Gods people out of the hands of their enemies; but this principally, that God was his God, and would give him everlasting life.

Here then we have a notable president of the manner of Gods working true and sound faith in the hearts of his children. They receive not this grace at once, but by degrees; God worketh it in them by little and little. When a man is first called of God, hee hath much doubting and feare; but then God sends sundry helpes to weaken this feare and doubting: and as they decrease, so is faith increased. No man beleeves soundly at the first, but weakly; even as hee growes in yeares, so he must grow in faith: and the increase of our faith is by continuance in the meanes, and by the experience of Gods love and favour. And indeed the more faith increaseth, the more we use the meanes to grow therein, and the more wee delight in the meanes; and at length, after long experience of Gods mercy, wee ſhall have wrought in our hearts this gift of true and lively faith, which ſhall bee able to prevaile againſt all feare and doubting. And thus much for the perſon of Gedeon.

The ſecond perſon commended unto us, is Barac; of whom we may reade, Judg. 4. His ſtory is large and plaine enough: and therefore we will not ſtand upon it.

The third perſon is Sampſon; of whom wee may alſo reade, Judg. 13. 14, &c. Now touching Sampſon, this queſtion may well bee asked, How he can be juſtly commended for his faith, ſeeing it may ſeeme hee killed himſelfe? Anſw. Sampſon did not kill himſelfe: for hee was called extraordinarily to be a Judge over Iſrael, for their defence and delivery out of the hands of the Philiſtims. Now when the Princes of the Philiſtims were gathered together, being his enemies, and the enemies of God and his people, he caſt the houſe downe upon their heads to kill them therein, becauſe (being blinde) hee could not purſue them in battell. And therefore having them by Gods providence in his hands, he deſtroyed them as his calling was: albeit, hee loſt his life in the ſame action.

Againe, Sampſon in pulling downe the houſe purpoſed not directly and wilfully to kill himſelfe, but to adventure his owne life, by taking juſt revenge upon his enemies, and the enemies of God: and therefore as Gods ſervant, he prayed firſt unto God: and ſo did no more than the Souldier in the field ought to doe; who bearing a loving minde towards his Countrey, is content to adventure his owne life for the deſtruction of his enemies, in the defence of his Countrey; and is reſolved, that if he die in that defence, hee dieth in his lawfull place and calling, and dieth Gods ſervant, yea, Gods champion. This did Sampſon, and therfore may juſtly be commended for his faith: neither is this fact of his any diſgrace, but rather a notable commendation of his faith, and an evidence of great zeale for Gods glory, and of ſingular love to his people.

The fourth perſon commended here is Iephte, of whom we may read, Judg. 11. Iephte was the baſe ſon of Gilead, borne of an harlot. To be baſe borne is noted in Scripture as a matter of reproach: and therefore the Lord forbad a baſtard to enter into the Congregation of the Lord, to beare any office unto the tenth generation, Deut. 23. 3. So ignominious is this kinde of birth, by the judgement of Gods ſpirit, unto that party on whom it fals. For this ſinne of fornication doth not onely hurt the perſons committing it, but even ſtaines the children baſe borne, unto the tenth generation. Yet howſoever Iephte was baſe borne, and ſo ſuffered for it great reproach: here wee ſee, hee is commended unto us for his faith, among the moſt worthy beleevers that ever were. Indeed, beſide Iephte, wee ſhall not finde the like example in Scripture. Yet in Iephte wee may ſee, that howſoever it bee a reproachfull thing, to bee borne of fornication, yet that doth not hinder, but the party ſo born, may come to true faith, and ſo to the favour of God, and to life everlaſting. Such perſons as are baſe borne, upon view of that reproach, which the Scripture faſtneth upon them, might take occaſion to thinke miſerably of themſelves; even that God hath rejected them: but this example ſerves to ſhew, that it hindereth not, but that they may come into the favour of God, and by faith get honour of God, to countervaile that diſcredit, which they have by their baſe birth.

Further, whereas wee commonly ſay, that ſuch as are baſe borne are wicked perſons; here we ſee the contrary in Iephte: and therefore, we muſt not for this cauſe condemne any for wicked or ungodly. Indeed, the Lord hath branded this eſtate with reproach, that men ſhould ſhun the ſinne of fornication the more.

Againe, whereas Iephte is here commended for his faith; wee may probably gather, that their opinion is not true, who hold that Iephte ſacrificed and killed his owne daughter. For being commended here for his faith, certaine it is, he had knowledge in Gods will and word: and therefore, we muſt not thinke, but that he knew, God would never accept of ſuch a vow; by the performance whereof hee ſhould commit wilfull and moſt unnaturall murther. This his faith ſhewes, that it was not his intent to kill the firſt perſon that met him out of his houſe; for by the light of nature hee might know, that God would never accept thereof: and therefore it is not like he ſo made his vow; for this faith and ſuch a vow cannot ſtand together.

But ſome will ſay, the Text is plaine, Judg. 11. 31. that he vowed to offer for a burnt offering, the thing that came out of the doores of his houſe to meet him when he came home. Anſ. It is ſo indeed in ſome tranſlations: It ſhall be the Lords, (And) I will offer it, &c. But the words in the originall, may as well be tranſlated thus: It ſhall be the Lords, (or) I will offer it, &c. And this latter tranſlation is more ſutable to the circumſtances of the place; for this was Iephtes meaning, that whatſoever met him firſt, he would dedicate it to God; and if it were a thing that might be ſacrificed, then his purpoſe was to offer it unto the Lord in ſacrifice.

Queſt. But if he did not kill her, why did he then ſo lament for her? Anſw. Becauſe, by his vow, he was to dedicate her unto God; and ſo ſhe was to live a Nazarite all her life long: which muſt needs be a very bitter thing to him who had no childe but her; it being ſo great a reproach, and in ſome ſort a curſe in thoſe daies to want iſſue. I ſpeake not here, how well or ill Iephte did in making her a Nazarite: But this may no way be admitted, That beleeving and godly Iephte ſhould adviſedly kill his owne daughter. Undoubtedly, he could not thinke, that that God would bee pleased, with such an abominable sacrifice. Thus much for these persons: the rest I passe over, because this story is plaine and large in Scripture.

The Faith of the Judges and David.

VERSE 33,34,35.

Which through faith subdued Kingdomes, wrought righteousnesse, obtained the promises, stopped the mouthes of Lions.

Quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, of weake were made strong, waxed valiant in battell, turned to flight the Armies of the Aliants.

The women received their dead raised to life.

IN these words, the Apostle propounds unto us tenne severall fruits of faith: the nine first whereof, are the particular actions of the parties spoken of in the former verse: and they are here related for the commendation of their faith. The first is, Subduing of kingdomes; which serves chiefly for the commendation of the faith of the foure Judges there named, and of David. For as wee may reade in the bookes of Iudges, and of Samuel, all these subdued Kingdomes; as the Canaanites, Judg. 4. the Midianites, Judg. 6. the Philistims, Judg. 15. and 16. 2 Sam. 8. 1. the Ammonites, Judg. 11. Moabites, and Aramites, 2 Sam. 8. 2. 6. Now how did they overcome and subdue them? The text saith, by faith; which wee must not thus understand, as though onely by the very act of faith they subdued kingdomes. But the meaning of the holy Ghost is, that they beleeved the promises which God made unto them, of delivering these kingdomes into their hands; and according to their faith, God accomplished his promises unto them: and so they subdued kingdomes by faith.

In this worke of faith, wee may learne two things: first, that it is lawfull for Christians in the new Testament to make warre; for that which may be done in faith, is lawfull for Gods servants: but warre may be made in faith: for these servants of God subdue kingdomes in warre, and that by faith: and therefore it is lawfull for Christians, upon just cause to make warre. The Anabaptists of Germany say, It is not lawfull for a Christian under the Gospell to carry a weapon, or to make warre: But this one place of Scripture (if there were no moe) is alone sufficient to prove the lawfulnesse of warre under the Gospel, if it be used according to Gods will and word. When the Souldiers came to Iohn Baptist, and asked him, What they should doe? he bids them not leave off their calling: but this, Doe violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and bee content with your wages, Luke 3. 14. And our Saviour Christ reporteth of a Centurion, (which was Captaine of a Band) when he came to have his sonne healed; that hee had not found such faith in Israel. And hee was not a Centurion, onely afore hee beleeved; but even afterward, when Christ commended his faith: yet did he not dislike his calling. The like may bee said of Cornelius, Acts 10. All which, shew plainely, that upon just causes Christians may lawfully make warre. Matth. 8. 10

Obiect. 1. But to defend their opinion, they object some places of Scripture; as Matthew 5. 39. Resist not evill, saith Christ: therefore (say they) a man may not weare a weapon, nor use a sword; least those make him to resist, and so to breake this Commandement of Christ. Answ. That place must bee understood of private revenge: and so it maketh nothing against lawfull warre. For what though a private man may not revenge himselfe, nor make warre: yet that hindereth not, but that a Magistrate who bears the sword, may lawfully use it. Againe, it is frivolous to imagine, that resisting is onely by a weapon; for the chiefe resistance that God respecteth, is in the heart and affection. And a private man may resist: that is, breake this commandement, by unlawfull resistance, though he carry no weapons: and the publike person breake it not, though it make warre.

Obiect. 2. Secondly, they object the prophecy of Isay, who speaking of the kingdome of Christ, under the Gospell, saith; That then they shall turne their swords into sithes, and their speares into mattockes: therefore (say they) there must be no warre under the Gospell. Ans. That Prophecy signifies, that in Christs kingdome, there must bee great love and peace, and wonderfull concord among all the true servants of God. But here they take advantage, and say; If this bee so, what then needeth any warre? Answ. We must know, that as there be two kindes of Kingdomes, a spirituall kingdome, and a politike; ſo there bee two kindes of peace, ſpirituall, and politike. Spirituall peace is inward, in the Church: and politike peace is outward, in the common-wealth. Spirituall peace is begun and preſerved by ſpirituall meanes of grace in the Miniſtery of the Church; but warre is an ordinary meanes for the eſtabliſhing and preſerving of politike peace.

Secondly, hence wee learne, that Gods people may make warre, not onely by way of defence; but alſo, in aſſault upon their enemies, and that according to Gods word. For here it is ſaid, that Gedeon, Sampſon, David, and the reſt by faith ſubdued kingdomes, made warre againſt them by way of aſſault, and not in defence onely. Indeed, ſpeciall care ought to bee had, that offenſive warre, in aſſaulting an enemie, bee made upon juſt and good grounds: one ſpeciall ground or cauſe is here implied in this worke of faith; to wit, the recovery of juſt right in matters of importance: for the Kingdomes of Canaan were given to the Iſraelites by God himſelfe, and for the recovery of them, they made warre by way of aſſault. So when Lot was taken captive by Keder-laomer, and the Kings of the Nations; Abraham, Lots kinſman, gathers his ſervants together, and purſues the Kings, and overtaking them, deſtroyed them for the recovery of Lot and his goods. Other reſpects there bee, for which offenſive warre in aſſault may bee made: but becauſe they are not here mentioned, I will not propound them.

The ſecond fruit of their faith is this; they wrought righteouſneſſe: that is, ſome of theſe men in their places wherein God had ſet them, gave to every man his owne. This working of righteouſneſſe conſiſts in two things; Firſt, in giving rewards to ſuch as deſerved them. Secondly, in inflicting due puniſhment according to mens deſerts. In both theſe, the men before named did all excell; but eſpecially two of them, David and Samuel. For David, it is a wonder to ſee how righteous he was: for when he was annointed King in Sauls ſtead, and Saul rejected, how did he behave himſelfe towards Saul? Did he ſeeke Sauls blood? No: but when Saul hunted him, as the hunter doth the Partridge, David even then gave himſelfe to ſtudie and practiſe righteouſneſſe: yea, when Saul was fallen into his hands, both in the Cave, and aſleep in the campe, 1 Sam. 24. 5, 6, &c. and 26. 7, 8. hee would not touch him, nor ſuffer others to doe him hurt, becauſe hee was the Lords annointed: yea, ſo righteous was David towards Saul, that his heart ſmote him for cutting off but the lap of his coat. Therfore David is here commended eſpecially, for this effect of faith, the working of righteouſneſſe.

To apply this unto our times: If this bee a fruit of faith thus to worke righteouſneſſe, then what may be ſaid of the Church of Rome, and of the Popiſh ſort among us? They pretend the ancient faith, and none muſt bee ſo good beleevers and Catholikes as they: But how doe they ſhew this their faith? Is it by the practice of righteouſneſſe? Doe they give to every one his due? Nay verily: but they ſet themſelves to worke the ruine of Kingdomes, that joine not with them in religion. This witneſſe their manifold and deviliſh plots againſt our ſtate from time to time. This did not David, no not againſt Saul, though hee were rejected of God, and alſo moſt unjuſtly ſought his death. But they have many times ſought the death of the Lords annointed over us: whereby they declare their ſtate to all the world, that they have no ſparke of true faith at all: for true faith will make a man practiſe righteouſneſſe and innocency. And therefore wee may judge of them, and all their adherents that be of this minde to allow ſuch practices, that they have none other but the faith of devils: which is to beleeve the word of God to bee true. This the Devils doe with trembling. And as their faith is deviliſh, ſo are the fruits thereof; namely treachery and falſhood, ſuch as the devill moſt approves. But wee muſt learne that true faith is eſpecially commended by theſe fruits: The ſtudy and practice of innocencie, and the maintaining of peace in Chriſtian eſtates: for true faith, and treachery, and contention, will no more ſtand together, than light and darkneſſe.

Secondly, Samuel alſo wrought righteouſneſſe; as appeares by his proteſtation before all Iſrael, when hee gave up his office of government over them unto Saul: 1 Sam. 12. 3. Behold (ſaith he) here am I: beare record of me before the Lord, and before his annointed: whoſe oxe have I taken? or whoſe Aſſe have I taken? or whom have I done wrong to? or whom have I hurt? or of whoſe hand have I received any bribe, to blinde mine eyes therewith? and I will reſtore it.

Now, as theſe two, Samuel and David were famous, for this fruit of faith in working righteouſneſſe: ſo likewiſe were the Judges and Prophets before-named, in their places carefull of this vertue: and did practiſe the ſame, partly in rewarding the good, and partly in puniſhing the wicked.

But ſome will ſay; To worke righteouſneſſe, cannot be a worke of faith: for the very Heathen, which never heard of Chriſt, by the light of nature have done juſtice, and are highly commended by Heathen Writers for the ſame. Now, that which the Heathen can doe by the light of Nature, is not thus to bee extolled as a fruit of faith? Anſw. True it is, the Heathen have done many workes of juſtice: but we muſt wiſely conſider, that every juſt worke is not a fruit of faith, unleſſe it be done by a righteous perſon in obedience to God, and for his glory. But in all theſe, the Heathen failed in their workes. For, though the things they did were good in themſelves: yet ſeeing the heathen were corrupt trees, remaining in the ſinnefull ſtate of corrupt nature, their workes muſt needs be corrupt rupt fruit ; as comming from them. For an evill tree cannot bring forth good fruit. The heart is the fountaine of every action: Now their hearts were corrupt, being deſtitute of faith which purifieth the heart : and therefore their workes muſt needs bee ſinnefull. Againe, they did not their workes in obedience : for they were guided onely by the light of Nature, and knew not God aright, nor his Commandements. And laſtly, they propounded not the glory of God, as the end of their workes, but the praiſe of men, their owne profit, or ſome ſuch end. But theſe worthy perſons doe not onely ſuch things as were juſt in themſelves, but they doe them in faith, in obedience, and for Gods glory, and ſo please God.

A Now, ſeeing theſe renowned Princes and Judges, have their faith commended unto us by their practiſing of righteouſneſſe ; wee muſt learne to follow them within the compaſſe of our calling, doing juſtice and righteouſneſſe in ſuch things as concerne us. There bee many reaſons ſet down in Gods word to perſwade us hereunto. As firſt, for this end hath God cauſed the Goſpell to be publiſhed. Tit. 2.12. The ſaving grace of God hath appeared : but to what end ? To teach us, that wee ſhould deny ungodlineſſe, and live ſoberly and righteouſly: that is, that wee might doe juſtice. Unleſſe therefore wee worke righteouſneſſe, wee make the Goſpell a vaine word unto us. Secondly, wee deſire to be counted juſt before God and men; and it would grieve us, if wee ſhould bee otherwiſe thought of : but if we would be juſt indeed both before God and man, then wee muſt worke righteouſneſſe : for (as S. John ſaith) He that doth righteouſneſſe is righteous. 1 Iohn 3.7. Thirdly, there is no man ſet over a family, but hee either doth, or ought to endevour to bring a bleſſing upon his family. But this he cannot doe, unleſſe hee worke righteouſneſſe, and doe juſtice; for Salomon ſaith, Hee that walketh in his integrity, is juſt, and bleſſed ſhall his children be after him. Prov. 20.7. Laſtly, we doe all of us deſire to eſcape hell ; well then we muſt remember to practiſe righteouſneſſe: for the Apoſtle ſaith, no unrighteous man, that is, none practiſing unrighteouſneſſe, ſhall enter into the kingdome of heaven. 1 Cor. 6.9. So that within the compaſſe of our calling, we muſt all endevour to doe juſtice.

Here ſome will aske : how ſhall I doe juſtice and worke righteouſneſſe ? Anſw. For doing of it, wee muſt remember to practiſe theſe rules that follow : 1. That which is both the Word of God, and the rule of Nature ; We muſt doe to all men, as we would they ſhould doe unto us : this is the Law and the Prophets (ſaith our Saviour Chriſt.) Mat. 7.12. Now, the ſquare for all our actions, muſt bee the Word of God : and Gods Word gives this direction; doe thou to thy neighbour as thou in thy reaſon and conſcience thinkeſt hee ſhould doe to thee, if thou wert in his caſe, and he in thine.

B The 2. rule, is that which Paul teacheth us, ſaying, Give unto every man that which is their due: tribute to whom tribute belongeth, &c. Rom. 13.7. that which Gods word, and our conſcience, and the wholeſome lawes of the realme binde us unto, that we muſt give unto every man.

The third rule is this : Every man within the compaſſe of his calling, muſt not onely intend and labour for his owne good, but for the common good in that Church and common wealth wherein hee liveth. The blinde world out of their carnall mindes have learned this for a rule, Every man for himſelfe, and God for us all: and this is many a mans practice, hee will labour diligently in his calling, but all is for himſelfe. But hee that propoundeth onely this end in his calling, to benefit himſelfe alone, dealeth unjuſtly, both towards the Church and common-wealth in which hee liveth, who ought to have a part of his care with himſelfe.

The 4. rule is taught us alſo by S. Paul : Defraud or oppreſſe no man in any matter. This rule concerneth our manner of dealing in common affaires. In all our trafficke and bargaines, as we would benefit our ſelves, ſo wee muſt ſeeke to benefit thoſe with whom we deale. This rule is very neceſſary to bee learned : for this is the common practice of men in their trafficke. To uſe all meanes whereby they may defraud others ; ſo that they get unto themſelves, they care not how it come. But in the feare of God, let us remember, that the practice of juſtice (to which we are all bound) ſtandeth in this ; that wee defraud or oppreſſe no man in any thing. And thus much of this ſecond fruit of their faith.

The third fruit and effect of theſe mens faith, is this : They obtained the promiſes. By promiſes wee muſt not underſtand the maine promiſe, concerning the Meſſias comming ; for that they obtained not as yet: for (as it appeares v. 39.) They received not that promiſe; for Chriſt was not incarnate in their time. But by Promiſes are here meant certaine ſpeciall and particular promiſes, made unto them alone, and not common to all : ſo that the meaning of theſe words is this : They obtained the benefit and accompliſhment of thoſe particular promiſes that God made unto them. This effect is ſpecially to be underſtood of Caleb, and David : for Caleb entred into the Land of Canaan, and there enjoyed his poſſeſſion, according to Gods promiſe made unto him, Joſh. 14. So David had a particular promiſe made unto him, that hee ſhould bee King over Iſrael ; this hee long waited for, and reſting herein he was not onely annointed King, but in due time actually made King over all Iſrael.

Whereas theſe worthy men, by faith obtained theſe promiſes; Hereby we may be directed, to ſee the true cauſe, why after ſo long preaching of the Word, and often receiving of the Sacraments, men reape ſo little profit ; eſpecially, conſidering that God hath made a promiſe of grace and salvation, by meanes of his Word and Sacraments. Hence therfore we must learne that the word of God preached, and the Sacraments received, are unprofitable, not because God altereth his wil, having promised his blessing in these meanes; for herein the will of God is unchangeable; but the cause is, the great measure of unbeleefe, in those which heare and receive. They therefore profit not, because they receive them without faith. For howsoever men say they have faith; yet the works of their lives, and their estate in sinne, after long hearing, shew plainly, they have none at all. Take a vessell that is close stopped, and cast it into a river, or into the sea; yet it receives no water, because it hath no place of entrance: Even so, bring a man that wants faith, to the Word and Sacraments, wherein God hath promised the fulnesse of his grace; yet hee receives none, because his heart is closed up through unbeleefe. This is it which makes the hart like a stopped vessell, which hath no entrance for Gods grace. We therefore in the feare of God, must labour to have our hearts purged of this unbeleefe and lip-faith; and to be endued with true saving faith; whereby we may profitably heare the Word, and receive the Sacraments, and so enjoy Gods most excellent promises in Christ. Men may lie, and be deceived; but God is truth it selfe, and cannot lie: and therefore, as he hath made his promise of life to beleevers, and to no other: so will he assuredly accomplish the same to them, and to no other. Wherefore if we love our soules, and desire life, let us get into our hearts the grace of faith. And thus much of the third effect of their faith.

The fourth and fifth effects, which I wil handle together, are these: Stopped the mouthes of Lions. Quenched the violence of the fire.] For the fourth: Whereas some of these persons are said to have stopped the mouths of Lions, it is to be understood of Daniel; as appeareth in the sixth Chapter of that Booke. For Daniel (through the malice of others that incensed the Kings wrath against him) was cast into the den of hunger-bit Lions. But Daniel even then beleeved in the Lord, and put all his trust in God, and for this cause, The Lord by his Angell stopped the mouthes of the Lions, and (as it were) sealed up their pawes, that they could not hurt him.

The fifth effect, in quenching of the violence of the fire, must be understood of Shadrach, Meshac, and Abednego, the companions of Daniel: which three (as we may reade, Dan. 3.) refused to worship the golden Image, which Nabuchadnezzar had set up. For which cause, they were cast into an hot burning Oven; but they put their trust in God, and clave fast unto him in obedience, even to the hazard of their lives.

Whereupon, the Lord by his omnipotent power, did most miraculously preserve them, by staying the rage of the fire contrary to the nature thereof, that it had no power over their A bodies; nay, it did not burne the haire of their heads, nor cause their garments to smell. And therefore they are said, to have quenched the violence of it, because it had no power over them, though it burned most fiercely; but was to them, as though it had beene quite put out and quenched.

Now, joine these two effects together, and they afford us good instructions: First, here wee learne how to behave our selves in time of danger, and at the point of death. Even as these foure men did, so must wee from the bottome of our hearts forsake our selves, and put all our trust in Christ. This did Daniel, when hee was in the Lions den: and this did the 3. Children, in the hot firy furnace. And this hath beene B alwayes the ancient practice of Gods children in all ages; At the very point of death, and in the extremity of all danger, they rested themselves wholly upon the mercifull promises of the true God. The time will come upon us all, wherein wee shall bee called to the practice of this dutie: for wee must all passe the doore of death, and once lie in the pangs thereof. Now, what shall wee doe when we lie halfe dead, gasping and panting for breath, able to speake to no man, nor to heare any speaking unto us, when all comfort of the world fails us? Surely, we must then, at that very instant, labour to leave our selves and this world, and yeeld up our selves by faith into the hands of God, and cleave fast unto Christs passion, from the bottome of our hearts, and hee will surely deliver us from the danger; stopping the mouth of Satan that roaring Lion, and quenching the fire of hell, that it shall not touch us. C

But some will say, if this be all we must doe, then all is well: for this I can soone doe when time serves, and therefore I will take no care till then? Answer. Beware of spirituall guile: for it will bee found a most hard matter, for a man to relye and cast himselfe wholly upon Christ, in the houre and pang of death. For then above all times, is the devill busie against us: then will the conscience stirre, if ever; and the body being tormented, the soule must needs be wonderfull heavy. This wee may see by the state of our Saviour Christ, in his agony and passion; and therefore wee must not reckon so lightly of this duty. D

Quest. But if it bee so hard a thing, how could Daniel and the three children doe it? An. They were prepared for it: for they rested upon GOD in the time of peace: and so were enabled to relie upon him in time of perill. Even so, if wee would beleeve in God when wee die, and then shew forth our faith, wee must while wee live put our trust in him, and shew it by obedience: for rare it is to finde a man that lives in unbeleefe, to shew forth faith at his end. And therefore while wee have health, strength, and peace, we must labour to beleeve, and then shall we finde the comfort of it in time of perill, and of death.

Secondly;

Secondly, from these two effects of faith, wee observe further, that Gods divine providence doth firmely rule and governe the whole world. Ordinarily God governes the world by secondarie causes, setting one creature over another, and ordaining one to doe this thing, and another that, and accordingly they worke: but we must not thinke that God is bound to any of these means, but is most free to use them, or not to use them. Ordinarily hee executeth this or that punishment by this or that creature, and so by meanes conveyes his blessings: but yet he can worke without them, as here we see. For, he preserves his creatures against the ordinarie meanes; as Daniel from the Lions, whose nature is to devoure: and against the nature of fire, hee saved the three children in the fire. So that God worketh by meanes, but yet freely; because he can worke at his pleasure, either without or against meanes: and his powerfull hand, saving against meanes, shewes his ruling and disposing providence over all things.

Thirdly, by these effects of their faith wee learne, that Gods goodnesse and mercie towards beleevers, is farre greater, and more unspeakable than ever hee promised, or they could expect. This point is carefully to bee considered of us all; for it is of singular and extraordinarie use, especially in time of perill and trouble: and yet wee see it is the plaine truth of God; and therefore Paul gives thanks and praise unto God, Who is able to doe for us exceeding abundantly above all that wee aske or thinke. Daniel put his trust in the Lord, when he was in the Lions den: and what doth he obtaine for his labour? the Lord never promised to stop the Lions mouthes, neither did Daniel ever presume upon that deliverance; and yet the Lord saved him. And so the three children though they made no account of their lives, because God had not promised to keepe them from burning, yet they come out in safety. For, God in mercie so quenched the heat of the fire unto them, that though it burnt to death those that cast them in; yet did it not so much as burn their garments, or the hair of their heads, to cause the same to smell. And the like is his goodnesse towards all his servants. David saith, The Lord prevented him with liberall blessings, that is, when David never asked such blessings at Gods hands, even then did the Lord bestow his liberall blessings upon him: as namely this, when David was following his Fathers sheepe, and walking in his calling, hee never dreamed of any Kingdom: yet thence the Lord tooke him to be King over his people Israel. So the Israelites having beene 70. yeares in captivity, never thought of returne; and yet then were they delivered: and their deliverance was so strange and miraculous, that they were like them that dreame, Psal. 126. 1. When Peter was cast into prison by Herod, and committed to foure quaternions of Souldiers to be kept, the Angell of the Lord came and awoke him as hee slept, and led him out of prison, past the watches, and thorow the iron gate, and then left him. Now, this deliverance was so strange unto him, that he knew not whether it was true, but thought he had seene a vision. From hence it is that God hath made this gracious promise unto his Church, to answer before they call, and to heare while they speake, Isay 65. 24. So endlesse is his mercie, and his goodnesse so unspeakable towards his servants, that if they cleave unto him unfainedly, they shall finde his bounty farre surpassing all that they could aske or thinke.

The consideration hereof serves to stirre up every one of us in our places, to cleave unfainedly unto the true God, with all our hearts by faith, in due reverence and obedience. If a servant were to chuse his Master, and among an hundred should heare of one, that besides his wages, would give unto his servants, gifts which they would not thinke of; this servant would forsake al the rest to come unto this one. Behold, the Lord our God is the bountifull master: who doth not onely keepe covenant with his servants, in a full accomplishment of his promises; but is exceeding gracious, preventing them with liberall blessings, above all that they can wish for themselves: wherefore let us forsake all our bad Masters, the world, the flesh, and the devill, in the service of sinne: and resigne our selves with full purpose of heart, to serve this our good God, to the end of our dayes. There is no man living, that can have such true joy in heart, as Gods servants have; for God shewes more kindnesse unto them, than they can aske or thinke of. And take this for truth also; there bee none that thus give themselves to serve God faithfully with all their hearts, but before they die they shall finde this to be true, that God is a most mercifull God, and his goodnesse endlesse towards them above their deserts.

Secondly, the endlesse mercie of God must move us all to repent us of our sins, and to trust in him for the pardon of them, be they never so many or heinous: for they can never reach to the multitude of his mercies. Though they be in number like the sand of the sea, they must not dismay us from comming unto him: but considering that his goodnesse is endlesse, and his mercie is over all his workes, wee must come unto him for the pardon of our sinnes. For God is mercifull to performe his promise; yea, and beyond his promise, to do for us more than we can thinke of. Many indeed abuse this mercie of God by presuming thereon to goe on in sinne: but such deceive themselves: For God will not be mercifull unto them, Deut. 29. 20. It is the penitent person that shall finde mercie.

The sixth effect of their faith is in these words, Escaped the edge of the sword. The words in the originall, are thus: Escaped the mouth of the sword: which is the Hebrew phrase in the old Testa-

Teſtament, and here followed by the Penman of this Epiſtle: and before, where he calleth the Word of God a two mouthed ſword, Heb. 4.12. hereby meaning (as it is tranſlated) a two edged ſword. This effect muſt bee underſtood of two worthy Prophets, Elias and Elizeus: for Elias, we may reade, that when hee had ſlaine Baals Prieſt, (1 King. 19.1.) Iezabel the Queene threatned to kill him: which hee hearing, fled into the wildernes, and thence was led to Mount Horeb, & there eſcaped by means of his faith. And for Elizeus, we may reade, that when he diſcloſed the King of Syria his counſell to the King of Iſrael, (2 King. 6.) hee was compaſſed about in Dothan, the city where he lay, with a huge hoaſt of Aſſyrians; but praying to the Lord, the Lord ſmote the hoaſt with blindneſſe, and ſo the Prophet led them in ſafetie to Samaria. So then, the meaning of this effect is, that when theſe ſervants of God were in diſtreſſe and danger of death, they denyed themſelves, and their owne helpe, and by faith relied upon God unfainedly, from the bottome of their hearts; and ſo found deliverance with God, from the perill of death.

First, here we learne, that God provides for the ſafetie and deliverance of his ſervants, in the extremitie of perill and danger, when both might and multitude are againſt them. This point wee have touched in divers examples before, and therefore doe here onely name it.

Secondly, in that theſe men in the extremity of danger beleeved, and ſo eſcaped the edge of the ſword; we learne, that when we are in greateſt danger, ſo as we ſee no way to eſcape; even then we muſt put our truſt in the true God, and he will ſave us. This wee muſt doe, not onely for the ſafety of our body; but more eſpecially, for the ſalvation of our ſoule. Put the caſe a man were in deſpaire of his ſalvation, and that he ſees legions of devils compaſſing him about to take him away: what muſt this man doe in this caſe? Anſw. Looke what Elias and Elizeus did, the ſame thing muſt he doe; he muſt not lie dead in deſperation, yeelding thereto: but at the very ſame time, when ſuch terrors oppreſſe him, he muſt by faith lift up his heart to God, and put his truſt and confidence in him through Chriſt. And if hee can this doe, hee may aſſure himſelfe, that he ſhall certainely eſcape theſe fearefull terrors of conſcience, and the torments of hell, as Elias and Elizeus did the edge of the ſword: for let a man put his whole truſt in God, & whatſoever his troubles bee, God will deliver him. Great are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivers him out of them all, Pſal. 34.19. Indeed we muſt not limit God, for time, or manner of deliverance: but wait on God by faith, accounting his grace ſufficient, till deliverance come. And thus much of the ſixth effect.

The ſeventh effect of their faith is this: Of weake were made ſtrong. Or thus: Of weake were reſtored to health. This muſt bee underſtood of Hezekias, a worthy King of Juda, who (as wee may reade, 2 Kings 20.) being ſore ſicke even unto death, was reſtored to health, and obtained of God the lengthning of his daies, for the ſpace of fifteene yeares. Which wonderfull recovery he obtained by meanes of his faith, which he ſhewed in time of his ſickneſſe, by a prayer he made unto God; the ſubſtance whereof ſtood in theſe two things: Firſt, being very ſicke, hee prayed for the pardon of his ſinnes. This appeareth by his thankſgiving upon his recovery, Iſay 38.17. where he confeſſeth, that God had caſt all his ſinnes behinde his backe. Now, looke for what he gave thanks, that (no doubt) he had before begged of God in prayer. Secondly, he made requeſt unto God for prolonging of his dayes, for ſome reaſons which did concerne himſelfe: and this hee alſo prayed for in faith. Now, the reaſons moving him to pray for longer life, were theſe: Firſt, he had then no iſſue to ſucceed him in his Kingdome; and therefore he prayed for life, to beget a childe, which might ſit upon his throne after him. And the ground of this prayer was this: God had made a particular promiſe unto David and Salomon, 1 Kings 8.25. That they ſhould not want iſſue after them to ſit upon the Throne of Iſrael, ſo that their children tooke heed to their way, to walke before the Lord, as David did. Now King Hezekiah, knowing this promiſe, had regard hereunto: and building himſelfe hereon, his conſcience bearing him witneſſe, that he had walked before the Lord uprightly, he prayes for iſſue to ſucceed him: and for that cauſe, he deſires ſtrength of bodie, and length of dayes. This appeareth notably by his prayer, 2 King. 20. Lord, (ſaith he) I beſeech thee now remember how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart. The ſumme of his prayer is this: All the Kings ſucceeding David and Salomon, which walke in Gods Commandements, ſhall have iſſue to ſit on their thrones after them. Now, from hence he prayes thus: Oh Lord, I have walked before thee, in truth and ſincerity of heart: and hereupon the concluſion followes, grant me iſſue to ſit upon my throne after me; and therefore life and health to accompliſh the ſame.

Secondly, hee prayed that he might live to glorifie God, in that weighty calling, wherein God had placed him over his people. This appeareth likewiſe, by his thankſgiving unto the Lord, upon his recoverie: where he ſaith, Iſa. 38.20. The Lord was ready to ſave me: therefore wee will ſing my ſong all the dayes of our life in the houſe of the Lord. Thus by his worthy prayer, hee ſhewed forth his faith notably: by vertue whereof, being ſicke unto death, hee obtained of the Lord, the prolonging of his daies, for the ſpace of fifteene yeares. And ſo we ſee, to whom this ſeventh effect of faith is to be referred.

Here wee are taught a ſpeciall dutie, for the recovery of our health, in the time of ſickneſſe:

to

to wit, before we uſe the ordinarie meanes of Phyſicke, we muſt (according to this example) firſt put our faith in practice, by humbling our ſelves for our ſinnes paſt, confeſſing them truly unto God, and praying for pardon from a reſolute purpoſe of heart to lead a new life: and alſo by intreating health of God, and his good bleſſing upon the meanes which we ſhall uſe for our recoverie. Thus have other of Gods ſervants done, beſide Hezekias. When David was grievouſly ſicke, the principall thing hee did, was this practice of faith; in humbling his ſoule before God for his ſinnes, and intreating earneſtly the pardon of them, as wee may ſee, Pſalm. 6. and 38. This is the principall thing, which in thoſe Pſalmes is propounded of David. And ſo the Apoſtle counſels, Jam. 5. 14, 15. Is any man ſicke among you? let him call for the Elders of the Church: and what muſt they doe? ſurely, firſt pray for him; and then (as the cuſtome was in thoſe dayes) anoint him with oyle in the name of the Lord. And the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke, and the Lord ſhall rayſe him up againe: and if he have committed any ſin, it ſhall be forgiven him. And here we muſt be admoniſhed, to beware of the bad practices of the world in this caſe: the moſt men in their ſickneſſe, firſt ſeeke to the Phyſitians; and if that fayle them, they ſend for the Miniſter. This was King Aſa his practice, for which he is branded to all poſteritie, that being diſeaſed in his feet, he ſought unto Phyſitians, and not unto the Lord, 2 Chron. 16. 12. though otherwiſe hee had good things in him, 1 King. 15. 14. And many doe farre worſe, who ſeeke to Witches and Inchanters, when they or theirs are in diſtreſſe; but this is to forſake God, and to ſeeke helpe of the Devill, like to King Ahaziah, who ſent to Baalzebub the god of Ekron, to know of his recoverie, when hee was ſicke upon a fall, 2. King. 1. 2. This ſhould be farre from all Gods children, for as Ahaziahs ſickneſſe became deadly, through his ſending to Baalzebub; ſo undoubtedly, many diſeaſes become incurable, by the bad and prepoſterous dealing of the Patient, who either uſeth unlawfull meanes, or lawfull meanes diſorderly, or truſteth therein. Wee therefore in this caſe, muſt remember our dutie in the practice of faith, as Hezekiah did.

The eighth fruit of faith is this; Waxed valiant in battell. This effect may well bee underſtood of all the Iudges before named, and of all the good Kings in Juda & Iſrael. But yet there be two eſpecially, to whom we may more peculiarly referre it: to wit, Samſon and David. For Samſon, he by meanes of faith, came to be ſo mighty, Judg. 15. 15. that with the jaw-bone of an aſſe, he ſlew a thouſand Philiſtims. And for David, he likewiſe was ſo encouraged by faith, that with the ſame ſling, wherewith hee kept his fathers ſheep (which was but a ſlender weapon for warre) he encountred with Goliah that huge Philiſtim, and hit him with a ſtone in the forehead, and ſlew him. Both theſe facts were the fruits of their faith, which made them bold to encounter with theſe mightie enemies.

In this effect of their faith, firſt; we may obſerve, that true fortitude and manhood, right valour and courage, comes from true faith. It muſt bee granted, that many heathen men had great ſtrength and courage, but indeed it was but a ſhadow of true valour; for right valour comes from a beleeving heart. And therefore it is ſaid, that theſe Judges and Princes of Iſrael, waxed ſtrong in battell by faith.

Secondly, doth true faith make men valiant in battell? Then ſhould the preaching of the word be ſet up and maintained, as well in the Campe, and Garriſon, and among Souldiers on the ſeas; as in Cities and Townes of peace. For the preaching of the word is the meanes of this faith, which gives valour in battell, to them that fight in a good cauſe.

Hence it was, that the Lord injoyned by Moſes, that when the people of Iſrael went out to battell, the Prieſts ſhould come forth, and encourage the people, that their hearts might not faint, nor feare, nor dread their enemies; becauſe of the powerfull preſence of God fighting for them. Deut. 18. 2, 3. The Papiſts object this (by way of reproach) againſt Zuinglius, who was one of the reſtorers of the Goſpell: That hee died in the field among Souldiers: but this indeed is no reproach, but rather a matter of great commendation unto him: in that, for the increaſe of faith and knowledge, in them that were weake Chriſtians about him, he was content to hazard his owne life. And thus much of the eighth effect.

The ninth effect of faith, for which theſe worthy men are commended, is this; They turned to flight the Armies of the Aliants. This may be underſtood of the moſt of the Iudges, and of the good Kings of Judah and Iſrael. But I will make choice, eſpecially of two, Gedeon, and Iehoſaphat; for Gedeon, one of the Judges, with three hundred Souldiers, Judg. 6. 7. altogether unweaponed, onely with light pitchers in their hands, put to flight a mighty huge Army of the Midianites. And Iehoſaphat a godly King, being aſſaulted with a mighty and great Armie of the Moabites, Ammonites, and men of Mount Seir, knew that by force of armes he could not withſtand them; and therefore by faith makes a worthy prayer unto the Lord, and the Lord heard him, and ſet his enemies one againſt another, and ſo did he put them to flight, which hee could never have done by any ſtrength of his owne.

Here wee may learne how Kingdomes and people may become able to put to flight their enemies. The beſt way is, to put in practice their faith in God; by humbling themſelves truly for their ſinnes paſt, with unfeined confeſſion of them unto God, praying withall earneſtly for the pardon of them; and for Gods ayd, aſſiſtance, and protection againſt their eneenemies. The power of this meanes is evident in Scripture: and therefore when Eliah was taken up, Elisha cried, My Father, my Father, the Chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof: 2 King. 2. 12. giving him this notable commendation, that he was as good to Israel, by meanes of his faith, as all their chariots and horsemen. Quest. How could that possibly be true? Ans. If we reade the Storie, wee shall finde it to bee most true, that by his prayers which he made in faith, hee did as much or more than all the strength of the land could doe. And so it shall be with all Christian Kings and people: if they can shew forth their faith, by prayer unto God, they shall doe wonderfull much hereby, in subduing their enemies.

To apply this to our selves: Wee have had many and dangerous assaults from popish enemies, both domesticall and forren, who have of long time, and no doubt still doe purpose our overthrow. Now, how shall we be able to withstand their might, and to escape their malice? True it is, Christian policie, and warlike provision must be used: yet our stay and rest must not be thereon; but we must stirre up our faith, both Magistrates and Subjects, Prince and People; and first of all humble our selves for our sinnes, and shew forth our repentance, by new obedience in time to come; and then pray for a blessing upon the outward meanes which shall be used. This is the right practice of faith, in the case of danger by our enemies; which we shall finde (if we exercise it unfainedly) to bee a surer meanes of safetie and victorie against our enemies, than all worldly munition and policie. For hereby we shall have the Lord for our protection, & his blessing upon the outward means, giving strength and good successe thereunto; when as, omitting this dutie, the Lord will not be with us, and then we shall find that vaine is the strength or wit of man. Let us not therefore betray our selves wilfully into our enemies hand; but by this practice of faith, enable our selves against all our enemies whatsoever: otherwise we may justly feare to be delivered into their hands, for a prey unto their teeth. And therefore if we love our owne safetie, and the welfare of our Land, let us practise this dutie: For the prayer of faith availeth much with God, if it be fervent; and therefore the Lord saith to Moses, when he fell downe before him, to turne backe the wrath that was broken in upon the people, Let me alone: as though Moses had held, or bound the Lords hand by his prayer, that he could not smite his people. And thus much for the ninth fruit of faith.

The faith of the widow, and the Shunamite.

A

Verse 35.

The women received their dead raised to life.

B

THis is the tenth and last fruit of their faith, which must bee understood of these two women especially; the widow of Zarephath, and the Shunamite. The widow of Zarephath, giving entertainment to Elijah in the great famine, had this blessing vouchsafed unto her for her faith, that her dead sonne was restored to life by the Prophet: And the Shunamite that provided lodging for the Prophet Elisha, had her only sonne restored to life from death by the Prophet through faith. Now here we must observe, that these two women did not onely beleeve in the true God; but more particularly, that God would use these his servants, as meanes to restore to life their two children that were dead: as appeares by this, that both of them made meanes to the Prophet, for the reviving of their children; which they did by faith.

1 King. 17.

2 King. 4.

C

But some will say, This last effect of faith, may seeme to crosse the Scripture else-where: which saith, that Christ is the first fruits of them that sleepe. How then could these that were before Christs incarnation, be restored from death to life? Answ. Saint Pauls meaning is this, that Christ is the first of all those that rose from death to life, to die no more, but to live for ever. So indeed Christ is the first fruits of them that sleepe: for he rose to live for ever. As for these two, and some other, mentioned both in the old Testament and in the new, that were raised from death to life, they rose not from the sleepe of death, to live for ever, but to die againe.

1 Cor. 15. 20.

D

In this tenth fruit of faith, all Parents may learne their dutie towards their children, in the case of sickneſse, or such like. They must follow the example of these two godly women, and labour especially to shew forth their faith in such duties as God requireth in such a case: to wit, they must humble themselves for their owne sins, and for the sins of their children and family: praying earnestly to God for the pardon of them (for God may visit the iniquitie of the Parents upon the children in bodily judgements) and intreating the Lord to restore them to health and liberty: and withall, they must use the ordinarie lawfull meanes of recoverie in physicke and such like, praying to God for a blessing thereupon.

This is their dutie; but (alas!) the manner and practice of many Parents, is farre otherwise: for whereas they should first seeke unto the Lord, and come to his Prophet, they either runne first to the ordinarie meanes of Physicke; or being worse disposed, seeke helpe of wizzards and blessers by their charmes and sorceries, ries forsaking God; and running to the Devill. Indeed, the use of lawfull meanes is not to bee discommended simply; but this prepostерous course is blame-worthy, and deprives many of Gods blessing in the meanes, That they seeke helpe of Physicke, before they have sought to the Lord in this holy practice of faith.

Quest. But how can the Parents faith benefit the childe? Answ. It cannot procure unto it eternall life: for every one must be saved by his owne faith in Christ. And yet the child receives many a good blessing at Gods hand, by meanes of the Parents faith; as namely, the benefit of the covenant of grace in the seales thereof; besides the fruition of many temporall blessings, as life it selfe in this place.

The consideration hereof, must move all Parents, above all things to labour for true faith: for by the practice hereof, they shall bee able to bring the greatest blessing upon themselves and their children, and upon the lawfull meanes which they shall use for their good. Say the Lord shall lay his hand upon children and servants in a family, what must parents and masters doe? Surely, the best way for helpe is the practice of faith, in true humiliation for sinne, and prayer to God for mercie, and for a blessing upon the meanes which they shall use. In all societies this is true, that by the faith of the governours, many curses are removed, and many blessings procured. God sends his judgements among us daily, and we know not when other moe shall befall us: but for removall and preventing of them, wee must give our selves to true humiliation and prayer; and so shall we finde the Lords mercie towards us, as these two women did.

And thus much of this tenth fruit of faith, and of them all severally.

Now from them all joyntly together, observe this speciall point; That faith is such a grace of God, as doth bring downe from heaven upon every beleever, all Gods blessings that are needfull for him. Who is he that desires not to bee made partaker of Gods blessings needfull for him, both in soule and bodie? Well; the only way and meanes hereto, is to get a true and a lively faith, and to put the same in practice, in all such duties as God shall require at our hands. The worthy men before named, obtained all the former most wonderfull blessings, by meanes of their faith: By it they escaped the edge of the sword, they quenched the violence of the fire, waxed mightie in battell, &c. as we have heard.

Now if faith bee such a notable grace of God, then above all things in this world, let us labour for it. Wee must not content our selves with lip-faith, and so presume upon Gods mercies; but we must labour for a true and a lively faith in Christ, which may purifie our hearts, and bring forth fruit in our lives. Here are strong motives to perswade us hereunto: for what doe we desire? riches, honour, or favour, and grace in the world? would we have health, and strength? nay, the favour of God, which is all in all? then looke to get true faith: for in the practice thereof, thou shalt obtaine of God, all needfull blessings, both temporall and spirituall. Many toyle themselves exceedingly, by worldly meanes to get temporall blessings, as health, wealth, honour, &c. and yet never attaine thereto, because they seeke them not by faith. I confesse, naturall men get many good things: but to them they are no blessings; because they want faith, both in getting and keeping of them: for they lay all religion aside, and toyle themselves wholly in worldly means. This course the childe of God must beware of. Say that a Prince bids one of his servants goe to his Treasurie, and there inrich himselfe with Jewels, with gold and silver, and with whatsoever he lacketh: what will this man do? Surely, first he will call for the keyes, whereby hee may unlocke the doores and chests; for else he can get nothing. Behold, in the Ministerie of his Word, God shewes us his full Treasurie, wherein we may inrich our selves, with all his blessings: Now, wee must not with the foole runne without the key, but labour first for true faith; which is that key, whereby Gods heavenly treasures are opened unto us: and we must be sure that we have a sound key; that is, a true and sound faith, which may strongly turne about the locks of Gods Treasurie. For this is most certaine, he that doth unfeinedly beleeve, shall never want any thing, either in bodie or soule, that is good for him to have. Every one will say, he beleeves; but the truth is, that true faith is rare: for mens hearts are not purified, nor their lives changed; but they remaine as sinfull as ever they were, which causeth Gods judgements to be so rife among us. Wherefore as we desire our owne good both in soule and bodie; so let us labour for true faith, and shew forth the power of it in our lives. And thus much of these Judges and Prophets, and of the fruits of their faith.

Beleevers under the Macchabees.

VERS. 35.

Others also were racked, and would not bee delivered, that they might receive a better resurrection.

IN

IN theſe words, the author of this Epiſtle proceeds to the fourth order of Examples of faith, contained in this Chapter; wherin (as in the former laſtly handled) he proceeds briefly, heaping up in few words, many worthy examples of faith, concealing the names of the parties, and onely ſetting downe thoſe things for which their faith is commended unto us. And this fourth and laſt order of examples, comprehendeth ſuch beleevers as lived under the regiment of the Macchabees, and afterward to the comming of Chriſt. For of beleevers in former times, it cannot be underſtood, becauſe there is a manifeſt diſtinction put betweene theſe beleevers, and the former Judges, Kings, and Prophets; in theſe words, Others alſo: whereby it is plaine, that here hee propounds examples of beleevers different from thoſe which hee mentioned before. And it is alſo plaine, that theſe beleevers lived before the comming of Chriſt. For howſoever the Chriſtians in the Primitive Church, were racked, ſcourged, and tormented after this ſort; yet of them this place cannot be underſtood, becauſe they enjoyed the promiſe of the Meſſias: but theſe here mentioned, enjoyed not that promiſe in their dayes, but waited for it by faith, and therein died, ver. 39. And indeed, in the time of the Macchabees, the Church of the Jewes was wonderfully perſecuted by Antiochus, about two hundred yeares before Chriſt, as we may ſee, 2 Macch. 4. and 6. Chapters.

Q. Where had the Author of this Epiſtle this large narration of theſe ſtrange perſecutions, ſeeing they are not regiſtred in the books of the old Teſtament?

Anſw. Wee may judge, that he gathered it out of the Stories and Records of men: which (howſoever they be not now extant) yet in his dayes in the Primitive Church, were extant, knowne, and approved. Neither muſt this ſeeme ſtrange unto us: for the ſpirit of God, in the old Teſtament ſpeaking of men, hath oftentimes reference and relation therein to humane writings; as this phraſe, (The reſt of the acts of ſuch and ſuch, are they not written in the books of the Chronicles of the Kings of Iudah and Iſrael?) ſo often uſed in the books of Kings and Chronicles, doth evidently declare.

Now thoſe bookes of the Chronicles were not parcels of holy Scripture, but civil, or Eccleſiaſticall Stories, like to our books of Martyrs and Chronicles. 2 Tim. 3. 8. S. Paul ſaith, Iannes and Iambres reſiſted Moſes. Now, in the booke of Exodus, we ſhall not finde the Sorcerers that withſtood Moſes once named. And S. Iude maketh mention of a prophecie of Enoch, ver. 14. which in all the old Teſtament is not recorded: and it is like that Moſes was the firſt penne-man of holy Scripture. Whence then had theſe Apoſtles theſe things? Anſw. No doubt the holy Ghoſt might reveale ſuch things unto them, though they had beene unknowne in thoſe times: but it is more probable, that the Apoſtles had them out of ſome Jewiſh writers, or records then extant, and approved among the Jewes. So Paul preaching to the Athenians, alleageth the ſaying of Aratus an Athenian Poet: For we are his generation. And to the Corinthians, hee propoundeth a ſentence of Menander; Evill words corrupt good manners, 1 Cor. 15. And to Titus, he alleageth Epimenides, a Cretian Poet; The Cretians are alwayes liars, evill beaſts, ſlow bellies, Tit. 1. 12.

Now whereas the ſpirit of God taketh theſe ſentences out of the writings of men, we may learne, that to reade the writings of men is not unlawfull, but a thing of good uſe to the ſervants of God. But whereas ſome would hence prove, that their authoritie may bee alleaged ordinarily at every mans pleaſure in the publike miniſterie, it hath no ground in theſe places. For firſt, the Apoſtles were ſo guided by the holy Ghoſt in their publike Miniſterie, that they could not erre; but no Miniſters at this day have ſuch a privilege. Secondly, the Apoſtles alleaging or recording the ſayings of men in their Sermons or writings, did thereby ſanctifie them, and make them to become a part of holy Scripture. This no ordinarie Miniſter can doe; but let him alleage a humane teſtimonie tenne thouſand times, yet ſtill it remaineth humane, and is not Gods Word. Thirdly, they that would warrant their practice, in alleaging humane teſtimonies in their ſermons by the Apoſtles, ought to follow the Apoſtles in their manner of allegations. Now the Apoſtles were ſo ſparing herein, that in many books we ſhall not finde one: for there are onely three in all the new Teſtament. Againe, the Apoſtles did it without any oſtentation: for the names of the Authors are concealed whence they tooke their teſtimonies.

And laſtly, the Apoſtles did it upon weightie cauſe and juſt occaſion: to wit, when they were perſwaded in conſcience, that thoſe teſtimonies would convince the conſciences of their hearers in thoſe things for which they alleaged them. Now how farre many differ from the Apoſtles in their allegations, let the world judge.

Yet before wee come to ſpeake of theſe examples of faith in particular, there are ſundrie generall points to bee handled. In the three former verſes, the ſpirit of God hath ſet downe the proſperous ſucceſſe of beleevers through faith: but here he comes to acquaint us with a different eſtate of other beleevers under grievous perſecutions and torments, even to moſt cruell and bitter kinds of death.

From this which the Apoſtle here obſerveth, we may take a view of the ſtate of Gods Church and people here in this world. For God vouchſafeth peace, and proſperous ſucceſſe to ſome, as a juſt reward of faith and obedience; but others muſt want the comfort of outward peace and welfare, and undergoe most grievous trials and persecutions. Looke as there is a continuall interchange betweene day and night, and the one doth constantly follow the other, so as it is one while day, and another while night: so is it with the Church of God, and with true beleevers in this world: sometime they have peace and prosperity; and this continueth not alway: but another while they are in trouble, misery, and persecution.

out-

To make this point more plaine, because it is of some importance; wee may behold the truth of it, in the Church of God from the beginning. Adams family was Gods Church, and therein was first notable peace: but when God accepted Abels sacrifice, and refused Cains, then persecution began, and Cain slew his brother Abel. Abraham is called the Father of the faithfull, and his family in those dayes was the true Church of God; wherein we may notably see this changeable estate; for God cals him out of Charran, to dwell in the land of Canaan, Exod. 12. 1. 10. But within a while, the famine was so great in the Land, that hee was faine to goe downe into Ægypt to sojourne there. And there the Lord blessed him exceedingly, and inriched him so greatly, that he became a mighty Prince, able to encounter with the Kings of those nations in battell, after his returne to Canaan, Exod. 14.

The Israelites, Gods chosen people, were 400. yeares in bondage in Ægypt; but at the appointed time God gave them a glorious deliverance: and yet they were tried in the wildernesse 40. yeares; after which time they were planted safely in the fruitfull Land of Canaan, a Land that flowed with milke and hony. And there also, the Church of God was in this case: sometime in prosperity, and otherwhiles in adversity, for when it was ruled by Judges (as in that booke appeares) for ten, twenty, thirty, or fourty yeares together, the Israelites for their sinnes, were in subjection and bondage to the nations round about them: as the Moabites, the Philistims, the Ammonites, &c. Yet then, when they cried to God, hee sent them some mighty Judge to deliver them, for so long time againe. This was the interchangeable estate of the Church, all the time of the Judges. And afterward, when it was governed by Kings, it was in the same case: for one while God gave them good Kings, who would advance religion, and maintaine and cherish the Priests and Prophets of God; and for their time the Church prospered. But otherwhiles, for their sinnes, God would send them wicked Princes: which persecuted the Prophets, and the godly in the land. This is plaine in the bookes of the Kings and Chronicles. After the reigne of good King Iosias came the captivity into Babylon, and 70. yeares expired, the Lord by K. Cyrus returned them againe. After their returne they were one while in peace, and another while in distresse: as we may see in the bookes of Ezra and Nehemiah: but above all other, that persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, was the most notorious, which was foretold by Daniel in his prophecy, Dan. 11. 36. and is recorded in the bookes of the Macchabees.

To come to the time of the Gospell: The Primitive Church, after the ascension of Christ, in the first 300. yeares, suffered ten most bloudy and grievous persecutions: betwixt each of which, she had some times of peace, and (as it were) respit to breathe in. And after the tenth persecution ended, the Lord raised up the good Emperour Constantine; who brought peace and welfare unto the Church. But soone after him, the heresie of Arrius, raised up by the devill, brought as grievous persecutions on the Church, as ever the Pagans did; being a most blasphemous heresie, denying the eternall deity of Christ, and of the holy Ghost: and it prevailed in the Church for 80. yeares. Not long after the suppression of that heresie, began the idolatry and tyranny of Antichrist to prevaile in the Church, for many hundred yeares. And now, about some fourescore yeares agone, the Lord in mercy raised up worthy instruments, by whose meanes hee delivered his Church from that idolatry and blindnesse: yet so, as still the Church hath felt the bloudy hand of Antichrist in grievous persecutions. All which, shewes this to be most true: that the outward state of Gods Church is interchangeable, having one while peace, and another while grievous persecution.

To apply this to our selves: God hath planted his Church among us in this land, and for many yeares together, hath blessed us with prosperity and peace: which in great mercy hee hath given us, as a reward of the faith of his servants which are among us; and during this time, wee have had great freedome and liberty in Gods holy ministery, for the Word, Prayer, and Sacraments. But we must know, that the state of Gods Church, for peace and trouble, is interchangeable, as day and night, for light and darkenesse. Wherefore wee must be advertised to looke unto our selves: for our estate in peace must not last alwayes; these golden dayes will have an end, and troubles and afflictions will undoubtedly come. Indeed God onely knoweth, what kind of afflictions shall befall, and the particular time thereof: but that they shall come in the time appointed of God, wee may resolve our selves by the reasons following:

First, the tenour of the Law is this; that the curse doth follow the transgression: so that when any man, or family, or people, live in the breach of Gods commandements, they must looke for Gods judgements to be powred upon them. Now we may too truly assume that this our nation and people abound with grievous sinne in all estates. For in the civill estate, (to omit the manifold practices of oppression) where is justice without bribery? or bargaining, without fraud and deceit? And in the miniſtery (beſide many abuſes) where is that care which ought to be for the building of Gods Church? And for the body of our people (beſide groſſe ignorance, and ſuperſtition) what fearefull blaſphemie, whoredome, ſwearing, and Sabbath-breaking, doth every where abound? beſide fearefull Atheiſme, which is a mother of abominations: whether we reſpect naturall Atheiſme, whereby many deny God by their workes, or learned Atheiſme in ſome, who diſpute againſt the truth of God, revealed in his Word. All theſe, and many other ſinnes among us, cry loud for Gods judgements upon us; even for that fearefull judgement, the removall of Gods kingdome in the Goſpell of peace.

Secondly, conſider what manner of perſons of place, and note, both in Church and Commonwealth, God takes from us by death, even in their beſt time: are they not ſuch as excelled among us, for great wiſdome and learning, and for true piety and good conſcience? now howſoever this may ſeeme but a ſmall thing in the eyes of many; yet undoubtedly, it is a forerunner of Gods judgements: for the righteous periſh, and no man conſidereth it in heart; and mercifull men are taken away, and no man underſtandeth that the righteous is taken away from the evill to come, Iſa. 57. 1.

Thirdly, God hath ſet his fearfull judgements among us, and about us, warre and ſword in our neighbour nations; which alſo hath beene oft ſhaken at us: alſo famine and peſtilence throwout our owne land, by intercourſe and long continuance, Levit. 26. Now this is the truth of God, that when God ſends his judgements upon a people, if they doe not repent, one judgement is but the forerunner of another more grievous and terrible than the former. But little or no repentance appeares among us; nay rather, we fall away more and more, and ſo ſtand ſtill in danger of more fearefull judgements.

Laſtly, it is uſuall with God thus to deale with his owne ſervants: as hee doth ſometime reward their faith and obedience with peace; ſo otherwhiles he will try their faith by affliction. Thus he dealt with his ſervant Iob, though there were none for piety like him in his time, throw all the world. Now God hath his ſervants among us, for the triall of whoſe faith we may perſwade our ſelves ſome tribulation ſhal come upon us: For all that will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus, ſhall ſuffer tribulation, 2 Tim. 3. 12.

This being ſo, that our peace ſhall be turned into trouble, (as by the former reaſons, which directly faſten themſelves upon our Church and State, may evidently appeare) let us then here learne our duty.

First, we muſt caſt with our ſelves, what may be the worſt that can befall us, when triall and perſecution ſhall come. This is the counſell of our Saviour Chriſt to thoſe that would follow him conſtantly as good Diſciples: they muſt, as good builders, conſider of the coſt, before they lay the foundation; and like good warriors, conſider of their ſtrength, before they goe out into the field, leſt they leave off, and turne backe, like fooles and cowards, Luk. 14. 28, &c. Wee by Gods mercie doe now profeſſe the true religion of Chriſt, with hope to be ſaved thereby: therefore wee muſt caſt with our ſelves, what our religion may coſt us, and ſee before-hand, what is the worſt thing that may befall us, for our profeſſion of Chriſt and his Goſpell. If we have not done this in the beginning of our profeſſion, we muſt now doe it: for better late than never: leſt going on ſecurely, without this account making, wee ſhamefully forſake Chriſt when triall comes.

In former times, the conſtant profeſſion of Chriſt, hath coſt men loſſe of friends, loſſe of goods, and liberty; yea, the loſſe of their hearts bloud: and the ſame caſe may befall us. Wherefore, we muſt caſt with our ſelves, and ſee whether we be willing to ſuffer the loſſe of goods, and friends; yea, the loſſe of our lives, for the defence of Chriſts true religion.

Againe, as this eſtate of the Church muſt move us to make this account, for reſolution in ſuffering; ſo it muſt teach us to labour for thoſe ſaving graces of Gods Spirit, which may inable us to ſtand faſt in all temptations, troubles, and perſecutions. Wee muſt not content our ſelves with blazing lamps, as the five fooliſh virgins did: but get the oyle of grace into the veſſels of our hearts. Knowledge in the Word is a commendable thing: but not ſufficient to make us ſtand in the day of triall. Wee therefore muſt labour for true ſaving graces; eſpecially for this, to have our hearts rooted and grounded in the love of God, through faith: whereby wee are aſſured, that God is our father in Chriſt, and Jeſus Chriſt our Redeemer, and the holy Ghoſt our comforter and ſanctifier. This aſſurance of faith will ſtabliſh our hearts in all eſtates: come life, come death, wee need not feare; for nothing ſhall bee able to ſeparate us from this love of God in Chriſt Jeſus.

And thus much of the coherence of this verſe with the former. Now to the words.

Others alſo were racked, &c. Here the holy Ghoſt begins to propound the fruits of faith, for which this laſt ranke of beleevers are commended unto us. And they are not ſuch famous exploits as the former, but nine ſeverall kinds of ſufferings: unto all which, we muſt remember to apply this clauſe by faith, from the 33. verſe: as thus, Through faith, they endured racking, mocking, and ſo for all the reſt.

Out of theſe effects in generall, wee may learne two things; First, a ſingular fruit of faith, for which it is here ſo highly commended in this laſt ranke of examples: to wit, that by it the childe of God is enabled to beare whatſoever the Lord ſhall lay upon him. The torments wherewith mans body may be afflicted, are many many and terrible; and yet, be they never so many, nor so terrible, true saving faith will make the child of God to beare them all for the honour of Christ.

The effects of faith before set downe, were many and singular: but undoubtedly, this strength of patience, which it giveth under the greatest torments for Christs sake, is one of the principall.

This, Paul doth notably testifie in his profession, (Rom. 8. 38, 39.) I am perswaded, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come; nor height nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. Oh singular power of faith! which so firmely unites the beleever unto Christ, that no torments in the world, no not all the power of Satan and his angels, can separate them asunder.

Quest. How doth faith worke this indissoluble power in cleaving unto Christ? Ans. After this manner: It is the property of faith, to perswade the conscience of Gods love and favour in Christ; and upon this perswasion, the heart beginnes to love God againe. Now by this love doth faith worke, and make a man able to beare all torments that can bee inflicted for religions sake: for, Love suffereth all things, 1 Cor. 13. 7. even that love wherewith one man loveth another: how much more then shall this love wherewith wee love God in Christ, make us to suffer any thing for his names sake? Hence it is that love is said to be strong as death: and the coles thereof are firie coles, and a vehement flame: yea, much water cannot quench love, neither can the floods drowne it; that is, grievous persecutions and torments cannot extinguish the same. Nay, such is the power of love to God when it is fervent, that it makes a man so zealous of Gods glory, that if there were no other way to glorifie God, than by sufferings; the childe of God would rather yeeld himselfe to endure the torments of the damned, than suffer God to lose his glory. This we may see in Paul, Rom. 9. 3. I would wish my selfe (saith he) to be separate from Christ for my brethren that are my kinsmen, according to the flesh: that is, the Israelites; meaning for the advancement of Gods glory in their calling and salvation. Such zeale we may see in Moses: for thinking that God should lose his glory, if the Israelites were destroyed, hee prayes the Lord to pardon their sinne: But if thou wilt not, then (saith he) raise me out of the booke which thou hast written.

This being the fruit of faith, To make a man able and willing to suffer any thing for Christs sake; we must hereby be moved to labour for true faith: for tribulation may come; nay, some affliction will come on every childe of God more or lesse. Now without faith wee shall never be able to glorifie God under the crosse. The Iust must live by faith in this estate, Heb. 10. 38.

as here they endure racking, burning, hewing asunder, &c. and all by faith.

Secondly, out of all these sufferings here endured by faith, note the mind and disposition of ungodly men towards Gods Church and people: they are most bitterly and bloudily bent against them: for here they put in execution upon Gods children, whatsoever cruelty the devill could suggest in their hearts. And this hath beene their disposition and behaviour, not onely before Christs incarnation, but also ever since: as may appeare by the manifold strange tortures, devised against Christians in the Primitive Church; and both then and since inflicted upon them. Behold it in the Church of Rome, especially in their late Inquisition: whereby, beside the cruell racking of the conscience by unjust inquiries, they put the Protestants to most cruell torments.

The consideration of this cruell disposition in the wicked, against the godly, is of speciall use. First, it proves unto us, that the religion which by Gods mercy we professe, contained in the bookes of the old and new Testament, is no politike device of man, but the sacred ordinance of the everlasting God. For, if it were the invention of man, it would so fit their humour, and accord with their nature, that generally it would be loved and embraced, and not one of an hundred would mislike it. But we see it is generally detested; This sect is every where spoken against, Act. 28. 22. naturall men reject it, and persecute it, and the professors of it unto the death. This they doe, because true religion is contrary to their nature, as light is to darkenesse; and condemnes those wayes and courses which they best like of. This reason shall justifie true religion, to be Gods own ordinance, even to the conscience of the worldly Atheist: his devillish malice against it, proves Gods divine truth to be in it.

Secondly, doe the wicked hate the godly, because of their religion and profession? then on the contrary, we must learne to love religion, because it is religion; and the professors of it, for their professions sake. This is Christs instruction, to love a Disciple because hee is a Disciple, Mat. 10. Indeed we must love all men: but especially those that embrace the Gospell of Christ, and be of the household of faith: for all such are brethren having one Father, which is God; and brethren ought to love one another. But alas, this lesson is not learned: for the world generally is given to mocking, and scoffing; and the matter of their mocking is religion, and the professors thereof. This ought not to be so: for howsoever men may faile both in knowledge and practice, yet the professors of religion should not so be despised. This abuse is growne to such an height, that many refraine the diligent hearing of the Word preached, lest they should be mocked. But let these mockers know, that herein they shake hands with the devill, and with the persecutors of Gods Church: for mocking is a kind of persecution. Young Christians should not bee so dealt with; but rather encouraged, for the advancement of the Kingdome of Christ. Thus dealt our Saviour Christ with those that gave any testimony of the sparks of grace: when the young man said, he had from his youth kept Gods commandements, the Text saith, Iesus beheld him, and loved him, Mark. 10. 21. and hearing a Scribe answer discreetly, hee said unto him, Thou art not farre from the kingdome of God, Mark. 12. 34. Now wee must be followers of Christ, and walke in love, judging and speaking the best of all professors, accounting none for hypocrites, till God make their hypocrisie knowne. It is a note of a Christian to love a man, because he loves religion: on the contrary, to hate a man, because he is a Christian, is a note of a persecutor, and an enemy to Christ. And thus much in generall.

Now wee come in particular to the severall kindes of suffering, which these beleevers endured by faith: the first whereof, is racking: in these words, others also were racked: or, as some translate it, And others were beaten with clubbes. For the word in the originall will beare either translation: and both of them fitly agree to this kinde of suffering. For in these times, the enemies of Gods Church, used to set the bodies of them that were to be tormented upon rackes and engines; whereon they stretched out every joynt, and then did beat the whole body thus racked with clubs, till the party were starke dead. An example of this kinde of suffering, wee have in Eleazer a Jew, 1 Mac. 6. who under Antiochus was first racked, and then beaten on every part of his body, unto the death; because hee refused to eat swines flesh.

But some will say, This cannot be any commendation of faith, to be racked and beaten to death: for malefactors and traytors are so used. Answ. To prevent this objection, the holy Ghost addeth these words; and would not be delivered: or, would not accept deliverance: to shew that this suffering was a notable commendation of true faith. The meaning of the words is this; That whereas some Jewes in the old Testament, were condemned to death for their religion by persecutors: and yet had life and liberty offered unto them, if they would recant and forsake their religion: This proffer of life they refused, and would not be delivered, upon such a condition.

In this example of faith, wee are taught to hold fast true religion, and to preferre the enjoying of it, before all the pleasures and commodities in the world; yea, before life it selfe. This point, Paul urgeth in sundry exhortations, saying, Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest hee fall, 1 Cor. 10. 12. forbidding us to preserve our outward peace, by communication with Idolaters. And againe, Stand fast in the faith, 1 Cor. 16. 13. Yea, this A is one maine point that Paul urgeth to Timothy in both his Epistles; to keepe faith and a good conscience. And our Saviour Christ in one of his parables, Matth. 12. 44. compares the kingdome of heaven, to a treasure hid in the field: which, when a man findeth, he hideth it, and goes home and sels all he hath, to buy the field. Whereby hee would teach us, that every ones duty, who would enjoy the Kingdome of heaven, is this: In regard of it, to forgoe and forsake all things else, esteeming them to bee drosse and dung, as Paul did, Philip. 3. 8. What though a man had all the riches and pleasures of the world, and all things else for this life, that his heart could wish? yet, if hee want religion, and a good conscience, all he hath is nothing: B for so hee wants the love and favour of God, and shall lose his soule; for the ransome whereof, all the world can doe nothing. Wherefore, we must hereby be admonished, to have more care to get and maintaine true religion, and a good conscience, than any thing in the world besides.

Now, because nature will judge it a part of rashnesse, to refuse life when it is offered: therefore, to prevent this conceit, against these beleevers, the holy Ghost sets downe a notable reason of this their fact: to wit, They refused deliverance, That they might receive a better resurrection. Many interpreters understand these words, of the resurrection at the day of judgement simply, as though the holy Ghost had said, These Martyrs therefore refused to be delivered from death; because they looked to receive, at the day of judgement, a greater measure of glory; even for this, that in obedience to God, for the maintenance of true Religion, they were content to lay downe their lives. This (no doubt) is the truth of God, that the more we humble our selves, in suffering for the Name of Christ in this life, the greater shall our glory bee at the generall resurrection; for our light affliction, which is but for a moment, causeth unto us a farre more excellent and eternall weight of glory, 2 Cor. 4. 17. And yet (as I take it) that is not the meaning of these words; but their resurrection at the last day, is here termed better, than the temporall deliverance offered unto them. For, being in torments on the racke, they were but dead men; and when life was offered unto them, it was (as it were) a kinde of resurrection, and in regard of the enemies of the Church, a good resurrection: but for that they would not lose the comfort of resurrection to life, at the last day.

Here then are two resurrections compared together. The first is a deliverance from temporall death; the second is a rising to life everlasting at the day of Judgement. Now, of these two, the latter is the better; and that in the judgement of Gods servants and Martyrs. So then, the true meaning of these words, is this: These servants of God refused deliverance from temporall tortures and punishments;

ments; becauſe their care and deſire was, that their bodies might riſe againe to life everlaſting, at the day of judgement: which riſing againe to life at that day, they judged farre better, than to riſe to a temporall life, for a while in this world.

This reaſon, well obſerved, may teach us theſe two ſpeciall duties; Firſt, to bee carefull above all things, for aſſurance in our conſciences (as theſe ſervants of God had) that our bodies ſhall riſe againe to life everlaſting at the laſt day. True it is, we make this confeſſion with our mouthes, among the articles of our faith; but we muſt labour to be ſetled and reſolved effectually in our hearts, that theſe our bodies (bee they never ſo miſerably tormented here) ſhall one day riſe to life and glory, by Jeſus Chriſt. All the true Martyrs of Chriſt knew and were reſolved of this: and this it was, that made them ſo confident in their ſufferings. And if we can attaine unto it, wee ſhall finde great uſe hereof, both in life and death. For our lives, this will move us to embrace true religion from our hearts, and in all things to endevour to keep a good conſcience. This Paul teſtifieth, Act. 24. 15, 16. for having made profeſſion of his hope in the reſurrection, both of juſt and unjuſt, he ſaith, And herein I endevour my ſelfe to have alwayes a cleare conſcience, both towards God, and towards men. And for death, this perſwaſion alſo is of great uſe: for it will notably ſtay the heart, againſt the naturall feare of death. It is a wonder to ſee how terrible the thoughts of death are to many a one. Now this feare ariſeth hence, that they are not in heart reſolved of their reſurrection to life and glory at the laſt day: for if they were, they would endevour themſelves with patience and with comfort, to undergoe the pangs thereof, though never ſo terrible.

Secondly, hence wee muſt learne ſo to lead this temporall life, that when we are dead, our bodies may riſe againe to life eternall. Theſe Martyrs are a noble preſident herein unto us: for they are ſo reſolute to hold that courſe of life, which hath the hope of glory, that they will rather loſe temporall life, than leave that courſe. And indeed this duty is ſo neceſſary, that unleſſe we order well this temporall life, we can never have hope to riſe to glory. Queſt. How ſhould we lead this temporall life, that we may riſe to glory after death? Anſ. This S. Iohn teacheth us, Rev. 20. 6. Bleſſed and holy is he that hath his part in the firſt reſurrection: for on ſuch the ſecond death hath no power. Wee muſt therefore labour earneſtly to have our part herein. The firſt reſurrection is ſpirituall, wrought in the ſoule by the holy Ghoſt, cauſing him that is by nature dead in ſinne, to riſe to newneſſe of life: whereof whoſoever is true partaker, ſhall undoubtedly riſe to glory. For they that are quickened in Chriſt from the death of ſinne, are made to ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Ieſus, Epheſ. 2. 5, 6. Naturall death may ſever ſoule and body for a time: but it can never hinder the fruition of eternall life. Wherefore as wee deſire this life which is eternall when wee are dead, ſo let us frame our naturall lives to die unto ſinne while wee are alive.

Verſe 36. And others have beene tried by mockings and ſcourgings: yea moreover by bonds and priſonment. The ſecond kinde of ſuffering wherewith the ſervants of God were then tried is mocking. Touching the which wee may obſerve divers points: Firſt, whence it came. No doubt it came from ungodly perſons, that were enemies to Gods Church and true Religion; for here it is made a part of the triall of Gods Church by the enemies thereof.

Here then behold the ſtate of mockers and ſcoffers at the ſervants of God: they are here accounted wicked wretches, and enemies to God and to his truth. So Saint Iude, ſpeaking of certaine falſe Prophets which were crept into the Church, calls them ungodly men, Jude 4. which hee proves afterward by their blacke mouthes in evill ſpeaking, ver 8. 10. And Iſmael is accounted a perſecuter by the holy Ghoſt, for mocking Iſaac, Gal. 4. 29. And David reckoning up the degrees of ſinners, makes the chaire of the ſcornfull the third and higheſt, Pſal. 1. 1. All theſe places ſhew the heinouſneſſe of this ſinne: and therefore if any of us, young or old, high or low, have beene overtaken with it heretofore, let us now repent and leave it: for it is odious in Gods ſight. Thou that art a ſcoffer maiſt flatter thy ſelfe, and thinke all is well, let the matter prove how it can, words are but wind. But know thy caſe is fearefull; for as yet thou wanteſt the feare of God, and art an enemy to Chriſt and his Religion, and one day thou ſhalt bee judged, not only for thy wicked deeds, but for all thy cruell ſpeakings, Jude v. 15.

Secondly, whereas theſe ſervants of God were tried by mockings, it ſhewes that Gods Church in this world is ſubject to this affliction. It is not a thing newly begun in this age of ours, but hath alwaies beene in Gods Church from the beginning. Gen. 21. 9. Iſmael mocked Iſaac; and Iſay brings in Chriſt complaining thus: Iſay 8. 18. Behold, I and my children whom the Lord hath given me, are as ſignes and wonders in Iſrael. And Ieremy ſaith, I am in deriſion daily: every one mocketh me, Jer. 20. 7. Yea, our Saviour Chriſt upon the Croſſe, when hee was working the bleſſed worke of mans redemption, was even then mocked by the ſpitefull Jewes, Mat. 27. 41. And Paul was mocked of the Athenians for preaching Chriſt and the reſurrection, Act. 17. 18.

Now if this have beene the eſtate of Chriſt our head, and of his moſt worthy Prophets and Apoſtles, to be mocked and ſcorned; then muſt no childe of God at this day thinke to eſcape: for if they have done this to the greene tree, what will they doe to the dry? Wherefore if wee belong to Christ, wee must prepare for it, and arme our selves with patience to undergoe this triall. The Disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above the Lord. If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more them of the house? Matt. 10.24,25.

Thirdly, whereas these servants of God were tried by mockings, and did endure the same, by faith; here we learne how to behave our selves, when wee are subject to mocking and derision, especially for religions sake. We must not returne mocke for mocke, and taunt for taunt; but with meeknesse of heart learne to beare the same. When Christ was upon the crosse, the Jewes most shamefully mocked him: yet even then did Christ pray for them. And the same was Davids behaviour, as wee reade notably, Psalme 38. 12, 13, 14. When his enemies spake evill of him, what did he? Did he raile on them againe? No; He was as a deafe man, and heard not: and as a dumbe man which openeth not his mouth: even as a man that heareth not; and in whose mouth are no reproofes. This was a rare thing in David, that he could thus bridle his affections in the case of reproach: but reade the 15. ver. and we shall see the cause; He trusted in the Lord his God: also he considered the hand of God in their reproaches, as 2 Sam. 16. 10. and these things made him silent. This example wee must looke upon, and learne hereby with patience to possesse our soules under reproach.

The third kinde of suffering is Scourging. They were not onely mocked for Religion, but also whipped and scourged. The fourth is bonds and imprisonment. The fifth is stoning, ver. 37. They were stoned. The sixth is this, They were hewne asunder. These were all worthy fruits of faith, being endured for Religions sake: but the particular points that might here be observed have beene handled before, and therefore I passe them over.

The seventh kinde of suffering is this: they were tempted. These words, by the change of a letter in the originall may be read thus, They were burned. And some doe so translate it; thinking that they that writ or copied out this Epistle at the first, did put one letter for another. Their reason is, because examples of grievous punishments are mentioned both before and after this: and therefore they thinke this should bee burning, which is a sore and grievous death. But wee may safely and truly reade the words thus, They were tempted: conceiving hereby that they were inticed and allured by faire promises of life to forsake their Religion. So the same word is used by Saint Iames, saying, Every man is tempted, when he is drawne away by his owne concupiscence, and is enticed, James 1. 14. If any aske why this triall in tempting should bee placed among such cruell torments? I answer, because it is as great a triall as any can bee. For it is as dangerous a temptation to overthrow religion and a good conscience, as any punishment in the world. This appeares plainely in Christs temptations by the Devill: for in those three, Satan bewrayes his malice and craft against Christ and his Church most notably. Now Satan, not prevailing with the two first, makes his third and last assault from the glory and dignity of the world: for shewing unto Christ all the kingdomes of the world, and the glory of them, hee saith, All these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall downe and worship mee, Matth. 4. 9. Indeed Christs holy heart would not yeeld unto it: but that it was a grievous temptation, appeares by Christs answer. For in the former temptations, hee onely disputed with Satan out of Scripture: But when this temptation comes, Christ bids him (as it were in passion) avoyd Satan; signifying thereby not onely his abhorring of that sinne, but also the danger of that assault by the world. And indeed these temptations on the right hand (as wee may call them) will most dangerously creepe into the heart, and cause shipwracke of faith and a good conscience. All Davids troubles and persecutions could not bring him to so grievous sinnes, as did a little ease and rest. A huge great Armie cannot so soone give entrance to an enemy into a City, as riches and faire promises: neither can bodily torments so soone prevaile against a good conscience, as will worldly pleasures and faire promises. In regard whereof, wee must take heed that wee bee not deceived by the world: for the view of the glory and pompe thereof, will sooner steale from a man both religion and a good conscience, than any persecution possibly can doe. And indeed, who do so oft change their religion when trials come, as they that have the world at will?

The eighth example of suffering is this, They were slaine with the sword. There can be nothing said of this, which hath not beene spoken in the former examples; and therefore I omit it.

The ninth and last example of suffering is this; They wandred up and down in sheep-skins, and goat-skins, being destitute afflicted, and tormented: That is, being either banished, or constrained by flight to save their lives, they wandred up and downe in base attire, and were destitute of ordinary food and comfort; and so in great affliction and torment.

Here wee see these servants of God were driven from their owne Countrey, friends and families, by persecution. Whence wee observe, that in time of persecution, a Christian man may lawfully fly for his safety, if he be not hindred by the bond of private or publike calling. For these servants of God, here commended for their faith, did flie when they were persecuted; and that by faith: therefore the action is lawfull, as I might prove at large, but that I have spoken of it heretofore. When our Saviour Christ knew that the Pharisies heard of the the multitude of Disciples which he made, Joh. 4. 1, 3. he left Iudea, where they had greatest jurisdiction, and came into Galile for his safety. The Prophets in the old Testament did flie: as Elias from Iezabel, 1 King. 19. 3. And so did the Apostles in the new, and that by Christs direction, Matth. 10. 23.

Object. 1. But some will say, Persecution is the hand of God, and therefore no man may flie from it: for so he should seeme to flie from God himselfe. Ans. Wee must consider persecution two waies: first, as it is the hand of God; secondly, as it is the worke of the wicked enemies of Gods Church. For them God useth sometimes as instruments, in laying his hand upon his Church, either for chastisement or for triall. Now a Christian being persecuted for the truth, and having liberty to flie, cannot bee said to flie from Gods hand, unlesse hee went away contrarie to Gods command, as Ionas did being sent to Ninive: and beside, hee knowes that is impossible. But his intent is to flie from the wrath of his enemies to save his life for the further good of Gods Church. Againe, the reason is not good, To say persecution is the hand of God, therefore a man may not flie from it? For so might a man conclude, that none ought to flie from sickneesse, or from warre: both which a man may doe with a safe conscience, not being hindred by some speciall calling.

Object. 2. But every one is bound to testifie his faith and religion before his enemies: and therefore may not flie in persecution. Answ. True indeed: a Christian man must so testifie his faith, if he be called thereto of God: but if God give him liberty and opportunity to flie, then he will not have him at that time to justifie his religion by that meanes.

Object. 2. But if it be lawfull to flie, how then comes it to passe that some of Gods children, when they might have fled, would not: but have stood to justifie their profession unto death? Ans. We must judge reverently of them, and thinke they did it by some speciall instinct and motion of Gods Spirit; as appeareth by their patience and constancy in their greatest torments. Examples hereof wee have in our English Acts and Monuments, in men worthy of notable commendations for their constancy and zeale for the truth of the Gospell.

Quest. If flight in persecution may be an action of faith; Whether may not the Minister of Gods Word flie in persecution?

Answ. There be some cases wherein the Minister may lawfully flie: First, when that particular Church and congregation over which he is placed, is dispersed by the enemies; so as he hath no hope to gather and call them backe againe: then (no doubt) he may flie, till his congregation be gathered againe. Secondly, If the persecutors doe specially aime at the Ministers life, then with the consent of his flocke, hee may goe apart for his owne safetie for a time. So it was with Paul: when the Ephesians were in an uprore about their Diana, Paul in zeale would have entred in among them; but the Disciples suffered him not, Act. 19. 30. This they did for Pauls safetie, and the good of the Church; for they knew those Idolaters would have beene most fierce against Paul. And so ought every particular Church to have speciall care of the life of the Minister. Other causes there be in which he may flie: but I will not stand to recite all, because there bee so many circumstances which may alter the case, as well respecting his enemies as himselfe and his people: making that unlawfull at one time, and to some persons, which to others or at another time may be lawfull.

Secondly, whereas it is said, These servants of God wandred up and downe: wee doe learne that a man may lawfully goe from place to place, and travell from country to country; if so be he goes in faith, as these men did. Againe, their going was to keepe faith and a good conscience: and for the same end may a man lawfully travell from place to place. But when men goe not in faith, nor yet for this end, the better to keepe a good conscience: there undoubtedly their travell is not lawfull.

By this then wee have just cause to reprove the bad course of many wanderers among us: as first, of our common beggers, whose whole life is nothing else but a wandering from place to place; though not in faith nor for conscience sake: but they finde a sweetnesse in their idle kinde of life; and therefore they wander, because they would not worke. Now this their course (having no other ground, but love of idlenesse, and contempt of paines in a lawfull calling) cannot but be greatly displeasing unto God: who injoynes that every man should walke in some lawfull calling, and eat his owne bread. This they doe not, and therefore the curse of God pursueth them: for generally they are given up to most horrible sinnes of injustice and uncleanneese: they walke inordinately: for they range not themselves into any families, but live liker bruit beasts than men: they are not members of any particular congregation, but excommunicate themselves from all Churches; and so live as though there were no God, no Christ, nor true Religion. And herein wee may see Gods hand more heavy upon them, that they take all their delight in that course of wandring, which in it owne nature is a curse and a punishment.

Secondly, wee may here also justly reprove the course of some others among us, who will needs be travellers: not for Religion sake, (for that were commendable, if they had such need) nor yet by vertue of their calling, (which were lawfull) but onely for this end, to see fashions and strange countries: and they refraine not from such places as Rome, Spaine, &c. wherein that cruell Inquisition will hardly suffer any to passe with safetie of a good conscience. But shall wee thinke that this their travell is commendable? No surely: for the end of lawfull travell is the preservation of faith and a good conscience, or the bond of some lawfull calling. Now these men travelling upon no such grounds, but onely upon pleasure; how shall we thinke they will stand to the truth, when they thrust themselves into such needlesse danger and triall? The crazed consciences of many at their returne shew sufficiently the badnesse of that course.

shall

Further, note the state of these beleevers for their attire; it was of sheep-skins, and goats-skins. The like may bee observed in other famous Prophets and servants of God: Elijah wore a garment of haire, and thereby was knowne, 2 King. 1. 8. And so did Iohn Baptist, Matth. 3. 4. Yea, the false Prophets went so arayed, that they might the rather bee respected of the people, Zach. 3. 4. And our Saviour Christ saith, The false Prophets shall come in sheeps cloathing, like the true Prophets; when as indeed they are ravening Wolves. Now the true Prophets of God went thus basely attired, that not onely by word and doctrine, but also in life and conversation, they might preach repentance unto the people. And indeed, every Minister of the Gospell ought to be a light unto his people both in life and doctrine: and he that preacheth well, and doth not live according to his doctrine, builds with the one hand and pulls downe with the other. Now whereas these servants of God went up and downe in such base attire as sheepe skinnes and goats skinnes: it was for poverties sake, being deprived of friends, goods, house and lands: and so destitute of provision for better attire.

D In their example wee may note that Gods servants and children may bee brought to extreme povertie and necessitie; so as they shall want ordinarie food and raiment, and bee faine to cover themselves with beasts skins. This was the poore state and condition of godly Lazarus. Yea, Christ Jesus, for our sakes did undergoe a meane estate: for hee had not place whereon to lay his head: and at his death hee had not so much ground of his owne as might serve for a buriall place; but was laid in Iosephs tombe, which is a great comfort to any childe of God in like distresse. For why should any bee dismaied with that estate which Christ Jesus and his dearest servants have undergone for his example.

Here some may aske how this can stand with that saying of David, I have beene young, and am old: yet I never saw the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread, Psalm. 73. 25.

Answ. Davids saying may bee taken two waies: first, as his owne observation in his time. For hee saith not, The righteous is never forsaken; but that he never saw it: and indeed it is a rare thing to see the righteous forsaken.

A Secondly, (which I take to be Davids meaning) the righteous man is never forsaken, and his seed two. For if God lay temporall chastisement on any of his servants, suffering them to want, yet hee forsaketh not his seed after him; but renueth his mercy towards them, if they walke in obedience before him: hee may make triall of godly Parents by want, but their godly children shall surely be blessed: so that this hindereth not, but that the godly may bee in want.

Further, whereas they are said to goe up and downe in Sheeps-skinnes and Goats-skinnes, wee must understand that they did it by faith. From whence we learne, that when all temporall blessings faile, then the childe of God must B by faith lay hold upon GODS gracious promises of life eternall, and stay himselfe thereon.

This point must bee remembred carefully: for say we should want all kind of temporall benefits, must we thereupon despaire, and thinke that God hath forsaken us? God forbid: nay, when all meanes faile, and the whole world is against us, yet then we must lay hold upon the promise of life eternall in Christ, and thereupon rest our soules. Thus did these beleevers in this place. And this faith did Iob notably testifie, when GOD had taken from him children, goods, health, yea, and all that he had, yet then he said, Job 13. 15. Though he kill me, yet will I trust in him. And so must we endevour to doe, C if that case befall us: for when all worldly helps and comforts faile us, this promise of life in Christ, will bee a sweet and safe refuge for our soule.

Being destitute, afflicted, and tormented] Here the Apostle amplifieth their misery in their wandring estate, by three degrees of crosses, which did accompany the same: First, they were destitute of temporall blessings: secondly, they were afflicted both in body and mind: thirdly, tormented; that is, evill intreated. These are added for a speciall cause to shew that these servants of God were laden with afflictions: they were banished and driven to extreme poverty; they were deprived of all their goods, and of all society of men: they were afflicted D in body and in minde, and evill intreated of all men: no man would doe them good, but all men did them wrong; whereby we see that even waves of misery overwhelmed them on every side.

E Hence we learne that Gods servants may be overwhelmed with manifold calamities at the same instant, being pressed downe with crosses in goods, in body, minde, friends, and every way. This was Iobs case, a most worthy servant of God; he was afflicted in body, in friends, goods and children, and (which was greatest of all) he wrastled in conscience with the wrath of God; Job 13. 16. Thou writest bitter things against me, and makest me to possesse the iniquities of my youth. And the like hath beene the estate of many of Gods children: Psal. 88. 3. 7. My soule is filled with evils: thou hast vexed me with all thy waves, &c.

Quest. How can this stand with the truth of Gods Word, wherein are promises of all manner of blessings both temporall and spirituall to those that feare him: Deut. 28. 1, 2, &c. If thou obey the voice of the Lord thy God, all these blessings shall come upon thee and overtake thee: blessings in the city and in the field: in the fruit of thy body, and of thy ground and cattell. Psal. 34. 10. They that seeke the Lord shall lack nothing that is good. For Godlinesse hath the promises of this life, and of the life to come, 1 Tim. 4. 8. And therefore David compareth the godly man to the tree that is planted by the waters side, which bringeth forth much fruit, and is greene and well liking, Psal. 1. 3. How then comes this to passe that Gods owne servants should bee thus oppressed and laden not with one calamity or two, but with sundry and grievous afflictions at the same time? Ans. True it is the Scripture is full of gracious promises of temporall blessings unto Gods children: but they are conditionall, and must be understood with an exception, to this effect; Gods children shall have such and such blessings, unlesse it please God by afflictions to make triall of his graces in them, or to chastise them for some sinne: so that the exception of the crosse for the triall of grace, or chastisement for sinne, must be applied to all promises of temporall blessings. And hence it comes to passe, that the most worthy and renowned servants of God for their faith, are said to bee afflicted and in misery. For his promises of temporall blessings are not absolute but conditionall. All things are theirs (as Paul saith) 1 Cor. 3. 21. and they shall have honour, wealth, favour, &c. unlesse it please God to prove their faith, or to chastise their sinnes by crosses and afflictions.

2. How can Gods servants be able to beare so many and grievous crosses at once, seeing it is hard for a man to beare one crosse patiently? The answer is here laid downe, to wit, by faith; for many and grievous were the miseries that lay on these servants of God: and yet by beleeving the promise of life in the Messias, they were enabled to beare them all. This is a soveraigne remedy against immoderate griefe in the greatest distresse: and undoubtedly the flouds of affliction shall never overwhelme him, that hath his heart assured by faith of the mercy of God towards him by Jesus Christ. This made David say, He would not feare evill, though hee should walke thorow the valley of the shadow of death, Psal. 23. 4. and Paul speaking of tribulation, anguish, famine, persecution, yea, and death it selfe, saith, In all these we are more than conquerours through him that hath loved us, Rom. 8. 37. And from this faith it was, that hee was able to endure all estates, to bee hungry, to want, &c. Phil. 4. 12, 13.

If this be true, that Gods children may bee afflicted with manifold calamities at once, then the opinion of naturall and ungodly men is false, who judge him and thinke him to be wicked and ungodly, whom God ladeth with manifold calamities. This was the judgement of Iobs three friends, and the ground of all their disputation against him; that because God had laid so many crosses upon him, therefore hee was but an hypocrite. And this is the rash judgement of naturall men in our daies, especially upon those that make profession of religion: when Gods hand of triall or correction lies upon them, they presently censure them for hypocrites: but this is a wretched opinion, for Gods dearest children may bee presied downe with manifold calamities.

Secondly, seeing faith in Christ will support the soule under manifold crosses, bee they never so grievous; we must labour, in the feare of God, to have our hearts rooted and grounded in this faith; and when afflictions come, wee must strive to shew forth the fruit and power of it, by bearing them patiently.

And thus much of the severall branches of affliction, in this last example of beleevers.

VERSE 38.

Whom the world was not worthy of: they wandered in the wildernes, and mountaines, and dens, and caves of the earth.

IN these words the Holy Ghost doth answer to a secret objection or surmise, which a naturall man might conceive against the beleevers spoken of before. For it being said, That they wandred up and downe: some man might thinke thus; no marvell though they wandred up and downe: for it may bee they were not worthy to live in the world. This the holy Ghost doth flatly deny, and avoucheth the cleane contrary of them; to wit, that they wandred up and downe by faith; and the Lord caused them so to doe, because the world was not worthy of them, they were too good to live in the world.

In this answer to this surmise, wee may observe what is the opinion of naturall men concerning the children of God; to wit, that they are not worthy to live in the world, but the earth whereon they tread is too good for them. This hath beene, is, and will bee the worlds estimation of Gods children: Matth. 24. 9. Yee

Beleevers vnder the Maschim.

Ioh.1.12.

ſhall bee hated of all nations for my Names ſake. Joh. 16. 2. They ſhall excommunicate you; yea, the time ſhall come, that whoſoever killeth you, ſhall thinke hee doth good ſervice. Act. 22. 22. Away (ſay the Jewes of Paul) with ſuch a fellow from the earth: it is not meet that hee ſhould live. And hence he ſaith of himſelfe and the other Apoſtles, 1 Cor. 4. 13. They were made the filth of the world, and the off-ſcouring of all things.

In the time of the perſecuting Emperours in the Primitive Church, when any common calamitie befell the people or State: as famine, dearth, peſtilence, or ſuch like, they ſtraightway imputed it to the Chriſtians, ſaying, That they and their wicked religion were the cauſe thereof. And though we have religion maintained among us, yet the poore ſervants of God finde the like welcome in the world: for thus the wicked cenſure them every where, That they are diſſembling hypocrites, and none ſo bad and vile perſons as they are. Now if any man aske, how comes it to paſſe that the world ſhould ſlander them ſo, and thinke ſo vilely of them. Anſ. Firſt, becauſe they be taken out of the world, in regard of ſtate and condition in grace, Joh. 15. 19. therefore the world hateth them, Joh. 15. 19. Secondly, the world knowes them not, 1 Joh. 3. 1. and therefore ſpeakes evill of them, Jude 10. Thirdly, the wicked meaſure others by themſelves, and therefore deſpiſe the godly that joyne not with them, 1 Peter 4. 3. Laſtly, there is a ſecret enmity betweene the ſeed of the wicked and the ſeed of the Church: (1 John 3. 12.) the wicked are of that evill one, the Devill; and therefore muſt needs hate the godly who are borne of God. So that when wee ſhall ſee or heare, that ungodly perſons ſhall in any ſuch ſort abuſe the children of God; we muſt not marvell nor bee troubled at it, for it is no new thing, it hath beene from the beginning: but wee muſt pray that GOD would open their eyes that they may turne from their ſinnes to repentance; and then (no doubt) they will change their conceit, and alter their behaviour towards them: as Paul did, Galatians 1. 13, 15. Acts 9. 1, 26.

To come to the words more particularly; the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, The world was not worthy of them: that is, the company of ungodly livers, without Chriſt, and void of grace, were not worthy the ſocietie of theſe holy ones; and for this cauſe did the Lord take them from among them.

Here note a ſingular fruit of true faith: it brings a man to that eſtate, and gives him that excellency, that hee is more worth than the whole world. I meane by the whole world, the eſtate of all thoſe that live in the world out of Chriſt. If then a man would have true and ſtable dignity, let him labour for true faith: for faith hath this privilege, to advance a beleever to true honour and excellency. And therefore our Saviour ſaith, As many as receive him by faith, to them he gave power or prerogative to be the ſonnes of God. Wee take it for a great prerogative to bee the childe of an earthly Prince, and ſo it is: but to be the ſonne of God (who is King of Kings) is a preheminence and dignity above all dignities; and no tongue can expreſſe the excellency thereof. For what more can a man deſire, than to be heire of glory in life everlaſting? and yet true faith bringeth this to a beleever. It is an excellent dignitie to be matched with Angels; and no Prince in the world, by all humane wit or power can attaine unto it: but yet the childe of God can, being joyned to God by faith in Chriſt; whereby (in ſome ſort) he is above the Angels themſelves: for our nature in Chriſt is advanced above the nature of Angels.

Honours and dignities in politike or civill Eſtates, are the good gifts of God, and his owne ordinances, whereby men are in higher places, and in account one above another: but yet all the dignity, honour, and pompe of the world, ſevered from that dignitie which faith bringeth to the beleever is nothing worth. Indeed, if worldly preheminence be joyned with faith, it is a great and excellent prerogative; for faith makes it acceptable unto God: but ſever faith from worldly dignities, and what are they but vanity of vanities? which will turne to the greater condemnation of him that enjoyeth them. If a man have favour in the Court, and yet want the Kings favour, it is nothing: and ſuch are all temporall dignities without Gods favour; for at his indignation they vaniſh away. Now his favour without faith can no man have; for He that commeth unto God muſt beleeve, verſ. 6.

Here all thoſe that are in place above others, either by birth or ſpeciall calling, muſt learne above all things to labour for the dignity of faith. When we have ſuch things wherein wee delight, wee deſire continuance of them. Behold, the dignitie of faith is everlaſting; and beſides it ſanctifies all civill dignities, and makes the owner of them glorious and acceptable both before God and man; when as otherwiſe, without faith, they are nothing: and they that have them can doe nothing but abuſe them.

Againe, the holy Ghoſt ſaith, The world was not worthy of theſe men, for another cauſe; and that is this; Every Chriſtian man by his faith brings many bleſſings among thoſe parties, and to that place where hee lived: now the world deſerves no ſuch bleſſings, and therefore is unworthy of the perſons by whom they come.

Queſt. How doe Chriſtians bring bleſſings to places where they live? Anſ. Firſt, by their preſence: for as God ſaid to Abraham the Father of the faithfull, Thou ſhalt bee a bleſſing, Gen. 12. 3. ſo is it with all beleevers. Laban confeſſeth that he perceived that the Lord had bleſſed blessed him for Iacobs sake, Genes. 30.27. And Potiphar saw that Ioseph was a blessing in his house: for the Lord made all that hee did to prosper, Genes. 39.2, 3. While Lot was in Sodome, the Angel could not destroy it, Gen. 19.22. And if there had beene ten beleevers in Sodome, the Lord would have spared all for tens sake, Gen. 18. 32. Now bringing good things, and keeping backe Gods judgements by their presence, they are thereby blessings. Secondly, they are blessings by their prayers. Abraham prayed for Abimelech, Genes. 20. 17, 18. and God healed him and his familie of barrennesse. At Moses prayer Gods judgements were taken from Egypt, Exod. 7. 12, 13, 30. and his wrath appeased towards his people, Exod. 32. 11, 14. And some thinke that Stephens prayer at his death for his persecuters, was one meanes for mercy unto Saul, that then consented to his death, Acts 7.60. & 8.1. Thirdly, they bring blessings upon a place by their example: for when men shall see godly persons walking before them in the feare of God, and making conscience of all manner of sinne, it is a speciall meanes to cause others to turne from their wicked waies to newnesse of life. And therefore Peter exhorts the Christians to have their conversation honest among the Gentiles; that they which speake evill of them, as of evill doers, might by their good workes which they shall see, glorifie God in the day of their visitation, 1 Pet. 2.12. And hee bids godly wives so walke, that their husbands may be won without the Word, by beholding their pure conversation which is with feare, 1 Pet. 3.1, 2. And Paul bids the Philippians to walke blamelesse in the middle of a wicked and crooked nation, as lights in the middle of the world, Phil. 2.15. that those which were to bee converted by their good conversation might bee won to the truth. God sent a floud upon the world for the grievousnesse of mans sinnes: Now why doth hee not still send more flouds? are not men now as wicked as they were then? Yes undoubtedly, man for his part deserves it now as well as they did then: and therefore our Saviour Christ saith, As it was in the daies of Noah, so shall it be in the daies of the sonne of man; so that every day we deserve a new floud; but yet the Lord staieth the execution of his judgements for a time, that his Elect may be gathered and converted. And so soone as that is done, heaven and earth shall goe together, and God will not stay one moment for all the world besides. So that every nation and people in the world have benefit by Gods children, because for their sakes doth the Lord stay his wrath and deferre his judgements, even the great judgement of fire, wherewith the world shall be consumed at the last day. These things the world should take notice of, as well to move them to repentance of their sinnes, whereby they are made unworthy the presence of a godly man, as also to perswade them to better behaviour and carriage towards the godly, by whom they are so many waies blessed.

The holy Ghost addeth, that wandred in wildernesses, and mountaines, and dens, and caves of the earth. These were desolate places, and not inhabited; and yet for the wickednesse of the world, God will have these beleevers there to wander. We must not thinke that they betooke themselves voluntarily to this solitarie life, but onely upon necessitie, being constrained by persecution to flye into the wildernesse for the saving of their lives, and the keeping of a good conscience.

This serves to descry unto us the blinde error of many ages afore us, wherein it hath beene thought, and is by Papists at this day, to bee a state of perfection, to live a Monke or Hermite out of all societies in some desart place, and there to spend their whole life in contemplation onely, and that voluntarily: and they magnifie this estate so much, that hereby they thinke to merit eternall life at the hands of God. But these beleevers did neither voluntarily, nor with opinion of merit, betake themselves to this solitarie life, but on necessitie. And indeed this kinde of life hath no warrant in Gods word: for every Christian is a member of two Kingdomes; of Christs Kingdome of grace, and of that particular state where hee dwelleth: and by reason hereof, hath a twofold calling; a temporall and a spirituall calling. In both of which hee must walke diligently so long as he can, doing the duties both of a childe of God, and of a member of that commonwealth where he liveth. Now when a man goeth voluntarily to leade a solitary life, he forsaketh his temporall calling altogether, and performes the other but negligently; for he withdrawes himselfe from many duties of piety, whereby the people might be furthred to Godward; which none can doe with a good conscience.

Further, observe the places where they are constrained to wander, to wit, in Wildernesses, Caves, and Dens; places where wilde beasts have abode and recourse: and yet here they live, when as men will not suffer them to live among them. Where note, that many times more mercy may bee found among wilde and savage beasts, than with some men; so mercilesse are the wicked when God forsakes them, and leaves them to themselves. The Lions intreat Daniel better than Darius Courtiers and servants doe, Dan. 6. And Lazarus finds more kindnesse with the dogs at Dives gates than with him and all his family besides, Luke 16. 21. The consideration whereof must teach us to nip sinne in the head at the beginning, and not to suffer it to grow: for if it get a head and raigne in us, it will make us worse than bruit or savage beasts, and cruell as the Devill himselfe: as wee may see in the worlds usage of these beleevers.

Thus we see the state of true beleevers under, der many and grievous miseries, which we must well observe, to arme our selves against the times of adversities which God may send upon us. We must not judge it a cursed estate to bee under the Crosse: for here we see, the faith of his servants is commended for suffering nine severall kinds of miseries. If we shall thinke that these were but a few; wee must know that in them the holy Ghost setteth downe the state of his Church unto the end; for these things were written for ensamples unto us. And therefore if calamities come, and such miseries befall us as doe drive us toward distrust, as though God had forsaken us, we must remember that God did not forsake these his children in their calamities, and therefore also will not forsake us. And thus much for this last example.

VERSE 39.

And these all through faith obtained good report, and received not the promise.

THe holy Ghost having set down at large a worthy and notable Catalogue of examples of faith in sundry beleevers, that lived from the beginning of the world to the time of the Macchabees, doth now for a further commendation of their faith, rehearse the same things that before hee had said in the 2. and 13. verses of this chapter. In saying, that by faith they all received good report, his meaning is, that they did beleeve in the true Messias, and looked for salvation in him alone; whereupon they were approved of God himselfe, who gave testimony hereof, partly by his Word, and partly by his Spirit in their consciences, and partly by his Church: by all which they were commended and assured to be Gods servants. And yet notwithstanding this good report, they received not the promise: that is, the promise of Christs incarnation in their daies. They received Christ truly by faith, and so saw his day; but his actuall incarnation in the flesh they lived not to see.

Whereas it is said, That by faith they obtained testimony; Here first observe, that there is no thing in man that makes him acceptable to God, but faith only. God regards no mans person; he accepts not of a man because hee is a King, or because he is wise, or rich, or strong, &c. but if a man beleeve, then the Lord is ready to give testimony of him, that hee likes well of him. In regard whereof we must all labour diligently above all other things to get true faith in Christ, that so we may have approbation at Gods hands; without which there is no salvation to be hoped for.

Secondly, here also learne the right way to get testimonie, approbation, and credit with men; a thing whereof many are exceeding glad; and which the childe of God must not contemne. Now the way is this: Hee must first labour to get approbation at Gods hands; which indeed he cannot doe any other way, save onely by a true and lively faith, as wee have heard before. Now the Lord approving of him, hee hath the hearts of all men in his hands, inclining them whether he will: and if it stand with his glory, he will cause them to like, and to speake well of him that doth beleeve.

Many indeed get great applause in the world, which little regard true faith; but in the end, this their glory and applause will bee their shame: for They that honour me will I honour, saith the Lord, but he that despiseth me shall be despised, 1 Sam. 2. 30.

Lastly, whereas the holy Ghost saith, That all these worthy men obtained testimony of God, and yet received not the promise. We are hereby taught, that we which now live in the Church, are much more bound in conscience to beleeve, than they which lived in the old Testament. For wee have received the promise of Christs incarnation: They received it not, and yet beleeved. Wherefore in the feare of God let us labour for true faith. But some will say, What should we heare so much of faith? we do all beleeve. Answ. Indeed we say so with our mouthes; but it is a rare thing to finde true and sound faith in the heart: for grosse and palpable ignorance abounds every where, and yet men will needs be good beleevers, which is a thing impossible; for how should faith bee without knowledge? And as men are ignorant, so they have no care to learne nor to get knowledge, that so they might come by true faith. Their hearts are wholly taken up with the world for matters of profit and delight; that they can spare no time to seeke for this precious gift of faith. Againe, many have knowledge, with whom true faith is rare: for faith purifies the heart, it is joyned with a good conscience, and shewes it selfe by obedience through love. Now (to leave the heart to God) where almost is the man that walkes answerable to his knowledge? May we not truly say of many, that as the Word commeth in at the one eare, it goeth out at the other? And among those which learne and beare away something, there is little care to practise it in life.

But wee must know, that if wee would bee approved of God, wee must beleeve. Now so long as we remaine ignorant; or else having knowledge doe not joyne practice therewith, in obedience from a good conscience, undoubtedly we have no sparke of true faith in us. We may make a shew of faith, and so beare the world in hand we beleeve: but certainly this will prove a very dead faith; and in the end, and finishing of all, appeare to be nothing, but bare lip-faith, and meere presumption. Now, to conclude this point, we must know, that unlesse we get true faith, as these beleevers had, (which we must shew by good fruits, as they did) even they shal rise up in judgement against us to condemne us at the last day. For they beleeved, though they had not the ground of faith so laid before them as wee have. Wherefore let them that want knowledge, labour for it: and they which have it, let them joyne obedience with their knowledge, that the faith of their hearts may be seene by the fruits of their lives: for true faith cannot be hid, but will breake out in good workes.

and

VERSE 40.

God providing a better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

BEcause some man might much marvell that such men as received testimony of God for their faith, should not yet receive the promise; therefore here the holy Ghost renders a reason thereof: the good pleasure of God, appointing that Christ should be incarnate at such a time, as was most convenient for the perfect consummation of the whole Church, consisting of Gentiles, as well as Jewes. For though these ancient beleevers were in time long before; yet God provided Christs incarnation so fitly for us, that they without us should not have perfect consummation in glorie.

The Exposition. God providing a better thing for us. The word in the originall, translated providing, signifieth properly foreseeing; wherein is likewise included Gods decree and ordination. Now, this wee must know: that it is a peculiar prerogative belonging to the true God alone, to bee able to foresee things to come: and that many thousand yeares before: no creature of himselfe can doe it. And yet it is true, that this property to foresee, is ascribed unto God, not properly, but in regard of our capacity: for if wee speake of God properly, God cannot bee said to foresee any thing; because all things bee present to him, whether past or to come.

This prescience or foreknowledge in God, puts a difference betweene the true God and all creatures: for the true God foresees all things that are to come; so can no creature doe. Indeed, some creatures foresee and foretell some things: yet herein they come short of the

A divine propertie: for God foresees all things by himselfe, without signes and outward meanes. But creatures onely foresee some things not of themselves, but by meanes of signes and outward causes, or by revelation from God: otherwise no creature can foresee things to come.

Now as wee said before, this foresight in God includes his decree and ordination: for therefore did these things so come to passe because God ordained them. Whereby wee see that Gods prescience or foreknowledge is not idle, but operative and joyned with his will: for Matth. 10. 29, 30. An haire cannot fall from our head: nor a sparrow light upon the ground without his will. As all things in time come to B passe, so God before all worlds willed, that is, decreed and appointed them. And under this large extent of Gods will or decree, wee must include the sinfull actions of men; for God doth not barely foresee them, but decree the being of them, and so will them after a sort, though not to be done by himselfe, yet by others. When Judas betrayed Christ, and Pilate with the wicked Jewes condemned and reviled him, they sinned grievously; and yet herein they did nothing but that which Gods hand and counsell had determined before to be done.

This point well considered confutes their opinion who indeed inlarge Gods prescience or foreknowledge over all things good and evill; but yet exclude sinne from without the C compasse of his decree and ordination. But here we see Gods foresight includes his decree; and nothing comes to passe simply without his will: howsoever many things bee done against his revealed will; yet without his absolute will can nothing come to passe: He worketh all things according to the counsell of his owne will: doing himselfe those things that be good, and willingly permitting evill to bee done by others for good ends.

But what did God here provide and foresee for us? Ans. A better thing: that is, God in his eternall counsell provided a better estate for his Church in the new Testament than he did for beleevers in the old.

Hence we learne, that as God hath his gene- D rall providence, whereby hee governeth all things: so also, he hath his speciall and particular providence, whereby in all things he provides and brings to passe that which is best for his Church. For in the old Testament God provided that for his Church which was meet for it: But considering that the Church in the new Testament (in some respects) was to have a better estate than the Church in the old Testament had; therefore hee provides for a better estate. And looke, as in his eternall wisedome he foreseeth what is best for all estates and times; so in his providence doth hee accomplish and effect the same.

For us.] That is, for the Church in the new Testament: where note, that Gods Church, and the ſtate thereof in the new Teſtament, is better than it was in the old, before the comming of Chriſt. The holy Ghoſt here ſpeakes this plainly, and therefore we need no further proofe thereof.

Queſt. How ſhould it bee better with the Church now, than it was then? Anſ. True it is, that God gave the covenant of grace in the beginning, to our firſt Parents in Paradiſe: the ſumme whereof was this; The ſeed of the woman ſhall breake the Serpents head. And this covenant did God renue and revive unto his Church, from time to time, in all ages, unto this day. Both circumciſion and the Paſſeover were ſeales of this covenant, as well as our Sacraments bee; ſo that in ſubſtance they differ not: the free gift of grace in Chriſt, belonged to them as well as unto us. The beleeving Jewes in their Sacraments, did eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, and drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke with us, (as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, 1 Cor. 10. 3.) and beleevers then, obtained the ſame eternall life, that wee doe now by faith. And yet if wee regard the manner of adminiſtring the covenant of grace in Gods Church, unto the people of God; herein doth the Church of the new Teſtament farre ſurpaſſe the Church of God in the old: and indeed herein conſiſts the preheminence of the Church under the Goſpell; which ſtands in five things eſpecially.

Firſt, in the old Teſtament, ſpirituall and heavenly were propounded unto the Church, under temporall and earthly bleſſings. This is plaine by Gods dealing with the Patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob: for the Lord promiſed unto them the temporall bleſſings of the Land of Canaan; under which he ſignified the gifts of life everlaſting, in the kingdome of heaven. But in the new Teſtament life everlaſting is plainly promiſed to the beleever, without any ſuch type or figure.

Secondly, in the old Teſtament Chriſt was ſhewed and ſignified unto them in ceremonies, rites, and types, which were in number many, and in ſignification ſome of them darke and obſcure: but now theſe types and ceremonies are aboliſhed, the ſhadow is gone, and the ſubſtance come; and in ſtead of darke ſignes and figures, we have two moſt plaine and ſenſible Sacraments. More plainly, the covenant of grace in the old Teſtament, was ſealed by the bloud of Lambes, as ſignes of the bloud of Chriſt; but now to his Church in the new Teſtament, Chriſt himſelfe hath ſealed his Teſtament by his owne bloud.

Thirdly, in the old Teſtament all the knowledge they had was in the Law; and their underſtanding in the Goſpell was obſcure and very ſlender: but in the new Teſtament, not onely the Law is made manifeſt, but alſo the ſupernaturall knowledge of the Goſpell.

Fourthly, the Law was only committed and publiſhed to one nation and people: but the A Goſpell is ſpread and preached to all the world.

And laſtly, the Church in the old Teſtament beleeved in Chriſt to come; but now the Church beleeves in Chriſt, which is already come and exhibited: in all which reſpects, the Church in the new Teſtament doth exceed the Church of the old.

Now, where the Text ſaith, God provided a better thing for us, we muſt not underſtand it of all theſe prerogatives, but onely of the fifth and laſt, touching the actuall exhibiting of Chriſt in the fleſh; as Chriſt alſo imports, Luk. 10. 23, 24. Bleſſed are the eyes which ſee that ye ſee: for I tel you, many Prophets and Kings have deſired to ſee thoſe things yee ſee, and have not ſeene them: which things we muſt underſtand of the B incarnation of Chriſt. And that this is ſuch a prerogative to the new Teſtament, appeareth by old Simeon, who when hee had ſeene Chriſt in the Temple, as it was promiſed him, ſang unto God this ſong, Luk. 2. 29. Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, according to thy word; for mine eyes have ſeene thy ſalvation: as if he ſhould ſay, I have now Lord lived long enough, let me now depart in peace, ſeeing now I have ſeene thy Chriſt my Saviour, (where we ſee he makes it a matter of full contentment unto his ſoule) which the beleevers under the law ſaw not.

Hence we muſt learne our duty: for if our D ſtate bee now better than the ſtate of the old Teſtament was, and if we enjoy privileges denied to Gods ancient ſervants before and under the Law; then undoubtedly wee ought C to ſtrive to goe before them in grace and obedience; for every mans accounts ſhall bee according to his receits. Hee that receives five talents, muſt make account to returne moe, than he that receives two: where God is more abundant in his mercie, there he looks for anſwerable thankfulneſſe and obedience. We goe beyond the ancient Church in five things: and therefore we muſt ſtirre up our hearts to be anſwerable in grace and obedience going beyond them. But if for all this, we come ſhort of them in theſe things, then ſurely our caſe is fearefull, and our puniſhment ſhall be greater: for they that had leſſe prerogative, ſhall be witneſſes a- D gainſt us, if they goe beyond us in obedience.

That they without us might not be made perfect: that is, might not be fully glorified. Here is the reaſon why Chriſt was not exhibited in their dayes. Indeed all true beleevers before Chriſt, were juſtified, and ſanctified, and in ſoule received to glory before us; yet perfected in ſoule and body both, they muſt not bee before us; but we muſt all be perfected together. Now his will herein he bringeth thus to paſſe; All muſt bee perfected in Chriſt: But hee will not have Chriſt to come and ſuffer, till the fulneſſe of time came, in theſe laſt dayes, Heb. 1. 2. (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh,) that the beleevers living in theſe daies, might have time of being in the Church to be called, juſtified, and ſanctified; and ſo they might be glorified with them that lived before. For put the caſe that Chriſt had ſuffered in the dayes of Abraham, or David, or thereabout; then the end of the world muſt needs have come the ſooner: for ſo it was foretold, that Chriſt ſhould come in the latter ages of the world, 1 Pet. 1.20. Now if the world had beene ſooner cut off, then had there not beene time of birth and calling, for all the elect that now live and ſhall live: therefore for their ſakes was Chriſts comming deferred, till the fulneſſe of time. And this I take to be the meaning of the words.

Now, in that the holy Ghoſt here ſaith, The members of Chriſt in the new Teſtament muſt be perfected, with all the ancient believers in the old; we muſt herby be admoniſhed, to conforme our ſelves unto theſe ancient Fathers, in the participation of grace, and practice of obedience in this life. For how can wee looke to be A glorified with them after this life, if here we be not like them in grace. Chriſt tels his followers, that many ſhould come from the Eaſt, and from the Weſt, to ſit with Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob in the Kingdome of heaven, Mat. 8.11, 12. (becauſe they were followers of theſe Patriarchs in the faith) when as the children of the Kingdome, that is, many Jewes by birth, borne in the Church, ſhould be caſt into vtter darkneſſe. Now, if Chriſt deny to glorifie the children and poſterity of theſe ancient believers, becauſe they did not follow them in grace and in obedience: how can wee which are by nature ſinners of the Gentiles, looke to bee glorified with them, unleſſe in grace and obedience we conforme our ſelves unto them? Thus much for B theſe examples of faith: now ſomething muſt be added out of the next chapter; becauſe there the holy Ghoſt makes uſe of all theſe worthy examples.

A COMMENTARIE VPON PART OF THE TWELFTH CHAPTER TO the HEBREWES.

VERSE 1.

Wherefore, let us alſo, ſeeing wee are compaſſed with ſo great a cloud of Witneſſes, caſt away every thing that preſſeth downe, and that ſinne that hangeth ſo faſt on: let us runne with patience the race that is ſet before us.

IN theſe words, the holy Ghoſt propoundeth a worthy exhortation to the Chriſtians of the new Teſtament; that they ſhould labour to be conſtant in the profeſſion of the faith: that is, in holding, embracing, and beleeving true Chriſtian religion. And his reaſon is framed thus; The Saints of God in the old Teſtament, were conſtant in the faith: and therefore you muſt likewiſe be conſtant in the faith, that live in the new Teſtament. The firſt part of the reaſon is laid downe in all the examples of the former chapter. The concluſion or ſequell is contained in this firſt verſe. Wherein wee may obſerve two points: an exhortation unto conſtancy in true religion; and the way or meanes to attaine thereunto. The exhortation is inferred upon the former examples; which are all here applied as preſidents and directions unto us, for conſtancy D and perſeverance in the faith; in theſe words, Wherefore, ſeeing we are compaſſed about with ſuch a cloud of witneſſes: that is, ſeeing Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and all the reſt of the holy Fathers, who are a cloud of witneſſes unto us, (that is, lights and leaders before us) were conſtant in true religion (whether wee reſpect their faith in Gods promiſes, or obedience to his commandements) therefore we alſo muſt be conſtant in the faith. The way or meanes hereunto, ſtands in three duties, in the words following; Let us caſt away, &c.

For the exhortation: Firſt, in generall, the very inferring of it from the former examples, teacheth us this ſpeciall duty; That every one in Gods Church muſt apply unto himſelfe thoſe instructions, that are laid downe, either generally in doctrine, or particularly in example. And therefore the holy Ghost here saith not, Let the Galatians, or the Corinthians (which were two renowned Churches) be constant in the faith; but, Let us, that is, you Hebrewes, with my selfe be constant in the faith, following the example of your ancient Fathers. It is said of the ancient Jewes, that many of them heard Gods word, but it was not profitable unto them, because it was not mingled with faith in them. Heb. 4. 2. What is it to mingle the Word with faith? Is it not only to receive it by faith, beleeving it to be true; but also by the same hand of faith, to apply it to a mans owne soule, to his heart and life. And undoubtedly, Gods word thus applied to a mans particular person, hath in it great power and fruit; whether wee regard information of judgement, or reformation of life. But it is an hard thing to doe, and rare to find a man that doth sincerely apply unto himselfe, either generall doctrines, or particular examples. We are all prone to this fault, from our selves, and lay it upon others, saying: This is a good item, or a good lesson, for such an one, and such an one, if he were here, or if hee would marke it. In the meane while, what benefit reape we to our own soules? for the Word not applied to our selves, doth us no good: it is like Physicke not taken, or food not eaten. And hence it comes to passe, that though we heare much, yet wee profit little by the ministery of Gods word. We must therefore learne to follow Maries example, who pondered Christs words, and laid them up in her owne heart. When an exhortation is given, we must not poste it off, and lay it upon other mens shoulders; but apply it to our selves, and lay it to our owne hearts, saying, This instruction is for me. Hereby (no doubt) we should feele greater blessings upon the preaching of the Word, than yet we doe. And to move us hereunto, let us consider, that Satan our utter enemy (who seekes nothing but our destruction) is most busie to hinder this application of the Word, either by the Minister, or by a mans own conscience. As for example: when the Minister (by occasion out of Gods word,) shall confute, either error in judgement, or misdemeanour in life; then, men that heare, and are guilty thereof, should say, This is mine error, or my fault, now I am confuted, or reproved. And God (no doubt) if men would thus doe, would make it effectuall unto them at the length. But in stead of this applying to our selves (either through our owne corruption, or Satans suggestions, or both,) wee shift it from our selves, and say, Now he reproves such an one, and such an one; and speakes against such and such: and indeed, Satan (by his good will) would never have a man to apply the Word rightly to himselfe. Therefore, seeing Satan is so busie, and this is his deceit to make a man shift off an exhortation or reproofe from himselfe, and to lay it on others: we must be as carefull to apply it to our selves, and to lay it to our owne consciences; and then (no doubt) we shall find it to be a word of power, able to reforme both the misdemeanour of our lives, and the errors of our mindes.

Now to the reason more particularly: Wee must be constant in the faith, because wee are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses. Here the ancient Fathers of the old Testament, which in the former chapter were commended unto us for their faith, are compared to a cloud, and then to a cloud compassing us. Lastly, to a cloud of witnesses.

They are compared to a cloud (as I take it) by allusion to the cloud which directed and led the Israelites in the wildernesse: for when they came from Ægypt, and were forty yeares in the Desart of Arabia, all that while they were directed by a pillar of cloud by day, Exod. 13. 21. Now, looke as that cloud guided the Israelites from the bondage of Ægypt, to the Land of Canaan: so doth this company of famous beleevers, direct all the true members of Gods Church in the new Testament, the right way from the kingdome of darkenesse, to the spirituall Canaan the Kingdome of heaven. And this is the true cause why these worthy beleevers, are compared to a cloud.

Marke further, they are called a cloud: but what a cloud? namely compassing us. A compassing cloud they are called, by reason of the great company of the beleevers: so as which way soever a man turnes him, he shall see beleevers on every side: and they are said to compasse us, because they gave us direction in the course of Christianity, as the cloud did the Israelites in the wildernesse.

Now whereas the whole company of beleevers is called a cloud compassing us: here is answered a common objection of temporizers, which argue thus against religion: There are so many kinds of religion now a-dayes, that no man can tell which to be of: and therefore it is good to be of no religion, till wee be certified which is the true religion. This carnall reason is here answered; for howsoever in some things, there be variety of opinions in Gods Church, yet for the substance of religion all agree in one. For the company of beleevers in this world, resembles a cloud that goes before us, shewing us the right way which we are to walke in, to the Kingdome of heaven. Secondly, in that these ancient beleevers are called a cloud compassing us, we are taught, that as the Israelites did follow the cloud in the wildernesse from the Land of Ægypt to Canaan; so must we follow the examples of these ancient beleeving Fathers and Prophets, to the Kingdome of heaven. It is a strange thing to see how the Israelites followed that cloud. They never went till it went before them: and when it stood still, they stood still also, though it were 2. yeares together: and when it began to move, they moved with it. So in the same manner must wee set before fore our eyes for a patterne of life, the worthy examples of beleevers in the old Testament: for whatsoever was written, was written for our learning. Wee must therefore be followers of them in faith, obedience, and other graces of God: and so shall wee be directed to life everlasting, in the spirituall Canaan the kingdome of heaven. And yet wee must not follow them absolutely. For all of them had their infirmities, and some of them had their grievous faults, whereby they are tainted, and their commendation somewhat blemished: but we must follow them in the practice of faith, and other graces of God. The cloud that guided the Israelites had two parts; a light part, and a darke. The Ægyptians, who were enemies to Gods people, had not the light part before them, but the darke part: and so following that, they rushed into the red sea, and were drowned; when as the Israelites following the light part, went thorow in safety: Even so these beleevers had in them two things: their sinnes, which be their darke part, which if wee follow, wee cast our soules into great danger and destruction: and faith with other graces of God, which are their light part, which we must follow as our light: which if we dos carefully, it will bring us safely to the kingdome of heaven. So Paul bids the Corinthians, be followers of him; yet not absolutely in every thing, but as he followes Christ: and so must we follow the Fathers, as they went on in faith in Christ.

Exod. 14. 20.

Further, they are a cloud of Witnesses: that is, a huge multitude of witnesses. And they are so called, first, because by their owne bloud they confirmed the faith which they professed: Secondly, because they did all confirme the doctrine of true religion, whereof they were witnesses, partly by speeches, and partly by actions in life and conversation. And so is every member of Christ a witnesse: as the Lord often cals the beleeving Israelites, his witnesses. Quest. How came this to passe, that these beleevers should be Gods witnesses? Answ. Surely, because they testified the truth and excellencie of Gods holy religion, both in word and action, in life and conversation.

Esa. 43. 9, 10, 12.

Now, seeing these in the old Testament were Christs witnesses; First, hereby all ignorant persons must be stirred up to be carefull to get faith, and to learne true religion. If any thing will move a man to become religious, this will: for out of all the world, God will chuse faithfull men to be his witnesses, to testifie his religion unto others. If a man were perswaded that some worthy mighty Prince would vouchsafe to call him to beare witnesse of the truth on his side, he would be wonderfull glad thereof, and take it for a great honour to him. How much more then ought wee to labour for knowledge, faith, and obedience in true religion, that we may become witnesses unto the Lord our God? if it be a dignity to be witnesse to an earthly Prince; oh then what a great prerogative is this, for a silly sinfull man, to become a witnesse to the truth of the everliving God, who is King of Kings, and whose word needs no confirmation? This must make us all to labour for knowledge, and for faith, and for the power of religion: but if we will remaine still in our ignorance, and never labour for knowledge, then shall these servants of God that beleeved in the old Testament, stand up and witnesse against us at the day of judgement: for they had not such meanes as we have, and yet they became most faithfull witnesses.

Secondly, this must teach us to be carefull; that as in word we professe Christ, so in deed we may confesse him, expressing the power of his grace in us. For by this true confession of Christ, we are made his witnesses: but when we confesse Christ in word onely, and yet in life and practice deny him, then we are unfaithfull witnesses: for we say and unsay. In an earthly court, if a man should one while say one thing, and another while another thing, he would not be accepted for a witnesse, but rather be excepted against, as altogether unworthy; and so would prove a discredit to his friends cause, and a shame to himselfe: so it is with us in Christs cause; if we professe in word, and deny in deed, wee discredit Christ and his profession, and shame our selves for ever. And therfore we must be carefull not onely in word and judgement, but in life and conversation, to make a true and constant confession of Christ and of his truth. And thus much for this exhortation.

Now followeth the second point to be observed in this verse; namely, the manner how Gods Church and people may put in practice this worthy exhortation of the holy Ghost, To bee constant in the faith. And this consists in three duties: 1. They must cast away that which presseth downe: 2. They must cast away that sinne that hangeth so fast on it, or, sinne which so readily doth compasse us about: 3. They must runne the race that is set before them, with patience. Whosoever in Gods Church either Jew or Gentile, can performe these three things, shall bee able no doubt to follow the counsell of the holy Ghost, and continue constant in the faith unto the end. Of these three in order.

The first thing then to be done, is this: We must cast away that which presseth downe: or thus, Cast away the weight, or burthen, (for so much the word in the originall signifieth) even that burthen which so presseth down the poore Christian, that he cannot goe on forward in the course of godlinesse and Christianity. By burthen or weight here we must understand five things: First, the love of temporall life; secondly, Care for earthly things: thirdly, Riches and temporall wealth: fourthly, Worldly honour and preferments; fifthly, Worldly delights and pleasures. All these are things which lie heavy on mans soule, as a weighty burthen which presse it downe, especially then when the soule should lift up it selfe to seeke heavenly things. So in the parable of the Sower, riches, pleasures, and cares for the things of this life, are called thornes which choke the word of God in a mans heart, and make it unfruitfull. And surfetting and drunkennesse are said to bee things which oppresse the heart and make it heavy. And easie it were to shew by many testimonies, that all these five things doe presse downe the heart; especially then, when it should be lifted up in the seeking of heavenly things.

Now in this, that these five things are weighty burdens, we may learne; first, what is the cause that in these our daies every where the Gospell of Christ being published, preached, and expounded, takes so little place in mens hearts; whether wee regard knowledge and understanding, or affection and obedience. For Gods Word is a Word of power, mightie in operation: how comes it to passe then that the ground is barren where it is cast? why makes it not men learned and religious? Ans. Surely in every place where the Word of God is preached, especially among us, these five things possesse the hearts of men, and exercise all the thoughts of the minde, and affections of the heart. From whence it commeth to passe, that after long preaching there is little fruit or profit, either for knowledge or obedience: for where the heart is pressed downe with the weight of these earthly things, there the Word of God can take no place, nor bring forth fruit. And this is generally true among us; though we heare Gods word from yeare to yeare, and thereby might increase in knowledge and obedience, if we would; yet in many there is little shew of either: and the cause is in these worldly cares, which take place in our hearts. For this is a most certaine truth, that so long as our hearts are addicted to the greedy seeking after these earthly things, honours, pleasures, &c. so long will the ground of our hearts be barren. The good seed of Gods word may bee sowne therein; but little fruit shall come thereof, save briers and weeds, which will increase our damnation.

Againe, whereas the love of temporall life, and care of earthly things, &c. are sore burdens pressing downe a mans heart from heaven to earth, and making it heavy and sad, and dead in regard of all spirituall exercises and contemplations: hereby we are taught, oftentimes to give our selves to elevate and lift up our mindes and hearts to God, partly by meditation in his Word, partly by invocation on his Name, and partly by thanksgiving. And to doe these things the better, we must remember to set apart some speciall time every day, for this speciall worke: so as wee may say with David, Psal. 25. 1. Lord, I lift up my heart unto thee. David was well acquainted with this exercise, and so was Daniel: for both of them used this, as wee may reade, Psal. 55. 17. Evening and morning (saith David) and at noone will I pray, and make a noyse. And Daniel used to pray unto God three times a day: wherein he would heartily and unfeinedly call upon God, with thanksgiving. And great reason we should doe so; for we live in the world, wherein are innumerable weighty things, which presse downe our hearts from looking up to heaven: and therefore we must often practise our selves in holy meditation and prayer unto God, that so wee may lift up our soules unto God, from the things of this world. To use a fit comparison: Wee know that those who keepe clocks, if they would have the clocke still going, must once or twice a day winde up the plummets which cause the wheeles to goe about; because they are still drawing downward: Even so, seeing our hearts have plummets of lead, which are worldly cares and desires, to presse them downe from seeking up to heaven; we must doe with our hearts, as the clock-keeper doth with his plummets, winde them up unto God every day: and for this end, must set apart some particular time to doe the same, in holy duties. Why doth God command the seventh day to be sanctified, and set apart, from all bodily exercises, and worldly cares? undoubtedly it is for this end; to cause men to elevate their hearts from all worldly things, to seeke the things above: else, if the minde should be alwayes pressed downe with worldly cares, it could never attaine to heavens joyes. He that hath not conscience on the Lords day, to lift up his heart to heaven, by prayer, and hearing Gods word, with meditation thereon; cannot possibly have any soundnesse in religion, nor his heart firmely setled on heavenly things.

Dan. 6. 10.

Thirdly, whereas the holy Ghost saith, that the Hebrewes must cast away the weight that presseth downe; Here wee are taught, in what manner, and how farre forth wee must use the things of this life; as riches, honours, and lawfull pleasures; yea, and all temporall blessings whatsoever: namely, so farre forth as they will further us in the course of religion, and in the exercises of godlinesse and vertue; and no further. But (finding by experience, that these temporal things be a burden unto us, pressing us downe, and making us unfit for spirituall exercises) wee must leave them, and abstaine from them. This is that moderation which we must use in temporall things: for the maine end that every man must propound to himselfe in all things, is this; That God may be glorified. Now that a man may glorifie God, it is necessary that he should walke in the wayes of godlinesse and of true religion. Therefore looke as riches and worldly commodities may further us in Christian religion and godlinesse; so farre forth must we use them, and therin give glory to God, but when they hinder us therein, then we must leave them, and cast them off. The Marriner that is upon the sea in a great tempest, seeing his ship too fore laden, will cast out any of his commodities: first, that that is the heaviest, and at last (if need be) the moſt precious Jewels that be in his ſhip before he will ſee it loſt: Even ſo muſt we doe in the ſea of this world, when we ſee riches, honours, and lawfull pleaſures, to make us unfit and untoward for the exerciſes of piety and religion; then away with them, wee muſt caſt them off, how deare ſoever they be unto us. And thus much for the firſt duty.

The ſecond duty that we muſt performe for conſtancy in religion is this, We muſt caſt away the ſinne that hangeth ſo faſt on: or as the words will better beare, We muſt caſt away the ſinne, that is ſo fit, or ſo ready to compaſſe us about every way. By ſinne here we muſt not underſtand actuall ſinne, the practiſing of ungodlineſſe in life and converſation: but originall ſinne, which is the corruption of nature, in B which men are conceived and borne. Now this originall ſinne is ſaid to bee ready to compaſſe us about, becauſe (as Paul ſaith of himſelfe) When a man would doe good, it cauſeth evill to be preſent with him; ſo as that good thing which hee would doe, that he doth not: but the evill that he would not doe, that doth he. And it is ſaid, to compaſſe us about; becauſe whatſoever in heart a man doth deſire or affect, or purpoſe to doe, this originall ſinne doth corrupt and defile the ſame unto him: and whatſoever in action a man would bring to paſſe, it doth likewiſe pollute it. By reaſon whereof it comes to paſſe, that we may truly ſay, that all the thoughts, affections, wills, and purpoſes, yea, and every action of Gods children, are all mixed and ſtained C with the corruption of this ſinne. So that this hinders Gods deare ſervants and children, that they cannot goe on in the courſe of godlineſſe and Chriſtianity as they would; but either they fall in their journey many times: or if they ſtand, yet they doe often ſtagger, and goe very faintly and haltingly forward.

From this that the holy Ghoſt ſaith, Originall ſinne compaſſeth the beleever about, wee are to obſerve and learne ſundry points: Firſt, this ſerveth notably to confute ſome errours maintained and upheld by the Church of Rome; for they ſay, that after a man is regenerate by Gods Spirit, there is nothing in him that God can juſtly hate: and they doe curſe all that hold the contrary. Now to ratifie this their doctrine, D that originall ſinne, after regeneration, is not ſinne properly; They ſay, that after regeneration it is no more ſinne than Tinder is fire; which in it ſelfe is no fire, but very apt and fit upon the leaſt occaſion to be ſet on fire. But this opinion is here overthrowne by this that the holy Ghoſt ſaith, That the beleeving Hebrewes, that is, Gods Church, muſt caſt away this ſinne. Where it is plaine, that after regeneration, whereby a man receiveth the Spirit of ſanctification and adoption, he hath ſinne in him; for this ſinne is moſt apt and ready to hinder him in the courſe of Chriſtianity and godlineſſe. Now if ſinne were not properly ſinne, it muſt loſe it owne nature and qualitie; and if it had A loſt it proper qualitie, it would not bee ſo ready to hinder a man in the courſe of godlineſſe, both in thought, words, and deeds. So that here it is manifeſt and plaine, that in a regenerate man there is ſinne properly: And howſoever he be free from the guilt and puniſhment of ſinne, yet the corruption remaineth ſtill in him, though greatly weakned through ſanctification.

Againe, here obſerve, that the opinion of many men concerning this ſanctification is erroneous: for ſome there bee who have thought that a man might be perfectly ſanctified in this life, and have originall ſinne quite aboliſhed. But this is moſt falſe: for this Church of the Hebrewes had as worthy men in it for B godlineſſe and ſanctification, as any are in theſe daies; yea, and the Author of this Epiſtle was (no doubt) a man that had received a great meaſure of ſanctifying grace: yet including himſelfe among them, he exhorts the Hebrewes thus; Let us caſt off the burthen, and ſinne that is ſo ready to compaſſe us about. What? had the Apoſtle and theſe Chriſtians ſinne in them? Yes, or elſe the holy Ghoſt would never bid them caſt it off: for it were a vaine thing to bid them caſt off that which they had not. Therefore they were not perfectly ſanctified, as indeed no man ever was or ſhall be in this life, Chriſt onely excepted. Wee muſt not marvell at this, that no man is perfect in this life: nay, we muſt rather marvell at this, that God hath given to C any of us any drop of ſound grace, being ſuch miſerable wretched ſinners as we are.

The Lord himſelfe hath given many reaſons why men ſhould not be perfect in this life. As firſt: If a man were perfectly ſanctified in this life, then were hee perfectly juſt and righteous in himſelfe before God, and ſo ſhould be ſaved: yet not by free grace and mercy alone in Chriſt; and thus ſhould Chriſt not bee a whole and alone Saviour, but onely a meanes to convey into a man that ſaving grace whereby a man ſhould be ſaved. But Chriſt is our whole and onely righteouſneſſe whereby wee are juſtified and ſaved; and this may our corruption teach us which ſtill remaines in us, not quite mortified till the houre of death. Secondly, whatſoever grace wee receive of God, it comes by D meanes of faith which God worketh in us. And looke how it ſtands with us in regard of faith, ſo it is with us for all other graces. But faith in the beſt beleever is imperfect in this life, and mixed with much doubting; and therefore all other gifts and graces which come by faith, as righteouſneſſe, repentance, and ſanctification, are alſo imperfect in this life.

From this, that ſanctification in this life is imperfect, we learne (for the overthrowing of another errour of the Church of Rome) that no man can ſtand at Gods tribunall ſeat juſtified by inherent juſtice or righteouſnes. For that which we call Sanctification, the Papiſts call the Juſtification of a ſinner; making two parts of juſtifi-cation: the first, whereby a sinner of an evil man is made good, by the pardon of his sinnes, and the infusion of inward righteousnesse, standing in hope and charity especially: And the second, whereby of a good man one is made better and more just: and this they say may proceed from the merit of a mans owne works of grace; and hereby they hold a man stands righteous before God. But looke how it stands with grace in us in this life, so likewise shall it stand with the same graces at the last day: if they bee imperfect now, and so not able to justifie us before God, they shall also be found imperfect then to that purpose and effect: But now they are imperfect, as hath beene shewed, and therefore cannot then stand for our righteousnesse; unlesse we will imagine that God will then accept of an imperfect justice. Wherefore their doctrine is erroneous, and a doctrine of all terrour and desperation: for who dare adventure the salvation of his soule upon his owne righteousnesse? We deny not, but that God accepteth of our sanctification; yet not as the matter of our justification unto life: that onely is the obedience and righteousnesse of Jesus Christ accepted of God for us, and made ours by faith; for that alone is answerable to the rigour of the Law.

Thirdly, this also sheweth the errour of those who hold that concupiscence or originall sinne is not a quality, but an essence or substance living and subsisting by it selfe. For here we see a plaine difference betweene a mans body and soule, and originall sinne that compasseth them; else the holy Ghost would not bid us to cast off this sinne: for that which is of the substance of man, cannot by man be cast off. And to make this more plaine, we must know, that in man descending from Adam there bee three things: First, the substance of his soule and body. Secondly, the powers and faculties in them both. Thirdly, the corruption or bad disposition in those powers and faculties whereby a man is unconformable to the will of his Creator, and prone to that which is evill. And this third thing is it which is here spoken of, different from mans substance and faculties; and so is not a substance in man, or mans nature corrupted, but an ill disposition therein. Fourthly, hence also we learne what a regenerate man doth most feele in himselfe; namely, originall sinne, the corruption of his nature: for that hangs on fast, and hinders him in the practice of all good duties. This Paul knew well, and therefore confesseth, that he saw another Law in his members rebelling against the Law of his minde, and leading him captive unto the law of sinne which was in his members, Rom. 7. 23. This causeth him to leave undone the good which he would have done; and to doe the evill which he would not doe, v. 19. And David felt the same thing when hee said, I will runne the way of thy commandements when thou shalt inlarge my heart. Why doth David speake of the inlarging of his heart?

A Surely hee felt in himselfe this originall sinne: which did streighten his good affections, so as he could not put them forth so much as hee would towards the Law of God. And when he saith, Psal. 51. 12. Stablish me, O Lord, by thy free Spirit; he would give us to understand, that by originall corruption hee was restrained of his Christian libertie, and hindred in all good affections, holy actions, and heavenly meditations: which causeth him to pray for libertie and freedome by the Spirit. So that it is plaine, the servant of GOD feeles this corruption clogging and hindring him from all good duties.

This serves to admonish all secure persons, which never felt sinne to bee a clog or burthen
B unto them, of their fearefull and dangerous estate. For to every childe of God originall corruption is a grievous burthen. Now conferre with a naturall man, and aske him what imperfections and wants hee feeles in himselfe: his answer is, hee was never hindred by any corruption in all his life, he never felt doubting or want of love, either to God or to his brethren: he feeles no pride of heart, no hypocrisie nor vaine glory, &c. If wee take these men upon their words, they are Angels among men: but indeed they are blinde and ignorant, and wonderfully deceived by Satan: for all Gods servants in this life doe continually bewaile the corruption of their nature, crying out against originall sinne, that it hinders them in doing the
C good things which they would doe; and causeth them to doe that evill which they would not. These men therefore that are never troubled with corruption, but (to their owne thinking) have grace at will, are in a fearefull case, their mindes are still blinded, and their hearts hardned; they are dead in sinne, abiding in darknesse unto this houre. And if they goe thus on to death, they shall finde that sinne will unvizor himselfe, and then they shall know what sinne meanes, and finde the terrour, and feele the burthen of it, when it is too late; like the foolish virgins that knew what the want of oile meant, when the doores were shut.

Secondly, this shewes unto us what is the D state and condition of the childe of God in this life; He is not here a Saint feeling no corruption, perfectly sanctified and freed from all sinne: but such an one as feeles the burthen of corruption, hindring him in his Christian course, under which hee sighs and groanes, labouring by all good meanes to bee disburdened and to cast it off. It is indeed a matter of great comfort for a man to feele Gods graces in himselfe; as faith, love, repentance, sanctification, and such like; but no child of God can alwaies or alone feele the comfort of grace; most commonly hee shall bee troubled with sinne, if he be Gods childe. Now if feeling it, he dislike himselfe, and strive to be eased of it, this is a sure argument of his happy estate.

Fifthly, this commandement to cast away

ſinne that preſſeth downe, teacheth every childe of God to labour earneſtly for the government and direction of Gods Spirit: for we have within us originall corruption, that like an armed man beſets us about, and hindereth us in every good thing we take in hand. Wee muſt therefore pray unto God daily that hee would guide us by his good Spirit: for by reaſon of the corruption of our nature, and the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne we ſhall utterly faile, unleſſe Gods Spirit governes us, both in the thoughts of our hearts, in the words of our mouths, and the actions of our lives. This David knew well, and therefore prayeth to the Lord for his good Spirit, to leade him into the Land of righteouſneſſe, Pſalme 143. 10.

Laſtly, ſeeing wee have this corruption of nature in us, wee muſt keepe our hearts with all diligence, and ſet watch and ward about them. So Salomon ſaith, Counterguard thy heart, my ſonne, Proverbs 4. 13. Why doth Salomon give this commandement? Surely for ſpeciall cauſe: for every man while hee lives on earth, is compaſſed about with his owne corrupt nature; which like a home-borne traitor ſeeks to deliver the heart into the poſſeſſion of Satan, and ſo to defraud God of his right. Againe, the heart is mans treaſure, from whence comes all actions good and bad: now if it bee well kept and guarded, the Lord will dwell in thy heart, and thence will proceed the iſſues of life: but if it bee left open for corruption to enter and take place, then is it made an habitation for the Devill.

If a city were beſieged about by bloudy enemies, the inhabitants thereof would ſet watch and ward in every place to keepe out the enemie; ſo wee having originall ſinne, as a fierce enemie compaſſing us about, for to worke our deſtruction ſome way or other, muſt labour to have our hearts guarded with a watch of grace; that our corruption may not let in Satan there to dwell or to have any abode.

But (will ſome ſay) how ſhall we get a watch that may thus keepe our hearts?

Anſw. Wee muſt labour that the Word of God may dwell plentifully in our hearts; and there, as the Scepter of Chriſt, to be held up by the grace of faith, ruling our wills and affections, and bringing into ſubjection every thought to the obedience of Chriſt. In ſuch an heart Chriſt dwels, who is ſtronger than Satan: and here can neither corruption ſet open the doore to Satan, nor Satan enter; but all things are in ſafety. Alſo the actions that proceed hence ſhall be the iſſues of life, being holy and pleaſing unto God.

And thus much of the ſecond point.

The third duty to be performed for our continuance in the faith, is this: We muſt run with patience the race that is ſet before us. In theſe words the holy Ghoſt borroweth a compariſon from the games of men that did runne a race: and thus we may conceive it; The race that the holy Ghoſt propounds us to runne, is the race of Chriſtian religion: the parties that muſt runne in this race are all Chriſtians, men or women, high or low; not one accepted: the price and crowne for which wee runne is everlaſting glory? the Judge of the runners is the Lord himſelfe, who hath appointed this race unto every Chriſtian in this life; who alſo will give the reward to every one that runneth well.

In this compariſon wee may obſerve many good inſtructions: Firſt, in that Chriſtian religion is compared to a race; Wee are taught that every one that profeſſeth religion muſt goe forward therein, growing in knowledge, faith, pietie, and in every grace of God. Hee that runs a bodily race, muſt neither ſtand ſtill nor goe backward (for then he ſhall never get the price) but ſtill goe forward to the race end; So muſt every Chriſtian goe forward in grace, following hard towards the marke, for the price of the high calling of God. If we care not for eternall life, then wee may take our eaſe, and let grace alone; but if we tender our owne ſalvation, we muſt goe on in the graces of religion, as a runner doth goe forward in his race. This being well obſerved, would rouze up our drowſie Chriſtians that make no progreſſe in religion.

Secondly, this reſemblance of Chriſtianitie to a race, teacheth us all to ſtrive to goe one before another in knowledge, faith, and holy obedience: thus runners doe that runne a bodily race. Alſo in the world the manner of men is, to labour and ſtrive to goe one before another in riches, preferment, in fine apparell, and in bodily delights: now ſhall men ſtrive to be firſt in theſe tranſitory things, and ſhall we neglect our duty about theſe ſpirituall graces? wherein the more we excell, the more acceptable we are to God, and ſhall be more glorious in the world to come.

Thirdly, ſeeing Chriſtianitie is a race, wee muſt remember to bee conſtant therein till we come to the end of our faith; even the ſalvation of our ſoules. It hath beene the manner of our people to turne in religion with the State and time; and yet to this day many thouſands come to our aſſemblies that would turne to Popery, if that abomination ſhould bee ſet up againe: for (ſay they) It was a merry world when that religion was up. But this is not the property of good runners: If wee would have the crowne of life, we muſt hold true Religion conſtantly unto the death.

Laſtly, like good runners wee muſt minde our way, and have our hearts ſet upon the end of our race, which is everlaſting life. Each ordinary traveller is very inquiſitive of his way, and all his care is to goe the neereſt way he can to his journies end. Behold, wee are travellers, and our journey is to Heaven; wee muſt therefore endevour to goe the ſtraighteſt way wee can, to come to life everlaſting: neither muſt we make delaies in this way, but uſe all helpes to to further us herein; for the matter is of great importance whereabout we goe.

Here some will say, We like this well; but true Religion hath alwaies many enemies and few hearty friends: besides, if a man runne this way, he must runne alone, and suffer many crosses and reproches. Ans. This is most true: and therefore the holy Ghost addeth, That we must runne this race with patience: We must not be discouraged because of these crosses and afflictions; but labour with patience to beare that part of afflictions, what-ever it bee, that shall light upon us in our journey. This is Christs counsell to his Disciples, Luke 21. 19. Possesse your soules in patience: as if hee should say, If you would save your soules, you must labour to beare all crosses that fall on you with patience. In the parable, Luk. 8. 15. They that receive A the seed in good ground, are they which with an honest and good heart heare the word and keepe it, and bring forth fruit. But how? with patience. Every one that heares Gods Word, and makes conscience thereof, will have enemies to scoffe and mocke, and to afflict him; which the devill sets a worke to hinder the growth of the Word in his heart: but must hee therefore cease to bring forth fruit? no, he must bring forth fruit with patience. And so must we doe in the race of true religion: for crosses, afflictions, and mockings will come; but these stormes must not turne us backe: nay, the more they beat upon us, the more must we arme our selves with patience, by which we shall be able to beare them all. And thus much for this third duty; as also of the exhortation unto constancy in the faith, after the example of all these godly Fathers.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFVLL AND VERTVOVS LADY, THE LADY Elizabeth Mountagu OF HEMINGTON in North-Hamptonshire, Grace and peace.

IVST cause there was (Right Worshipfull) as well in respect of the Reverend Author, whose rest is now in glory, as also of the godly Reader, whose good herein claimes speciall stroke; that some refining hand should recommend unto the Church of God, a more perfect copie of this godly exposition, than the first Edition herof did afford: & yet no cause I find, why your worthy Children, who no doubt for the Authors sake, did more gratefully accept former dedication, should by me be deprived of their right: Nay, rather as they in heart (I am perswaded) did highly honour the Author for his double labour in Christs Vineyard; so I doe rejoyce this recompence is returned for their love, That with this worke, their memory with posterity shall long indure. And sith my paines herein yeelds me this right, to make choyce of some, to whom I also may commend the patronage hereof; I doe presume to present the same unto your Ladiship. If this be any kindnesse on my behalfe, I confesse it is farre short of your desert, and of my desire: some others (I know) may challenge me herein, as unmindfull of their love; yet because God may offer me opportunity hereafter, to give them good content this way, I will intreat their patience for this time, that I may joyne the Mother with the Children in this worke of love, to afford tuition to these godly labours of the dead. It fits you best (good Madam) in sundry respects; for neither will your children complaine of your admission into the society of their right, nor you esteeme the lesser hereof, because of their claime hereto by former possession. They are your owne, and you theirs; this comes unto you all, as unto one, accounting your united love farre greater safety: and looke what grace it findes by your protection, like grace it yeelds by many a good instruction. Salomon saith, [a] Good understanding maketh acceptable (meaning to such as feare God, for fooles [b] hate knowledge) how welcome then will this be unto you, who [c] have said unto Wisdome, thou art my sister, and doe esteeme the words of her mouth,

When the Diſciples hearts were full of griefe for Chriſts departure then at hand,* Philip ſaid unto him in the name of all, [e] Shew us the Father, and it ſufficeth. Loe [a] here, behold and you ſhall ſee, not the Father alone, but with the Father the Spirit of grace, and with them both, the [b] Sonne of God, ſo lively deſcribed to your view, that you may truly ſay of this knowledge, (God ſanctifying it unto your ſoule) [a] It is eternall life. When Chriſt would hearten his Diſciples for the great worke of their miniſtery, he doth it by the promiſe of his preſence, ſaying, [b] Behold, I am with you alway. The evidence and fruit whereof, you ſhall [a] hereby ſo well perceive, that hereupon I truſt, both you and many moe will learne to ſay with David in temptation, [c] I have ſet the Lord before mee alway; for he is at my right hand, therefore I ſhall not ſlide: And with Ieremy in affliction, [d] The Lord is with me like a mighty Giant, therefore my perſecutors ſhall bee overthrowne, and ſhall not prevaile. What ſhall I ſay more? It would be too long to ſpeake of the dignity of Chriſts Church and miniſterie here handled at large: and to inſtance in particulars, thorow the ſeven Epiſtles to theſe ſeven Churches of Aſia: only this, in the Preface of each Epiſtle, learne what Chriſt is in himſelfe and to his Church; in the Matter, behold the ſtate of every Church, and ſee what Chriſt approveth, and what his ſoule deteſteth; in the Concluſion, ſee his bounty towards his children, and the duty of all to him againe. The handling of theſe things will much delight your Chriſtian heart: for beſide the [e] Plaine evidence of the Spirit, in opening the Text, which is beſt pleaſing unto God, and moſt profitable to his Church (wherein this godly Author had a ſpeciall grace) the application is ſo fit and pertinent to our times, that I had wel nigh ſaid, Hee did foreſee what wee now behold; and hath foretold what we for our lukewarmneſſe and decay in love, may juſtly feare: [f] Conſider what I ſay, and the Lord give you underſtanding in all things. Hold faſt that which you have, be faithfull unto the death, and the Lord will give you the crowne of life. [g] For God is not unrighteous that he ſhould forget your workes and labour of love, which you have ſhewed toward his name, in that you have miniſtred unto the Saints, and yet doe miniſter. Now the God of hope [h] fill you with all joy and peace in beleeving, and increaſe your joy by the conſtant walking [i] of your children in the truth: yea, the ſame Lord, [k] make all grace ſo to abound towards you all, that alwaies having all ſufficiency in all things, you may abound in every good worke, [l] which is by Ieſus Chriſt, unto the praiſe and glorie of God; unto whoſe gracious protection both now and ever I humbly commend your Ladiſhip, with your godly family. London, December 10. 1606.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFVLL SIR EDWARD MOVNTAGV, Sir Walter Mountagu, Sir Henry Mountagu, and Sir Charles Mountagu, Knights, M. Iames Mountagu, Doctor of Divinity, Deane of his Majesties Chappell, and M. Sidney Mountagu, Esquire, the Lady Susan Sandys, and the Ladie Theodosia Capell, children of that right worthy and religious Sir Edward Mountagu of Bowghton in the Countie of North-Hampton Knight, and of the Ladie Elizabeth his worthy Wife, Sister to the Right Honourable Sir John Harington Baron of Exton, and Father to the vertuous Lady the Countesse of Bedford, Grace and Peace.

RIght Worshipfull, as the Patriarch Iacob had [a] twelve sonnes, so Christ the Messiah had [b] twelve Disciples: but as Ioseph was beloved above [c] all those sonnes, so John was beloved above [d] all the Disciples. Ioseph was apparelled better than the rest, and John was inspired farre better than the rest. [e] Had it not beene for Ioseph Ægypt had wanted her food temporall; and had it not beene for John, the Church had wanted her food eternall. [f] The future state of Ægypt was revealed to Ioseph, and the future estate of the Church was revealed to John. The one [g] was exiled, because his father loved him; and the other exiled, because his master loved him. The place of his exile was into the [h] Iland of Pathmos, being before by Trajan put into a vessell of [i] scalding oyle. But that God who shewed his visions to [k] Abraham in the mount, to [l] Iacob in the field, to [m] Ioseph in the stockes, to [n] Moses in Midian, to Ieremy in the [o] prison, to [p] Daniel in Babylon, and to the Apostle Peter [q] in the house of a Tanner, even hee sheweth his visions to Iohn in his exile.

He is not bound to persons, hee can advance whom he list; he is not bounden to place, he can reveale where he list. For persons, hee can preferre [r] Abel before Cain, [s] Iacob before Esau, [t] David before Eliab, [u] Matthias before Iudas. He can make [*] Moses a Courtier, [x] Iob a Potentate, [y] Samuel a Iudge, [z] David a King, [a] Salomon a Soveraigne, [b] Elisha a plow-man, [c] Amos a neat-herd, [d] Ieremy a Priest, [e] Daniel a Prince, Isaiah [f] of the bloud Royall, [g] Matthew a Publican, [h] Peter a Fisher, and [i] Paul a Tent-maker, to be penners and preachers of the word of God. For place, as no time can prescribe against the King of a nation, so no place can prescribe against this King of all nations: [k] The wind bloweth where it listeth, and the spirit worketh where it listeth.

It pleased Christ, who is called in this Revelation, that [a] faithfull witnesse, that first begotten of the dead, [b] that Prince of the Kings of the earth, [c] Alpha and Omega, the first and last, [d] he that hath the Keyes of hell and of death, [e] which hath that sharpe sword, [f] his eyes like fire, his [g] feet like brasse, [h] the seven Spirits of God, the seven Starres in his hand, [i] the key of David, who is called here [k] Amen, the beginning of the creatures of God; and in Daniel, he that [l] revealeth secrets, it pleased this Christ to reveale secrets to Iohn. Not by dreame, as to [m] Iacob; or apparition, as to [n] Moses; or by voyce, as to [o] Adam; but partly by vision, and partly by voyce, as he did when he turned [p] Saul into Paul. This Iohn was Legatus à Latere, that Embassadour who leaned on his Lords breast. Hee writeth Christs history, and there hee sheweth his love unto Christ: hee writeth the Churches historie, there Christ sheweth his love unto him; especially in this, that hee will doe nothing, which hee doth not reveale to his [q] servant this Prophet. For the Church in his time, we may see how it stood, in the three first Chapters: and what condition it should have for the time to come, it is plainely set downe in the rest of this booke. If wee respect the generall estate of the Church, after Iohn had described the

The things in this Booke were (I grant) very darke to them that lived in the daies of Iohn, as the Prophecie of Daniel was to them who lived in the time of Daniel. But as that Prophecie being fulfilled, we can now tell what was foretold in it; ſo, many things being fulfilled which were foretold in this booke, wee may eaſily ſee what is meant by it: and the poſterity to come ſhall better underſtand this booke than we doe, becauſe it may be all things are not yet fulfilled. Neither is this booke like the cities of the [u] Anakims, or the [x] tree of knowledge, which may not be reached to: for [y] Bleſſed is hee that readeth the words of this booke. But to come to theſe three Chapters written by Iohn ſurnamed the Divine, and expounded by one, a moſt worthy Divine. The firſt Chapter is a Proeme or Preface to the booke: the two latter are Epiſtles dedicating this booke. The dedication is made to [z] ſeven ſeverall Churches, and by name to the Miniſters which are called Angels. In the Word of God, Miniſters have many excellent titles given them, (though now they are ſcarcely graced with titles) they are called [a] Prophets, [b] Seers, [c] Remembrancers, [d] Trumpets, [e] Watchmen, [f] Husbandmen, [g] Stewards, [h] Maidens, [i] Fiſhers, [k] Leaders, [l] Elders, [m] Salt, [n] Starres, [o] Angels, and [p] Shepherds: Prophets to teach, Seers to foretell, Remembrancers to put in minde, Trumpets to ſound, Watchmen to admoniſh, Husbandmen to plow up, Stewards to diſtribute, Maidens to keepe pure the doctrine of truth, Fiſhers to catch men, Leaders to goe before, Elders to governe, Salt to ſeaſon, Starres to give light, Angels to declare, and Shepherds to feed; to feed (I ſay) ſoundly by doctrine, liberally by charity, and religiouſly by life. By doctrine: for Sacerdos ſine doctrina, eſt navis ſine velis, a Prieſt without knowledge is a Ship without ſaile. By liberality: [q] for Nihil habet homo adeò divinum quàm benefacere, Man is in nothing more like God, than in doing good. By life: Cujus vita deſpicitur, ejus oratio contemnitur: his words are not eſteemed, whoſe life is not approved. And that it may be ſaid of them as it was of Origen, Quale habuit verbum, talem habuit vitam, as his words were, ſo were his workes. They muſt not be barren like Mount [q] Gilboah, but [r] weaned as Samuel was, before they be offered unto the Lord. They muſt bee pure water, if they will cleanſe others, and more than whetſtones if they will ſharpen others. They muſt be in [s] integrity Abrahams, in meekneſſe [t] Moſes, [u] in knowledge Aarons, [x] in paines Pauls, [y] and in praying Samuels: and remember, that as Auguſtine ſaid, Manus pauperum ſunt gazophylacium Chriſti, The hands of the poore are the treaſury of Chriſt. I need not ſpeake much of the duty of a Miniſter, for every one will teach him his duty, that will not be ranged within any duty himſelfe.

These Churches were then like [i] Davids Worthies, excellent above all the Churches of the world: but becauſe they loſt their firſt [k] love, were not [l] faithfull to the death, maintained [m] the doctrine of Balaam, [n] ſuffered women to teach, [o] bare a name onely to live, [p] had but a little ſtrength, [q] were neither hot nor cold, and [r] repented not as they ſhould have done, of all their ſinnes, they are reprehended by Iohn, threatned by Chriſt, and the Candleſticke of the Goſpell is now taken away from them: Iam ſeges eſt ubi Troja fuit: Now Mahomet rageth, where Meſſiah did raigne. Are they reprehended? let us hearken: are they threatned? let us feare: are they fallen? let us labour to continue. From Iohns reprehenſion we ſee, That (as one ſaid) hereof our Elders have complained, hereof doe wee complaine, and hereof they which live after us will complaine, that men wax worſe; and live not according to the doctrine of Gods Word. From Chriſts threatnings we ſee, that God is merciſull, [f] who firſt offereth peace before hee fights againſt us, that wee being fore-warned, might be fore-armed. And by the woſull downfall of theſe ſeven Churches, let [t] us that ſtand take heed that we fall not: for if God ſpared not the [u] old world who deſpiſed Noah, the Sodomites who vexed Lot, [x] Ieruſalem which abuſed the Prophets, [x] Coloſſa, Hierapolis, and Laodicea who rejected Paul, and theſe Aſian Churches who did not grow in righteouſneſſe as they did in riches, how ſhall we eſcape, [y] if we neglect ſo great ſalvation? and for this cauſe theſe Sermons are moſt worthy to be conſidered of in this preſent age. O then let us now [z] conſider this ſeaſon; [a] redeeme the opportunitie, [b] not harden our hearts, but regard the time of our preſent viſitation. As the day openeth and ſhutteth with the Sunne, ſo ſalvation openeth and ſhutteth with the Goſpell, [c] Whilſt it is called to day, let us heare his voice: [d] He that laboureth in Summer, is the ſonne of wiſdome, but he that ſleepeth in harveſt is the ſonne of confuſion.

All things in the world doe take their time, the bird to build her neſt, the husbandman to ſow his ſeed, the Mariner to goe to Sea, the Gardiner to ſet his trees, the ſicke patient to take phyſicke, the Cooke to ſeaſon meats, and the Dreſſer of the Vineyard to gather his fruit. It will be too late to build in Summer, to ſow in Harveſt, to goe to Sea when the Ship is launched, to tranſplant Trees when they are old, to take Phyſicke when we are dying, to ſeaſon Meats when they are unſavoury, and when Winter is come to gather fruit. The [a] five fooliſh Virgins came too late, Dives [b] in hell repenteth too late, the time preſent is only ours. Is the fig-tree fruitleſſe? it ſhall heare that ſentence, [c] Never fruit grow on thee any more. [d] Get thee thine righteouſneſſe before thou come to judgement: uſe Phyſicke before thou be ſicke, and whileſt thou maieſt yet ſinne, ſhew thy converſion, as the wiſe man exhorteth every man. But alas, whereunto ſhall I liken this generation? We are like the Epheſians, we have [e] loſt our firſt love; or the Laodiceans, we are [f] neither hot nor cold: or the twilight, neither day nor night: or the Autumne, neither faire nor foule: or one ſicke of an Ague, one day well, another ill: or a man in a Lethargie, neither alive nor dead: or Hermaphroditus, neither male nor female: or to thoſe creatures called Ἀμφίβια, which live in water or on land: or the Lioneſſe, which the oftner ſhe breedeth, the fewer cubs ſhee heareth: or the Marriner, who is only good in a ſtorme; or the Marigold, that ſhutteth and openeth with the Sun; or the Mermaids, which are halfe fleſh and halfe fiſh. I would to God we were either hot or cold: that as the hotteſt regions bring forth ſweeteſt ſpices, ſo moſt zealous people might be moſt fruitfull in good workes: that as the Sun in the Heaven is ſwifteſt at her ſetting, ſo the ſons of God might bee beſt at their ending. But is it ſo? no: the more we are taught, the more ignorant are many; and the older we are, the colder in Religion. We have indeed many of us, as it was ſaid of Ariſtogiton: Martem, or rather religionem in lingua, religion in tongue: but when triall is made of us, every [g] Phocion can eſpy our halting, and then with [h] Archilocus we thinke it better, clypeum abjicere, quam interire, even to caſt off all Religion, than to vndergoe the leaſt diſgrace for Religion.

[i] The Moone deſiring to be apparelled as the reſt of the Planets, anſwer was made her, That her divers changes could admit no kinde of habit: and we deſiring to be attired with the robes of Chriſtians, it is to be feared, that ſince we tread [k] not the Moone under our feet, we ſhall never be cloathed as the Church was, with the [l] Sunne. [m] Who is wiſe, and he ſhall underſtand theſe things; and prudent, and he ſhall know them. Let us therefore labour to [n] grow in grace, to abound in knowledge, to be full of good workes, and to overcome all the underminers of our future ſalvation. Then ſhall wee [o] eat of the tree of life, not be hurt of the ſecond death, taſte of the hidden Manna, have power over nations, be cloathed in white, made pillars in Gods Temple, and ſit with Chriſt Ieſus in the throne of his Father. And though the [p] ſonne of Iſhai cannot make us Captaines of thouſands, yet that Sonne of David will [q] make us the ſonnes of God. That wee may doe ſo, wee muſt beleeve the Goſpell, put on Chriſt Ieſus, and be renued by repentance. The firſt is neceſſary, the ſecond comely, the third profitable. To come to the firſt; it is neceſſary we ſhould beleeve: for he that [r] beleeveth not, is condemned alreadie, hee is condemned in the counſell of God, in the miniſterie of the word, and in his owne conſcience, and he ſhall be condemned in the day of judgement; for [f] the wrath of God abideth upon him. The more I conſider the fruits of faith, the more I ſee the neceſſity of faith. Through [t] it we are ſaved, [u] by it we are juſtified, [x] in it we live. We are ſaved from Satan, juſtified before God, and live in the Church. In the Church? nay, by it we live in Heaven: for [x] He that beleeveth in the Son of God, hath everlaſting life. Faith is that which [y] puriſieth the heart, maketh the whole man to [z] runne the waies of Gods Commandements, [a] giveth entrance to grace, [b] acceſſe to God in prayer, [c] made the Elders well reported of, and each Chriſtian to [d] ſtand to the profeſſion of Chriſt. It is that [e] hand by which we muſt apprehend Chriſt: [f] that ſhield by which wee reſiſt all the firy darts of the Devill: and that [g] meanes by which we doe good to others. [h] By faith we receive the ſpirit, [i] are members of Chriſt, [k] we are riſen with him, [l] he dwelleth in our hearts, [m] we feed on him continually, [n] reſiſt Satan, [o] are the children of God, [p] and the Word which we heare becommeth profitable. And what ſhall I ſay? faith is of ſuch a quality, that it [q] uniteth us to Chriſt, [r] maketh us certaine of our ſalvation, [s] bold in our profeſſion, miniſtreth [t] true joy, [u] giveth temporall bleſſings, [x] ſanctifieth our gifts, and maketh us refuſe the [y] pleaſures of this preſent world. In a word, no ſinne can condemne him who hath this true faith, and no vertue can ſave him who wanteth it.

To come to the ſecond, which is Chriſt, the object of faith. The moſt comely garment that ever we can weare, is to be covered with the [z] robes of Chriſts righteouſneſſe: [a] Iacob was bleſſed by Eſaus garments; and we are bleſſed by Chriſts garments. What we ſee thorow a greene glaſſe ſeemeth all to be greene: and what God ſeeth through Chriſt, it is all amiable. We muſt put on this apparell, not as the Church in the Canticles: [a] I have put off my clothes, how ſhall I put them on againe? or as a gowne that wee caſt off when we come to our home; but we muſt ſo put him on, that we never put him off againe. Wee muſt put him on by imputation, imitation, infuſion, and profeſſion: by imputation of his righteouſneſſe, imitation of his vertues, infuſion of his Spirit, and profeſſion of his name. Thus we muſt labour to get Chriſt: for what though a man could command the earth with Alexander, the [b] Sea with Moſes, the [c] fire with Eliah, and the [d] Sunne with Joſhuah? What though he were as rich as [e] Salomon, as wiſe as [f] Achitophel, as ſtrong as [g] Sampſon, as ſwift as [h] Ahimaaz, as beautifull as [i] Abſalom, as fortunate as [k] Metellus, and deſcended as [l] Paul was, of the bloud royall of Princes? yet having not Chriſt, he hath nothing. Yea, ſay a man had the abſtinence of Ariſtides, the innocency of Phocion, the holineſſe of Socrates, the almes-deeds of Cimon, the moderation of Camillus, the honeſty, juſtice, and fairiſulneſſe of both Catoes; all theſe out of Chriſt, were but [m] ſplendida peccata, and to be eſteemed as [n] dung, in regard of Chriſt. For have him, and have all things; want him, and want all things; he is in, at, and after death advantage. I come to the laſt: it is profitable to repent: for if we [o] turne to the Lord, he will turne to us: and that we may turne, conſider his [p] mercies in forgiving, his [q] benefits in giving, his [r] patience in forbearing, and his [s] judgements in puniſhing: The [t] Word preached, [u] ſinnes committed, and that [x] few ſhall be ſaved: the [y] ſhortneſſe of life, the [z] uncertainty of life, and [a] the certainty of death: the joyes of [b] Heaven, the torments [b] of Hell, the [c] comfort of the Elect, and that elſe we can have no [d] comfort in death; [e] pray we cannot, unleſſe we repent; and [f] periſh we ſhall, unleſſe we repent; but bleſſed ſhall we be if we doe repent. But manum de tabula, Magiſter adeſt: this diſcourſe following will teach us theſe things: and it am I bold to preſent unto your Worſhips. Iohn ſent his Revelation to many Churches; and I preſent his Epiſtles to many worthy perſonages; and to whom may I better preſent them than to you. Iohn was a Diſciple full of love, and you are brethren full of love. The Preacher of theſe Lectures was well knowne to many, but to none better than to many of you, eſpecially to thoſe who were in my time worthy members of that moſt worthy [g] College with him. And the rather I doe it, that times to come may rejoyce in the Lord, that from one honourable root have iſſued ſo many profitable branches to the Church. You are ſix brethren as pillars of your houſe, there were three ſiſters as fruitfull Vines of the ſame; one is not, but is with the Lord, and her I knew a Lady of admirable vertues: the other two are, and long may they be ſo. You are all brethren, by nature of one venter, nation of one country, grace of one ſpirit, affection of one heart, fortune in great favour, and of one hope by your holy behaviour. And concerning [a] brotherly love, I need not write unto you:

you: for you are taught of God to love one another. Your [b] Scilurus at his death need not to teach you concord, by giving each of you a ſheaſe of Arrowes, which cannot well be broken whileſt they are conjoyned: for you by your amity make your ſelves invincible. If [c] Chilo the Lacedemonian died for joy to ſee one ſonne crowned at Olympus, and [d] Diagoras Rhodius did the like, when his three children got the garland at a wreſtling: and [e] Iacob ſo rejoyced to heare of his ſonne Joſeph, to be advanced greatly in the Kingdom of Ægypt; how might that happy Father of yours rejoyce, to ſee at one time one ſonne ſitting as high Sheriffe of the ſhire, another preaching before the Iudges at the Aſſize, and the third pleading as Counſellor at the bar; and all the reſt of great expectation in the Kingdome? Thus wiſe [f] Sons are a joy to their Parents, and all may behold [g] how good and comely a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. Ariſtotle could ſay, that Parents were not bleſſed, unleſſe they were after their death bleſſed in their children. And ſurely it is no ſmall part of a Fathers bleſſednes, to ſee his children like to flouriſh when he is gone. Nay, of all monuments that Parents can leave behinde them, there is none (as one ſaith) like to a vertuous ſonne. But all Parents are not to be bleſſed. [h] Adams two ſonnes could not agree in one field, [i] Abrahams in one houſe, [k] Iſaacs in one wombe, [l] Davids in one Palace, nor two [m] brethren in the diviſion of an inheritance. And though concord amongſt brethren (eſpecially ſuch as divide the inheritance) be very rare, yet doe you even in this, moſt comfortably agree. You are not as Simeon and Levi, Romulus and Rhemus, Eteocles and Polynices, Atreus and Thyeſtes, Æta and Perſens: but as Caſtor and Pollux, David and Jonathan, Joſeph and Benjamin; and (as a true friend is deſcribed to bee) [n] one ſoule in two bodies. It ſeemeth that as Agrippa the brother of Auguſtus was beholding to Saluſt for that one ſentence, Small things increaſe by concord, but periſh through diſcord: ſo you have all learned the ſame leſſon, as being perſwaded, that as the members of a body being once diſmembred, they cannot poſſibly be joyned againe; ſo if naturall brethren be once unnaturally diſjoyned, no glue will conjoyne them faſt againe. It were infinite to ſhew examples of brotherly love and hatred, and [o] others have eaſed me of this paines. Now that good God, who hath brought you from one root, placed you in one country, advanced you to like credit, and given you one heart, give you alſo one inheritance in the Kingdome of Heaven. Thus, right Worſhipfull, I am bold to ſpeake unto you, and the world knoweth I ſpeake the truth, and the Lord knoweth I deſire not to flatter. Goe on therefore I beſeech you, continue in love, be ſetled in the truth, and labour to honour him who thus honoureth you. Be not carried away with the ſhew [p] of this world, but thinke Religion the beſt nobilitie, and that [q] as Prudentius ſaith,

Generoſa Chriſti ſecta nobilitat viros,
Cui quiſquis ſervit, ille verè eſt nobilis.
He noble is that comes of Chriſt his race:
Who ſerves this Lord, he ſurely is not baſe.

And this made Theodoſius, more to thanke God that he was a Chriſtian, than a King; conſidering that he muſt loſe the one, he could not loſe the other. Now as to one of you I am bounden in particular; and by him, being a Miniſter, the deſpiſed Miniſtery is not a little graced: ſo for him I pray, that he may be an [a] Abraham to our Abimilech, a [b] Nathan to our David, a [c] Iehojada to our Ioaſh, an [d] Ebedmelech to Ieremiah, an [e] Eliſha to the widow of this Prophet deceaſed, a light in the Court, and a trumpet in the Church, and that [f] Ahaſhueroh may long hold out his golden Scepter unto him: that by his meanes, [g] great men may not want ſuch as will tell them the truth: no [h] earthly Alexander accounted a ſonne of Iupiter, and that no man be more reſpected than a good [i] Paſtor: and that he may ever remember that ſaying of wiſe Salomon, [k] Hee that loveth pureneſſe of heart, for the grace of his lips, the King ſhall be his friend. His Cyrus will not bee ſpoken to, verbis biſſinis, in ſilken words; to his Alexander he needeth not ſpeake ἀ ἤκουσε, ἢ ἃ ἤδεισε, either ſweet words, or no words. For if one Antiochus might bee ſurnamed Holy, and another good Prince called the Good King: much more may he, whoſe religious knowledge ſurpaſſeth all the Princes that have beene of this Nation; and whoſe humility is ſuch, that he will have his ſonne to remember, that [l] hee differeth not in ſtuffe, but in uſe from the reſt of the people, and that by Gods ordinance. I am the bolder for that one, to make make choice of all in the Dedication of this booke: no man knew, loved, converſed with, and reſpected this Author more than he. He reſorted to him in his health, viſited him in ſickneſſe, and preached a learned Sermon for him at his death. Concerning this Author, as he ſaid of Carthage, I had rather be ſilent, than ſay little: and his worthy labours doe ſpeake enough for him; by name, that his [m] Poſthume, dedicated to his excellent Majeſtie, by an excellent [n] Divine. In a word therefore, whatſoever this man did, he deſired to profit others by it; hee thought (as it is written [o] of Bernard in his life) that he was not his owne man, but deputed to the ſervice of others. He was never idle, but as [p] Ierome reporteth of Ambroſe, and Bernard of himſelfe, hee did either reade, or meditate, or pray, or conferre, or counſell, or comfort, or write, or preach. And thus (as the [q] Embleme is of a faithfull Teacher) he like a wax candle, in giving light to others, in ſhort time extinguiſhed himſelfe. Yet in this ſhort time of his, what Art was he not maſter of? what vertue was he not endowed with? He was a compleat Divine, and hath his bleſſings in the Church, that no mans writings are read of all ſorts, and in all Countries, with greater grace and profit than his. He was peaceable in the Church, patient of wrongs, and free from ambition. For as Ierome ſaid of Nepotian, Aurum calcans, ſchedulas conſectabatur; hee regarded not his purſe, but followed his booke: and as Bernard ſaid, he lived in terra auri ſine auro, in a Kingdome of gold without gold. An excellent gift he had to define properly, divide exactly, diſpute ſubtilly, anſwer directly, ſpeake pithily, and write judicially: and how he preached, if theſe Sermons doe give a teſtimony, what witneſſe had they who often heard him themſelves? I have publiſhed of his now two Diſcourſes, and I onely did it, that theſe his labours might not periſh: I have no benefit by them, but exceeding great paines. And ſince I underſtand that his other labours are in the hands of his friends, to make benefit for his children, I will eaſe my ſelfe of the like labour, and be a meanes that they may have the benefit of the future impreſſion of this booke: the which, how faithfully I have publiſhed, I appeale to the godly and indifferent Reader, and I hope no honeſt minded man will be hired to calumniate it. Thus as one deſirous to be ſerviceable in my calling, profitable to the Church, not forgetfull of my friend, and to teſtifie the happineſſe of your houſe, which was in your Fathers time, and is now (as it is ſaid of Aurelian the Emperours) Refertapiis, & Eccleſia Dei, repleniſhed with the godly, and a Church of God: and withall, to leave a monument of my duty unto you all, I have as you ſee, publiſhed this Expoſition of ſeven Epiſtles under your eight names, nothing doubting but it will be as welcome to you, as by your countenance it may be profitable to the Church. The God of Heaven give you all that bleſſing of bleſſings, which (if Ierome ſay true) few men have, that you may tranſire à deliciis ad delicias, goe on from grace to grace, and bee a long time happy in this life, and for ever happy in the life to come. London: Saint Martins in the fields, from my worthipfull friend Maſter Oldiſworths houſe, by which family (as Paul was by the houſe of Oneſiphorus) in the time of this late (and I wiſh I may ſay) the laſt viſitation, I have received no ſmall refreſhing. March 12. 1604.

To the Godly and Christian Reader,
Grace and Peace.

I Am not ignorant (good Reader) how ungratefull a thing it is to deale by way of censure or reformation, in those things wherein others have gone before: and many times for the smart that followeth, doe men beshrow their owne fingers. Yet the warrant of a good calling will breed peace in his conscience, that herein shall endevour the observance of these rules of Love, to wit, [a] Judge the best of that which is done; and [b] referre his owne paines to the glory of God in the good of others: Hereto I aime in this third Edition of this booke. For my calling to this worke, when mine accusers stand forth, the executors of the dead shall answer for my discharge. And for mine endevour to doe good; the small gaine of this revised worke, was truly returned to the right owners thereof: If thou therefore returne glory to God, for good received to thy soule, in this behalfe I have my desire. Here only rests the doubt, how this third Edition should not be prejudiciall to his good estimation that published the former: I answer, well enough: For I hope he intended [c] the glory of God in the good of his Church, and the credit of the reverend Author of this worke. Now if any addition bee brought hereunto, his intent is furthered, and wherein then can he be grieved? If one man should help poore Orphans to some lands or living, he would not thinke himselfe wronged by another, that should inlarge their just claimes, or settle their possession in a better tenure: so I trust it fareth in this worke; where thou shalt finde upon thy diligent view, in some doubtfull [d] things the Authors meaning truly cleared, his method rectified, many repetitions omitted, and the matter (specially towards the latter end) somewhat inlarged. If any thing be dissonant to the Authors judgement in his live-workes (which I hope thou shalt not perceive) rather charge the fault on me through ignorance, or misunderstanding, than entertaine in thy heart the least conceit of wavering levitie in so godly, learned, and judicious a Divine, who hath so well deserved of thy love, if thou love the truth. Thus craving thy favourable acceptance of my helping hand to doe thee good, I end with him, That is the beginning and the end: Let him that hath an eare heare what the Spirit saith unto the Churches.

A GODLY AND LEARNED EXPOSITION OF the three first Chapters of the REVELATION.

REVELAT. I. I.

The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly be done: which he sent, and shewed by his Angell unto his servant John.

A BEfore wee come to the words, wherein is contained singular matter fit for this time and age, this question must bee handled; Whether this Booke of the Revelation be canonicall Scripture? For some have heretofore, as also in our time, called the authority of it in question. But wee are without all doubt, to resolve our selves that it is Canonicall Scripture, of equall authority with the rest of Gods Booke. Our reasons be these: First, the doctrine contained in this Booke is Apostolicall, as any shall perceive which seriously reads the same. Secondly, the stile of this book is Apostolicall; that is, plaine, simple, and easie, if we consider that the matter thereof is Propheticall. Thirdly, this booke hath beene approved and received for Canonicall by the common consent of Gods Church in all ages since the daies of Iohn, and was never refused of any whole Church, but onely of some private men. Fourthly, the things foretold in this booke, come to passe as they were foretold: as among the rest (in one for all) may appeare by the Prophecie of the two beasts; whereof one came out of the Sea, the other out of the earth, Chapter 13. the one prefigured the Roman Empire, the other the Hereticall Apostolicall Church of Rome: both which in all things are come to passe in these latter ages, answerable to the Prophecie.

The contrary reasons brought to improve the authoritie of this booke are of no moment. 1. Reason. Iohn nameth himselfe sundry times in this booke; whereas in penning the Gospell, hee did not once mention his owne name, though hee had just occasion so to doe: therefore it was not penned by Saint Iohn, but by some other, and published afterward in Iohns name.

Answ. The reason is not good: for there is great difference betweene an Historie and a Prophecie. The Gospell of Iohn is an historie of Christ: now there is no necessary reason why one man penning the historie of another, should name himselfe. But this Booke of the Revelation is a Prophecie; in penning whereof it is more requisite the Prophet should put to his owne name: so did the former Prophets. Ieremie mentioneth his name in his Booke at least an hundred times; so doth Isai and Daniel almost in every Chapter. Then seeing they doe it so often, it is no marvell if Saint Iohn doe repeat his name five sundry times in this whole Booke.

2 They object, that his stile in this Booke is not the same with that he used in the penning of the Gospell. Answ. The difference of the stile ariseth from the difference of the matter, seeing there he writes an Historie, here he pens a Prophecie. Againe, hee writes not his owne words, but those which he received from Christ by particular revelation.

3 They say, this booke hath beene rejected

in

in divers ages as not Canonicall. Anſw. It cannot be proved that it was ever refuſed of any whole Church, but of ſome particular men. Now the diſallowing of any private man cannot make a whole booke to bee rejected: for then the Epiſtles to the Hebrewes, of Iames, and of Iohn, ſhould not be Canonicall; which yet be received of all Churches for the pure Word of God.

Now come to the words, The Revelation of Ieſus Chriſt, which God gave unto him, &c. Theſe three firſt Chapters conſiſt of two parts: A Preface and a Viſion. The Preface is an entrance to the Viſion, contained in the beginning of the firſt Chapter, from the firſt verſe to the ninth. The Viſion it ſelfe is ſet downe in the reſt of theſe three Chapters. The Preface hath two parts: Firſt, the title of the booke: Secondly, the inſcription thereof. The title in the three firſt verſes. The inſcription from the fourth to the ninth verſe. The title in theſe words, The Revelation of Ieſus Chriſt, &c. A Revelation is nothing elſe but a manifeſtation, or diſcovery of things ſecret in regard of men for the common good of the Church: and ſo this word is taken in this place.

Revelations from God in Scripture were ſhewed three waies: Firſt, by dreames: ſecondly, by viſion: thirdly, by created voice of God face to face, as we may ſee, Num. 12.6,8. Now this was not by dreame, nor by viſion or voice alone, but is a mixt Revelation, received partly by viſion, and partly by voice uttered in the viſion from the Lord.

In the three firſt verſes, this Revelation is deſcribed by ſeven arguments: firſt, by the author: ſecondly, the end: thirdly, the perſons to whom it was directed: fourthly, the matter: fifthly, the inſtruments: ſixthly, the manner of delivering it: ſeventhly, the fruit of the Revelation. Firſt, the Author is Ieſus Chriſt: It comes from him, and it is called his Revelation in theſe reſpects: Firſt, not to exclude the Father, and the holy Ghoſt, but to ſhew the ſpeciall office of Chriſt, the ſecond perſon in Trinitie; which is, to reveale, to publiſh, and to manifeſt the will of God the Father to his Church: and for this cauſe he is called the [a] Angell of the Covenant, the [b] doctor of the Church, the [c] wiſdome of the Father, and the [d] Word of God.

Secondly, it is called the Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, to teach us to put difference betweene this and all Satanicall Revelations: For as God hath his true Revelations, ſo Satan (who herein may bee called Gods ape) hath his counterfeit viſions, and delivers them in ſhew like to Gods, but they differ much: Firſt, the devils Revelations bee for the moſt part ambiguous, doubtfull, and uncertaine in ſpeech and phraſe, ſo as a man cannot tell which way to take them: But the Revelations which come from Chriſt, the Author of truth, who knoweth all things and the reaſons of them, are certaine and in plaine termes delivered. Secondly, the Devill ſheweth his Viſions to none but to the wicked and bad men that bee his inſtruments: But the Lord chuſeth the godly which feare his name, and to them he revealeth his ſecrets, as to Iohn in this place. Thirdly, the Devils revelations evermore tend to ſet up and uphold hereſie, wickedneſſe, Apoſtacy, and Idolatry, Deut. 13. 1, 2. but theſe that come from God ſerve to erect and maintaine truth, according to godlineſſe; even pure Apoſtolicall doctrine, and the ſincere worſhip of God.

Thirdly, it is called the Revelation of Chriſt, to ſhew unto us his ſpeciall kingly office in heaven: for being aſcended and exalted to the throne of Majeſtie, he ſitteth at the right hand of his Father, farre above all principalitie and power, might and domination; and there doth direct, ruſe, and governe his Church upon earth according to the good pleaſure of his will: for all theſe viſions ſerve to direct his Church in their obedience to his command.

Whereas Chriſt Jeſus is Author of this Revelation, and after his aſcenſion and exaltation, gives the ſame unto his Church; we may obſerve his conſtant care over his Church in this laſt age of the world. Before his incarnation, even from the beginning, he gave unto his people ſuch doctrine of faith and manners, as was needfull for their ſalvation; and ſtill from time to time revealed ſuch prophecies of things to come as was meet for them to know.

And now behold the continuance, or rather the increaſe of this his care in the new Teſtament: for beſide the perfection of the former prophecies, and the full manifeſtation of his bleſſed will by his Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, for all things needfull to bee beleeved and done unto eternall life: Loe, here is added the Revelation of this worthy Prophecie concerning things to come, for the great and good comfort of his children to the end of the world.

Which God gave unto him. Theſe words bee added to ſhew how this became the Revelation of Chriſt: namely, by the gift of God, that is, of God the Father the firſt perſon in Trinitie; for this is a rule to be obſerved, That where the title God, in any ſentence of Scripture is oppoſed to Chriſt, there it importeth the firſt perſon the Father: though this be alſo true, That ſundrie times in Scripture, the Father alone is called God, without any addition of the other perſons; becauſe he is the firſt in regard of order, and the fountaine of the deity; for the ſonne receiveth the god-head by communication from the Father, and the holy Ghoſt receiveth it from them both; but the Father hath his god-head of himſelfe, and receiveth it not by communication from any other.

Here ſome will ſay, this ſeemes ſtrange, that any thing ſhould be given to Chriſt, ſeeing hee is God, and hath all things of himſelfe. Anſw. Wee muſt conceive of Chriſt two waies; firſt, as God: ſecondly, as Mediatour and head of the Church. As Chriſt is God, the Father ther giveth him nothing: for so he is of himselfe the same with the Father, and hath all things belonging unto him that the Father hath (excepting personall properties) and is no way inferiour to the Father, neither receiveth any thing from him, but giveth all things as well as the Father doth. But yet as Christ is Mediator, he is not God simply, but God incarnate, or God made man; and so is said to receive of his Father, (in respect of his manhood) as himselfe confesseth, All power is given to mee, Mat. 28.18. And Paul saith, God gave him a name above all names, Phil. 2.9. Hee received of his Father the promise of the holy Ghost, saith Saint Peter, Act. 2.33. And, God made him both Lord and Christ, ver. 36. and so God gave him this Revelation in this place.

If it be said, this makes Christ inferiour to his Father: for the receiver is usually inferiour to the giver. Ans. As Christ is God, he is equall with the Father; but as he is Mediator, God incarnate, and made man, he is inferiour; and receiveth of him. So much himselfe confesseth, My father which gave them me, is greater than all, Joh. 10.29. And in the same respect, Paul calleth God the Father, The head of Christ, 1 Cor. 11.6. And as Christ now sitteth at the right hand of his Father, being Mediator and ruler of his Church, he is inferiour to his Father, and receiveth his Kingdome from his Father, which he must give up at the last day, 1 Cor. 15.24.

And here wee must consider in what manner God gives his Revelation to his Sonne. First, therefore Christ Jesus as he is Mediator, is made Lord of this Revelation; so as he may say, it is his owne right and royalty, being a part of that Law, whereby his Church is now governed, whereof he is Lord and King. Againe, this Revelation was revealed unto Christ as hee is man, before it was ever knowne to any creature, man, or Angell, by reason of the union of his manhood with the Godhead.

In this which hath beene said, wee may observe, that this Booke of the Revelation is Christ his right, and belongeth unto him as his owne royalty and privilege. For as the Lawes in any Kingdome belong to the Prince thereof, and are called his lawes alone, and no mans else: So this booke, being a part of that law whereby Christ governeth his Church, is his royalty alone; for God gave it him, and he hath by his Angell sent it to his Church. And that which is here said of this Booke, must bee understood proportionally of all other bookes of holy Scripture; Christ is made Lord of all, and they are all of them his royalties and possessions. And from hence will follow necessarily: first, That no man in the world hath authority above this Booke, or any other part of Canonicall Scripture: Indeed, Monarchs and Princes have great authority and preheminence in their dominions over all persons, and over all causes of men: but in the Church, they with all others owe homage unto Christ: there he hath the Canonicall Scriptures to be his lawes, whereto every one must subject himselfe. The dispensation of the word, and the administration of the Sacraments, be his royall ordinances, over which none may dare to claime rule or authority: for so should the Scriptures have been given unto them for their prerogatives, as they were unto Christ; but God gave them unto him alone, and he disposeth thereof, as pleaseth him. And therefore the Pope, in taking upon him to dispense with the word, and to mangle the Sacraments, doth herein step into the roome of Christ, and so declare himselfe to bee that man of sinne, by seeking to rob him of that Princely royalty which belongs to him alone.

Secondly, that the soveraigne power and authority of expounding Scripture, belongeth to Christ alone, and to none other with him. True it is, that man hath a ministery committed unto him, by vertue whereof hee may expound Scripture by Scripture: but men have no power of themselves, to determine of the proper sense of Scripture. And therefore the Popish practice, in giving to the Church absolute authority, to determine of the sense of Scripture, of themselves without Scripture, is flat robbery against Christ: for therein they give unto men that soveraigne power which is proper to Christ.

Thirdly, herein we observe the excellencie of this booke, and of the whole Scripture of God: for all of it is the gift of the Father to the Sonne, and of the Sonne unto his Church. The like cannot bee said of any writings of men whatsoever, be they never so excellent: herein the Scriptures surpasse them all. Whereby wee are taught, to esteeme more reverently of the Scriptures of God, than of all the writings of men in the world. Here then behold the sinne of this age, which more delighteth to speake and heare the sayings of men, in the publike ministery, than the glorious word of the everliving God. Whereas the writings of men bee full of darknesse, of errour and deceit: but the word of God is most holy and pure, and every way perfect, proceeding wholly from the Father of lights, unto his beloved Sonne, who hath faithfully dispensed the same for the good of his Church.

To shew his servants the things that must shortly be done. These words contain the second, third, and fourth Arguments, whereby this Revelation is described, viz. the end of it, the persons to whom it must be shewed, and the matter which it containeth.

Arg. II. The end of this Revelation is, To shew, that is, to make knowne, and manifest things to come, for the good of the whole Church. Whence we may observe, that the Papists erre exceedingly in debarring lay people (as they call them) from the reading of the Scripture: for the end of this booke is, To make manifest to Gods servants things to come. And who are Gods servants? Are the Clergie onely and not lay people ple also? God forbid; the lay man is Christ his servant, as well as one of the Clergie. And therefore it is Gods will, that hee should learne to know and understand this booke, like one of his servants. And here consider, that if this booke of Scripture, which is hard and difficult, must be learned of the lay man, then much more must hee search into all other bookes of God, which be more plaine and easie, as the histories of the Gospell, Epistles, &c.

Arg. III. The persons to whom it must bee shewed; viz. The servants of Christ. This Revelation was not given of God for all men indefinitely, but for all his servants; that is, such alone as repent of their sinnes, and truly beleeve in Christ for the pardon of them, and shew forth the same by new obedience. So he teacheth elsewhere; The secret of the Lord is with them that feare him, and his covenant to give them understanding, Psal. 25. 14. The Lord will reveale his secret to his servants the Prophets, Amos 3. 7. And, God will not keepe backe from Abraham, the thing he was to doe unto Sodome and Gomorrah, because he knew Abraham would doe his will, and teach his family after him, Gen. 18. 17, 19. The consideration whereof should admonish us not to content our selves with the bare hearing of the Word, and outward participation of the Sacraments: but to labour principally to become Gods servants, and to shew the same by the practice of that which wee heare. Hereby shall wee receive instruction from the Lord, and grow in knowledge daily more and more: our understanding shall more easily conceive the will of God, for they that will doe the will of his Father, shall know his doctrine, Joh. 7. 17. Here then is the cause why most hearers after long teaching profit little, but remaine as blind and ignorant as ever they were, even their owne impiety; they live in their sinnes, and labour not to become Gods servants.

Secondly, in this argument we may observe, that Christ Iesus is true God: for here he is made the head of the Church; every true beleever is his servant, and he his Lord: the Angels of the Churches be his Angels, as after wee shall see: which prerogative none can have, but hee that is true and very God.

Thirdly, in this argument are those confuted which hold that God would have all to be saved, and cals all men without exception. For if he called all effectually, then hee would offer the meanes to all: to wit, his holy word, that so they might be called to the state of grace. This he doth not: for as wee see, this booke is given not to all, but to his servants; and that which is said of this booke, is true of the whole Scripture. The Lord shewes his Word, (saith David) not to all the world, but to Iacob; that is, his people with whom he made a covenant, Psal. 147. 19, 20.

The fourth argument whereby this Revelation is described, is the matter thereof, viz. things that must shortly be done; that is, things to come. Whereby in generall wee may observe a difference of this booke from the rest of holy Scripture, which treats of things present, and past; this being a prophecie of things to come.

The matter of this booke is described by two Arguments: first, by the necessity of these things to come, They must be done: secondly, by the circumstance of time when, shortly, or quickly.

For the necessitie of these things, they bee such, as must needs be done. So speaketh the holy Ghost elsewhere of sundry things to come: of offences, It must needs be that offences should come, Matth. 18. 7. of heresies: There must bee heresies in the Church, 1 Cor. 11. 19. and of afflictions: Through manifold afflictions we must enter into the kingdome of heaven, Acts 14. 22. And, They that will live godly in Christ Iesus, must suffer persecutions, 2 Tim. 3. 12. From whence I gather, that things which come to passe concerning Gods Church, and the enemies thereof, doe come to passe necessarily. This doctrine must be wel observed: for though it be the truth of God, yet the reason of man will not agree unto it: for some will say, If all things come to passe necessarily, then in their actions and proceedings men have no freewill: for necessity and liberty of will cannot stand together. Ans. They may; indeed constraint and mans free will cannot stand together, but mans will and unchangeable necessity may well accord: As I shew thus; In God there is a most absolute freedome of will, yet hee doth many things of necessity: as he willeth that which is good necessarily, (for he cannot possibly will that which is evill) and yet he willeth the same most freely. So Christ died necessarily; he could not but die, if we consider the counsell of God, and yet he died most freely; For he laid downe his life of himselfe, and no man tooke it from him, Joh. 10. 18.

It will be said againe, if things come to passe by necessity, then it is in vaine to use any meanes for the effecting of them; for Gods will must be done, doe we what we will. Ans. This is mans corrupt reason: these men must consider, that as God hath appointed what things must come to passe, so he hath appointed the meanes how they shall be effected: and seeing the Lord hath appointed as well the meanes as the end, wee should by this necessity rather bee induced to use the meanes, than any way moved to neglect the same. To make this more plaine, we must know there is a double necessity: one is absolute, another in part. I call that absolute necessity, which cannot be otherwise possibly: as that God liveth, and cannot die, is omnipotent, infinite, &c. Necessity in part is, when any thing done is necessary onely, because it depends on necessary causes: as fire to burne is necessary, in regard of that order which God hath set in nature by creation; yet this necessity is not absolute: for fire would not burne, if God should please to change that order set in nature, as he did when the three children were cast into the the hot firie oven, Dan. 3. 27. Now, whereas we say, Things to come must necessarily be done, it must be understood of necessity in part, and not absolute: for in themselves they be changeable and contingent, and necessary onely in regard of Gods decree appointing them, which is unchangeable: in regard whereof all things to come are necessary. And yet we may not think; that the unchangeablenesse of Gods decree doth take away freedome from mans will; it onely inclines the same to one part: and so disposeth, that man should freely will that to be, which God eternally hath decreed.

The second thing whereby the matter of this booke is set out unto us, is the circumstance of time, when these things must be done; Shortly, must bee well observed: and howsoever some things foretold, were not to be done till many hundred yeares after, which space of time might seeme very long, yet in two respects it is but short: First, in regard of God, to whom a thousand yeares are but as one day, 2 Pet. 3. 8. Secondly, in regard of men, to whom a hundred or two hundred yeares seeme but a short time when once they be expired, though before they seemed long.

This circumstance of time is set downe for two causes: First, to terrifie all carnall and careless men: for this book foretelleth judgements, plagues, and destruction, for the enemies of Gods Church, which must shortly come upon them; which is a thing worthy our carefull consideration in this secure age of the world, wherein men blesse themselves in their sinnes, without feare of Gods judgement, and say they shall have peace, though they walke after the stubburnenesse of their owne hearts, putting farre from them the evill day; saying, spare thy selfe, this shall not come unto thee. But shall the Lion rore, and the beasts not tremble? Yet the Lord threatneth his judgements, but men will not repent. Well, let us consider this, whether we be young or old, high or low, that Gods judgements are shortly to come; and let this bee a motive to raise us out of the sleepe of sinne, and of security. That which Peter said of false teachers, is also true of all impenitent sinners, unlesse they prevent the same by speedy and unfained repentance: Their judgement long agoe is not farre off, and their damnation sleepeth not, 2 Pet. 2. 3.

Secondly, this circumstance of time serveth greatly to comfort the servants of Christ, and to furnish them all with patience, and long suffering under any adversity, or distresse that may befall them in body or minde, or both. Indeed, many are brought to impatience and distrust by afflictions and crosses: But the child of God in such a case, must call to minde what the holy Ghost hath here set downe concerning the prophecies of this booke, which foretell deliverance for Gods Church, and for every member thereof: namely, That they must shortly be brought to passe: yet a very little while, and he that commeth (for their deliverance) will come, and will not tarry, Heb. 10. 37.

Thus much for the matter of this Revelation: now follow the Instruments whereby the Lord doth convey the same unto his Church, which is the fifth argument whereby hee is described, in these words, Which he sent and shewed by his Angell to his servant Iohn. Where two points must be observed, first, the action of Christ, which is the ground of their imployment; secondly, the persons imployed therein as his instruments. For the first: Christ sent and shewed this Revelation. This action of Christ is noted by the holy Ghost for two speciall causes; first, to shew that S. Iohn did not pen and publish this booke rashly, but by calling and warrant from Christ. This teacheth us what must be our behaviour in all our actions, whatsoever wee take in hand: we must looke we have warrant from God for the doing of the same, by vertue of our calling; and without this we should not dare to enterprise any thing.

If this duty were practised, there would bee more conscience of the service and worship of God, and more care of just dealing with men, than there is in the affaires of this life.

Secondly, this action of Christ is noted, to get more reverent acceptance, and greater authority to this booke: for which cause also it was sent by an holy Angell. If an earthly Prince should write his letter to his subject, and withall send it by one of his guard, no doubt the subject would receive it most reverently. Behold, this booke is the Epistle and letter of Jesus Christ, sent by his Angell for the benefit of his Church. What reverence therefore, and acceptation ought this to find? surely, a thousand fold more with every one, than the writing of any earthly Prince whatsoever.

The second point to be observed, is the persons whom Christ imployeth about this Revelation; and they be two: An holy Angel, and S. Iohn. For the first, It hath pleased God in all ages to use the ministery of Angels, as a meanes wherby he would convey the knowledge of his will unto his Church. The Law in mount Sinai was given to Moses by the ministery of an Angell, Act. 7. 38. Gal. 3. 19. And Daniel received the exposition of sundry dreames and visions by an Angell, Dan. 8. 19. and 9. 21. and 10. 14. And the seven visions which containe the substance of this book, were shewed to Iohn by an holy Angell. But here wee must take heed, that we doe not like the Papists, ground hereupon the invocation of Angels, because they be about us, and bring unto us particular messages from the Lord: for before we may pray unto them, we must have from God a particular commandement so to doe, and also a promise to be heard in that wee aske, or else our prayer is not of faith: but the whole Scripture affords no word of command, or promise for any such action, and therefore wee cannot doe it without sinne.

The second instrument here imployed by Christ, is Iohn. This Iohn was sonne to Zebedee, and so kinsman to Christ; a blessed Apostle and Evangelist, which penned one of the Gospels, and the three Epistles which beare his name. This was that Disciple whom Jesus loved. And to procure the more credit and reverence to this booke, he describeth himselfe by two arguments: First, by a property, calling himselfe Christ his servant: Secondly, by an effect, or action, in bearing record to Gods word: vers. 2.

For the first, note that Iohn doth not call himselfe that Disciple whom Jesus loved, nor the kinsman of Christ, which he might have done, being allied unto him, (for Iohns mother was sister to Ioseph Christs supposed father, and cousin german to the virgin Mary:) Iohn had learned of Christ himselfe, that the hearers, and doers of the will of his father, were esteemed more deere and neere unto him, than any bond of outward alliance could possibly make them, Mat. 12. 50. Luk. 11. 28. But he cals himselfe Christs servant, having yeelded up himselfe to doe his will: for herein stands the dignity of a Christian, to doe service unto Christ. The blessed Virgin had never found such favour with God, to have beene Christs mother, if she had not withall become Christs servant: She bare him in her heart by faith, as well as in her wombe by conception, or else shee had never beene saved by him. Hence we learne, that outward dignities, as bloud-royall, noble parentage, and such like, will nothing further a mans salvation: hee that would be acceptable unto Christ, must become his servant, by beleeving his word, and doing his will, having cast off the old man, which is corrupt, and put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousnesse and true holinesse. So Paul saith, Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but keeping the commandements of God, 1 Cor. 7. 19. and, henceforth know I no man after the flesh, but if any man be in Christ, hee is a new creature, 2 Cor. 5. 16, 17.

Againe, consider in what regard Iohn is here called a servant of Christ: not onely for that he beleeved in Christ, and obeyed his will, as all true Christians doe; but more specially because he was an Apostle, and did service unto Christ in the worke of his ministery, which was his particular calling. So Paul writing to the Romans, calleth himselfe an Apostle and servant of Christ, Cap. 1. 1. And hee rendreth a reason thereof, vers. 9. Because he did service unto him in preaching the Gospell. Hence we are taught, that we must not onely shew our selves Christs servants, in our generall calling of Christianity, but especially in our particular callings and offices, after the example of Christs blessed Apostles. It is a good thing to professe service unto Christ, by hearing his word, receiving his Sacraments, and keeping his Sabbaths: but unlesse therewithall wee shew the power of godlinesse in our particular callings, our outward profession is flat hypocrisie. This Magistrates, Ministers, husband, wife, parents, children, masters, servants, buyer, seller, and every one in his lawfull calling should carefully observe: for unlesse in the particular duties of their speciall callings, (as the Magistrate in the duties of a Magistrate, &c.) they doe service unto Christ, their publike duties in religion shall never commend them unto God be it never so glorious, Mic. 6. 6, 7, 8.

V. 2 Which bare record of the word of God, and of the testimonie of Jesus Christ, and of the things that he saw.

Here is the second argument whereby Iohn describeth himselfe; namely, by this action, or effect, in bearing record to the word of God: for partly by writing the Gospell, and partly by preaching, hee bare witnesse, and testified that the word of God was true. And because the word of God hath divers parts, the Law and the Gospell, he shewes in the next words, that he meanes especially the Gospell, adding, and of the testimony of Iesus Christ, that is, of those things which Jesus said and did. And that no man might call into question the truth of his testimony, he professeth himselfe to have beene an eye witnesse of all those things whereof he bare record, saying, and of all those things which hee saw. And here he alleageth his testimony to the Gospell, to prove himselfe a faithfull pen-man of this booke, that so it might have more reverence: for he which was faithfull in penning the Gospell of Christ, the same is also faithfull in penning this prophecie of the Church.

In this testimony wee may observe, that the doctrine of Gods word is an infallible marke whereby to know the true Prophet of God, and also to distinguish him from all false Prophets. God foretold his people, that false prophets should come among them for their triall, Deu. 13. But how shall they discerne them? surely by their doctrine: for though they shew wonders, yet if their doctrine tend to draw men from the true God to idolatry, they are false prophets, and should dye. When our Saviour Christ was asked, By what authority hee did those things, Luk. 20. 2, 3. he approved his authority by the testimony of Iohn, (who bare witnesse of him, Joh. 1. 15.) and confirmed the calling of Iohn, by the truth of his doctrine, which (themselves being witnesses) was from heaven, Luk. 20. vers. 4, 5.

Hereby then we see the errour of the Papists, who teach, That the onely note of a true Prophet, is to confirme his doctrine by a miracle, and that he which cannot doe so, is a false prophet. But this note of difference is not true: for false prophets may confirme their lying vanities by signes and wonders, as we may see, Deut. 13.

And

And so doth Antichrist, 2 Thess. 3.9.

The sixth argument by which this Revelation is described, is the order and manner of propounding it to the Church, and it stands in foure degrees: First, God the Father giveth it to Christ the mediator, and head of the Church. Secondly, Christ giveth it to an Angell. Thirdly, the Angell conveyes it to Iohn the Apostle. Fourthly, Iohn directed and assisted by the holy Ghost, delivereth it to the Churches.

Now as this particular booke was, so no doubt all other holy Scriptures were conveyed to the Church: from whence we may observe; First, the constant love of God to his children, by this his speciall care in propounding and delivering his will and word to his Church.

Secondly, that this booke, and so all other parts of holy Scripture, are in their kinde most perfect and excellent.

Thirdly, that the Church of Rome blasphemeth in calling the written word of God a dead letter, and dumbe Iudge, matching generall Councels with it for authorities; and teaching, that the universall consent of the Church is above Scripture for interpretation, and gives life and sense thereto; which otherwise of it selfe were but an inokie letter and dumbe word.

v. 3 *Blessed are they which reade, and they that heare the words of this prophecie, and keepe those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

Here is the seventh and last argument whereby this Revelation is described, to wit, the fruit, effect, and the profit which comes of it, even true happinesse. This prophecie concerneth the present and future state of the Church: the reading and hearing whereof, joyned with carefull keeping, bringeth with it true blessednesse, that is, fellowship with God, and life everlasting.

In this Argument we may observe; First, the end of this booke, and so of all other books of Scripture, viz. to bring men to happinesse, to fellowship with God, and life everlasting. These things were written (saith S. Iohn) that ye might beleeve that Iesus is the Christ, and so beleeving might have eternall life. Joh. 20.31. Againe, he declared to them the word of Christ, that by it they might have fellowship with God the Father, and with his sonne Iesus Christ, 1 Joh. 1.3. In which fellowship is true happinesse. Christ himselfe saith, Search the Scriptures, for in them you thinke to have eternall life, Joh. 5.39. And in this they differ from all other bookes and writings of men; for mens writings be penned either by the light of nature, and so be erroneous, and misse the end of true happinesse: or else they be penned by them which have direction from the word, and so all the truth they have, leading to true happinesse, is borrowed hence; when as the Scriptures of themselves doe directly guide men thither.

From the consideration of this blessed end of holy Scripture, we may observe, first, That the opinion and practice of the Church of Rome is damnable, who barre the people of God from reading and hearing the Scriptures in their vulgar tongue. For in depriving them of this meanes (as much as in them lyeth) they barre them of their salvation, and they doe directly crosse the purpose of S. Iohn, who doth therefore pronounce him blessed, that shall heare and reade this booke, with conscience to keepe and obey it, that hee might allure and draw all men to doe it with delight.

Secondly, wee are hereby admonished with all care and diligence to reade and meditate in Gods word. That place before named is most excellent, Search the Scripture, Joh. 5.39. even as we would search for gold, or some precious thing which we would faine finde (so the word imports:) And he addeth the reason; For in them you thinke to have eternall life. The same is wisdomes counsell, Prov. 2.4.

But some will say, I cannot reade, I was never brought up in learning, and therefore I cannot search. S. Iohn cuts off this excuse in the next words, saying, Blessed is hee also which heares the words of this prophecy. As if he should say, though he cannot reade, yet if he heare, and keepe it, he is blessed. Here then is the duty of those which cannot reade the Scriptures, they must procure others to reade unto them, and by hearing and keeping, they shall be blessed.

Thirdly, by this scope and end of Scriptures, wee must learne to carry in minde this plaine difference betweene the bookes of God, and writings of men: Gods word bringeth a man which keepes it, to happinesse; but mans writings of themselves cannot doe so, unlesse they have light from the word of God. If this distinction were imprinted in our hearts, wee should not bee so delighted as many are, to heare or speake the words of God mixed with the words of sinfull men, specially in the publike ministery. In former times the Lord forbade his owne people to sow their field with mingled seed, or to make them garments of divers things, as of linnen and woollen, Levit. 19. 19. And no doubt the same God doth mislike, that the pure seed of his word should be mingled with the sayings of erroneous and sinfull men, when the same is sowne upon the furrowes of mens hearts.

Secondly, in this seventh Argument we may observe the right manner and way of hearing and reading the Scriptures: a point worthy all serious consideration. It stands in two things: First, we must set downe with our selves a certaine end, why we reade, and heare the Scriptures, which is, that wee may attaine to true happineſſe ſtanding in fellowſhip with God, and life everlaſting. This end muſt be the motive to induce us to heare, and reade the word of God; and when this takes place in our hearts, it will be of force to make us read, and heare with care and conſcience, which beſeemeth Gods word. Secondly, wee muſt keepe in minde the things we reade, or heare; ſo ſaith the text; And keepeth the things which are written: which word imports, that by diligent obſervation, we ſhould lay them up in our hearts. This is a weighty duty, and ſeriouſly commended unto us of God: Binde up the teſtimony, ſeale up the law among my Diſciples, Iſay. 8. 16. And Mary is therefore commended, becauſe ſhe kept in her heart the words of Ieſus, Luk. 2. 19. 51. It was Davids practice: I have hid thy ſaying in my heart, Pſal. 119. 11. And hereto tendeth Chriſts encouragement, pronouncing them rather bleſſed, which heare the Word and keep it, than thoſe which bare Chriſt, and gave him ſucke, Luk. 11. 27, 28. And Iames calleth it the ingraffed Word, Jam. 1. 21. becauſe it ſhould abide in our hearts like a Siens in a ſtocke, and never bee removed, but there grow, and fructifie unto life eternall.

Now becauſe this is a point of great difficulty, and the want hereof the cauſe of ſo little profiting after much hearing and reading; I will therefore ſhew how (by Gods grace) in hearing and reading the word of God, a man may keepe the ſame in memory.

First, a man muſt learne the grounds or elements of religion, commonly called the Catechiſme, for they are the foundation of all knowledge: without which a man ſhall never underſtand the Scripture to his comfort, nor keepe the ſame in memory. The Apoſtle ſaith, the Hebrewes were dull of hearing (the deepe things of God in Chriſt) becauſe they had not well learned the firſt principles of the Word, Heb. 5. 11, 12. This all ignorant perſons ſhould well obſerve, ſpecially the aged, that they may finde in themſelves the cauſe of their ignorance and dulneſſe, even want of knowledge in the Catechiſme. They thinke it a diſgrace to bee brought unto it now they are old: but if they would not be ever learning, and never come to the knowledge of the truth, they muſt lay in themſelves this good beginning, and learne the principles of religion.

Secondly, we muſt not ruſh upon Gods holy ordinance, but before wee either come to heare, or reade, with reverence prepare our ſelves thereto. Moſt men at this day uſe to prepare themſelves before they come to the Lords table, and ſo they ought to doe before they come to heare the Word: for God ordained both for this end, to bee meanes to bring men to true happineſſe: they differ onely in this, that the Sacraments are the viſible, and the Scriptures the audible word of God. At the giving of the law, The people that muſt heare it, were A ſanctified three dayes before, Exod. 19. And when they did offer ſacrifice, or eat the Paſſeover, both Prieſts and people muſt be ſanctified: and the ſame thing for ſubſtance muſt we performe before we come to heare the word of God. This preparation ſtands in two things: Firſt, wee muſt put out of our hearts all bythoughts, all delights, and cares of worldly affaires, and ſet our hearts (as Ezra did) to ſeeke the law of the Lord, Ezra 7. 10. Secondly, wee muſt make our earneſt prayers to God, that hee would open our eyes, that we may ſee his will ſoften our hearts, and make our eares attentive, as Lydiaes were; and alſo give us grace to embrace his word, and keepe it: For Chriſt is the only Doctor of the heart by his Spirit, without whoſe inward teaching wee can never learne unto ſalvation. B

Thirdly, when we are about the holy exerciſe of Gods word, the frame of our heart ſhould be thus diſpoſed:

I. It muſt be an humble heart: for the Lord reſiſts the proud, and gives grace to the humble, Jam. 4. 6. Them that be meeke, will he guide in judgement, and teach the humble his way, Pſal. 25. 9. A proud heart is ſo ſtuffed with ſelfe-love, that there is no roome for the word of God to lodge in. But the heart that is lowly in it ſelfe, through the conſcience of ſinne, that is the heart in which the Lord by his graces will take up his abode, Iſay 57. 15.

II. It muſt be an honeſt heart: ſuch as hath C no manner of purpoſe to live in any one ſinne whatſoever, but (though it feele corruption in it ſelfe) is reſolved to pleaſe God in all the wayes of his commandements, and that continually: ſuch an heart have the good hearers, reſembled by the good ground, Luk. 8. 15. As on the contrary, that is a wicked heart, which reſolveth to cheriſh, though it be but any one ſinne whatſoever.

III. It muſt be a beleeving heart. The old Jewes heard the Word, but it profited them not, becauſe they mingled it not with faith in their hearts, Heb. 4. 2. where hee compares the heart to a veſſell, in which there muſt bee both the Word, and faith: theſe two muſt bee mingled together, and then it will bee a Word D of power, of life, and ſalvation. Therefore when wee heare the threatnings of the Law, or the promiſes of the Goſpell, we muſt labour to reſolve our hearts of the truth thereof. But incredulity, whereby men except againſt the Word, as not pertaining unto them, is the mother of forgetfulneſſe. The old world knew nothing of the flood, becauſe they did not beleeve, Mat. 24. 39.

IV. It muſt be an hearing heart, ſuch as is pliable to the Word: Sacrifice and burnt offerings (ſaith David) thou wouldeſt not, but mine eares haſt thou prepared, Pſa. 40. 6. As if he ſhould ſay, beſide thoſe bodily ears which thou haſt given me by creation, thou haſt bored new eares in my heart, ſo as I can by thy grace attend tend and liſten to thy Word. And when God ſaith, Seeke ye my face, this hearing heart will anſwer, I ſeeke thy face, O Lord, Pſal. 27. 8, 9.

Fourthly, after wee have heard or read the Word, we muſt become doers of the ſame, even in the duties of our vocation. Wee ſee every man more skilfull in the workes of his owne trade, by reaſon of his daily exerciſe therein: even ſo the conſtant practice of Gods word will make us expert in it, and cauſe us to keepe it in perfect memory. And theſe are the right meanes to become good hearers and readers of the word of God.

Thirdly, this benediction pronounced upon them that heare, read, and keepe the prophecies of this booke, ſerves to induce every childe of God (as much as in him lyeth) to keepe in memory the whole word of God, but ſpecially theſe prophecies of things to come, that concerne the ſtate of the Church; for therefore did God reveale them, that they might be remembred. When the Angell had told Daniel the ſtate of the Church, from his time to the comming of Chriſt; he bids him, Shut up the words, and ſeale the booke, till the end of the time, Dan. 12. 4. meaning, that hee for his owne comfort ſhould hide them in his heart. And Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples, When ye ſee the abomination of deſolation, ſpoken of by Daniel the Prophet: let him that readeth, conſider it, Mat. 24. 15. Behold I have told you before, meaning things to come, verſe 25. ſhewing, That hee would have his children to marke, and remember thoſe weighty things that are foretold, concerning the ſtate of the Church.

For the time is at hand. Here is a reaſon of the former benediction: for ſeeing the time of the accompliſhing of this prophecie is at hand, and muſt ſhortly be fulfilled, therefore thoſe be bleſſed which reade and keepe the ſame in memory. And it is an anſwer to a ſecret objection; for they might have ſaid, we need not to reade or remember this prophecie, ſeeing it ſhall not be fulfilled in our daies; but he addeth, The time is at hand, wherein they muſt be fulfilled, and therefore it muſt be marked. Theſe words for ſubſtance were in the firſt verſe; where it is ſaid, The Revelation was of things that muſt ſhortly be done. And here they be repeated againe. Whereby hee would teach us, That theſe prophecies containe weighty matter, to be deeply conſidered, and earneſtly thought on. And S. Iohn repeats the ſame for two cauſes: Firſt, to awake the members of the Church out of the ſleepe of ſecurity, and make them ſtand upon their watch continually: for though they cannot fall into the dead ſleepe of ſinne, yet the ſlumber of ſecurity may overtake them: the wiſe virgins ſlumber, as well as the fooliſh, Matth. 25. 5. and the ſpouſe of Chriſt, the true Church, confeſſeth, that ſhe ſleepeth, though her heart waketh, Cant. 5. 2.

Secondly, to confirme and hearten the Church, and all true members of Chriſt, againſt the afflictions to come: for herein is the common ſaying true, He that is forewarned, is fore-armed.

Now in theſe words (The time is at hand,) Chriſt would teach us to obſerve, That whatſoever thing may befall the members of Chriſt in this life, whether afflictions, temptations, death, or the laſt judgement it ſelfe, all wil come ſhortly. This conſideration ought to take place in our hearts, being of great uſe in our lives: as to ſtay us from many ſinnes, ſo to move us to doe all things with good conſcience. And the want hereof is the cauſe of much evill: The bad ſervant beats his fellowes, becauſe he thinks his maſter doth deferre his comming, Mat. 24. 48, 49. The old world went on in ſinne, never regarding Noahs prophecie, and ſo knew nothing till the floud came and ſwept them all away, Mat. 24. 39. We ſhould lay theſe to our hearts, and alwayes thinke with Paul, [a] the Lord is at hand: The rather, becauſe we have had the Goſpel, and peace, with all temporall bleſſings theſe eight and thirty yeares: now the ſtate of the Church is interchangeable, one while peace, and then trouble: ſo as it is like, this peaceable ſtate will not long continue, but wee muſt be tried. And the time of our triall is at hand, for whatſoever muſt befall the Church, will come ſhortly. We muſt therefore prepare for trouble, and ſo wee ſhall finde it the leſſe grievous.

[a] Phil. 4. 5.

V. 4 Iohn to the ſeven Churches which are in Aſia, Grace be with you, and Peace from him, which is, and which was, and which is to come, and from the ſeven Spirits which are before his throne.

Here beginneth the ſecond part of the Preface, to wit, the inſcription of this viſion, and it hath two branches: Firſt, a dedication, in theſe words: Iohn to the ſeven Churches which are in Aſia. Secondly, a ſalutation, in the next words: Grace be with you, and peace, &c. to the 9. verſe. In the dedication, obſerve firſt, the penman that dedicated this booke: ſecondly, the parties to whom it is ſent. For the firſt, the penman is Iohn, who here againe repeats his name, to ſhew and certifie every reader of this booke, that he was without all doubt the true penman of the holy Ghoſt, in writing this Revelation. But though he repeats his name, yet hee doth not adde any titles of honour, or commendation, as he did in the firſt verſe. Wherein he gives us a true patterne of modeſty and humilitie, which is never to ſpeake in our owne cauſe to our owne praiſe, but onely in caſes of neceſſity, when Gods glory may bee advanced, and the credit of our particular callings maintained.

This

This Paul practised, who often humbles himselfe, and cals himselfe the [a] least of all the Apostles, yea, the [b] chiefe of all sinners: yet when the credit of his Apostleship came into question, then he sets out himselfe, shewing he was a true Apostle, one of the chiefe, and above those which did falsly call themselves so, as we may finde in both of his [c] Epistles to the Corinthians.

a 1 Cor. 15.
b 1 Tim. 1.
c 1 Cor. 9. 1. 2. 2 Cor. 11. 5.

Secondly, the persons to whom hee wrote were the seven Churches in Asia: concerning them note two things: first, hee writes to Churches; secondly, to the Churches in Asia. For the first: why writes he to the Churches, rather than to the Church, seeing there is but one onely Catholike Church? Ans. The Church may be considered divers wayes; first, as it is the whole company of the elect, and so it is but one: secondly, as the same is parted into severall branches and companies, one part being in one Countrey, and another part in some other. Wherein also every severall congregation, professing the Gospell, is a particular Church. And so there may be many Churches, all of them being members of one Catholike Church: As the Sea is onely one, yet it consisteth of many parts, which taking their names of the Countryes whereto they adjoyne, are called so many particular Seas: as the English Sea, the Spanish Sea, French, Italian, Scottish Seas, &c. And of particular Churches must Iohn bee understood in this place.

Now Iohn chuseth rather to write to Churches, than to particular men: First, because the matter of this booke, concerneth the Church, being a Propheticall History, touching the state of the Church to the end. Secondly, because particular Churches, which bee true members of the Catholike Church, are the pillars and ground of truth, 1 Tim. 3. 15. And the Church is so called, not that her authority is above the the Word: but first, because it is the treasure-house wherein the Scriptures are preserved from age to age, against the rage of Gods enemies. Secondly, because the Church gives testimony to the truth of Gods word. And thirdly, because it publisheth the truth of Gods word by vertue of that ordinary ministery which God hath ordained therein.

Secondly, in the dedication of this booke, among all particular Churches God directs him to make choice of those seven in Asia; no doubt for speciall cause; First, because they were then most famous Churches, as the chapters following, and the Histories of the Church doe plainly shew. Secondly, that the calling of the Gentiles to the light of the Gospell, which long before had beene foretold, might be more evident: for here the Iewes are passed by, and the Gentiles sent unto.

Lastly, wee may here observe, That S. Iohn knew no prerogative of the Church of Rome above other Churches: for if it were the mother-Church, whereon all other Churches

A should depend, as the Papist would have it; I would know of them why Iohn passed by it in the dedication of this booke, which containeth matter needfull for all Churches to know.

Grace be with you, and peace from him which is, and which was, and which is to come: and from the seven spirits which are before his throne. Here begins Iohns salutation of the seven Churches. Salutations be of two sorts, Civill, and Religious. Civill is that which men use ordinarily one to another, wishing health, welfare and such like. Religious is that which is peculiar and proper unto the Church, comprehending in it a benediction also. And such is this here used by S. Iohn. It may also be called Apostolicall: because it is so usuall with them in their Epistles.

B And they used it the rather, because it is so correspondent to their ministery: which stood in two things; first, in preaching, which is the ministery of grace and reconciliation, the things here desired; secondly, in prayer, whereto belonged the duty of benediction, to pronounce a blessing upon the people: as did the Priests in their ministration under the Law, Num. 6. 23. and our Saviour Christ with his Apostles, when they preached the Gospell; and as every Minister should doe to his whole congregation, before they depart. And this is also included in this salutation: for hereby they blessed those Churches to whom they did write.

But to come to the words, which be most excellent, and containe in them the summe of

C the Gospell. Grace in Scripture signifieth two things: first, Gods favour; secondly, some gift of God freely bestowed. Now here by Grace is meant not any particular gift of God, but the gracious favour and good will of God, wherby he accepts of some in Christ for his owne: for it is here opposed to peace, a gift of grace, and therefore cannot signifie the same thing.

Now marke, S. Iohn in this salutation begins with grace; because it is the foundation of all happinesse and of all Gods blessings: whatsoever we are, and all that we have, is of grace, our election, redemption, vocation, justification, and sanctification; our faith and repentance, and our preservation in them, both proceed from this fountaine of Gods free grace. It is the

D beginning, and the end of all; yea, it is all in all in the matter of our salvation; first, wee must have this, and then we may looke for all other blessings.

And Peace. Peace is taken sundry wayes in the Scripture; first, for welfare and good successe in things of this world by Gods blessing, Exod. 18. 7. Moses and Iethro saluting, aske each other of their peace, that is, of his welfare; and so it is partly taken in this place. Secondly, for that unity and blessed concord which is in the kingdome of God, among Gods children: and so it is especially taken here. And in this sense it hath six parts, every one whereof is a most worthy blessing.

The first, is peace with God: which is, when

wee ſtand in the favour of God, reconciled to him in Chriſt Jeſus, Rom. 5. 1. Secondly, peace with Gods Angels, for they guard ſuch as be in Gods favour, and carry them as a nurſe doth her childe in her armes, That they hurt not their feet at any ſtone, Pſal. 91. 11. and they rejoyce at our good eſtate. The third, is peace with a mans ſelfe, when his conſcience will not accuſe him, but excuſe and cleare him, being waſhed in the bloud of Chriſt: This is that Peace of God, which paſſeth all underſtanding, Phil. 4. 7. The fourth is, peace with Gods Church, notably prefigured by the peaceable habitation of wilde beaſts and tame together, as the Lion and the Calfe, the Wolfe and the Lambe, the childe and the Cockatrice, &c. Iſay. 11. 6. and plainly to be ſeene among the beleevers, Acts 4. 32. Who were all of one mind and heart. The fifth is, peace with the enemies of Gods Church, ſo farre as it is for the good of the Church, and the glory of God. So Ioſeph had peace in Pharaohs court: ſo Daniel had peace in the court of Nebuchadnezzar: for when the three children were caſt into the oven, we muſt not thinke that he did revolt unto idolatry, or hide himſelfe; but being in favour in the court obtained priviledge to bee excuſed. The ſixth is, Peace with all the creatures of God: with the beaſts of the field, fowles of the ayre, and fiſhes of the ſea. This the Lord promiſeth in the covenant that he will make for them with all his creatures, Hoſea 2. 18. yea, The childe of God ſhall tread upon the Lion and the Serpent, and they ſhall not hurt him, Pſal. 91. 13. And this his peace ſtands herein, That by Gods bleſſed providence he ſhall find helpe and comfort from all Gods creatures.

In this place, whether we take peace for outward welfare, or for the concord of Gods Church, yet it is placed after grace, becauſe it followeth as a fruit thereof: Firſt, a man muſt bee in Gods favour, and then come all the bleſſings of peace unto him. This then is the meaning, Grace be with you, and peace; That is, I wiſh you the favour of God in Chriſt, with peace, the bleſſed fruit thereof, even all outward welfare, and eſpecially the concord of Gods Church, having peace with God, with his holy Angels, with his Church, with our owne hearts, with your enemies (as farre as may be for Gods glory) and with all his creatures.

Vſe. Whereas S. Iohn wiſheth grace unto the Churches in the firſt place; he would teach us, 2 That the favour of God is to be ſought for above all things; for the Apoſtles practice muſt bee our precept. So did David: Many ſay, who will ſhew us any good: But Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me, Pſal. 4. 6. As if hee ſhould ſay, Let the moſt of the world ſeeke what they will, as riches, pleaſures, &c. yet my deſire is of thy love and favour above all. And oftentimes he calleth God his portion, his rocke, and caſtle of defence, the thing that hee longeth for; to ſhew, that all his joy was in Gods favour. And ſo it ſhould be with us: but we little practiſe this, becauſe wee bring from our cradles naturall preſumption, which perſwades us that we bee in the favour and love of God. But we muſt caſt off this falſe perſwaſion and take a new courſe; and labour firſt, to ſee that we be out of Gods favour, loſt ſheepe, prodigall children in our ſelves, yea, the very firebrands of hell: and this, to ſee our owne want of grace, is the firſt ſtep to grace. Secondly, feeling this want and miſery in our ſelves, we muſt earneſtly deſire, and in our ſoules hunger and thirſt after the love and favour of God in Chriſt, above all earthly things. Thirdly, we muſt by the hand of true faith lay hold upon the grace and mercy of God in Chriſt, propounded in the promiſes of the Goſpell, and apply them to our ſelves particularly.

Secondly, after grace he wiſheth unto them Peace: where note, the true order of ſeeking for the bleſſings of this life: we muſt not begin with welfare and proſperity, but our firſt and chiefeſt care muſt be, to obtaine the grace and favour of God. So Chriſt bids us, firſt, to ſeeke the Kingdome of God and his righteouſneſſe: for when we are in Gods Kingdome of grace reconciled to him in Chriſt, then all things needfull ſhall bee miniſtred to us, Matthew 6. 33.

Vſe. This diſcovers the bad practice of moſt men every where, who in ſeeking the bleſſings of God, begin at the wong end. They will toile themſelves in their callings to get wealth, honour, pleaſures, and preferments; but the favour of God in Chriſt is not regarded: which notwithſtanding is the true and right foundation of all outward welfare.

Here ſome will ſay, if God give me wealth, honour, and reputation, then he loves mee; for theſe be ſignes thereof. I anſwer, Theſe bee no ſure tokens of his favour in Chriſt, for thoſe that be his enemies may enjoy them all, as Job 21. 7. to the 14. This David perceived, how the wicked might flouriſh in their outward proſperitie, having more than heart could wiſh, Pſal. 37. 3, 7. And yet they ſtood but in ſlippery places. And therefore let no man herewith deceive himſelfe: he that wanteth Gods favour in Chriſt, is but a curſed wretch, and a firebrand of hell, though he had all the world for outward things at his command. For all earthly things ſevered from Gods ſpeciall grace, are but an heape of miſeries. The wicked mans peace is no peace, ſaith the Lord, Iſay 48. 22. And the man that hath Gods grace in Chriſt, though he want all worldly benefits, yet he hath more than all the world without it: for hereby alone he is truly bleſſed and happy.

From him which is, and which was, and which is to come: and from the ſeven ſpirits which are before his throne. Here is ſet downe the firſt cauſe and author of theſe two, Grace and Peace, to wit, God himſelfe, diſtinguiſhed into three perſons, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt. The

Father

Father is noted in these words, Which is, and which was, and which is to come. The holy Ghost in these, And from the seven spirits which are before his throne. The Sonne in the fifth verse, And from Iesus Christ, which is a faithfull witnesse, and first begotten of the dead, and Lord over the Kings of the earth: unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sinnes in his owne blood, &c.

Saint Iohn in the first place describes the Father by a distribution, which expresseth the true nature of God in these words, Which is, was, and is to come. In which he alludes to that, Exodus 3. 14, 15. where Moses demands of God, If the people should aske who sent him, what he should answer? The Lord bids him say, Ehieh, Iehovah hath sent me: which two names serve to one end, namely, to expresse the nature of God. They are translated, I am, and the Lord: but these English words doe not fully expresse their signification. Yet S. Iohn expounds them here, making Ehieh to signifie him which is, which was, and is to come. Which words of Iohn also in the originall bee more full in sense than our English tongue can well expresse. And yet they may bee thus explained: Grace and Peace be from him which is in himselfe, and of himselfe, a most perfect and absolute substance; which was a most perfect substance, and which is to come, a most absolute, perfect, simple substance and essence. In these words are touched sundry weighty points:

First, touching the nature of God, namely, That God is a most absolute perfect substance and essence, which hath his being in himselfe, of himselfe, and from none other. Paul saith, An Idoll is nothing, 1 Cor. 8. 4. that is nothing subsisting in nature, but a meere fond device of mans braine: But the true God is an essence subsisting, and that of himselfe alone perfectly; and herein differeth from all Idols and false gods.

Secondly, hereby wee see a difference betweene God and all his creatures. Every creature is a substance, as Angels and Men: likewise mans body and soule are substances: yet none of these have being of themselves, but from God, and of God. And yet we must not conceive, that the creatures are parts of God; though they have their substances and being of him; for then each creature should be God: for the communication of the divine substance cannot be without the divine nature: but Gods substance is indivisible, and incommunicable to the creature. My meaning then is, that God made the creatures out of himselfe of that matter which hee created by his Word; and preserveth them being made. Which by the way, should teach us to returne our bodies and soules by obedience unto GOD, in lieu of thankfulnesse, endevouring his glory all the daies of our life.

Thirdly, hence we learne, that the Lord is Eternall every way, without beginning or ending: for it is he which is, which was, and which is to come. Angels and the soules of men, they be eternall; but not every way: though they be eternall in that they shall never die, yet had they a beginning. Secondly, they are eternall, not absolutely, but by participation; for God made them eternall: but the Lord is most absolutely of himselfe eternall.

Fourthly note, he saith not from him which shall be, but from him which is to come, that is, to judgement: to give us to understand, That this eternall God is also a Judge of all his creatures, especially men and Angels. A point of speciall use, to move us to walke before God with all good conscience. If any shall flatter himselfe, thinking he shall be dead before that day come: I answer, it may be so. What then? thinkest thou thereby to escape his judgement? No verily: for this God commeth to judge thee particularly by death, and thereby to reserve thee to the judgement of the great day. Oh, that we would seriously thinke on this; it would bee a meanes to move us to repentance, by breaking off the course of sinne, and endevouring to keepe a good conscience in all things, Acts 24. 16. And so shall we be ready to meet him at his comming, whether by death or judgement.

And from the seven spirits which are before his throne. These words commonly are expounded of seven Angels of God which stand before the throne, and minister unto him. But it cannot be meant of them: first, because Grace and Peace is here said to proceed from these seven spirits; but it cannot come from the holy Angels, which attend to minister before the Lord. Secondly, in this verse, which is a benediction, or a salutation of Iohn to the Church, the seven spirits are set before Iesus Christ, the second person of the Trinitie; but there is no reason nor respect, for which the Angels should be placed before Christ. The words are rather thus to be expounded, And from the seven spirits, &c. that is, from the holy Ghost. This Exposition is most agreeable to all the circumstances of the Text; and the holy Ghost may bee called by the name of the seven spirits for two causes: First, because though hee be onely one in substance, yet he is seven, that is, manifold in regard of gifts and operations which proceed from him. Secondly, Saint Iohn here speaketh of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, as he saw them in vision: (for here he setteth downe one vision which hee saw) now he beheld the holy Ghost in forme of seven lights in a vision, Revel. 4. 5.

Which are before his throne. This he speakes by comparison taken from earthly Kings: which sitting in their thrones, doe there shew their glory and majestie. So Saint Iohn saw in vision God the Father sitting in his throne, and Christ at his right hand; and before the throne the holy Ghost. Which manner of appearance proveth not, that the holy Ghost is inferiour to the the Father and to the Sonne: but hereby is expressed the office of the holy Ghost: which is to be sent from the Father, and from the Sonne, to the Church, to enlighten the members thereof.

This then is the meaning of the words; And from the seven spirits which are before the throne: that is, Grace and peace bee with you from the holy Ghost, the Spirit of the Father, and of the Sonne, who from them both is sent unto the Church, to enlighten, to sanctifie, and to governe the members thereof.

Vse. First, hence we learne, that the holy Ghost is God: for looke from whom commeth grace and peace, that same is very God; but here grace and peace proceed from the holy Ghost; and therefore he is very God.

Secondly, we learne, that we may and ought to direct our prayers to the holy Ghost: for by whom grace and peace is given, to him we may direct our prayers: but grace and peace are given by the holy Ghost; therefore we may pray to him for them. This is the rather to be observed, because there be some which doubt whether we may pray to the holy Ghost: but they may as wel doubt whether he be God. They say we have no example hereof in Scripture. Ans. It is not true: for in this benediction Iohn prayeth to the holy Ghost, saying, Grace bee with you, and peace from God the Father, &c. For in substance it is as much as if he had said thus; Thy grace and peace, O Father; and thy grace and peace, O holy Ghost; and thine, O Sonne, be with thy Church.

Thirdly, in this description of the holy Ghost, by standing before the throne of the Father, we may observe, That the holy Ghost is a person subsisting, and not a quality. Some heretikes that acknowledge the God-head of the Father, denied the God-head of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost: and concerning the holy Ghost, have held, That he is nothing but the vertue and qualitie of the Father. But this is most false: for as the Father is a substance sitting upon the throne; so wee see the Holy Ghost is a substance standing before the throne.

Fourthly, here we learne that the holy Ghost is a distinct person from the Father, and from the Sonne: for hee sitteth not in the throne, as doth the Father, nor sitteth at the Fathers right hand, as doth the Sonne: but standeth before the throne apart from them both.

V. 5. *And from Jesus Christ, which is a faithfull Witnesse, and first begotten of the dead, and Lord over the Kings of the earth: unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sinnes in his owne bloud.

That is, grace and peace from Jesus Christ. Where Christ Jesus is joyned with the Father, and the holy Ghost, in bestowing grace and peace on his Church. Here some may aske, Why is Christ the second person in Trinitie, placed after the holy Ghost, the third person? Answ. For two causes: First, in regard of his office: for Christ is to be considered two waies: first, as he is the sonne of the Father: secondly, as he is the Mediatour of the Church. As he is the Sonne of the Father, he is the second person in the Trinitie, and so before the holy Ghost in order. But as he is Mediatour, so he is after the holy Ghost: Isay 61. 1. The spirit of the Lord is upon mee, hee hath sent mee to preach. Where Christ confesseth himselfe to be sent by the holy Ghost, as he is Mediatour, and in that respect he is set after him. Secondly, he is placed after the holy Ghost for the fitter progresse of the historie: for the manner of them which pen the Scriptures is, to set them in the last place, of whom they meane to speake most; as Matth. 1. the Evangelist setting downe the genealogie of Christ from Abraham, (though among them all was none so excellent as Christ) yet placeth him the last, because he intended to goe on with the history of his life and death. So Iohn placeth Christ the last, because he purposed to make a large description of the person and office of Christ; which he could not so fitly have brought in, if hee had placed him before the holy Ghost.

From this fifth verse till the ninth, he describes Christ at large: First, by his offices; secondly, by the execution thereof. His offices are three: first, his Propheticall office, in these words; Which is that faithfull witnesse. Secondly, his Priestly office; The first begotten of the dead. Thirdly, his Kingly office; And that Prince of the Kings of the earth.

The execution of all his offices is particularly set downe in the words following, To him that loved us, and washed us from our sinnes, and so forth to the ninth verse.

Touching his offices. In his Propheticall office we may note three things: First, he is a witnesse; secondly, a faithfull witnesse; thirdly, that faithfull witnesse. First, he is a witnesse, Isa. 55. 4. I gave him to be a witnesse to the nations. By his witnes-bearing is signified two duties of his Prophetical office: first, to reveale the will of his Father to his Church: secondly, to certifie the Church of the certainty of the same: and in these two stands his whole office Propheticall.

For the first, to reveale his Fathers will to the Church immediatly, is his office as he is a Prophet: for none hath seene God, but he which came from the bosome of the Father, and he hath declared him, Joh. 1. 18. Now Christ declares the Father, by making known his will: and that he hath done not only in his own person, while he lived on earth, but from the beginning by all all the Prophets, and so will doe to the end by all true Preachers: for in the Church the Father doth all things by the Sonne. When the Lord rained fire on Sodome, Gen. 19. 24. there Iehovah the Father rained downe by Iehovah the Son. So when the Covenant was made to our first Parents, it was made in Christ the promised seed. It was renued to Noah, Abraham, and the Patriarchs, from the Father by the Sonne: for that Iehovah which appeared to Moses in the bush, Exod. 3. is by S. Paul called Christ, 1 Corinth. 10. The Prophets and the Apostles wrote as they were inspired by Christ, they were but his instruments to speake and write that he put into them by the holy Ghost. The matter, and the stile, and phrase of the Scripture, all came from Christ. Nay, when any particular man comes to understand the Scripture, this is by the working of Christ, hee opens his eyes. He gave the Disciples understanding as they went to Emaus, to understand the Scriptures. Luk. 24.

The second duty of Christs Propheticall office is, to certifie men in conscience of the truth of his Fathers will. This certificate is two-fold; generall or particular: generall, when hee certifieth men in conscience, That the word written or spoken by man is the Word of God, neither nature nor learning can doe this, but it is proper to Christs Propheticall office. And for this he saith to his Disciples, He will send them the comforter, which shall lead them into all truth: that is, reveale Gods will unto them, and assure their heart that the same is true. Unto this assurance two things are required: the outward meanes, which is the Word it selfe: and an inward cause, which is the principall, to wit, the operation of the holy Spirit. Ioh. 16. 13.

By this doctrine three points are resolved: First, this demand of the Papists, How a man can come to know, that the Scriptures read and taught, be the Word of God? Ans. We must here have recourse to this faithfull witnesse, and desire of him his Spirit, whereby the mind must be enlightened, and made able to discerne the things of God: for no naturall man can doe it of himselfe. Secondly, we must have Christs testimony of Scripture in the Scriptures themselves: for in them hee setteth downe his testimony of the Scriptures.

But some will say, if Christs testimonie of Scripture be set downe in the Scriptures, why doe not all men know this testimonie, and receive it? I answer, the shining of the Sunne before a mans face is not sufficient to cause him to see, unlesse he have in his eyes the gift and sense of seeing; Even so, it is not enough for a man to have in Gods Word the testimony of Christ, that Scripture is Scripture; but withall hee must have in himselfe the light of the Spirit, revealing that testimonie to his conscience: and then in reading or hearing the Scripture, in marking the manner and stile, the majestie and power thereof, he shall be able to see in every sentence A the testimony of Christ, assuring his conscience that the same is undoubtedly the Word of God.

A second doubt resolved by this doctrine is this, How can a man know the true Religion, seeing the Turke, Papist, Jew, and Protestant have their severall Religions, and die in them? I answer, We must have recourse to Christ, this faithfull witnesse: and looke whereto hee gives his testimony, that we must hold for true Religion. Now the Scriptures be as a letter sent from heaven to the Church, wherein Christ hath set downe his owne testimony of the true Religion; which in tryall shall be found to be the Religion of the Protestant, and not the religion of the Jew, Turke, or Papist.

B A third doubt to bee resolved by this Doctrine is, How to know the particular truth in matters of religion, when as sundry men professing the same religion be of divers opinions. Ans. Still we must have recourse to this faithfull witnesse and Prophet of the Church, hee is the Judge of all controversies in Religion, and in the Scriptures, if we marke them we shall see his judgement. Quest. But if there be divers opinions about Scripture it selfe, and every one give a severall sense unto it, who must then bee Judge? Answ. In this diversitie of opinions, yea, of the Scriptures themselves, we must still have recourse to Christ, and that in the Scriptures alone: for although there were a thousand diverse expositions of one place; yet by the C circumstance thereof, conferring it with other like places of Scripture, a man shall be able to finde out the true sense: for Christ in Scripture expoundeth himselfe.

The particular certificate of Christ belongeth also to his Propheticall office: and that is, to assure men in their consciences, that the promises of the Gospell, with all the benefits therein contained, as Justification, Sanctification, and life eternall, which in the Word bee generally expounded, doe belong unto them particularly: as to Peter, Iohn, &c. And this assurance (as the former) is principally wrought by the Word, not barely read, but preached, for therein by the inward work of the Spirit, the generall promises be particularly applied. This Paul imports, saying, Yee have the Spirit of adoption, which testifies with our spirit we be the sonnes of God, Rom. 8. 15, 16. D

Hence wee learne, that the doctrine of the Church of Rome, and of all others, which hold, That men cannot bee assured of their salvation by faith, is wicked and damnable: for hereby they cut off a part of Christs prophetical office, wherein the dignity thereof doth consist, that is, to assure a man particularly of the truth of Gods promises unto himselfe. And in this hee differs from all other Prophets and Apostles which be witnesses: for they can witnesse onely outwardly to the eare; but hee can speake and testifie to the conscience. Neither can any of them certifie any man particularly ticularly, though their Ministery tend to that end.

Secondly, obserue Christ is not onely a witnesse, but a faithfull witnesse: and so hee is for these causes; First, because hee testifies not his owne will, but his which sent him, namely, his Father, Joh. 8.26. Secondly, hee testifies all his Fathers will, neither adding thereto, nor detracting from it, Joh. 17.4. Thirdly, because hee teacheth his Fathers will sincerely, in the same manner which he received it, not altering, changing, or depraving any part thereof: As my Father taught me, so I speak these things, Joh. 8.28.

Thirdly, Christ is called that faithfull witnesse, to distinguish him from all other witnesses. The Lord hath sundry faithfull witnesses: as the Prophets, Apostles, the Church, nay the Sunne and Moone, Psalm. 89.37. but Christ alone is that faithfull witnesse: First, because his witnesse is [a] authenticall, sufficient of it selfe, and needs no other confirmation. The testimony of the Apostles and Prophets, is not of it selfe authenticall and certaine, but as it consents with Christs witnesse, and proceedeth from his Spirit. Secondly, hee is that witnesse, because he is the Lord of that house, whereto hee gives witnesse, namely the Church; but the Apostles and Prophets are but servants there, Hebr. 3.5, 6. Thirdly, Christ his witnesse is inward: It speakes directly to the conscience, and there gives undoubted assurance: but the witnesse of men, as of the Prophets and Apostles is outward onely; it comes to the eares, it never binds and assures the conscience of it selfe. And thus we see why he is called here, that faithfull witnesse.

For, whereas Christ the Doctor and Prophet of the Church, is called that faithfull witnesse, wee learne, That all Ministers of the Gospell ought to bee faithfull witnesses: For every Minister of the Gospell, when he preacheth Gods word, is in the roome of Christ, and speaketh that unto the Church, which Christ would speake. That they may bee faithfull witnesses, sundry things are required at their hands: First, they must deliver the testimony of Christ above all other things, and before all testimonies of man in the office of their ministery. This was meat and drinke to Christ, to [b] teach his Fathers will. Eleazer Abrahams eldest servant, shewed his fidelitie, in that hee would not eat or drinke till hee had done his Masters message, Genes. 24.33. Much more ought the Ministers of Christ to have speciall care of that weighty message committed unto them. Secondly, they must testifie all the will of God concerning matters of salvation, as faith, obedience, and a godly life: among men, we count him a faithfull witnesse, which testifies all the truth, and no more but the truth: So should it bee with all Ministers, that bee Gods witnesses to his Church. Herein Paul cleared himselfe, That he was free from all mens bloud, seeing he delivered the whole wil of God in matters necessary for salvation, and kept nothing backe. Thirdly, he must neither adde unto, nor take away, much lesse in any case deprave the word of God. And this is the true marke of a faithfull witnesse: For false Prophets teach some truth, but withall they adde something of their owne, or detract from Gods truth, something that they ought not. In the Church of Rome a man may heare things concerning morall vertues, handled soundly; but come to Justification, and thereto they adde the merit of mens workes: and so they deale with faith, and repentance, matters of salvation: they take away one part, and adde another to the Scriptures: they hold the Creed in word, yet in deed they deny the same, as by their doctrine may appeare; and so shew themselves false witnesses. Fourthly, a faithfull witnesse must deliver the testimony of Christ in that spirituall manner which best beseemeth the majesty of God, and which hee best approveth; that is, in a plaine, easie, and familiar kinde of speech, that the conscience of the sinner may bee touched, and the understanding of the simple may bee edified. When the Word is otherwise delivered, as in the inticing words of mans wisdome, or for ostentation of wit, or much reading, though nothing be said but the truth, yet hee that so dispenseth it, is an unfaithfull witnesse, because hee corrupteth the Word by his vaine delivery. And this is the sin of this age in many ministers, who teach the truth indeed, but yet in such sort, as it may appeare, they seeke themselves, and not Gods glory, respecting little the edification of the simple, so themselves may be famous for wit, eloquence and learning. But these men make merchandise of the Word, like to huxters, that by starching, blowing, and spicing, set a glosse upon their ware, to make seeme that which it is not: which is a grievous sinne, and such as will banish the Gospell out of our Land, unlesse it bee reformed.

Secondly, this title of Christ, That faithfull witnesse, doth discover unto us the damnable practice of men in the sinne of unbeleefe: for Christ this faithfull witnesse hath given testimony to his word which is preached, that the same is true. And therefore they that beleeve it not, doe make Christ a false witnesse, and a lyar, than which, what can bee more horrible? and yet this is the common sinne of this age. For when the law is applied, who is afraid? and when the Gospell is preached, Yet who beleeveth our report? Gods Ministers may say with the little children, Wee have piped unto you, but you have not danced; wee have mourned unto you, but you have not wept. This deadnesse of heart, whereby men are not moved with the Word preached unto them, is an evident argument of this fearefull unbeleefe, whereby they make Christ a false witnesse. This therefore should move us to consider

[b] Joh. 4.34.

Acts 20.26, 27.

Thus.

Iohn 5.10.

in our selves, the heinousnesse of this sinne, that so wee may strive against it, and labour to give free passage to the Word into our hearts, trembling at the Law, and rejoycing in the Gospell, that so each part thereof may have his perfect worke in us: For which end also wee may consider, That amongst those which shall have their portion in the burning Lake, unbeleevers are set in the first ranke, Revelat. 21.8.

D. Thirdly, seeing Christ Jesus is that faithfull witnesse, which giveth testimony to mens consciences in particular of their salvation; wee learne, That every one which professeth himselfe to repent, is bound in conscience to beleeve that the promises of the Gospell, and the benefits thereof, as Election, Redemption, Justification, Sanctification, and Salvation, belong to him particularly. And though this be against all humane sense and reason, yet seeing we have a faithful witnesse, avouching the same, we must submit our selves unto his testimony: for by unbeleefe wee greatly dishonour our witnesse-bearer, by denying truth unto his record. Here then wee see, it is no presumption (as the Papists say) to beleeve our election and salvation in particular: nay, it is an horrible sinne in every one that repenteth, not to beleeve it; seeing Christ, a most faithfull witnesse, testifies the same to our consciences by his holy Spirit. Hereto also serve the Sacraments instituted by God, to seale up unto every worthy receiver, Christ and all his benefits. The Ministers giving of the Bread and Wine to them that truly repent, is as much as if Christ should say, Beleeve thou, and life eternall belongs to thee.

And the first begotten of the dead. In these words is contained the second office of Christ, namely, his Priesthood: the principall actions whereof stand in dying, in rising againe from the dead, and making intercession for us. And here Saint Iohn alludeth to the estate of the families among the Jewes, comparing Christ to the first borne: for as among them, hee which was first borne, and eldest of the family, had many privileges and preheminences above his brethren; as Lordship, right of the Priesthood, and double portion, &c. so Christ hee hath his privileges; yea, even Christ crucified, hee hath his prerogatives among the dead, above all that are dead. So Paul expounding this title, calleth him the first borne, and beginning of the dead, that hee might have in all things the preheminence, Col. 1.18.

The privileges of Christ dead, and buried among all the dead, are two: first, That he was the first that ever rose from death to life, and so to glory. Some indeed have risen before Christ from naturall death to naturall life, as Lazarus, but it was to die againe. And Moses and Elias assumed their bodies in the Mount with Christ in his transfiguration: But yet they laid them downe againe to the former misery of corruption for a time. But Christ Jesus rose from death to life eternall, never to die againe: and his resurrection was the first step into his glory. Secondly, that by his owne power he raised up himselfe, and by vertue of his Godhead, quickned his man-hood: the most godly man that is, or ever was, cannot doe so: but all the Saints of God are raised from death by vertue of Christs resurrection, through that mysticall union which is betweene Christ the head, and all his members; by meanes whereof, the power of Christ his Godhead, which raised up his manhood, is conveyed to all his members in their resurrection from death to life. And therefore is Christ called, the first fruits of them that sleep: 1 Cor. 15. because as the first fruits of corne which was offered to God, did sanctifie the whole croppe; so Christ his resurrection did make acceptable unto God, the resurrection of all his members.

In this title is comprised a notable comfort for all Gods children against the immoderate feare of death. If Iohn had said, Christ is the first borne of the living, it had beene a great comfort: for then had he shewed, that the living Saints on earth were children in Gods family, having Christ for their eldest brother: but calling him the first begotten of the dead, here is a further comfort: the Lord sheweth hereby, what speciall regard he hath to the faithfull that be dead: for even then, when they be dead, they continue members of his family, and have Christ Jesus dead and buried, reckoned among them for their eldest brother. In regard whereof Christ hath a double right among the dead: first, of a King, secondly, of a Priest. The right of a King hee hath, to command his members to rise againe, and to enter into glory after him. The right of a Priest, whereby hee offered up himselfe in death a sacrifice acceptable to God for the sanctifying of the death of all his members: for by his death, hee tooke away the sting of death, and hath made unto them a sweet sleepe in the grave, as in a bed of downe, out of which they shall one day rise to eternall life and glory.

And Prince of the Kings of the earth. Here is the third title given to Christ, wherin his kingly office is expressed. Hee is called a Prince of the Kings of the earth, in two respects: First, as hee is God, the sonne of God, equall with the Father, and so is King together with the Father and the holy Ghost, governing all things with them by the same divine power, in heaven, in earth, and in hell. Secondly, as he is Mediator and Redeemer, God and Man, in two natures. In this respect hee saith of himselfe, All power is given to me in heaven and in earth, Mat. 28.18. And Paul saith, God gave him a name above every name, at which every knee should bow, Phil. 2.9,10. even as hee is Mediator. And in this second respect hee is called, A Prince of the Kings of the earth in this place. Now Christ being a King, must needs have a Kingdome, which is not of this world, ſtanding in the might and policy of a man, as earthly kingdomes doe; but it is ſpirituall, directly concerning the hearts and conſciences of men, where he ruleth by his Lawes. And this is his privilege, which cannot be given to any creature, man or Angell, to rule and raigne ſpiritually in the heart and conſcience. This ſpirituall Kingdome of Chriſt is exerciſed, not by dint of ſword, or force of armes, but by his holy word, through the work of the ſpirit: for he is a King, which carrieth his ſcepter in his mouth, even his Word, Iſay 11.4. That is the rod of his power, by which he rules the heart and conſcience, even in the middeſt of his enemies, Pſal. 110.2.

Now Chriſt is here intituled, Prince of the Kings of the earth, in two reſpects: Firſt, becauſe hee (and hee alone) as Mediator, can give lawes to binde the conſciences of men; yea, of the greateſt Monarch in the world. Secondly, becauſe hee hath ſoveraigne power over all Kings and Potentates, as well as over others, to ſave, and to deſtroy: for not only hath he power to make a law to bind their conſciences; but alſo if they keepe it, to ſave them; if they breake his law, he hath power to deſtroy them, be they what they may be. He hath the keyes of heaven and of hell, to open, and to ſhut at his pleaſure, Rev. 3.7. Hee can, if hee will leade them to life, and ſave them: or elſe leave them to their owne minde, and ſo deſtroy them. Hence ariſe ſundry inſtructions:

First, ſeeing our Saviour Chriſt is a Prince of the greateſt Monarchs of the world, and is farre above them; wee muſt then with all feare and trembling, reverence his Majeſty. Great is that reverence which men yeeld to earthly Princes: oh then, what reverence ſhould wee performe to him, which is Prince and Lord of all the Kings of the earth? Wee cannot conceive what honour wee owe unto him, which is advanced in the throne of all Majeſty. And this our reverence wee muſt ſhew, by hearing his word, with trembling and beleeving hearts, as Eſay ſaith, Chapter 66. 2. Wee muſt not dare to thinke, or ſpeake of Chriſt, without great reverence: At his name every knee muſt bow: that is, at the conſideration of the great Majeſtie whereto he is now exalted, every heart, even of the greateſt Monarchs, ſhould be touched with ſubmiſſion, awe, and reverence. If this tooke place in mens hearts, the name of Chriſt would not bee ſo prophaned and blaſphemed as it is; in jeſting ſports, in curſing and ſwearing, whereby men toſſe it like a ball, without all reverence to ſo great a Prince, as is the King of Kings.

Secondly, ſeeing hee is a King of Kings, wee muſt give him abſolute obedience. Princes on earth muſt bee obeyed, ſo farre as they command in Chriſt, but he muſt be obeied without exception, not onely abſolutely and perpetually in all his commandements, but moſt willingly & freely (as it is ſaid) his people come freely in the day of aſſembling, Pſal. 110. 3. Men will ſay they beleeve in Chriſt, as hee is their Saviour; but that is not enough, they muſt obey him alſo as hee is the King of Princes. Many perſwade themſelves: they have a good faith in Chriſt their Saviour, which little regard obedience to him, as their King and Lord. But they deceive themſelves: for none can have Chriſt for their Saviour, which have him not for their Lord and maſter: neither doth that man beleeve in Chriſt, which will not ſtrive to doe his will. And this our obedience muſt be ſhewed, in performing thoſe duties which we heare, and learne out of his holy Word.

Thirdly, ſeeing Chriſt is King of Kings, all Princes muſt doe him ſervice: for they be all inferiour and ſubject to him, Pſal. 72. 11. This is the counſell of the holy Ghoſt; Bee wiſe now O yee Kings, bee learned yee Iudges of the earth: kiſſe the Son, &c. that is, inwardly reverence, and outwardly obey him. This their homage muſt be ſhewed, in al the affaires of their kingdomes; they muſt frame their lawes after the lawes of Chriſt Jeſus; they muſt ſhew mercie, exerciſe judgement, keepe Courts, Aſſizes; begin, end, and continue warre according to his commandements. And ſo in every thing, the direction of Chriſt ſhould be their guide, as it was to David, thy lawes, O Lord, have been my Counſellors, Pſal. 119.24. Pſal. 2.10,11.

Fourthly, if Chriſt be ſoveraigne King, then all earthly Princes are bound to plant, and eſtabliſh in their Kingdomes the religion of Chriſt, elſe how can they ſhew themſelves his loyall ſubjects? Many imagine, that earthly Princes may admit unto their ſubjects any religion, for the peace of the civill State: but this is againſt the equity of Gods word in this place; for wherein can earthly Princes doe homage unto Chriſt, if they maintaine not his religion? And their duty in this behalfe is ſignified plainely in the parable of the marriage. For when they that were bidden did not come, the King ſent forth his ſervants (which may be underſtood of the Chriſtian Magiſtrates) to compell men to come to the marriage: for that is the Magiſtrates duty, in reſpect of the outward profeſſion of true religion. Luke 14.23.

Fifthly, ſeeing Chriſt alone is Prince of the Kings of the earth: hence we learne, that Kings on earth in their dominions, are ſoveraigne governours over all perſons, and in all cauſes next under Chriſt: he is King of Kings abſolutely, and they are under him alone, and have no other head but him. Whereby we ſee the preſumption and arrogancy of the Pope and ſea of Rome in claiming Supremacie above all Kings and Princes in the whole Church upon earth. This is a device of the Devill, and high treaſon againſt Chriſt; for hereby hee is robbed of this royall prerogative, to be the only Prince of the Kings of the earth.

Laſtly, ſeeing Chriſt is King of all Kings, we muſt not be diſcouraged, when wee bee called to suffer any affliction for his truth: let the tyrants of the earth rage and bend their force to hurt us, yet wee have a King above them all for whom we suffer: he is their King, he can stay and bridle them, and if he please, confound and bruise them in peeces. They cannot doe any thing, but that which he permits; for hee rules in the midst of all his enemies, Psal. 110.2. he can break them in peeces like a potters vessel. Thus much of the offices of Christ.

The second part of Christs description is by the execution of his offices, which consists in foure works: The first contained in these words Vnto him which loved us: the second in these, which washed us in his blood: the other two, in the two ver. which follow, viz. 6, and 7. For the first, which loved us, that is, Iohn and the Churches of Asia, and by proportion, all other Churches, being parts of the true Church. The love of Christ hath three degrees: the first is a generall love, whereby he loves all his creatures, approving the same to bee good, as they are his by creation. The second is the love of mankind, in that hee was content to become a Redeemer for mankinde after their fall, and not for any other creature; no not for the Angels, which fell as well as man: who therefore remaine without all hope of salvation. The third and principall, is that whereby hee loves his elect and chosen children; which is, that speciall favour, whereby he accepts of them to life everlasting. This third degree hath two parts: first, it is taken for his purpose to love: as when he saith, I have loved Iacob, and hated Esau, Rom. 9.13. Secondly, for the act of loving; which is the declaration of his purpose by spirituall benefits: 1 Joh. 3.1. Behold, what singular love God hath shewed unto us, that we should be called the sonnes of God: noting the declaration of his love in the gift of adoption. So in this verse, by the love of Christ unto his Church, is meant the actuall declaration of his speciall favour, in accepting them for his children, and bestowing many singular blessings upon them.

Whereas Saint Iohn placeth this in the first place of all the benefits of Christ, That he loved us; he would teach us, That this speciall love is the very ground of mans redemption; which excludeth all fore-seene faith and workes from being motives of mans election in Gods eternal counsels, and so proportionally, all fore-seene sinnes, from being motives in God of mans reprobation.

It may be objected. The love of God as also of man, respects a thing as it is good: first, the thing must bee good, and then it is loved: and so in mans redemption, God first foresees their goodnesse, and therefore chuseth them. Answ. There is great difference betweene the love of the creature, and of the Creator. The love of the creature followes the goodnesse of a thing: because hee seeth it is good, therefore hee loves it. But God the Creator first loves the creature before it be good: and hence it comes, that it is A good, because he loves it.

Secondly, whereas Saint Iohn and all the Churches of Asia, as other true Churches doe beleeve, and are assured that Christ loves them (for that S. Iohn taketh for granted) this should move all men to have this care, to labour above all things to bee rooted and grounded in the love of God, seeing hee placeth that in the first place. This is a principall thing, wherein the Apostle would have the Ephesians rooted and grounded: and therefore praieth, That with all Saints they may be able to comprehend, what is the bredth and length, depth and heighth therof, Ephes. 2.17,18,19. This we doe when wee are assured in heart and conscience, by the working of Gods spirit, that he loves us in Christ. So that B he which denies unto us the assurance of Gods love in Christ, takes away the very ground of our salvation.

Now that wee may have this assurance of Gods love, wee must in all good duties to God and man draw neere to God with our hearts, keeping a good conscience in all things, and then will God draw neere to us. If any man love me (saith Christ) he will keep my word, and then my Father will love him, and we will come in unto him, and dwell with him: Joh. 14.23. meaning by the holy Ghost; which shall shed this love into our hearts, Roman. 5.5. causing us to increase in the feeling thereof, as we grow in faith and obedience towards him.

And hath washed us from our sins in his bloud. C Here is the second benefit and action of Christ to his Church. Where first of all the very phrase hath washed us, doth import the very sinnes of men are as filthy spots in their soules: and that himselfe and this Church of God were touched with a serious consideration of their vilenesse, by reason of their sinnes: for washing presupposeth former filthinesse and pollution. Thus did David most sensibly feele his owne filthinesse, and see his miserable estate, when he desired the Lord to wash him thorowly: confessing thereby, that his soule and body were so foulely stained, and polluted with sinne, that once washing was not enough: but saith hee, Wash me againe, and againe, rince, bathe, and swill me in the bloud of Christ, till I be purged and cleansed from all my sinnes. And this D same affection should bee in every one of us; wee should labour that our hearts may bee touched with a lively sense of our vile estate by reason of our sinnes, which make both body and soule most ugly and filthy in Gods sight: and that the staine hereof is so deeply set in our soules, that wee can never bee cleansed, but by the washing of Christ his owne hand, and that in his owne hearts bloud: yea, that one washing will not serve, but wee must be rinced and bathed therein. For untill such time as this consideration doe in some measure take place in our hearts, it is not possible that wee should loath sinne as wee ought: or come to this comfortable assurance of Gods love, Psal. 51.2.

love, that hee hath washed away our sinnes in his bloud: for this humility in our soules by reason of our sinnes, is the beginning of all true grace and comfort. Now this worke of Christ in washing us from our sinnes, doth comprehend a double benefit.

First, the remission of our sinnes, whereby the guilt and punishment due to them is taken away. Secondly, the mortification of sinne, whereby the corruption of sinne is removed and abolished. And wee must observe, that S. Iohn propounds this benefit generally without limitation, saying, Which washed us from our sinnes. That is, from all our sinnes; to give us to understand, that if any beleeve truly in Christ, he hath pardon of all his sinnes without any restraint or limitation, either of number or qualitie, bee they never so many, or never so great.

By his bloud. How can bloud wash away filthinesse? nay, it rather defiles a man. Ans. This washing stands not in the substance of Christs bloud, but in the merit thereof: for that substance of bloud which was shed, is lost, and we know not what is become of it, whatsoever the Papists say: but the merit therof remaineth still. And Christs bloud deserves to purge away sinne, rather than any other mans bloud, as of Peter, Iohn, &c. because his bloud was the bloud of God, (not of the God-head) but of him who was both God and man. For the man-hood of Christ was received into the union of the second person. And so it may bee called the bloud of God, as Paul saith, [a] God redeemed his Church by his bloud, that is Christ, God incarnate. And so it being the bloud of him, that is God, is more meritorious than the bloud of any creature whatsoever. Besides Christ was appointed by God to be a publike person in the worke of Redemption, and in his death and passion hee stood in the roome and stead of all his elect; so as when his bloud was shed, their bloud was shed, because it was shed for them. But the bloud of any other private men cannot answer for any beside themselves, because it is shed only for themselves. Then damnable is the doctrin of the Papists, who hold the bloud of Martyrs, can merit for others, being applied unto them: for seeing they be but private men, and suffered in their owne persons only, they cannot profit any other thereby.

By bloud we must understand the passion of Christ, a part for the whole, and withall his fulfilling of the Law upon the crosse: for in his suffering he fulfilled the law, & in fulfilling the law he suffered. These two cannot bee severed, save only in thought. And so this word contains the whole obedience of Christ, whereby hee procured the remission and mortification of our sins. Here then wee see two notable benefits of Christ unto his Church; his love, and the washing away of sinnes: which Saint Iohn sets down to move the Churches with reverence and diligence to reade, and delight in this booke. All of us will say, wee are sure God loves us, and hath pardoned our sinnes in Christ: why then do we not shew our love againe to him, by hearing and reading his word, set downe in this, or any other Booke of Scripture, and by yeelding answerable obedience thereto? why then doe we not offer up our selves, soules, and bodies, to serve him, as the Apostle requires, Roman. 12. 1. by way of recompence for his mercies and love shed out unto us? But alas, that is more common which is most shamefull, to turne Gods grace into wantonnesse: for when men say God loves them, and hath washed away their sinnes, yet they rebell against him: when as these two benefits are here recorded to bee inducements of continuall love, and obedience to his holy word.

v. 6 And made us Kings and Priests to God even his father: to him bee glorie and dominion for evermore, Amen.

In these words is set downe the third worke and benefit of Christ, bestowed on his Church, and on every true member thereof. For the better understanding whereof, wee must consider in them foure points: First, the dignity and excellency of all true members of Christ, They are Kings and Priests. Secondly, when they be made Kings and Priests in this life, noted by the phrase of speech, hath made: Wherein hee speaketh of the Church on earth, and useth a word that signifieth the time past. Thirdly, the manner how they become Kings and Priests; they are not so borne, but Christ hath made them such. Fourthly, to whom they be made such, to God even the Father.

For the first. The dignity of all true beleevers hath two heads; first, They be kings, secondly, Priests. They are called Kings, not in regard of an earthly kingdome, for usually the condition of most beleevers on earth is base and contemptible: but in regard of a spirituall kingdom, the Kingdome of Heaven, whereto the Lord gives them right, title and interest, in, and by Jesus Christ. So our Saviour Christ speaketh to his Disciples: [a] Feare not little flocke, it is your Fathers will to give you the kingdome. And againe, Behold I give unto you a kingdome. Now the faithfull are Kings in these respects; first, because by Christ, they be Lords and Conquerors of all these enemies, sinne, Satan, the world, death, hell, and their owne flesh. Secondly, because in, and by Christ, they are partakers of the glory of Christs Kingdome and salvation: for they receive of Christ grace for grace, and so answerably glory for glory, and felicity for felicity. Thirdly, because they be made Lords of all things in heaven and earth (except good Angels, and the Church.) All things are yours, whether

[a] Luke 12. 32.

1 Cor. 3.21,22. whether it be Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, whether things present; or to come, even all are yours, and yee Christs. Quest. But if Christ be King, and all his members Kings, how doe they differ? Answ. In two points: First, Christ is the sonne of God by nature, and so a King by nature, having the right of the Kingdome of heaven by inheritance: but the members of Christ are sonnes of God by adoption in his sonne, so that our right to that kingdome is not by nature, but by grace. Secondly, Christ is an universall King over the Angels in heaven, the Church on earth, and all other creatures whersoever; his regiment is absolute in the hearts and consciences of men, and hee can by his word binde all things: but true beleevers be not universall Kings, for they have no superioritie above good Angels, and the Church. Neither are they absolute Kings as hee is, nor of themselves; but by Christ Jesus, and as they participate with Christ in his kingdome.

The second part of the dignitie of true beleevers stands in this, That they be Priests consecrate and set apart by Christ, to the worship and service of God here in this life in spirit and truth, and in the life to come, to serve and praise him eternally. Christ he is a Priest, so are all his members; but yet there is difference. First, Christ he is an eternall and reall Priest of the new Testament, which offers up a true, reall, and externall propitiatory sacrifice to God the Father for the sinnes of mankind. As for beleevers, they are not reall and externall Priests, but spirituall, offering up spirituall sacrifice unto God. As when any member of Christ gives an Almes, hee offers a sacrifice to God, not a corporall sacrifice, though the thing given be a bodily substance: but it is every way spirituall: for to offer a reall outward sacrifice in the new Testament, is proper to Christ. Againe our Saviour Christ he is a perfect Priest, and offers up a perfect sacrifice, but wee being imperfect, doe offer up imperfect sacrifices, tainted, and blemished with sinne; yet accepted as perfect, for the worthinesse of Christs sacrifice.

The second point to bee considered, is the time when beleevers are made Kings & Priests; namely, in this life. For as in the entrance into an earthly kingdome there bee degrees: First, to have good right and title to it; secondly, to get possession of it, which is more than title onely; and yet if a mans title be good, though he want possession, he may be called a king: So is it with Gods children, they have the right given them of the kingdome of heaven in this life, and in that respect are Kings. Further in the possession of a kingdome there be two degrees: first, the entrance upon some part: secondly, the full and perfect enjoying of all. Now every true beleever begins to enter possession of the kingdome of heaven in this life: for it stands [a] in righteousnesse, joy, and peace: and they which have these things in their hearts, have the king-

a Rom. 14.17.

A dome of God begun in them in this life. But the full fruition and perfect possession of this kingdome, is reserved to be given at the end of this life, and at the day of judgement. And as true beleevers be Kings in this world, so likewise be they Priests, in offering spirituall sacrifice to God, and dedicating and consecrating themselves to his service all the dayes of their life.

The third point is, the manner how true beleevers become kings and priests: they are not such by nature, neither doth this dignity come by descent in the bloud or birth-right, or by any other privilege they have from man, but onely from Christ Jesus, who by divine calling makes them spirituall Kings and Priests, like as B under the law, by solemne election and ordination, some were made earthly kings and priests. Now in this calling of Christ, two things concurre: First, Christ giveth his members right to his owne kingdome and priest-hood: yet not so that they can execute the regiment sustained by Christ, or performe the office of his Priesthood; but because they have right in part to these offices, and the benefit of them both redoundeth to them wholly: And this right they have, is brought to passe in the covenant of the Gospell: wherein they are bound to beleeve in God through Christ: and God is bound againe to give unto them Christ with all his benefits: among which, these two must be accounted: for indeed, every thing which belongs to Christ C as hee is mediator, is conveyed in some sort to every true beleever. Secondly, in this divine calling, Christ endues all his members with gifts and graces, whereby they are inabled for the duties of spirituall Kings and Priests unto God. For as Christ is annointed, so are all his members. So the Psalmist speaking of Christ saith, Hee is annointed with the oyle of gladnesse above his fellowes, Psal. 45.7. Therefore his fellows (that is, beleevers) are annointed with the same oyle, though in lesse measure. And Saint Iohn saith; Yee have received the annointing, 1 John 2.27. Yea, God himselfe chargeth wicked men not to touch his annointed, Psalm. 105.51. meaning not onely Patriarchs, Kings and Prophets, but all true beleevers, who are then annointed, when they are indued with the gifts D of the same spirit, in some measure, wherewith Christ in his manhood was filled above measure.

The fourth point: To whom hath hee made them Kings and Priests? Ans. To God, even the Father. This is added for speciall cause, to prevent that carnall liberty which mans nature might claime from this spirituall royalty: for men might say, If all beleevers bee Kings, then may they live as they list: but these words (unto God) doe shew, that the right of their Kingdome, with the offices of their priesthood, must all bee referred to the honour and praise of God, unto whom they are made Kings and Priests.

Lastly,

Lastly, he addeth, Even his Father, by way of exposition, to shew more particularly to which of the persons they are first of all made Kings and Priests: for the title God, must not here be taken absolutely for the divine nature, but with restraint to the first person, the Father: unto whom all true beleevers are made kings and priests in the first place, and from the Father to the Sonne, and from them both to the holy Ghost. And the first person in Trinitie is here named above the rest, not as being above them in degree or honour, for so they be equall: but because he is the first in order, and the fountaine of the Godhead, which is conveyed from him to the Sonne, and from them both to the holy Ghost.

A

Thus much for the meaning of the words: Now follow sundry uses, from the consideration of these two dignities of beleevers. And first, their kingly dignitie affordeth matter both of instruction and consolation.

B

Instruct. I. Whereas all true beleevers are made true kings in this life; hereby every one that professeth Christian religion is taught, to carry himselfe as an enemy to all those that are of the kingdome of darknesse; as namely, to sinne and Sathan, to the flesh and the world, even thorow the whole course of his life: for by calling every Christian hath title to the kingdome of heaven. What affinitie then can wee have with those that bee both enemies of this kingdome, and of Christ himselfe, that made us kings? Now that we may so carry our selves, as enemies, wee must doe these three things; First, have care to keepe guard, and defend our selves as kings against all our enemies, sinne, Sathan, our owne flesh, and the inticements of the world. As kings protect their kingdomes, so must we labour to keep our soules & bodies, and every facultie and part of them, our wils, affections, thoughts and inclinations, from the power of sin: He which is borne of God, keepeth himselfe (as with watch and ward) that the evill one, that is Sathan, touch him not by the assaults of sinne, 1 Joh. 5. 18. Secondly, wee must make warre continually against Sathan, sinne, our own flesh, against all our spirituall enemies, and all the inticements of the world: we must make no truce with them, because they will never be reconciled unto us, so long as we have interest unto the kingdome of heaven; and if we yeeld to them, wee lose our kingly dignitie, and become their vassals, and bondslaves. Thirdly, we must labour to kill and destroy these our enemies as much as possibly we can, by that power we have from Christ our head, and like valiant kings seek to have the bloud of these enemies, and from day to day strive to vanquish Sathan, his power and might, to overcome the world, and to weaken our owne corruption.

C

Instruct. II. If in this life we be kings, then must wee become Lords over our selves, and keepe in subjection unto God our wils and affections, and the secret thoughts and inclinations of our soules. We must not looke for rule over earthly kingdomes; but herein stands our kingdome in this world, That wee can subdue our corrupt affections, and keepe our bodies and soules in obedience unto God. If a man were Prince over the whole earth, and yet could not rule himselfe, he were but a poore Prince, nay, he were no Prince indeed. But though a man have not so much as a foot of ground in this world, and yet can rule and master himselfe, his thoughts and affections, this man is a valiant prince, and one whom Christ hath consecrate to be king in heaven.

D

Instruct. III. Seeing we be kings, we must doe the dutie of Judges: for to him that is a king, belongeth soveraigne judgement. In the day of judgement, the [a] Saints shall judge the world, and Angels also: but wee must be Judges in this world. And yet here wee can neither judge men or Angels, but we must be our owne Judges. Wherefore, as Judges summon, arraigne, condemne, &c. so must we examine our selves, call our selves to account, and as guilty persons accuse and condemne our selves for our sinnes: acknowledging wee bee worthy to bee cast into eternall damnation with the Devill and his Angels: and withall plead for pardon, and approach to the throne of grace, and forgivenesse in Christ: and in this wee shew our selves upright spirituall Judges, and by this meanes we shall bee free from the judgement to come.

[a] 1 Cor. 6. 2, 3.

Instruct. IIII. If we be kings by Christ, we must carry our selves as Kings couragiously, and constantly in the afflictions and miseries which wee shall suffer for Christs sake. For herein among the rest, stands the royaltie of a king, that hee beares with a valour and courage all the troubles which befall him. Hence it is, that S. Peter exhorts us to rejoyce in afflictions, because wee are partakers of Christs sufferings, 1 Pet. 4. 13. and so are made conformable unto him that was consecrate the Prince of our salvation through afflictions, Heb. 2. 10.

Instruct. V. Seeing wee bee spirituall kings, wee must above all things labour and seeke to have our part in the kingdome of Christ, and in his righteousnesse. A Christian must not have his heart glewed & fast tied unto the things of this world, it is against his calling: but he must so use this world, as though hee used it not. If a king should lay downe his crowne, and goe and become a shepherd, or of some manuall trade, all men would marvell at it: So it fareth with them that professe themselves to be Christians, and yet bend their wits and endevours wholly for these worldly things: they doe as it were cast aside their kingly crowne, and abase themselves to slavish bondage. But wee must ever after have our hearts fixed in heaven, striving to come to our inheritance there.

Instruct. VI. Seeing all the true members of Christ be kings and princes; this should be an inducement to all backward persons to love and and embrace true religion. In theſe careleſſe dayes Religion is accounted priciſeneſſe, and the profeſſion thereof made matter of reproach. But this ought not to be ſo, ſeeing that by it we come to have right and intereſt unto the kingdom of heaven, and to the Lord of all creatures. And why ſhould wee not eſteeme the Goſpell preached as a moſt precious jewell, ſeeing that we which are vaſſals of Sathan, and firebrands of hell (as all men are by nature) become thereby the members of Chriſt, yea kings & princes to God? Yea verily, the conſideration of this ſhould make the Miniſters of the Goſpel to joy in their callings; and to take all paines to preach the Word, ſeeing by it men become of vaſſals of Satan, the true members of Chriſt, and heires of the kingdome of heaven. In this world it is counted great honour to conſecrate and eſtabliſh one in an earthly kingdome. What a bleſſed and honourable thing then is this, to conſecrate ſpirituall Kings for the Kingdome of heaven? And this is done, when by the Word preached, men are converted and brought to unfeined repentance for their ſinnes, and to true faith in Chriſt Jeſus.

Thus much for the duties. Now follow the conſolations to every true beleever onely. It is an heavie croſſe, which breeds much anguiſh to the ſoule, to be in povertie and contempt among men; yet herein may the childe of God ſtay his heart, and leſſen his griefe, by conſidering that even in this ſtate of miſerie, he is a King unto God; though hee ſeeme baſe to the world: yet it appeareth not what he ſhall bee, for he is heire to the kingdome of heaven. If a man bee in ſickneſſe, he muſt conſider it is but Gods meſſenger, to call him out of this world to the full poſſeſſion of the joyes of his kingdome. If he be in trouble of minde, having his owne conſcience tormented fearfully by Satan with his ſinnes: yet he muſt not deſpaire, the Lord will give him an happie iſſue: he muſt remember he is a King, and therfore ſhall one day have full conqueſt over ſinne, Sathan, and his owne corruption, yea, over all his enemies whatſoever, if he be in the heat of perſecution turmoiled and toſſed from poſt to pillar, whit h fleſh & blood cannot brook; yet then he muſt conſider his calling to be a ſpirituall king, whoſe property it is in the moſt violent afflictions; even unto death it ſelfe (as Paul ſaith) to be more than conquerour, Rom. 8.37. Laſtly, in the very pang of death, when nature muſt needs bee diſſolved, ſoule and bodie ſeparated, then muſt the childe of God remember, that he is a King in Chriſt, and this will ſtay his heart againſt the feare of death; for herein ſhall he ſee that by death, as thorow a ſtrait paſſage, hee ſhall enter into full poſſeſſion of his kingdome. And thus much in that we are kings.

Rom. 16. 20.

From the ſecond dignitie of beleevers, which is to bee Prieſts unto God, wee are likewiſe taught ſundry duties:

First, to teach and inſtruct one another. It was A the office of the Prieſt under the Law to teach the people the will of God: The Prieſts lips ſhould preſerve knowledge, Mal. 2.7. And now under the Goſpell not onely the Miniſter, but every true beleever is a ſpirituall Prieſt, and therefore ought to teach and admoniſh one another, Col. 3.16. When the Lord ſaith, Touch not mine annointed, and do my Prophets no harme, Pſal. 105.15. he calleth all his faithfull by the name of Prophets, becauſe they ought to have the knowledge of his will, and bee able alſo in due time, and upon juſt occaſion to teach the ſame unto others, that ſo the Goſpell of Chriſt may flouriſh. And as this dutie belongs to all men; ſo eſpecially to governours, as Parents and Maſters, they muſt ſhew themſelves prieſts to their charges. Abraham did it, Gen. 18. David B did it, Prov. 4. And Bathſhebath did it, Pro. 31. All muſt doe it, that deſire a holy generation to ſucceed after them. Wee teach them other things, why not religion?

Secondly, ſeeing wee bee Prieſts, wee muſt pray unfeinedly, not onely for our ſelves, but [2] for all men, eſpecially the members of Chriſt. The Prieſt in the old Teſtament muſt pray and make requeſt, not onely for himſelfe, but for the people alſo. And herein ſtands the praiſe of a Chriſtian, to pray for his brethren. Hence it is that Paul ſaith, Pray for all the Saints, and for me; Epheſ. 6.18. Moſes is highly commended for this dutie, eſpecially when he prayed for the Iſraelites, and ſtood before the Lord in the C gap, to turne away his wrath, Exod. 32. Elias for his power in prayer and prophecie, is called the chariot and horſeman of Iſrael, 2 Kin. 2.12. And this is recorded for the praiſe of Hezekias, That when the people were unprepared at the eating of the Paſſeover, Hee prayed to the Lord for mercie, and was heard, 2 Chron. 30.18. And ſo when we finde any commended in Scripture for his gift in prayer, it is not ſo much for that he prayed diligently for himſelfe, as for the whole Church of God.

[2] Tim. 2.2.

Thirdly, being Prieſts wee muſt offer ſpirituall ſacrifice unto God, that is, dedicate our ſelves, our ſoules and bodies, and all that is in us, our wit, learning, knowledge, and every gift of bodie or minde to Gods ſervice. That we D may doe all this to his glorie, wee muſt looke that every thing wee take in hand have his beginning from a pure heart, a good conſcience, and faith unfeined, and be directed to a good end, to Gods glorie principally, and the good of others, whom it may concerne.

Fourthly, we muſt be full of bleſſings. The Prieſts in the old Teſtament, Numb. 6. uſed to bleſſe the people: ſo muſt we if we be Chriſtians, becauſe we are ſpirituall Prieſts. We muſt take heed of all curſed ſpeaking, of ſlandering and backbiting, of ſwearing and forſwearing: and give our ſelves to bleſſed and gracious ſpeeches to all men, and of all men, friends or foes, Rom. 12.14.

Fifthly, wee muſt ſeeke to have God for our porportion: The Levites had no portion in the Land of Canaan, but the tenths onely, [a] The Lord was their portion. So wee being Prieſts to God, muſt bee content with any eſtate in this world, for God is our portion. Wee muſt not ſeeke too much after any inheritance on earth, for then we tary not our ſelves like prieſts unto God. The favour of God in Chriſt muſt be the thing we long for, and therein muſt we rejoyce.

To him bee glorie and dominion for evermore, Amen. Theſe words are a thankſgiving to God for the former benefits of Chriſt beſtowed on his Church; Which S. Iohn putteth in before he have ended his record of the gracious works of Chriſt for his Church, as it were interrupting himſelfe, for the great deſire he had to the glorie of God. Whereby we are taught, that the conſideration of Gods benefits towards us, ſpecially ſuch as concerne the kingdome of heaven, ſhould ſtirre up our hearts to give continuall praiſe and glorie to God. This was Davids affection, when he felt in his ſoule the pardon of his ſinnes, and therefore he breaks out into this thankſgiving: My ſoule praiſe thou the Lord, and forget not all his benefits, Pſalm. 103. 1. And ſo did Paul, after the bleſſed memorie of Gods mercie in his vocation, 1 Tim. 1. 17.

Secondly, in this example of Iohn wee may learne, what is the true forme of giving thanks to God, namely, to aſcribe unto him all power, glory, and abſolute dominion for evermore. But alas, it is too too manifeſt, that our corrupt nature will not doe this, but taking from God his due, beſtoweth it on creatures, yea, on our owne ſelves. It is a matter of grace to know what is due to God, and to aſcribe the ſame unto him, and therefore we are charged to give unto the Lord glory and power, which in the next words he cals the glory of his name, Pſal. 96. 7, 8. So Chriſt he teacheth us to aſcribe all power, glory, might, and dominion to God, when we ſay in the Lords prayer, For thine is the kingdome, the power and glorie: that is, The kingdome of heaven is thine: all power in heaven and earth is thine, and therefore all glorie is thine; and from our hearts we doe aſcribe the ſame unto thee.

Laſtly, S. Iohn addeth, Amen, that is, ſo bee it. Let all glorie and dominion bee given to Chriſt; which is the ſame hee ſayd before. Whereby he doth teſtifie his fervent affection, and ſtrength of deſire, after the glorie of Chriſt, elſe hee would not have doubled his thankſgiving. And ſo it ſhould bee with us, wee ſhould not freeze in our thankſgiving for Gods benefits, but labour to have our hearts and tongues to double the ſame, that thereby we may teſtifie our fervent and earneſt deſire after his praiſe and glorie.

[a] Deut. 10. 9. Pſal. 119. 57.

V. 7 *Behold, he commeth with clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him: yea, even they which pierced him thorow: and all kindreds of the earth ſhall wayle before him, Even ſo, Amen.

Theſe words are a declaration of the fourth action of our Saviour Chriſt towards his Church; and that is, his ſecond comming to judgement, to judge both quicke and dead. Wherein we are to conſider ſundry points: firſt, this note of attention, Behold: ſecondly, the action of Chriſts comming it ſelfe, He commeth: thirdly, the manner how, with clouds: amplified by the manifeſtation thereof, Every eye ſhall ſee him, even they that pierced him: fourthly, the effect of his comming: All tribes of the earth ſhall waile: Fifthly, the concluſion of this narration, with two notes of aſſeveration, Even ſo, Amen, to confirme the ſecond comming of Chriſt to all people.

I. Point, Behold. Firſt, S. Iohn beginneth this narration with a note of attention. The Spirit of God is accuſtomed, when any thing is of ſpeciall weight, and worth our carefull marking, to prefix before it this note of attention; Behold, or ſuch like. Hence then we are taught this ſpeciall dutie, namely, often and every day earneſtly and ſeriouſly to bethinke our ſelves of the ſecond comming of Chriſt to judgement. This conſideration is a matter of great uſe, for it is a notable meanes to begin and continue the converſion of a ſinner unto God. When the Scribes and Pharifies, obſtinate enemies, came to the Baptiſme of S. Iohn, hee uſed this as a meanes to make them to turne and beleeve in Chriſt, ſaying, Oh generation of vipers, who hath forewarned you that you ſhould flie from the vengeance to come? Matth. 3. 7. So Peter uſeth this ſame argument, to bring the Jewes to repentance: exhorting them to turne that their ſins might be put away, when the day of refreſhing, (that is) the day of judgement ſhould come, Act. 3. 19. Paul perſwades the Athenians to repentance, Becauſe there is a day appointed in which the Lord will judge the world by Ieſus Chriſt, Acts 17. 30, 31.

Secondly, this note of attention ſerves to ſtrike our hearts with a feare and reverence of Chriſt Jeſus: for it gives us warning that he ſhal come to be our Judge. Wee are touched with awe and reverence toward earthly Magiſtrates, when wee conſider that they have authority to attach, apprehend, and to bring us to their courts and aſſiſes: How much more ſhould this worke in us a reverend awe towards Chriſt, when we conſider, That one day we muſt all be brought before his tribunall ſeat, and there be judged of him.

II. Point. The comming of Chriſt himſelfe, He comes: that is, Chriſt locally deſcendeth frō the the higheſt heaven, in his manhood, to that part of this world, where the clouds be, there to give judgement upon all mankinde, quicke and dead. Here marke in what manner Iohn propounds his comming: he ſaith not, he ſhall come, but in the preſent time, hee commeth. Whereby hee would teach us: Firſt, that this ſound comming of Chriſt is as certaine, as if it were now preſent. Secondly, that it is not long to, or far off, but will be quickly. Thirdly, that our dutie is, to conſider of the comming of Chriſt as of a thing preſent. This Saint Iohn learned, and ſo ſhould we by his example, for it is a matter of great uſe. For hence we are taught, to deſire and doe that every day, which wee would deſire and doe in the day of judgement; and bleſſed is he that attaineth hereunto.

Now that wee may come to the practice of this dutie, wee muſt daily conſider of the comming of Chriſt, not as a thing to be delayed or farre off, but as a thing preſent. We muſt every day call our ſelves to reckoning and account, and perſwade our ſelves this may bee the laſt day; and ſo ſhall we carry our ſelves every day, as we would in the laſt day. Now wee would wiſh at the day of judgement, that we did repent and beleeve in Chriſt: and therefore every day of our life, before the laſt judgement come, we ought to repent and beleeve in Chriſt. If this dutie were practiſed, we ſhould finde leſſe corruption, and more grace in our hearts, and leſſe ſinne, and more obedience in our lives every day than other: but grace is wanting, and ſinne abounds, becauſe this meditation takes no place in our hearts. Againe, in that he ſaith, He commeth, meaning in reſpect of his manhood; hence wee gather, he is abſent from us, in regard of bodily preſence; and the heavens muſt containe him untill the day of judgement: But if Chriſt were alwaies bodily preſent in the Sacrament, he could not be ſaid to come, but onely to manifeſt himſelfe, being before preſent. And therefore the opinion of thoſe which hold the bread to be really Chriſts body, to be in or about the bread of the Sacrament, is moſt falſe and frivolous, flat againſt that article of our faith, whereby wee hold, That he comes from heaven, onely at the laſt day, in regard of his manhood.

III. Point. The manner of Chriſts comming, in two things: Firſt, that he comes with clouds: Secondly, that his comming is open, and viſible to every eye.

Firſt, with clouds. Here S. Iohn ſpeaketh after the manner of the Prophets, who to ſet out God in his majeſtie and glorie, ſay, hee comes with clouds, rides on the wings of the wind: as though hee had ſaid, hee comes in exceeding majeſtie and glorie. Theſe words are added to make a diſtinction betweene the firſt and ſecond comming of Chriſt. His firſt comming was in humilitie, borne of a poore virgin, entertained in a ſtable of an Inne: but his ſecond comming is with glorie, majeſtie, and dominion in the clouds. And the reaſon is, becauſe he came firſt to be a redeemer, and a Saviour by his ſuffering; and therefore came in the ſtate of a ſervant. But his ſecond comming is to bee a Judge of all men, yea, of his enemies; and therefore hee commeth with all might, majeſtie and glorie, to ſhew himſelfe king and Lord of all.

Pſal. 18. 97.

The uſes of this his ſecond comming, are ſet downe in the 97. Pſalm. to make the verie mountaines to tremble, to confound the wicked and ungodly, and to comfort the godly in that day.

Secondly, for his open appearance; Everie eye ſhall ſee him, hee ſhall come in majeſtie and glorie: not ſecretly, but in viſible ſhew to all the world. All men ſhall ſee him with their own eyes: All I ſay, which were ſince the world began to his comming.

In theſe words hee toucheth three points: Firſt, hee taketh it here for granted, that every man ſhall riſe from death to life, though their death were never ſo ſtrange, or never ſo long before. Secondly, that all men being raiſed againe, ſhall have life, and motion, and their ſenſes reſtored to them, as before they died. Thirdly, that all men, none excepted, ſhall come and ſtand before the tribunall ſeat of Chriſt, and there be judged of him in the clouds.

The conſideration whereof is, Firſt, an exceeding comfort to Gods children, in that they being dead and rotten in their graves, ſhall riſe, and receive their life and motion, and ſee Chriſt their Saviour, and Judge of all men. If a man when hee layeth him downe to ſleepe, ſhould bee told, that when he roſe, he ſhould ſee his dead father and mother; or his deareſt friends, whom he ſaw not of long before; this would be a notable comfort to him, that now he ſhould enjoy them againe: but how farre greater comfort ſhall this yeeld to all the godly, who have been dead and rotten in the grave, That they ſhall bee raiſed up, and not onely meet with godly friends, but enjoy Chriſt Jeſus the ſonne of God, which is the friend of friends; who ſhall give them not onely life and motion, but eternall life with his owne majeſtie. This was Iobs comfort, that though hee died, yet hee beleeved hee ſhould ſee his redeemer with his eyes. And this ſhould be our comfort againſt the feare of death, and laſt judgement.

Secondly, this is a terror to the wicked, and to all impenitent ſinners, that they ſhall (will they, nill they) bee brought to the barre of Chriſts judgement ſeat, and there looke on him who is their Judge, whom they have in their life contemned and deſpiſed. And this conſideration may ſeeme to move them to repentance, which have not begun to repent, and to labour to become the members of Chriſt; as alſo to increaſe and further repentance in them, who have by Gods grace begun the ſame. It may be ſome doe thinke when they die, all is done, done, and there is no further account to follow; but though we lie rotten in our graves a thousand, or two thousand yeares; yet we shall rise, and looke upon our Judge with our owne eyes. And if wee have not in our life time repented, we shall heare him with our owne eares, giving the dreadfull sentence against us, Goe yee cursed into everlasting fire: and therefore it is best for us in this day of grace to prevent this danger, and now repent and beleeve in Christ, that then we may rise with joy, and stand with boldnesse before Christ Jesus. No doubt if we were perswaded that we should thus appeare, it would move us to repent.

Thirdly, Everie eye shall see him: that is, all men with their owne eyes shall looke on him. Hence it may be gathered, that those who wanted their sight in this life, shall have it then restored. It is granted of all Divines, that the Elect shall have all their senses and other defects restored, wherin they were wanting in this life: And it may also be added, that the wicked shall then have some of their senses restored, if they wanted the same in this life; as hearing, and seeing at the least: for the deafe shall heare, and the blinde shall see this Judge. And this can be no glorie to them, seeing it is to increase their miserie: for the more senses they have, the more punishment they shall feele, because by sense we apprehend miserie.

Even those which pierced him. Here is added a further evidence of Christs manifestation of his comming, and that for three causes: First, to shew that no power, or wisdome in the world, can free any one from his appearance. For if any could escape, in all likelihood it would be those Jewes and Gentiles, who prevailed most against Christ, and put him to death. But none of those can escape his judgement: for even they which pierced him, they shall see this Iudge, and also be summoned before his Majestie. For though they had power to kill him, yet none of them shall then have power, to absent themselves from before his barre of Judgement at the last day.

Secondly, to shew the case of all wicked men: namely, that such woe and miserie shall befall them, as they never once thought of. The Jewes and Gentiles which crucified Christ, never dreamed of this; that he whom they then put to a temporall death, should one day be a Judge, and condemne them to eternall death, unlesse they had repented.

Thirdly, to shew the rufull and wofull estate of all impenitent sinners: they shall rise to judgment, and have their greatest enemie their Judge, who will shew rigour upon them, and justice without all mercie: for this piercing of Christ is meant not only of the Jews, which put him to death, but of all ungodly persons: because all such doe by their sins, as with swords and speares, wound him at the heart, as the souldiers did. Impenitent sinners be as the Jews which crucified Christ, as Iudas which betraied him, and as the souldiers which goared his side: and unlesse they now repent, they shall one day be judged as his enemies.

Even they which pierced him. Out of these words some gather, that the bodie of Christ hath still the wounds and skarres which were given him at his death; the print of the nailes in his hands and feet, and that these shall be seene in him at the last day: adding withall, that it is no blemish to Christ to have these, but rather an increase of his glorie, but this cannot be gathered hence: for though it be said, They shall see him whom they pierced; yet it followeth not, that they shall see him as hee was pierced: what though they see the person, whom they wounded, shall they therefore see his wounds? Many shall see Kings and Queenes whom they crowned in this world, but it followeth not, that therefore they shall weare their crownes. So we shall see our fathers and mothers, but not as fathers and mothers.

IV. Point. The fruit and effect of his comming, especially in the wicked, in these words; And all tribes of the earth shall waile before him. Where S. Iohn speakes of the whole world, according to the condition of the land of Canaan: for onely that part of the world was divided into tribes. And in like case, our Saviour Christ setteth out the judgement of the whole world, according to the state and manner of judging the visible Church, Matth. 25. So that his meaning is, that they which repented not, of what nation soever, of what state, or condition soever they had beene, shall wayle, and mourne at that day. And he addes a reason of this their mourning, in these words, for him, before him, or over him: that is, they shall wayle, and lament with exceeding lamentation, because they beleeved not his word, but contemned him and his doctrine, and therefore now they want all helpe to free them from the punishment of their unbeleefe, and contempt of the Gospell; for this time is the onely time of grace and mercie: afterwards there is no worke nor invocation, that can alter mans estate. ἐπ' αὐτόν.

Here then we are admonished, first, that in this world we labour above all things to be reconciled to God in Christ, to get our sinnes pardoned, to beleeve and embrace his holy Word; and unlesse we attaine hereunto in this life, we shall waile eternally: for when the last day is come, there is no hope of helpe, no way to escape, no time of grace to repent. Remember the foolish virgins, that sought for oyle, when it was too late, and knocked when the doores were shut, Matth. 25. But if by Gods mercy we can in this life get his love and favour in Christ, then shall we enjoy the same eternally: yea, at this dreadfull day to all the wicked, we shal lift up our heads, & our hearts when we shall see Christ comming to our full redemption: all teares shall be wiped from our eyes, whē the wicked shall crie and houle, woe and alas for for evermore. The Devill knowing the worth of this admonition, will labour by all meanes to keepe it from our hearts. But this shall bee our wisdome, betime to sue for grace, and so shal we defeat Satan, & prevent eternal wailing.

Secondly, here see what an evill conscience is: It lieth asleep here while a man lives, and never troubleth him, and so it may doe in death also: but in the last day, when he shall see his Judge with his eyes, then it will stirre, it will torment him, it will attach, accuse, and condemne him, it will lay to his charge all his sins, his contempt of Christ and his Word, his unbeleefe in the time of grace; and then it will breake his heart, being as good as a thousand witnesses to condemne him.

This should cause all men to labour to get a good conscience, washed and purged in the bloud of Christ, which will not suffer us to lie in any one sinne; and upon our repentance will assure us we be in the favour of God: Which if it doe in this life, then it will never make us to wayle at the last day; but it will excuse us, and make us looke up to our Redeemer, and to rejoyce in him. But take heed when thy conscience lieth asleepe, and accuseth not for thy sins, no not at death; that is an evill conscience which will awake at the day of judgement, to torment and condemne thee.

V. Point. The meanes whereby hee confirmeth the certaintie of the same comming of Christ: that is, by a double note of asseveration: Even so, Amen. One of these is taken from the Greeks, Even so: the second from the Hebrewes, Amen: being both as much as Amen, Amen; or verily, verily. In which phrase S. Iohn teacheth us, how to confirme the things we avouch. There be three wayes, whereby a thing may be avouched: First, by a simple and bare affirmation, or negation: Secondly, by an earnest asseveration: thirdly, by an oath. Now S. Iohn useth these two notes of assuring in this weightie matter of Christs second comming, saying, He commeth, even so, Amen: that is, certainly, and without all doubt it is so. Hereby teaching us, first, that an asseveration must not be used, but onely when the matter is of great weight and moment. Here then wee see; that wretched is their practice, who use to bind every word with an oath: which is a degree above this asseveration. Yea, they also are here justly reproved, who in their ordinarie communication, have ever in their mouth some weighty asseveration. Our Saviour often useth these words of asseveration, yet onely in matters of weight and moment, and when the hearers were to bee moved to greater attention, and their hearts were to bee more fully settled in some truth of great importance.

Secondly, by these asseverations Iohn would teach us to hold against the practice of atheists, that the comming of Christ is most certaine and undoubted. Which thing we should more seriously observe; because in our corrupt nature, A there is bred this false perswasion, That either we shall not be summoned to judgement, or els that Christs comming is farre off: like to the evill servant, who saith, My Master deferres his comming: which evill servant by nature is every one of us.

Thirdly, hereby Iohn gives us to understand, D one speciall note & marke of the child of God: namely, to desire and long after unfainedly the second comming of Christ to judgement: for as these words bee an asseveration, so withall they containe a most earnest desire, Even so, Amen: as if he should say by way of answer to the proclaiming of his comming, Lord grant it bee so: yea Lord, let it be so. Hence it is that S. Paul A describes all those, who must receive the crown B of righteousnesse, by this propertie, that they love his appearing, 2 Tim. 4.8. As for the ungodly, it is not so with them, (they being not justified nor sanctified, and so not reconciled to God in Christ) cannot love this appearing. Nay they could wish withall their hearts there were no hell, nor last judgement. And by this one note we may well judge of our estates; for if from our hearts we desire and long for this second comming to judgement, and wish hee would come quickly, then it is a certaine token Rev. 22.20. and signe we be reconciled to God in Christ, and shall receive the crowne of righteousnesse. But if as yet we feele not this longing and hungring desire in us, then wee must suspect our selves, and labour every day to feele it: for it is C the desire of the Saints to say, How long Lord. Rev. 6.10. And with Iohn, even so, Amen.

v. 8 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, saith the Lord, which is, which was, and which is to come, even the Almightie.

After S. Iohn had described Christ at large, in the former verses: he bringeth him speaking of himselfe by a figure, as may appeare by this clause (saith the Lord.)

The end and scope of these words in this verse, is to confirme that which was before spoken of Christ, being a proofe and reason thereof, after this manner to be conceived. He which is the beginning and the end of all, &c. hee is sufficient to be a King, Priest and Prophet to the Church, and is both able and willing to bestow on them all blessings which serve for their good. The first part of this argument is omitted, the second part is contained in this eighth verse: But I am the beginning and the end; and therefore I am sufficient.

In this eighth verse are three points concerning Christ: First, hee is the beginning and the end. Secondly, he is, was, and is to come. Thirdly, he is Almightie. For the first: that Christ is the beginning and end, S. Iohn expresseth by a coma comparison taken from the Greeke alphabet; and it standeth thus; As in the A. B. C. of the Grecians, Alpha is the first letter, and therefore the beginning of all the letters; and Omega is the last, and therefore the end of all the letters: So (saith Christ) I am the beginning of all things that are, and the end of all things. The first part of this similitude is in these words, I am Alpha, and Omega: that is, I am as Alpha, and Omega. The second part in these words, The beginning, and the end.

From this, and such like manner of speaking, the Papists gather, that it is lawfull to worship God in a strange language: And that the Scriptures are to be read and delivered to the people in an unknowne tongue. But their collection is frivolous: For though the unlearned Englishman know not what Alpha and Omega is, yet the Churches to whom this was written, being Grecians, knew generally what was meant hereby.

Againe, though the spirit of God useth here and there a strange word or phrase, yet we may not follow that practice in the whole service and worship of God, whereby neither the word nor prayer, should be understood of the people as the Papists doe.

I am the beginning. Christ is said to be the beginning for two causes: First, because he was the very first of all things: there was nothing before him, hee had a being when all creatures were not; then was he the same that he is now; and for this saith S. Iohn, c. 1. 1. In the beginning was the word, that is, the Sonne of God; he had his being and subsisting, when all other creatures wanted it, and began to be.

This proveth the eternitie of Christ, because hee hath his being before any creature; hee was a substance and essence begotten of the Father before all worlds, not created as other creatures are, or made of any other.

Secondly, he is called the beginning; because hee giveth a beginning to all creatures: For all things which were created, and had a being, were created by him, and had their being from him. So saith the Apostle, All things are from him, Col. 1. 16. And hence we learne, that when we go about any businesse in word or deed, we must begin it with invocation in the name of Christ: for Christ he gives the beginning, and proceeding to all things. And without his help, we cannot have in any thing good successe.

Secondly, the same Christ is the end of all things, and that for two causes: first, because he is the last of all things, and after him is nothing in subsisting, and being: for all creatures, if they were left to themselves, would come to nothing. And whereas some creatures be eternall, it is not of themselves, but by him, and from him which is the end. But though they all should come to nothing, yet Christ would remaine the same he was for ever, namely, the eternall Sonne, and Word of the Father. This then should make us with full purpose of heart to cleave unto Christ in all things, if we would enjoy eternall happinesse: for without him is nothing but changing; and unlesse we have our stableneesse from him, we cannot but come to an end.

Secondly, he is the end; because all things in heaven and earth were made to serve him: For him were all things created, Col. 1. 16. that is, to serve for his glory and praise.

The second thing here said of Christ is this, which is, was, and is to come. These words were expounded in the 4. verse, where the very same are affirmed of the Father. The meaning is, that Christ is in present a perfect substance and essence, or being, subsisting in, by, and from himselfe; and such a substance hee was in time past, from all eternity, and such as shall continue in time to come for evermore.

Hence wee learne three things: First, that the second person in the Trinity is consubstantiall with the father, that is, of one and the same substance and nature with him. The reason is, because there can bee but one onely substance or essence, which hath being in, and by it selfe, and from it selfe alone: neither can we conceive how there should be two, or more, but onely one; as there cannot bee two eternals, or two infinites, two omnipotents and absolute Lords, which have nothing one of another. Now in the 4. verse it is said of the Father, That hee is a substance of himselfe, in himselfe, and from himselfe alone. And here the selfe same thing is said of the second person, the sonne. And therefore hee is of the very same substance with the Father: for though they be distinct persons in the Godhead, yet they have but one and the same substance, one and the same divine nature, and Godhead.

Secondly, hence we may gather, that Christ is God of himselfe; because as the Father is, was, and shall be; So the Sonne is, was, and shall be; and that in the same respects; So that as the Father is God of himselfe, and from none other, so the Sonne is God of himselfe, and from none other. Indeed as hee is the Sonne, the second person, so hee is of the Father, and hath his being from him by eternall generation: but as he is God, he is consubstantiall with the Father, and coequall with him, and hath his essence of, and in him alone. And the same is to be affirmed of the holy Ghost; as hee is the third person, hee proceeds from the Father and the Sonne, but as hee is God, hee is of himselfe, and from none other.

Thirdly, hence we learn, that Christ is coeternall with the father, being everlasting as the father is, and every way coequal, having the same attributes of the Godhead that the Father hath.

The third point touching Christ is, that hee is the Almighty. There is in God, and so in Christ, a double power: first, a Potetial: secondly, an actuall power. Potentiall is that, whereby he can doe many things, moe than ever hee did, or will doe: as hee could raise children to

Abraham of the stones, but he would not: hee could have delivered Christ from death, but he would not. Now Christs omnipotency is not to bee understood of his potentiall power here principally, but rather of his actuall power, whereby hee bringeth to passe without let and impediment whatsoever he decreeth, willeth, or promiseth.

From this omnipotency of Christ, ariseth a double comfort to his Church: first, that whatsoever he hath promised in his Gospel, is yea, and Amen: that is, shall be brought to passe effectually without stop and let, as assuredly as he promised it. Now Christ hath promised in his Gospell to all penitent sinners, remission of sinnes, mortification, justification, and life everlasting: every one whereof, shall in due time be done to every true beleever, which is a singular comfort to them: for all men and Angels cannot give one of these to any one man; but Christ hee is omnipotent, and hee both can and will effect them all to his elect.

The second comfort; that Christ both can and will give his Church sufficient security and protection through all the miseries of this life: he can defend and guard her against all the fury and malice of Satan, and all her enemies: hee is above them, and can bridle their might, when and how he pleaseth.

Hence also, that Christ is Almighty, wee are taught two duties: First, under the crosse and in tribulation, to humble our selves under his mighty hand: for it is he which correcteth us, who is Almighty, able to doe what he list, and more than he will; resistance and repining will doe us no good. Secondly, this should move us to performe hearty obedience unto Christ in all things: both in our generall and particular calling to walke uprightly before him: for hee is Almighty, and seeth whether we walke sincerely before him or not; if we doe not, he is able to punish us. By this Argument God perswadeth Abraham to walke uprightly before him, because he is Almighty, able to correct and destroy those which refuse to obey him, Gen. 17. 1.

V. 9 I Iohn, even your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the Kingdome, and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the Isle called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the witnessing of Jesus Christ.

Hitherto wee have intreated of the Preface of this booke, containing the title and inscription thereof. Now from this ninth verse, to the end of the third Chapter, is contained one of those seven visions which were shewed unto Iohn, and are set downe in this booke. In this

A first vision two things are to be noted: first, the circumstances: secondly, the parts thereof. The circumstances in the ninth and tenth verses: the parts, from thence to the end of the 3. Chapter.

The circumstances of this vision are foure, first, the person to whom this vision was shewed, namely, Iohn: The second, the place where, at Patmos: The third, the manner how it was propounded; It was delivered unto him being ravished in the spirit: The fourth the time when, on the Lords day.

For the first: Iohn is the person to whom this vision befel, who doth therefore name himselfe to shew, that it was given him of the Lord; for as the Lord hath his visions and revelations, (as hath beene said) so the devill hath his: but they verse 1.
B may bee distinguished by the persons to whom they be given. God giveth his visions not to all men, but unto those which are most fit for them; such as be most holy men for life, endued with exceeding gifts of God, as knowledge, wisdome, constancy, zeale, piety, and religion. So in the old Testament, he delivered not them to all, but to his servants the Prophets, men of singular gifts and graces, and of exceeding holinesse and piety. Indeed the Lord revealed some particular things by wicked men, as by Balaam and Caiphas, but they never knew what those things meant which were shewed unto them. It is a property belonging to the servants of God, to receive a vision, and to know the same to their comfort. And for both these
C was Iohn throughly qualified; he was a man of exceeding holinesse of life, (for Christ loved him) and of singular and rare gifts, full of zeale, love, and piety, and also had the knowledge of this vision made knowne unto him: but the devill maketh no such choice; his visions befall men which are Heretikes, wicked notorious sinners, who have no such rare and speciall gifts as the other have; so that wee must esteeme of this, as a singular gift of God to his owne Apostle S. Iohn.

Now Iohn having named himselfe to be the receiver of this vision: for the greater credit hereof, hee describes himselfe by two modest termes: First, A brother: secondly, A companion. First, hee cals himselfe their brother: that is,
D of them who by faith were all members of the mysticall body of Christ. For the Church of God is a family, whereof God the Father is head and housholder, Jesus Christ is the elder brother, and all beleevers are fellow-brethren, in and by Christ, being by faith the adopted sons of God, members of that family, and brethren each to other.

By this title (your brother) first he setteth out his humility, and great modesty. For hee was a man at that time above all men which lived, in regard of his gifts and holinesse of life: hee was the last Apostle, and had the Apostolicall authority, being a most zealous and constant professor, yet he calleth himselfe a brother to all true beleevers, and maketh himselfe but quall with them, though they were farre inferiour to him. And so should we esteeme better of our brethren than of our selves, and make our selves inferiour to them.

Secondly, by this title we see he had his heart full of brotherly love, to all the members of the Church of Christ; he loved them as brethren. So we are bound to love all men even our enemies, as they bee of the same flesh with us: but those that be of the same faith and religion with us, to these especially should we shew our love and affection. So Paul saith to the Christian Romans, Be affectioned to love one another with brotherly love, Rom. 12. 10. And great reason: for beleevers are linked each to other with the neerest bond: they have the same Father, which is God, the same Redeemer, the same faith, hope, baptisme, and the same benefit by Jesus Christ his death and obedience.

But this duty is not practised: there bee that cal themselves brethren, who (as Isay saith) hate them that tremble at the word, and mocke them even for the profession of the same religion, whereby they think to be saved. If any seem to make more conscience of their wayes than others, they are reviled and hated for the name of Christ: which ought not to bee, for among all true Christians should be brotherly love.

The second title, Companion, or Copartner in three things: in tribulations, in the Kingdome, and in the patience of Christ. Hee cals himselfe Copartner with them in tribulations, for two causes: First, because at that time when he wrote this vision, the whole Church was in tribulation and persecution, under that cruell tyrant Domitian, about fourscore or an hundred years after Christ, who banished Iohn into Patmos: where he was not unmindefull of the afflictions of the Church, whereof he was a member: and therefore cals himselfe a partner with them in affliction.

By which hee shieweth, what is the state of Gods Church in this world, namely, to be under the crosse: and the members thereof must not bee companions of peace and ease, but copartners in affliction and tribulation. And therfore Christ teacheth those which will bee his Disciples, these lessons: First, to deny themselves, to take up his crosse daily, and to follow him. And because of this estate, the Church in this world is called the Militant Church, being in continuall fight against the devill, and his instruments. The consideration whereof is of speciall use: first, we in this land have had peace and quietnesse for many yeares without persecution, which we must acknowledge for a speciall blessing vouchsafed to us for this end; that now in the time of peace we might prepare our selves against the day of triall. For seeing the estate of the Church is to bee under afflictions; wee are all in duty bound to wait continually when God will call us to suffer for his sake. No man can define the time, or the manner of our triall: but yet that it will come, wee must resolve; because of the usual estate of the Church. God hath for a long time sent forth labourers into his harvest, wherby no doubt many sheafs are gathered into the Lords barne. Now after this long gathering, there will come a day of fanning: The Lord will take into his hand the fan of affliction, and put it into his corne, and thereby trie the chaffe from the wheat. It stands us therefore in hand to prepare our selves in this time of peace, that wee may bee found good corne in the Lords sieve, and not chaffe, which must bee cast into unquenchable fire.

Secondly, hee cals himselfe their copartner in affliction; because his pitifull heart was moved with the bowels of compassion, towards all his fellow-members; when hee remembred their persecution and affliction under the cruell tyrant Domitian. And the same affection should bee in every one of us towards the poore afflicted servants of Christ: seeing they be our fellow-members, we should have a fellow-feeling with them, weeping with them that weepe, and shew our compassion in pitying them. If the foot bee pricked, the head stoopes, the eye beholds and lookes on it, the finger puls it out, the hand applyes the plaister, the other foot is readie to runne for helpe, the tongue to aske for counsell, and all the members are ready to afford their naturall helpe in pitie and fellow-feeling: so when any members of the Church suffer affliction, bee pricked with persecution for Christs sake; then should we as members of the same body, be ready to doe all the help we can to them, especially in shewing our fellow-feeling with them.

The second thing wherein hee is this copartner is, in the kingdome of Christ, that is, the kingdome of heaven. Where observe, that hee placeth fellowship in affliction, before companion in the kingdome: to give us to understand, that through afflictions and crosses for Christs sake, is the ready way to this kingdome. It is that way which is beaten and troden by the Prophets, Apostles, and the Saints of God: as the Apostle saith, Through manifold tribulations wee must enter into heaven. And this momentary affliction causeth to us an infinite weight of glory; not by deserving it, but by shewing the plaine way thither. Whereby wee are taught, not to thinke it hard when trials doe befall us, but rather to count it a good thing, yea, exceeding great gladnesse, when any affliction doth befall us for Christs sake: for hereby we are brought like wandring sheepe into that beaten path which leadeth to heaven. Nay wee must rather marvell when we professe the Gospel, and have no affliction; then we may feare wee be out of the way, seeing the Lord afflicts every childe which is his owne.

Act. 14. 22. 2 Cor. 4. 17.

Iam. 1. 2.

Heb. 12. 8.

Thirdly, he is Copartner in patience; which he addeth, because it is a most worthy vertue, whereby wee are made able to persevere in affliction till we come to heaven. Afflictions are the beaten way, heaven is our joyfull end, patience is the meanes to make us goe on till wee come thither: Whatsoever things are written, are written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort in the Scriptures might have hope, Rom. 15.4. Where true hope to come to heaven is obtained by patience, which maketh a beleever to goe on in suffering, till hee come to life eternall. There is much fruit in the good ground, but not brought forth without patience; and the true beleever is saved by hope in this world, yet cannot come to heaven without patience, Jam. 5. for thereby hee must possesse his soule. Matth. 13.

Now because men will say, patience is a hard matter, and so are discouraged from seeking for it: therefore to set an edge on their desire, he addes, It is the patience of Christ: and it is so called, either because hee commands it, or because it is his gift, and commeth from the Spirit of Christ; or chiefly because he himselfe suffereth in his members, and as their misery and suffering is his, so is their patience, The consideration whereof is a singular motive to induce every childe of God to patience, in bearing the crosse for Christs sake: for they have Christ their fellow-sufferer, he takes part with them, and puts under his shoulder: Who would not then bee content to suffer with patience? And thus much of the branches of his fellowship severally.

Now consider them jointly, and they contain a notable description of the communion of Saints, which is a speciall Article of our faith, standing in three things: in tribulation, in the Kingdome of heaven, and in patience. And marke well, that this communion begins in tribulation, therein we must be partners, and that with patience, before we come to have fellowship in the Kingdome of Heaven. That man therefore that hath afflictions laid on him, must beare them patiently; and when the members of Christ are under the crosse, he must in tender compassion be touched with their miseries: and when he doth truly feele in his heart this Christian patience and compassion, then may he assure himselfe he is entred into this communion, and shall undoubtedly with all Saints bee partaker of the joyes of heaven. But if patience and compassion be wanting, we perswade our selves in vaine of this communion: and therefore let us strive against impatience, and against the deadnesse and hardnesse of our hearts; that we may neither murmure against God in our owne afflictions, nor yet want compassion towards our brethren, that any where suffer affliction for the name of Christ. Thus much for the circumstance of the person.

Was in the Isle called Patmos. In these words is the second circumstance, namely, the place where this vision was given to Iohn. This Patmos is one of those Ilands, which the Geographers call Sporades, lying in the West part of Asia the lesse, neere to the Churches to whom Iohn writ, and by the Sea commonly called the Ægean sea. This Iland was a small, base and poore Iland, little or never a whit inhabited.

Saint Iohn had his vision, not at Jerusalem, at Antioch, or Rome, but in Patmos, a base, poore, and little inhabited Iland. By this we see, that in the new Testament there is no respect of one place above another, in regard of Gods presence, and our fellowship with him: he doth as well manifest himselfe to Iohn by this vision in Patmos, as to other his Prophets and Apostles in Jerusalem the holy City. In the old Testament there was difference of place in regard of Gods solemne worship and presence; as the Lord shewed his presence, and tyed his worship especially to his Tabernacle and Temple at Jerusalem. This Daniel sheweth by his gesture in prayer: for being in captivity, when he prayed in his chamber, He opened his window, which was toward the Temple at Jerusalem, and turned his face thitherward. But now in the new Testament, that difference of place is abolished in respect of GODS worship. And therefore Paul willeth, That men pray every where, lifting up pure hands unto God: and so for all the duties of religion we must thinke the like. Dan. 6. 1 Tim. 2.8.

I. Then away with Popish Pilgrimage to Churches and Chappels of Saints, or to their reliques. This is meere superstition: for God is present every where, and a man that will worship God in spirit and truth, may have fellowship with him in one place as well as another. The use.

II. Also this may serve to correct a false conceit which many have of our Churches and Chappels: for when they come to a dwelling house, they thinke it not their duty, there to humble themselves, to kneele downe, and call upon God; but if they come into a Church or chappell never so often, upon ordinary affaires, they fall downe to praier. The reason is, because they think these places be more holy, and God more present there, and they shall sooner bee heard in them than in their common houses: which is untrue: for in the new Testament, all such diversity of place is abolished in regard of Gods service and presence: the dwelling house is as holy as the Church. Indeed Churches must be maintained, because in them the people may more orderly and conveniently meet together to serve God publikely, in the word and praier: for which time all due reverence must be observed in them: but wee must not thinke that they are more holy than other places.

More particularly, in this circumstance of place note two things: First, by what meanes S. Iohn came thither: secondly, to what end, and for what cause. The meanes was banishment by the Emperour Domitian: the cause was for the word of God.

For the first, he came and abode in Patmos, being banished thither for the Gospels sake. In this his banishment consider many excellent things:

things: first, S. Iohn was a most worthy Apostle, endued with rare gifts, a singular maintainer of the gospel, and a famous founder of the Church of God, and chiefe pillar thereof in those dayes when hee wrot this booke: and for this cause hated of the cruell persecuter Domitian, and of the Romans. And yet observe, That whereas other true Christians were put to the sword, S. Iohn is not, but escapeth by banishment. The cause of this was Gods speciall providence, by which hee reserved him for the benefit of the Church, that he might receive this Revelation, and commit it to writing, for the perpetuall good of all his children. And so though Domitian was a cruell Tyrant, and wanted no malice towards Iohn, yet hee could not kill him; God overruled him, that he did but banish him, and that into such an Island, wherein he might quietly receive these visions, and pen the same for the good of the Church. By this we see the great care and providence of God over his Church, that hee doth bridle and over-rule the cruell mindes and might of bloodie persecutors; that they cannot for their hearts doe any thing, but that which serveth for Gods glory, and the good of his Church, though they intend the contrary. For Domitian intended onely the hurt of Iohn, yet see, by his banishment into that Isle, hee had fit place to receive these visions for the good of the Church. So in the death of Christ, the Jewes and Gentiles, and all the people banded themselves together, to put Christ to death, and the devill hee laboured to stirre them to practise their intended malice. Yet the overruling power of God, who bringeth light out of darknesse, directeth and ordereth this their malice and wicked practice to the most excellent worke that ever was, even the redemption of mankinde. So Iosephs brethren intended no such deliverance as God wrought by him, in selling their brother. This consideration should comfort all Gods children in the time of any outward distresse, even the remembrance of Gods overruling hand.

Secondly, in that Iohn went into banishment, when it was so appointed, wee learne, That when we are oppressed and persecuted by tyrants for Christs sake, wee must not make resistance, or offer violence, but suffer all injuries with patience: for as one saith truly, The Christians weapons in persecution, are only prayers and teares. And Saint Iohn often in this booke addeth this conclusion, after the foretelling of persecution, Here is the patience of Saints, shewing that patience must be the complete armour against all our bloody enemies.

Preces & lachrymæ, arma Christianorum.

Thirdly, here also observe, That Iohn came into this Island; not of his owne accord, as chusing a solitary life to bee the most happy state of perfection, but by violence and constraint. For if hee had come into it voluntarily, being little or not inhabited, hee could not have done the duty of his Apostleship in preaching the Gospell, and laying the foundations of the Church. This then confuteth the Monkish life, which is no life of holy perfection, (as Papists call it) but of glorious superstition and flat impiery before God: for hereby they forsake their callings, and utterly disable themselves to doe those duties which God requireth of them in Church, common-wealth, or family.

Fourthly, whereas Iohn being banished, received his visions in a barren and base desolate place: wee see, that those which honour God shall bee honoured of God, even then when men seeke most to disgrace them: For what greater disgrace could they have put upon Iohn, than to banish him into so base an Island; yet because it was for Gods glory, even there doth the Lord appeare unto him, and honour him much in revealing unto him these visions. So when Ioseph was sold of his brethren, and most dishonoured of them; then did God exalt him most of all. The same may be said of Daniel in Babylon, whom God did most advance when his enemies sought his greatest ruine: and the same is true of all Gods children, Them which honour God, will he honour.

II. Point. The cause for which he came into this Isle, is expressly set downe, for the word of God: that is, because he was a publisher and preacher of the word of God: for the performance of which duty hee was banished. By which wee may note, That all naturall men (as Domitian, and his Court, and all the Gentiles, without GODS speciall calling) doe beare a deadly hatred towards Gods word. For Saint Iohn was a most worthy Apostle, a famous man for gifts, a singular Preacher of the Word of God; yet is hated, nay, banished, not for his owne cause, but for the Word of God. This hatred hath appeared in the heathen Emperors by their bloody persecutions against the Preachers and professors of this Word: and yet though men hate it naturally, the same Word winneth them, and taketh place in their hearts for their conversion, and causeth them to love it: so as successively it hath beene spread over all the world. Which shews against the Atheist, That the Word taught by the Prophets and Apostles, is indeed the true word of God, not the invention of man: for mans word being hated, cannot win unto it him which hateth it: but the Word of God prevaileth by grace in the harts of those who hate it by nature, which it could not do, unlesse there were in it some divine power.

Againe, seeing Iohn was banished for Gods word, all ministers are to cast their accounts, and make this reckoning, that they may and must suffer trouble and persecution, yea, sometime banishment it selfe, for the Gospels sake, if they will be faithfull. For that which befell the principall founders and chiefe builders of the Church, cannot bee avoided of them which are ordinary Ministers, if they will be faithfull. Christ acquainteth his Disciples with this, telling them, That they are even accursed, when all Luke 6.26.

all men speake well of them. Let none therefore thinke it strange at this day, if for well doing they heare and receive evill: nay, let them feare the curse, when all men praise them.

And for the witnessing of Iesus Christ. Here Iohn doth note more specially the cause of his banishment, to wit, for testifying the History and doctrine of the Gospel, the summe whereof is this, That Iesus Christ the sonne of Mary, is the sonne of God, and redeemer of all that beleeve in him to the justification of life. This testimony S. Iohn puts downe, to give us to understand, what part of Gods word that is, which is most hated of the world: and for the preaching whereof Gods Ministers are persecuted and banished, to wit, the Gospell of Jesus Christ especially: for the law is in part naturall, but the Gospell is supernaturall, and to mans reason absurd; for the preaching whereof, men in all ages have beene persecuted. The reason hereof is this, God in the beginning made a covenant with man, promising, That the seed of the woman should breake the Serpents head: Gen. 3. Now that Gospell is that glad tidings, wherein is declared, that this promised seed is come, who hath indeed bruised the head of the Serpent. Hereupon the devill maligneth the Gospell above all parts of GODS word, and accordingly hath laboured by all meanes to suppresse the same; partly by persecution, as he did in the first three hundred yeares after Christ; and partly by bringing into the Church damnable heresies, which did destroy the Gospell by depraving the natures and offices of Christ, when by outward violence hee could not prevaile.

Now seeing the Devill and his instruments doe thus hate the Gospell, and labour to extinguish it; wee on the contrary must labour to know, and to beleeve, to love, and embrace the Gospel, that so wee may uphold and maintaine the same.

vers. 10 And I was ravished in the spirit on the Lords day, and heard behinde mee a great voice, as it had beene of a Trumpet.

In this tenth verse are set downe the third and fourth circumstances of this vision. The third is the manner of receiving and giving this revelation to Iohn, namely, in a traunce. The fourth is the time when it was given, on the Lords day.

Touching the manner, it is noted in these words, I was in the spirit; That is, I was by the mighty and extraordinary worke of the Spirit of God cast into a traunce. That this is to bee so expounded, appeareth by comparing this phrase with the like in the whole prophecie of Ezekiel, who useth to say, I was in the Spirit, when hee expresseth and signifieth that hee was cast into a traunce, and therein received some vision by the Spirit.

To understand this the better, consider two things: first, what a traunce is: secondly, the end of it. First, A traunce is an extraordinary worke or action of Gods Spirit. Wee must not thinke that traunces come from the vertue of the starres, nor from the constitution of mans body, or by the strength of imagination, as some have fondly thought: but they are wrought by the holy Ghost. Secondly, it is not every worke of the holy Ghost, but an extraordinary worke, above the order of nature. It is also powerfull and mighty, wherein the whole man, both in body and minde is altered: which Saint Iohn here expresseth, saying, I was in the Spirit. This extraordinary worke of the Spirit consisteth in two actions; one upon the bodie, the other upon the minde. First, in procuring a traunce, the Spirit of God casteth the body of man into a dead sleepe: whereby all the senses, both inward and outward, are benummed: so Gen. 15. 12. When God renewed his covenant with Abraham, hee casteth him into an heavie sleepe: that is, into a traunce, wherein all his senses were benummed: only his mind was waking. The action of the holy Ghost on the minde is, to draw it from fellowship with the body, and all the senses, to have a neere fellowship with God, that so the Spirit of God may enlighten it with divine light, that it may understand the things which are revealed to it: as we may see in other extasies and traunces of the Prophets and Apostles. As in that of [a] Peter, when hee saw the visions of the beasts cleane and uncleane. And thus wee see what a traunce is, namely, an extraordinary powerfull worke of the spirit upon the whole man, casting the bodie into a dead sleepe, and making the minde fit to receive the things which are revealed unto it of the Lord. [a] Act. 10. 11. What a traunce is.

II. Point. The end of traunces. God for two causes revealeth his will in traunces unto his servants, as to Iohn in this place: First, that they might know, that the things revealed were not invented of themselves, but given of God. Iohn herein had no use of his bodily senses, he neither heard, saw, nor felt, but they were asleepe. And therefore the vision must needs be from God, and the glory thereof wholly his.

Secondly, and chiefly that the things revealed might take the deeper impression in the understanding: for the minde being freed from fellowship with the body, and not hindered by any phantasies of the senses, (they being all asleepe, and quiet) doth then most lively, and sensibly apprehend and retaine the impression of things revealed. Here then wee see the great care of God, that his servants might throughly understand, certainely beleeve, and constantly keepe in memory the things hee delivered unto them. The like care he shewed in revealing his will to all the former Prophets; hee would not have have their mindes troubled with the fellowship of the bodie, nor hindred of the senses inward or outward; but wholly taken up for the service of his spirit. And there is good reason of this, for if they must faithfully teach Gods will to others, to make them know and understand to beleeve and remember the same: is it not necessary that they themselves should thorowly understand, soundly beleeve, and firmely keepe in memorie whatsoever God revealeth?

This dealing of the Lord for this end with his holy Prophets, teacheth us, that the ordinarie ministers of the Gospell at this day ought to imploy themselves with all care and diligence, that they may thorowly understand the will of God in his Word, and withall beleeve it soundly, and remember it carefully. We must not now looke for traunces and visions, as they had, but we must use continuall studie in the Word, which is the ordinarie meanes to come unto this knowledge. This dutie concerneth all students in divinitie, and all others which desire a good understanding in the Word of God. And for their furtherance herein, they must have principall care to search into the text of Scripture thorowly: thereby shall they best conceive the proper meaning of the holy Ghost, and with greater facility keepe the same in memorie. For one saith truly, That every good minister should bee a good Text-man. Whereby is descried a common fault of many students: who rather imploy themselves in the ancient writings of men, than in the Word of God: nay, many spend their best time, in the base writings of wicked and hereticall Monks and Friers. It cannot be denied, but many of the fathers were worthy members of Gods Church: but if the fountaine be left, the ministerie will soone be tainted with the filthy puddles of mens inventions.

Againe, in this dealing of God with Iohn, we may observe the truth of Christs saying, to him that hath, it shall be given. For though Iohn was indued with rare knowledge, and singular gifts, yet the Lord addeth more knowledge to his former. The Lord found him faithfull in the duties of an Apostle: and therefore revealeth the knowledge of many secrets unto him in most full manner: even so it is in Gods Church at this day: all that have care to know the will of God, and doe it; though their knowledge bee small at the first, yet the Lord will helpe them, and adde daily to their knowledge. And the cause why many heare the word of God, & profit not, but wax worse, or stand at a stay, is, because they labour not to have their knowledge increased, by putting in practice that which they know: for if they did, then to him which hath, should more bee added, and hee should have abundance. As on the contrarie, when wee bee negligent to heare or know, and to obey the will of God: wee have a spirit indeed sent upon us, yet not Gods spirit, but the spirit of slumber, of blindnesse and ignorance, so that we see, and see not; heare, and understand not, Isay 6. 9.

On the Lords day. In these words is the fourth circumstance, namely, the time when this vision was shewed to S. Iohn. This day which is here called the Lords day, among the Jewes was the first day of the week, called by us Sunday. It is called the Lords day for two causes: First, because on this day Christ rose from death to life: for Christ was buried the even of the Jewes Sabbath, which is our Friday; and hee rested in the grave their whole Sabbath, which is our Saturday; and rose the first day of the weeke early in the morning, which is our Sunday.

Secondly, the first day of the weeke (according to the Jewes account) came in stead of the Jewes Sabbath, and was ordained a day of rest for the new Testament, and sanctified for the solemne worship of the Lord. And for this cause especially it is called the Lords day, the manifestation whereof (as some thinke) Iohn chiefly intended in this title. And touching this time, for our better understanding, let us consider three points: First, who changed the Jewes Sabbath: secondly, for what cause: thirdly, whether the Church hath now in the New Testament, power to change the Sabbath day wee now celebrate, to any other day of the weeke.

For the first; it is commonly thought that the Jewes Sabbath was changed into this Lords day by Christian Emperours, long after the ascension of Christ. But it is more consonant to the tenour of the New Testament, to hold, that Christ himselfe was the author of this change. My reasons are these: First, that which the Apostles delivered and injoyned the Church, that they received from Christ, either by voice or instinct; for they delivered nothing of their owne head: But the Apostles delivered, and injoyned this Sabbath to the church, to be kept as a day of holy rest to the Lord, as appeareth, 1 Corinth. 16. 1. where Paul ordained in the Churches of Galatia, and Corinth, That the collection for the poore should be on the first day of the weeke: This hee left not to the choyce of the Church, but appointed it by authoritie Apostolicall from Christ.

Now the day of the collecting for the poore, (as appeareth in the histories of the Church) was the Sabbath day, when the people were assembled for Gods service. For this was the custome of the Church for many yeares after Christ. First, to have the Word preached, and the Sacraments administred, then to gather for the poore: and for this cause in the writings of the Church, the Lords supper is called a sacrifice, an oblation, and the masse: not a reall sacrifice as the Papists use it; but spirituall, because therewith was joyned collection for the poore, which was a spirituall oblation, not to the Lord, but to the Church, for the releefe of the the poore: and it was called the masse, because the collected releese thereat was sent to the poore Saints abroad. A second reason is this: The Apostles themselves kept this day for the Sabbath of the new Testament, Acts 20. 7. And it cannot bee proved that they observed any other day for an holy rest to the Lord after Christs ascension, save onely in one case, when they came into the assemblies of the Jewes, who would keepe none other but the old Sabbath of the law. A third reason is, Joh. 20. 19. 26. The same day whereon Christ rose from the death, being the first day of the weeke, he appeared to his Disciples, being gathered together, and taught them many things, which concerned the government of his Church. And eight dayes after being the first day of the weeke, hee appeared unto them for the same end. Now it is more than likely, that Christ in his owne person gave them an example to celebrate and keepe that day, wherein he rose againe, for a Sabbath of the new Testament.

II. Point. The Sabbath of the Jewes was changed for two causes: First, to maintaine the libertie of the Church of the new Testament, whereof this was a great part, that they were freed from the ceremonies of the Jewes; For when this day was changed, the Church was no more tied to the Jewes Sabbath, neither had any such regard of dayes and times.

Secondly, that there might bee a more fit time for the memorie of the worke of mans redemption: For God in the old Testament appointed the seventh day to be a day of rest to remember the first creation: So in the new Testament it stands with reason there should bee a day to celebrate this worke of redemption; which is a wonderfull creation; wherein (as Isay saith, are made a new heaven and a new earth, Chapter 66. And whereby men become new creatures, 2 Cor. 5. 17. Nay this redemption is a more glorious worke than the creation; for in that creation Adam was the head, but in this redemption Christ Jesus is our head. By the first creation wee received a temporall life; but by redemption wee receive life eternall. In the creation, Adam was espoused to Eve, but in the worke of redemption every Christian is espoused to Christ Jesus. By creation Adam had an earthly Paradise: in this redemption we have an heavenly kingdome. In the creation, Gods power and wisdome did principally appeare: in this redemption with power and wisdome hee shewed mercie and justice: Justice in Christs passion, and mercie in our forgivenesse. By creation he made man of nothing, but by redemption hee made him of worse than nothing, and better than hee was. Therefore seeing this worke of our redemption is farre passing the creation; it was meet a day should be set apart for the memory thereof: Now no day could bee more fit than the first day of the weeke, in which Christ rose againe: whereby he confirmed the work of our redemption: for he died for our sinnes, and rose againe for our justification, Rom. 4. 25.

A

III. Point. whether may the Church of the new Testament, change this Sabbath day to any other day of the weeke, as to tuesday, wednesday, &c. Ans. The Church hath no such power, for time is the Lords, and the disposing thereof is in his hands. Therefore Christ saith to his Disciples, It is not for you to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath kept in his owne hands, Act. 7. 6. As if he should say, The Father hath kept times and seasons, in his owne, power: and therefore it is not for you to know them. Now if that were a good reason, as no doubt it was, then is this also sound and good. If God have the disposing of times in his hands,

B

then it belongeth not to the Church to dispose of them: but God hath the disposing of al times in his hands: ergo. And it may bee otherwise hence gathered thus: If that which is lesse belong not to the Church, then that which is more doth not: but the knowledge of time and seasons which God hath in his power, belongeth not to the Church, which is lesse than the disposing of times and seasons: And therefore the Church hath not power to dispose of them: and so by consequent may not alter the Sabbath day. Object. In the old Testament the Jewes appointed festivall dayes: as the feast of Dedication, which Christ kept holy, Joh. 10. 22. instituted by the Maccabees, in token of thankfulnesse for their deliverance: and for restoring of religion and the Temple which Antiochus had pulled downe. And also Mordecai instituted the feast Purim, which was celebrated of the Jewes afterwards.

1 Macch. 4.

C

Esth. 9. 17.

Now if they had power to make holy-daies, then they might alter the Sabbath day: and so may the Church in the new Testament. Answ. These feasts of the Jewes were no Sabbaths set wholly apart for the solemne worship of God: but were onely dayes of the solemnity appointed by the Church in token of joy and thankfulnes for the repairing of the Temple, and deliverance of Gods people: And were onely celebrated as they served to put the people in mind of these outward benefits. So that whereas some hold that the Church hath power to alter the Sabbath day; or to make two more Sabbath daies in a weeke, if it were convenient: it hath no ground in Gods Word. For that authoritie which doth alter this day, must not be lesse than Apostolicall. And thus wee see why this day was called the Lords day.

Now if the first day of the weeke bee the Lords day, set apart for his honour in the memorie of so great redemption, then here are three sorts of men reproved: First, those that make the Lords day a day of vain pleasure and delight. This is the manner of all sorts of men, but especially of the younger sort and servants, who spend this day in carnall rejoycing, in riot, gaming, and wantonnesse, never thinking of the worship of God, which is then to be performed.

formed. But these sin greatly against the Lord: for hereby they pervert the end of the Lords day: it should be kept holy and glorious to the Lord, but they turne it to the worship and service of the Devill.

The second sort here approved, are those which love more civilitie than the former; but yet they thinke they may doe what they will on the Lords day; as to take their journeys thereon, and imploy themselves in their ordinary affaires; perswading themselves they may serve God with as good an heart when they are alone about their businesse, as they doe who goe to the Church. But these men sinne grievously against the fourth commandement; for hereby they make that their own day which is the Lords.

A third sort here reproved, though not so bad as the former, are those, who thinke it needfull to serve God at those ordinarie times of the Sabbath, which the lawes of the Land injoyne unto men, and therefore they will come duly to morning and evening prayer, thinking that they are not bound beside to heare the Word of God preached, and that all the rest of the day they may do what they will pertaining either to their profit or pleasure. Of this sort are our ignorant people, and a great number every where. But they sin grievously against God, for the Sabbath day is called the Lords day, because it is wholly consecrated to his worship, but they part stakes with the Lord, and give him but a part of his owne day, and that the lesser, taking the rest unto themselves, which they mispend upon their lusts. Now as these vices must be abhorred, so on the contrarie, wee must with all conscience keepe the Lords Sabbath holy according to the fourth Commandement. And therefore wee must thereon cease from all workes of sinne, and from the works of our callings; and sanctifie this day wholly, by applying it all to the honour and worship of God. And here wee must remember, that there is a double sanctification of the Sabbath, publike, and private. Publike, when men assemble themselves together publikely, to heare Gods Word for the increase of faith and knowledge: and to call on Gods name for further graces; as also to give him thanks for his mercies, and to receive his sacraments. Private, when men in their private places imploy themselves in holy duties of prayer, reading, meditation upon Gods Word and Workes; whereby God is honoured, and their soules edified; and both these must bee performed to the Lord every Sabbath day of every man. For wee may not abridge God of that time, wherein glorie should bee given to his name. If the officers should take our servants in the weeke day from our private businesse, and imploy them in publike affaires, we would thinke much at it, though it were for the common good. And shall wee not thinke that God will take himselfe dishonoured of us,

A when we shall take either whole or part of his holiday, and imploy it in our busines? A maine cause why many profit little by the publike ministerie, is want of private sanctification of this day. Therefore we must learne to sanctifie the Sabbath of the Lord, for else we shall never increase in faith, knowledge, or obedience as wee should: for the begetting and increase whereof this day hath beene set apart, and sanctified from the beginning.

Objection. 2. Why did the Lord shew this vision unto Iohn rather on this day than any other? Answ. Though Iohn were absent from the Church in regard of bodily presence, yet hee was present in spirit with all the faithfull, and therefore no doubt in this day he gave himselfe
B to prayer, and other duties which he could performe for the glorie of God in that solitarie place. Now it is the Lords manner when his servants are thus humbled, then to come and reveale himselfe unto them in speciall manner. So hee did unto Daniel, Dan. 9. and to Cornelius, Act. 10. And to Peter praying alone in the house top, Act. 10. 11. And so doubtlesse finding Iohn thus imployed this Lords day, hee revealed his will unto him touching the state of the Church to the end of the world.

Hence we learne sundry instructions: First, whereas Iohn being in a solitarie Iland kept the Sabbath; we may observe, that all persons who are severed from the assemblies of the C Church; as the prisoners, and those which are sicke of a dead palsie, or other great diseases; as marriners though they bee in the midest of the sea, should keepe holy the Lords Sabbath by performing such duties as God requireth; as prayer, confession of sinnes, and thanksgiving; whereby God may bee glorified, though they cannot come to the publike ministerie of the Word.

Secondly, in that Iohn received his vision on the Lords day, when he gave himselfe to prayer and holy duties: Hence ariseth a consideration to Gods Church, that God draweth neere to them that draw neere to him, as James 4. 8. And let us humble our selves and draw neere to the Lord by prayer and thanksgiving; and the D Lord in mercie will shew himselfe sundry wayes, and draw neere unto us.

The cause why men have so little taste of Gods mercie and love toward them, is because they doe not draw neere unto him, by doing those duties which he requireth at their hands. For when men draw backe from God, is it not good reason he should draw backe from them?

This therefore must stirre up our hearts, and move us to come often to God by prayer and thanksgiving: for by use in these duties shall we get acquaintance with the Lord. Thus much of the circumstance of this vision.

And I heard behinde mee a great voyce, as it had beene a trumpet. First, here followeth the parts of the vision, which are two; The beginning ning or entrance into it, in this eleventh verse, and part of the twelfth. Secondly, the matter and substance thereof, from the twelfth verse to the end of the third chapter.

The entrance into the vision is a preparation whereby the Lord maketh Iohn more fit to apprehend and receive the things revealed. In which preparation wee must observe, first, the meanes: secondly, the parts thereof. The means whereby God prepareth him, is a voyce: And I heard a voyce. The like manner of preparation hath God used in former times: When he intended to make with Adam the covenant of reconciliation in the seed of the woman: First, he prepared him by a voyce speaking unto him before he appeared, and by his voyce caused him to flie for feare. Then having rebuked him for his sinnes, he made with him this covenant of grace, Gen. 3.

Exod. 19. and 20. And in Mount Sinai before the Lord gave the Law, he first came downe in thundring and lightning, and with the sound of a trumpet to terrifie the people: and then he uttered his law to Moses and to his people. So when the Lord would instruct Samuel touching the house of 1 Sam. 3. Eli, hee awoke him by a voyce againe, and againe: and then spake plainely unto him. And in all visions usually, and generally the Lord useth to prepare his servants by voices, by signes and words, that they might bee more fit to receive such things as be revealed.

This dealing of God with Iohn, in preparing him to the worthy receiving of this vision, teacheth us, that we much more should be prepared to heare and receive the will of God; for we come farre short of those excellent gifts of God which were in Iohn, who yet must be prepared.

Our comming to heare Gods Word, is to learne the same for the increase of knowledge: faith, and obedience. Now the Word of God is hard, and we dull to learne; we must therefore by all good meanes prepare our selves, that our minds and hearts may be fit to receive the same with profit. The cause of so little profit after long hearing, is want of preparation: but hereof wee have intreated already upon the third verse.

The voice is here set out unto us three waies: First, by the place whence it came: Secondly, by the qualitie of it: Thirdly, by the matter and substance which it contained. For the place: it was uttered from behind him: which the Lord observed to stirre up more attention in Iohn; for usually men do more carefully marke those things which come on a sudden behinde them, than those which are spoken or done directly before their face.

Secondly, for the qualitie of it, this voyce was great; as is expressed further by a similitude, Like the sound of a Trumpet: that is, full of majestie and power. Which also God added unto it, to further attention in Iohn. For if it had beene an ordinarie voyce, or small, he would not so much have regarded it: but being so sudden, so great and full of majestie, it could not but make him verie attentive.

Now seeing Christ is so carefull to prepare Iohns minde with attention and diligence to receive the things which should be told him: this teacheth us, that when we come to heare Gods Word, we must use all meanes of attention; for if it were needfull to Iohn, then it is farre more necessarie for us, who are farre inferiour to him in all gifts of understanding and memorie. And here also is another cause of small profit and little liking of Gods Word, namely, want of attention in the heart. Wee must therefore like godly Lydia, Act. 16. stirre up our dull and heavie spirits, and with all diligence marke the things we heare. And here we must take heed of two enemies to attention: the first are by-thoughts: as when the bodie indeed is present, but the minde wandreth from the word, and is wholly possessed with thoughts of pleasure, or other worldly affaires: For these be thornes in the ground of our hearts, which choake the good seed of the Word. Many will complaine, they cannot marke and remember that which is taught: now the cause is in themselves, their wandring thoughts, which hinder both understanding and memory: for the mind conceiving other matters, cannot observe how one point dependeth upon another, much lesse remember them afterward.

The second enemie to attention, is dulnesse and heavinesse in bodie and soule: a common fault in many hearers, which sheweth it selfe by drowsinesse and sleepinesse in the time of preaching, when they ought to stirre up their bodies and hearts to all attention. If a man should bee dull and heavie when his Prince is speaking unto him of some weighty matter that is for his good, it would be taken for a part of contempt and disloyaltie towards his majesty. What disloyaltie then is this unto the King of kings, that we should be dull and heavie, when himselfe vouchsafeth to speake unto us out of the Word, the mysteries of our salvation? And surely, among other things this drowsinesse is one cause of small profit, by the ministerie of the Word. And therefore, if we would increase in knowledge, and in the gifts of grace unto salvation, we must prepare our selves before we come, and in hearing cast off all dulnesse of flesh and spirit, and with all might stirre up our selves to attentive hearing: so shall the word be blessed unto us; other wise our hearing shall turne to our deeper condemnation.

V. 11 *Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and that which thou seest write in a booke, and send it unto the seven Churches which are in Asia: unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamus, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

are

These words containe the third description of this voice, whereby Johns heart was prepared, touching the substance and matter which was uttered: which consisteth in two things: The first is a testimonie, in these words; I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last. The second, a commandement in the words following: That which thou seest, write, and send, &c.

I. Touching the testimonie, the substance thereof is set downe in the eighth verse, where the words were handled, and the meaning shewed. They doe serve directly, to prove the Godhead and eternitie of Christ, which Christ himselfe doth here avouch, to give unto Iohn, and unto the Church full assurance, that the things now uttered and delivered, were from God: for saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; is as much as if he had said; I which speake unto thee am God, and therefore the things I deliver, are from God.

In this testimonie, note Gods speciall care in regard of his truth: he doth not content himselfe with revealing his will unto his Church; but more specially his care is, to certifie the Church of the truth thereof, that it is indeed from God. This hath been Gods care from the beginning. When Peter received a vision from God, withall Gods Spirit assured him that the things revealed therein were certaine and sure: And so when Christ preached the will of his Father among men, he did withall work strange miracles, to confirme and seale up the truth of his doctrine, that it was from God.

This speciall care of God over his Church, doth first confute the Papists opinion touching Scripture. They hold the Scripture to be certaine in it selfe, but not unto man till the Church give testimonie thereunto. But this is false: for God ever had this care over his Church, not only to reveale his will unto them, but also to use meanes for the assurance of their consciences, that that which was revealed was his undoubted and perfect will. And therefore the Word of God is certaine, and ever was, not onely in it selfe, but to the consciences of beleevers, and that without the testimonie of the Church; and so should be, though the testimonie of the Church should never come thereunto.

Secondly, hereby are confuted many carnall men, who will be of no religion, because (say they) there is no certainty in the matters of religion: mens opinions therein are so divers, that so many men, so many mindes almost, and no man can tell who speakes the truth. Ans. It may be that men in sundry matters hold sundry private opinions: yet in the Church of God, all the true members of Christ hold the same opinions touching the foundation of religion. But let it be granted, That all men on earth were of divers opinions touching matters of religion, should religion therefore be uncertaine? God forbid. For religion is certaine unto men, by the meanes that God hath appointed to certifie the conscience of the truth thereof; and thereby might men come to the truth and certaintie of religion taught by the Prophets and Apostles, though all men in the world were of divers opinions touching the same. Thus much of the Testimonie.

II. Point. The commandement given to Iohn in these words, That which thou seest write in a Booke, and send it to the seven Churches which are in Asia. This commandement hath two parts: First, to write the things seene in a booke: secondly, to send the booke to the seven Churches here named. And both these must Iohn doe, being now disabled by his exile to preach these things unto them personally, for these causes: First, that these Churches might be edified in the faith, and strengthned in these most grievous times of persecution. Secondly, that they might become keepers of this booke for the good of others: for the Church of God is the pillar of truth, not onely for that it doth publish Gods truth, but also because it keepeth it, and giveth testimony thereunto.

In this commandement note sundry things: First, that the Word of God, written and penned by the hand of man, is a notable helpe to the Church of God, and a worthy meanes to edifie the same, else Christ would never have commanded Iohn to have written these visions, and sent them to the Churches. Which serveth to confute the blind Papists, which say the word written is but an inkie letter, and a nose of wax; because the sense thereof may be turned every way as man will. This also confuteth the Anabaptists, which so much magnifie their Revelation, and make no account of the Word written. If the Lord had thought it best, he would have taught these Churches by Revelation: but they must learne by the word written.

Secondly, that the reading of Gods Word either publikely or privately, is an ordinance of God: for the Lord commanding Iohn to write this booke, and send it to the Churches, hereby implyeth, that they must read the same as they did other bookes of Scripture. The preaching of the Word is indeed the most worthy instrument for the founding and confirming of Gods Church, whereby ordinarily justifying faith is wrought in the heart: and yet reading must have his due reverence, as a meanes to confirme and increase true knowledge, faith, and repentance where it is begun.

Third-

Thirdly, here note that a man may be under the crosse, and in persecution, and yet remaine in the speciall favour of God: for this banishment into such a desart place, was unto Iohn a grievous crosse; and yet the Lord vouchsafed there to reveale himselfe unto him, and to make him the penman of this booke. Which honour he vouchsafeth not to all, but to them that are most deare unto him. Which thing each one should observe: for our nature is so corrupt, that when wee are under the crosse, it would perswade us, we are cast out of the love and favour of God.

In the end of the verse, the seven Churches Ephesus, Smyrna, & the rest are named. Which 7. places, were 7. famous cities in Asia, wherein were planted the most famous churches that were in those parts, and for their excellency are they named. And thus much for the meanes of Iohns preparation; now follow the parts thereof, which are two, first is hearing, folded up with the former meanes: And I heard a voice: second is, Turning of himselfe to see the partie that spake unto him, in these words;

V. 12 *Then I turned backe to see the voice which spake with me: and when I was turned, I saw seven golden Candlesticks.

That is, so soone as I heard this sudden and mightie voice, I turned my selfe to see who it was that uttered the same. In this behaviour of Iohn we are to learne our dutie: so to dispose our hearts towards God in the receiving of his word, as Iohn disposeth himselfe towards Christ in the receiving of this vision. So soone as the voice spake, Iohn hearkened; and because the sound thereof came behind him, he turned himselfe to looke on him that uttered it. Even so must we doe; we are by nature strangers with God, slow to heare when he speaketh, and readie to turne our hearts from God, when wee heare. Therefore when God speaketh unto us in the ministerie of his Word, we must hearken. And though we be going another way, yet we must turne our selves from our evill wayes, and incline our hearts to his voice, that wee may have fellowship with him. S. Iohn had not seene this marvellous vision, unlesse hee had turned himselfe to behold him that spake. No more shall we at any time feele true fellowship with the Lord, unlesse we turne our hearts unto his Word, and that betimes, while he speaketh unto us in the ministerie thereof.

Thus much for the first part of the vision, viz. the entrance thereunto. The second part is the matter and substance of the vision, containing a most worthy representation of Christ in his Majestie, as he is the Prophet, King, and Priest of his Church: set downe at large by a description of Christ, continuing from this twelfth verse unto the end of the third chapter; where Iohn sheweth what he received of Christ, partly by hearing, and partly by seeing. And first he beginneth his description of Christ, as hee saw him represented in vision: and so describeth him by two arguments: First, by the place where he saw him; secondly, by his forme and figure wherein he appeared.

1. For the place. Iohn saw him in the middest of the seven golden Candlesticks. These seven golden candlesticks here seene, are seven Churches of Asia: the particular Churches of God, being compared to candlesticks, as Christ expoundeth himselfe, ver. 20. Now the particular congregations of Gods Church be called candlesticks, for that resemblance which is betweene them. For as the candlesticks serve to beare up, and hold forth the light that is set therein: so the particular Churches of God on earth, they beare up and shew forth the light of the Gospel unto the whole world, partly in the ministerie of the word, and partly in the profession of the faith of Christ.

From hence sundry things are to be learned: first observe, that the Churches are rather called candlesticks, than candles; To give us to understand, that they have no light of themselves, or from themselves, but onely are Gods instruments to beare up and hold forth the light in the ministery of the Word, and profession of the faith: for Christ Jesus is the only true lamp and candle, that giveth light to the heart and conscience by his holy Spirit in his Word.

Secondly, hence every one that professeth himselfe to be a true member of Gods Church, must learne his dutie, which is earnestly to labour to become a shining and burning candle. Indeed this principally concerns the Ministers of the Church: and therefore Iohn Baptist is called a burning and a shining light, Joh. 5. 35. but yet it must also bee verified of every member thereof, as S. Paul commandeth; Shine (saith he) as lights in the world, in the midst of a naughty and crooked nation: holding forth the doctrine of life, that is, the Gospell. Quest. How shall every member of the Church become a burning light? Answ. First, he must have his minde enlightned in the knowledge of Gods will and Word, and then as a candlestick, hold out and send forth the beams thereof to others, partly by teaching within the compasse of his calling, and partly by example of an honest and blamelesse life and conversation. Thus we should doe, if wee would bee answerable to our profession. And to induce us hereunto, let us observe the reasons following.

Phil. 2. 15, 16.

First, it is Gods Commandement, Shine as lights (saith S. Paul) in the world, Philip. 2. 15. And walke as children of the light, Ephes. 5. 8.

Secondly, consider the fruit hereof, which is wonderful great: for by godly instruction in our places, & by answerable obedience in our lives, we win many to the Lord: shewing forth such lights, lights, whereby others may walke in this dark world to the kingdome of heaven, which is a moſt bleſſed light. In the winter ſeaſon, men thinke they doe others a great pleaſure, if in the night they hang forth a light to guide paſſengers a little way in an earthly walke. What a bleſſed thing then is this, that a man ſhould alwaies hold forth that light which ſhall guide a ſinnefull wicked wretch to leave the wayes of death, and to walke in the paths of righteouſnes to eternall life? But on the contrary, when men live in Gods Church like candles put out, by reaſon of the blindneſſe of their mindes, and the badneſſe of their lives; hence commeth great hurt and danger to others with whom they live: for they lead others that depend upon them to the pit of deſtruction, eſpecially, they who know the will of God, and yet make not conſcience to ſhew forth the ſame by good example of a godly life. For as in an haven towne, if any man in the night time doe remove the ſea-marke which guideth the ſhips in the right channell, he doth as much as in him lyeth to caſt away all the ſhips that are comming neere the ſhore, by cauſing them to run on rockes and ſands: even ſo they that ſhould give light in the Church, if they give either no light, or falſe light to ſuch as depend upon them, who are ſayling in the ſea of this ſinfull world, hereby they leade and direct them to a wrong haven, and inſtead of heaven, bring their ſoules to eternall perdition; which muſt terrifie us from ignorance and evill works, and make us labour to ſhine as lights in this world, by good inſtruction and godly converſation. Third reaſon: Conſider the fearefull judgements of God, againſt ſuch as live in his Church as members thereof, and yet give no light: they doe incurre the fearefull wrath of Chriſt. In the Temple, the keeping of the lamps and lights belonged to the Prieſt, and therefore he had his ſnuffers, and other inſtruments to trimme the ſame; which notably figured the duty of Chriſt in the Church of the new Teſtament: for he is our high Prieſt, who looketh to every light in the Sanctuary, that is, to every member of his Church, who ought to ſhine as a lampe; and when they burne but dimmely and darke, hee hath his ſnuffers to trimme them, and make them give a better light, both by godly life, and good inſtruction. But when hee hath ſnuffed them againe and againe, if ſtill they doe burne darke and dimme, and give either no light, or elſe a falſe light, then ſurely hee will either caſt them out of the Temple, or elſe tread them under his feet. Wee grant this liberty to every governour, when hee hath light up candles for his family, if any of them will not burne clearly, hee may ſnuffe it; if that will not ſerve, hee may caſt it into the fire, and ſet another in it place. And ſhall we deny to Chriſt Ieſus the like authority in his church, which is his houſe, over men and women, who ought to ſhine as lights? God forbid. The Miniſter therefore in this A place, and every other Chriſtian in the compaſſe of his calling, muſt labour to be a ſhining candle, both for knowledge and godly life before all the world, that ſo he may eſcape Gods fearfull judgements. In common reaſon wee ought to carry our ſelves as ſhining lights before others. It is an uſuall thing in the winter time to hang forth lights for the guiding of mens bodies ſafe from place to place. Now if wee have ſuch care over their bodies, wee ought to have much more over body and ſoule both; that by the light of grace in us, ſinners and wicked men may bee guided in the darke and dangerous way of this world, to the Kingdome of heaven.

Here then all ignorant perſons and looſe livers, who abound in every place; muſt bee admoniſhed to reforme themſelves, and labour to become lights in Gods Church. They ſtand as candles, but they are extinct and give no light to others. Ignorant perſons therefore muſt caſt off their ignorance, and labour for knowledge: and wicked livers muſt reforme their looſeneſſe of life, and become obedient to the Word of truth, that ſo they may ſhine unto others. If a man have a candle ſet up in his family, and ſhall aſſay to light it, and ſnuffe it once or twice, and cannot get it burne, then in diſpleaſure hee will trample it under his feet, or caſt it into the fire: Even ſo, Chriſt Ieſus ſeeking to enlighten the mindes of theſe ignorant perſons, and to reforme the lives of theſe looſe livers by the Miniſtery of the Word; when he ſhall perceive that they refuſe the light, and will not be reformed, undoubtedly in fury of his wrath, he wil at length plucke them from their places, and ſtamp them to powder, and caſt them into hell. Many be ignorant in every place, and more be prophane, and ſmall is the number of good ſhining lights: but wee muſt remember our dutie, and walke worthy in our calling. If wee hold forth the light of knowledge and obedience, we ſhall ſhine as the firmament in the world to come, Dan. 12. 3.

Pſal. 52. 5.

Golden candleſticks. The Churches of God are not baſe candleſticks, but candleſticks made of gold. There bee two cauſes of this reſemblance: Firſt, becauſe gold is the moſt excellent of all metals: ſo Gods Churches here on earth, are the moſt excellent of all ſocieties. The companies and ſocieties of men in families, townes, and kingdomes, and in other common affaires of this life, be the ordinance of God, and good in their kinde; but yet the ſociety of Saints in the Church of God, doth farre ſurmount them all, and that in theſe reſpects; Firſt, becauſe in GODS Church ſalvation may bee obtained; but in other ſocieties as they are ſocieties, though ſundrie benefits ariſe from them, yet ſalvation is not to be had in them, unleſſe they bee either particular Churches, or members thereof. Secondly, the Church of God is the end of all other ſocieties: and they are all ordained to preſerve and cheriſh the Church, which is the ſociety of the Saints. Thirdly, the Church beautifies all other ſocieties: the principall dignitie of any towne, houſhold, or kingdome is this, that they are either Churches of God, or true members thereof.

From this preheminence of the Church wee are taught, above all things to labour to become true members of this ſociety. Men have great care to become members of incorporations and townes of greateſt privileges; but few there bee that ſeeke for the privileges of Gods Church: And commonly thoſe that ſeeke moſt for privileges in chiefe townes, have the leaſt care to become the true members of Gods Church, which is a wretched practiſe, and ought not to be among us, ſeeing the Church hath privileges farre above all other ſocieties.

Secondly, hence wee are taught above all things, to have care to preſerve the ſociety of the Church of God. True it is, the Miniſter and Magiſtrate muſt have chiefe care thereof, and yet every man in his place muſt doe his beſt endevour hereunto, becauſe it is the moſt principall ſociety.

Thirdly, in that Gods Church is the moſt excellent ſociety, giving honour to all others; wee are taught within the compaſſe of our callings, as much as we can, to bring all other ſocieties unto this. Thoſe that are maſters of families, muſt labour to bring every one in their family to bee good members of the Church: And ſo in civill ſocieties, men of government muſt labour that the members of the civill bodie, become alſo members of Chriſts body. Thus governours of kingdomes ſhould labour that the parts of their dominions may be particular Churches of God. And there is good reaſon of this duty; becauſe all other ſocieties without this, are companions of men in the darke, ſitting in the ſhadow of death, being ſpiritually blind, and without allſound comfort in their ſoules. Secondly, the Church is compared to a candleſticke of gold, becauſe of all ſocieties among men, it is moſt precious and deare unto God: and therefore it is reſembled to a ſeale on Chriſts heart, and a ſignet on his arme: yea, it is as deare unto him as the apple of his eie, Zac. 2. 8. The church is the Queen that ſtands on Chriſts right hand in a veſture of gold, Pſa. 45. 9. yea, that which ſurpaſſeth all, Chriſt redeemed the Church unto himſelfe by his owne blood. Oh then how deare and precious is ſhe in his ſight! And hereby alſo we are taught the ſame inſtructions that did ariſe from the former preheminence; namely, to have ſpeciall care of Gods Church to preſerve the ſame, and to labour to become our ſelves, and to bring others to bee members thereof. And thus much of the title of the Church.

Can. 8. 6.

Act. 20. 28.

Vers. 13. Now it is added, that Chriſt the Meſſias is in the midſt of the ſeven golden candleſticks: whereby is ſignified: firſt, that Chriſt is preſent with his Church at all times: and ſecondly, that being preſent, he hath care to gather his Church: and being gathered, to preſerve the ſame againſt the gates of hell, and all other enemies.

From hence wee learne ſundry things: First, that the ſupremacy of the Church of Rome, wherin one is made head of the militant church is needleſſe: for Chriſt is preſent alway with his Church, having ſpeciall care to gather, guide, and preſerve the ſame; and he needeth no Vicar generall to ſupply his roome: for in the preſence of the Prince, all commiſſions of vicegerency doe ceaſe; though Chriſt had granted this ſupremacy to any, yet ſo long as Chriſt is preſent, their commiſſion muſt ceaſe; and it is as great pride, and greater, for any to preſume to be head of all Churches in Chriſts preſence, as for a man to ſit Vicegerent in the preſence of the Prince.

Secondly, ſeeing Chriſt is alwayes preſent with his Church, we are taught to walke with God, and before God, as Enoch did, Gen. 5. 22. Which dutie ſtands in theſe points: First, whatſoever we ſay, or take in hand, we muſt doe it as in the preſence of Chriſt. Secondly, wee muſt continually depend upon Chriſts providence, who is ever preſent with his Church, providing all things for the good of his Church, and of every member thereof. Thirdly, wee muſt doe all our actions as looking for approbation at the hands of Chriſt: for which end we muſt take direction for the ſame out of his word. The practiſe of this duty is moſt excellent: for by walking with God, wee ſhall be enabled to many good duties, as namely, live unblameably in this wicked world, making conſcience of all ſinne, and approving our ſelves both to God and man in heart and life. And thus much for the place where Iohn ſaw Chriſt.

The ſecond argument whereby Iohn deſcribeth Chriſt, is his figure, or forme, in theſe words, One like the ſonne of man. Some thinke that theſe words are a deſcription of ſome Angell, not of Chriſt, becauſe hee is ſaid to be like the ſonne of man, not the ſonne of man himſelfe; but they are deceived. For he which is here deſcribed, is before called the firſt and the laſt, it is he which was dead, and is alive; which cannot agree to any but to Chriſt. Now the words may more ſignificantly bee tranſlated thus, One like to a ſonne of man: for if it bee tranſlated that ſonne of man, then Chriſt muſt needs bee the reſemblance: for ſo he is called, Act. 7. 56. But here Chriſt is ſaid to bee like to a ſonne of man, by the uſuall phraſe of the old Teſtament: whereby is meant that hee is like unto a man. And Chriſt is not here called a man, but is ſaid to be like unto a man, becauſe he appeared unto Iohn not in his true Man-hood, which was then in heaven, but in the likeneſſe of his manhood. And note this, that as Chriſt here appeared to Iohn in this viſion, ſo did he alwayes appeare after his aſcenſion. Stephen indeed ſaw his true manhood, but it was in heaven: and Paul heard his voice when he was converted: and ſaw the Lord, 1 Cor. 9. 5. But no man can prove that Christ appeared unto him in his true manhood, unlesse it were in heaven. And in all these visions Iohn saw not his true manhood, but a resemblance thereof. Now Christ appeared thus for speciall consideration. For man is too much addicted to his bodily presence; this was the fault of his owne friends and Disciples. Therefore Christ would hereby teach us, not to seeke for his bodily presence, but rather to lift up our hearts to heaven, and therefore seeke to have fellowship with him by faith. For this cause hee said to Mary after his resurrection, Touch me not, I am not yet ascended to my Father, John 20.17. This Paul had learned, Though we had knowne Christ (saith hee) after the flesh, yet hence-forth know we him no more, 2 Corin. 5.15. Now if Christ after his ascension never appeared in his true manhood, it teacheth us, that the defence of Christs reall presence in the Sacrament is needlesse. For if Gods Church have spirituall fellowship with Christ by faith, it is sufficient. Againe, whereas Christ appeareth in the shape and forme of man after his ascension, the Papists gather, that we may make images of Christ, and so answerably of the Father, and of the holy Ghost, in those formes wherein they appeared: as of the holy Ghost in the form of a dove; and of the father in the likenesse of an old man. Answ. It is not unlawfull to make, or to have an image of Christs manhood, so that it bee out of religious use, (though it be doubtfull whether any now have a true picture thereof:) but if it be to represent whole Christ, God and man, or be used to remember Christ thereby, or to worship Christ therein, it is an idoll. As for the formes of an old man, or of a dove, they may be made for the manifestation of the history of the Bible, when it is painted or pictured: but then wee must conceive, that these formes are no images of the Father, Sonne, or holy Ghost, but onely representations of such visible appearances, as sometimes were signes and pledges of the presence of those persons. But now to abstract those formes apart from the History, and to make them images of any person in the Trinity, is flat against the second Commandement; which doth generally forbid all images of God, not accepting those verie shapes, in which himselfe tooke liberty to testifie his presence for some time. And there being no exception against Gods commandement, it is in vaine to seeke shifts and excuses for a thing forbidden, specially considering wee may not meddle with God, above our commission from God.

Act. 7.

Act. 9. 5.

that

Mich. 5. Dan. 7. 9.

De Deo nil fine Deo.

Cloathed with a garment downe to his feet: Here Christ is further described by his attire. The first part whereof is, A long garment reaching to his feet. The causes why hee so appeared may be these: First, to signifie that hee is the high Priest of the new Testament, and so continueth, doing the offices of the high Priest for his Church after his ascension, in presenting the merit of his owne onely sacrifice, and making intercession to God the father for them. For the long garment was one of them, wherewith the high Priest was cloathed in his ministration under the Law.

Secondly, to signifie that he is the Prince of peace: for the long garment, not onely in the Church of God, but among the heathen, hath beene alwayes a note of peace: and so Christ is called, Isa. 9.6.

Thirdly, to shew that he had in his brest the treasures of the wisdome of the Father, and the spirit of counsell. For this long robe alwaies pertained to them that excelled in counsell and wisdome: and so Christ is described, Isa. 11.2. Now in this example of Christ, we may learne a duty touching our attire; namely, that the outward garment of the body, should be suitable to the good things that ought to bee in the heart: as to our wisdome, knowledge, feare of Gods name; to our sobriety, modesty, temperance, humility, and all other vertues whatsoever. Wee must not onely in speech and action, as in hearing Gods word, and receiving the Sacraments, shew our selves to be burning lights; but even by the gesture and attire of our body, both for matter and forme, shew forth the grace of our hearts. But miserable are these times, wherein mens attire is surable, not to the graces of God that should bee in their hearts, but to the common corruption of the times. For such it is generally, whereby afarre off (though hee never had acquaintance with the partie) a man may see the vanity and lightnesse of his minde, the pride and folly of his heart that weareth it.

Col. 2.3. Isa. 11.2.

The second part of Christs attire is this: Girded about the paps with a golden girdle. It hanged not loose about him, but was girded close to his body: whereby is signified, that hee is a Mediator, every way ready prepared to doe the office of a Mediatour for his Church: for in all ages, the girding of the attire to the bodie, hath beene a signe of care and diligence in the businesse they have in hand; and the contrary not girding, a signe of carelesnesse, and negligence therein. When Christ was here on earth, he was most pitiful to all penitent sinners, he rejected no such that came unto him, but regarded them farre more than the Scribes and Pharisies, that were the learned men among the Jewes. And since his ascension hee hath not left off his care and diligence, but is alwayes ready, doing all such duties which may appertaine to their salvation.

Luk. 12.35,36.

The consideration whereof, is a matter of excellent comfort unto all such as have any sparke of grace. First, hereby wee learne, that when we truly humble our selves, Christ is ready to receive our prayers, and in all our troubles and temptations ready to releeve, to comfort, and deliver us; & in our death ready to receive our soules: yea at all times prepared to do whatsoever may further our salvation. He is not like to Pharaohs butler, who promised to remember member Joſeph while he was in priſon with him, but forgat him quite when he was advanced to honour againe. But hee is alwayes mindefull of us and ever ready to doe all the workes of a mediator for us. Whence we are taught anſwerably, to have our loynes girded, as Chriſt commandeth, Luke 12. 35. being ever ready to doe all duties that concerne Chriſtianity: as to call on Gods name, and to praiſe God, to practiſe faith, repentance, and obedience; fit to die, and fit to live: never ſuffering our ſelves to bee unfit for any thing that concernes our ſalvation, but at all times to ſtand upon our watch, that whenſoever God ſhall call, we may be ready to enter into the kingdome of heaven. But alas, the caſe with moſt men goeth farre otherwiſe: they fit themſelves for the world at all times; but few ſeeke to prepare themſelves for the Kingdome of heaven till death doe come.

Gen. 40. 23.

This ought not to be: it is a treacherous part in any ſubject, to bee unprepared for the ſervice of his Prince, and yet ever ready to receive a common enemy. And it is no leſſe treaſon againſt God, to foreſlow our preparation for the Lord, by fitting our ſelves for the world.

Further, he is ſaid to be girded; not about the loynes, but about the paps and breſt. Whereby ſome ſay, (and not unfitly) is ſignified, that there is no defect, or aberation in any motion or affection in our Saviour Chriſt, but every thought and inclination of his heart, is kept in order by the fulneſſe of the ſpirit, which dwelleth in him bodily.

V. 14. His head and haires were white as white wooll, and as ſnow: and his eyes were as a flame of fire.

In the third place, Iohn here deſcribes Chriſt by the parts of his body. The whiteneſſe of his head and haires, ſignifieth the eternity of Chriſt. For howſoever as hee is man, hee had a beginning, yet in regard of his Godhead he is eternal, and therfore is called, The ancient of daies, Dan. 7. and is ſaid to have been in the beginning, Joh. 1. 1. that is, to have had a being before all other things had their beginning.

In this reſemblance of his eternitie, by head and haires as white as wooll and ſnow, hee giveth us to underſtand, an honour and prerogative in the aged man, whereby he excelleth the younger ſort: to wit, the hoareneſſe and whiteneſſe of his haire: for which cauſe in the word of God it is ſet forth by moſt worthy compariſons as by the white Almond tree, Eccleſ. 12. 5. and by a glorious ſilver crowne, not made by man, but by the hand of God ſet upon his head. And herein doth this excellency of the aged conſiſt, that they beare the Image of Gods eternity before all that are of younger yeares. From whence all younger men are taught to reverence the aged, by riſing up before them: acknowledging thereby the preheminence of the hoar-head.

Lev. 19 23.

Againe, hereby the aged are taught to carry themſelves anſwerable to their eſtate and condition: they ought to excell all their youngers in knowledge, wiſdome, and experience of good things: 1 Joh. 2. 13. I write unto you Fathers, (that is, aged men; who by reaſon of years are fathers) becauſe you have knowne him who is everlaſting.

Alſo they muſt be holy, as he that is eternal is holy, whoſe eternity they ſhew forth: And therefore Salomon ſaith; The white head is a crowne of glory when it is found in the way of righteouſneſſe: that is, in one that walketh in the way of righteouſneſſe, Prov. 16. 31. for his white haire ſignifieth, that he hath ſpent much time and care about good duties. But it is no ornament, unleſſe it bee joined with holineſſe of hart and life. Which I ſay, becauſe many younger men excell the aged in the knowledge of God, and other vertues, which is a ſhame to the gray-headed; for as they goe before others in yeares; ſo they ought to excell in picty, knowledge, and all vertues. Ignorance and looſeneſſe of life is a foule vice in any; but in him that beares the ſilver crowne, intolerable. For how can they looke for reverence from the younger, when as they be far inferiour to them in gifts of grace? It is no excuſe for old men to ſay, Their wits are not ſo ripe as young mens are, and their memories faile them. Their aged ignorance argueth, that they ſpent the time of their youth looſely, and prophanely: For they that be planted in the houſe of the Lord, ſhall bring forth fruit in their age, Pſal. 62. 13, 14. A plant is young, and therefore hee that would weare the crowne of glory in his age, muſt receive the ſap of grace in the houſe of God while he is young.

And his eyes were as a flame of fire: Here Iohn proceedeth in deſcribing the parts of Chriſts body. In the handling whereof, it is hard for any to ſet downe certainely, what the holy Ghoſt intendeth in every particular. It ſhall be ſufficient for us to follow that interpretation which is moſt probable, and beſt agreeing with the tenour of Gods word.

In this deſcription of Chriſts eyes, are ſignified to us two things: Firſt, that Chriſt the mediator and redeemer of his Church, is of moſt quicke, ſharpe, and piercing ſight, ſo as he beholdeth all things that are done upon the earth: yea, hee ſeeth into the very ſecret thoughts of mens hearts: thither can the eyes of his Godhead more eaſily pierce, than fire can doe into the ſubſtance of bodily things. And there is great neceſſity it ſhould bee ſo: for being head and governour of his Church, hee muſt know all the parts and members thereof; he muſt behold their ſeverall eſtates, and ſee the malice and practices of Satan, and other enemies againſt them.

Now in that Chriſt our Saviour hath this piercing ſight, we are taught to have care, not onely onely of our words and actions, but alſo of the very ſecret thoughts, purpoſes and deſires of our hearts: for the piercing eye of Chriſt ſeeth them all, therefore we muſt be ſure they be well ordered. In the courts of men, thoughts and inward motions beare no action; but with God it is otherwiſe. Chriſt Jeſus hath a fiery eye, that ſeeth into all our thoughts, and there hee holdeth a Court of Judgement. Therefore wee muſt keepe a godly watch over all the imaginations of our hearts, that they may be approved of Chriſt, leſt for them wee be judged and condemned.

Secondly, this teacheth us in matters of religion to be that in deed, which wee ſeeme to be in profeſſion. For though we may deceive men, which know not our hearts, yet wee cannot deceive Chriſt: For by his fiery eyes hee ſeeth whatſoever is in us. And yet the common practice of the world is hereby bee reproved, who terme them hypocrites that take upon them any profeſſion for the name and religion of Chriſt. But herein men goe beyond their calling; it belongeth onely unto the piercing eye of Chriſt, to judge and looke at mens hypocriſie of heart.

Secondly, by theſe firy eyes is ſignified, That Chriſt is full of anger, wrath, and judgement againſt all ſinners, ready to take vengeance on all thoſe that will not yeeld ſubjection unto him by turning from their ſinnes, and beleeving in him: for Chriſt as he is a Saviour, ſo is he a judge; and therefore in the parable he ſaith, Thoſe mine enemies, that would not that I ſhould rule over them, bring them hither, and ſlay them before me. The conſideration hereof ſerveth to wake many an one out of the ſleepe of ſinne. This age is miſerable, if we regard the practice of faith and repentance which God requireth; for men live in ignorance without knowledge, they goe on in looſeneſſe of life without reformation; which is both ſcandalous unto men, and odious unto God: not one of an hundred turneth to God at the preaching of his word, renewing his waies by daily repentance. But unto many it is meat and drinke to goe on in thoſe ſins wherein their hearts delight. But let theſe men conſider, that Chriſt is a righteous Judge, beholding his enemies with fierce and firy eyes, alwayes ready to take vengeance on them that doe not repent: and therefore they muſt in time conſider their eſtate, for if they perſevere in their evill wayes as they have begun, the truth is, hee ſtill beholdeth them with his firy eyes, and though in his great patience he ſpare them for a time, yet at length he will put in practice the execution of his judgement, and ſlay them for enemies; as it is in the Parable, Luke 19. 27. Let them remember what a fearefull thing it is to fall into the hands of God, if his wrath bee kindled never ſo little, Pſal. 2. 12.

verſ. 15 And his feet like

A unto fine braſſe, burning as in a furnace, and his voyce as the ſound of many waters.

The word in the originall ſignifieth Braſſe that ſhineth, which for ſubſtance is pure and durable, a very choyce and excellent kinde of braſſe. And hereunto Chriſts feet are compared, to ſignifie unto us his invincible power, whereby he is able not only to encounter with ſinne, Satan, and death, but alſo that he hath already entred combat with them, and hath bruiſed the heads of theſe his enemies. Yea, hereby is ſignified, that hee hath not onely done theſe things in his owne perſon, but alſo will doe the B ſame in all his members, by his invincible power, unto the end of the world. Which is a matter of exceeding great comfort to Gods Church and people, never to bee forgotten. If any man be exerciſed in any grievous temptation of Satan, he muſt not be aſtoniſhed and confounded therewith: but remember, that Chriſt our Saviour hath the braſen feet, wherewith he hath bruiſed the head of the Serpent, and will (if hee ſeeke unto him unfainedly) bruiſe in him the Serpents head: ſo by experience ſhall wee finde the benefit of his braſen feet.

If any bee oppreſſed with the corruption of his nature, whether it be in thoughts or affections; let him come unto Chriſt Jeſus, lay open his wants before him, ſhew his ſinnes, and make
C knowne the ſtrength thereof unto him, and withall cry unto him for helpe: and hee ſhall finde by joyfull experience, though they were never ſo many or mighty, That the power of Chriſt in him, will vanquiſh and ſubdue them all.

Againe, doth any feare the terrours of death (as all men doe by nature) let him conſider, that Chriſt hath his feet of braſſe, wherewith hee did encounter with death upon the croſſe: and not content with that, went downe with him into his owne denne, and there did bruiſe his head, and ſubdue his power. Indeed if death were to encounter with us in his full ſtrength, it were a matter of feare: but conſidering that Chriſt hath bruiſed his head, this muſt
D ſtay our hearts againſt overmuch dread. And as it ſerveth to miniſter comfort to the godly, ſo it is a matter of all terrour and woe unto thoſe that live impenitent: for Chriſt hath feet of braſſe to bruiſe the head of all his enemies, and ſuch are all thoſe which goe on in ſin: unleſſe they turne, deſtruction will bee their end. Let every one therefore looke unto his ſoule, that hath led a courſe in any ſinne. Let him forſake his old maſter Sathan, and the workes of darkneſſe, and turne unfainedly to Jeſus Chriſt in the practice of faith and true repentance, and by all obedience in the duties of his callings. For howſoever the patience of God may ſtay for a time the execution of his juſtice & wrath, yet in the end they ſhall feele by woefull experience the deſtroying power of theſe his braſen feet.

Burning as in a furnace. Feet aſcribed to God and men in Scripture, doe oft-times betoken their wayes: So here by Chriſts feet wee may underſtand his workes and wayes. And whereas they are ſaid to burne as in a furnace; thereby is ſignified the perfection thereof. All the counſels of God, with the execution therof in the creation and government of the world, with all his works therin, are all moſt holy and pure, like fine braſſe purged in the furnace. Pſal. 18.30. The waies of God are uncorrupt, yea, hee is holy in all his wayes. Pſal.111.7.

The conſideration whereof, muſt teach us to conceive and ſpeake reverently of all the workes of God, even of thoſe moſt ſecret and ſtrange judgements, whereof wee cannot comprehend a reaſon. Yet becauſe they proceed from God, wee muſt acknowledge them pure and juſt. In ſundry points of religion there is a learned ignorance, whereof this is not the leaſt: to hold our ſelves content, and to reverence the workes of Chriſt, though wee ſee no reaſon thereof; nay, though to us they ſeeme againſt all reaſon: for all the wayes of God are uncorrupt. Though the blinde eye of man cannot diſcerne the light of the Sunne, yet the Sunne is full of light: ſo though our blinde eyes cannot behold the purity of Gods workes, yet they are all done in juſtice and equitie, yea, they are juſtice it ſelfe: for his will is the rule of juſtice. And we muſt not thinke that God doth a thing becauſe it is good and right, but therefore is the thing good and right, becauſe God willeth and worketh it. Example hereof wee have in Gods word: [a] God commanded Abimelech to deliver Sarah to Abraham, or elſe hee will deſtroy him and his houſhold. In mans reaſon this might ſeeme unjuſt: for why ſhould Abimelechs ſervants be puniſhed for their maſters fault? So [b] Achan ſinneth, and all the hoaſt of Iſrael is puniſhed. David committed Adultery, [c] and the childe which hee begat dieth. David numbreth the people: but all the people are ſmitten with the plague, 2 Sam. 24. All theſe to mans reaſon may ſeeme unequall: yet being the workes of God, wee are with all reverence to judge them moſt juſt and holy. Againe, the Scripture ſheweth plainely, that God in his eternall counſell hath decreed to ſave ſome, and to reject others: and his reaſon moving him thereto, is not any thing foreſeene in them, but his will and pleaſure alone. This in mans reaſon ſeemeth to bee cruelty towards ſome: and therefore ſundry men diſclaime this doctrine, as charging God with injuſtice and tyranny. But herein they greatly offend: for it is the manifeſt truth of God in his word, and therefore ought with reverence to be acknowledged, though we can ſee no reaſon theref: For who art thou, oh man, that pleadeſt againſt God? Rom. 9.20.

[a] Gen.20.

[b] Ioſh.7.

[c] 2 Sam.12.18.

Rom.9.

And his voice as the ſound of many waters. The voyce of Chriſt is reſembled to the ſound of many waters for two cauſes. Firſt, to ſignifie the loudneſſe and greatneſſe of it: the ſound wherof hath beene heard thorow all the world in the Miniſtery of the Goſpell. Secondly, to ſhew the power and efficacie thereof in the eares of his creatures: for ſuch power it is of, that when the creatures were not, Hee but ſpake the word and they were made, Hebr. 11.3. This powerfull voice of Chriſt, brought [d] Lazarus out of the grave after hee had beene dead foure dayes, bound hand and foot. And by this voice of Chriſt ſhall they that have been dead ſix thouſand yeares before, bee raiſed up to life: The houre ſhall come, in the which all that are in the graves ſhall heare his voyce, and ſhall come forth to judgement, Joh. 5.28, 29.

[d] Joh.11.43,44.

Hereby then wee may ſee the great ſecurity and the deadneſſe of mens hearts in this age. For though the powerfull word of Chriſt bee daily ſounded into the eares of many; yet it entereth not into their hearts. They live ſecurely in their ſinnes, though they be daily exhorted to repentance. But ſhall dead Lazarus ſtart out of his grave, when Chriſt ſaith, Lazarus come forth? Nay, ſhall they that were conſumed to duſt many thouſand yeares before, at the hearing of Chriſts voyce, riſe out of their graves? And ſhall wee which live in body, be no whit affected with it in our ſoules? Oh, fearefull death in ſinne! And yet this is that ſtate of all thoſe that will not bee moved to leave their ſinnes by the miniſtery of the Word. It may be the outward eare receiveth the ſound, but the dead heart receiveth no inſtruction. Wee muſt therefore apply our hearts to this powerfull voyce of Chriſt; and leave the ſinnes wherein wee have lyen dead, that ſo the quickening power hereof unto ſalvation may appeare in us.

V. 16 And hee had in his right hand ſeven ſtarres: and out of his mouth went a ſharpe two edged ſword: And his face ſhone as the Sunne ſhineth in his ſtrength.

Here Iohn proceedeth further, to ſet out the parts of Chriſts body, and the properties thereof. By ſeven Stars wee are to underſtand ſeven Angels: that is, (as Chriſt expounded them, verſe 20.) the ſeven Miniſters of the ſeven Churches of Aſia. And they are called ſtarres for theſe cauſes: Firſt, ſtarres give light to men on earth: And ſo the Miniſters ought to give ſpirituall light to them that live in the Church, both by doctrine, and by an unblameable converſation. Secondly, ſtarres have their continuall abode in heaven, and deſcend not unto the earth: So Miniſters above all others ought to have their converſation in heaven. This indeed is the dutie of every Christian: but especially of the Minister, in regard of his calling. And this heavenly conversation hee must expresse: first, by seeking the conversion of his owne soule; and then the conversion of others, that they may have an eternall mansion in heaven. Thirdly, they are called starres, because (if they be faithfull) they shall bee honoured of God, and made to shine as the starres for ever and ever, Dan. 12. 3.

is

It is added, that they are in Christs right hand. Whereby is signified that to him belongeth the regiment, and government, and the whole disposition of the ministerie for matters that concerne the Church. From whence arise sundry instructions:

I. That it is Christ who giveth to his Church ministers which preach the Gospell. For hee [a] ascended upon high, and gave gifts unto men, some to be Apostles, some Prophets, and Evangelists, some Pastors and Teachers for the gathering together of the Saints, and for the worke of the Ministery, and for the edification of the body of Christ. And for this cause we ought to pray daily unto Christ, [b] that he would thrust forth labourers into his harvest: that the remnant of Gods elect may bee gathered, and so wee see an end of these miserable daies wherein we live.

[a] Eph. 4. 11, 12.

[b] Matth. 9. 38.

Secondly, in that Christ holdeth them in his right hand, we may gather that Christ giveth protection and defence unto his ministers, when they are faithfull and walke in their calling according to his will: which is a matter to be considered of all that are called into this office: For they have sundry occasions of discouragement; as the negligence and backwardnesse of their people: the slanders and mockings of the enemies: But this protection of Christ must comfort them against them all; seeing they are in Christs right hand, they must goe on with all godly boldnesse.

Thirdly, this sheweth the dignitie of this calling. Indeed it is despised and reputed base in the world; and hereby many are driven from it. But let the wicked judge what they will: Behold Christ honoureth it, for his faithfull ministers are not onely present before him, which were no small thing: but he holdeth them in his right hand, than which, what greater glorie can bee done unto them? This must be an inducement unto all those that are indued with gifts fit for this calling, to effect the same.

Lastly, every Minister of the Gospell must hereby learne to be faithfull in his calling, and holy in his conversation: for by vertue of his calling he is placed in Christs right hand. Now shall we thinke that Christ will long beare in his right hand any that are unfaithfull, or prophane? Nay he will take them out of his right hand, and put them under his feet of brasse, and there grind him to powder: For as they are honoured above others by their place, so shall their confusion be the greater, unlesse they bee faithfull. This we may see in Nadab and Abihu, Levit. 10. 1. and Hophni and Phineas, 1 Sam. 3. 13. And in the same respect ought all the people of God to bee carefull to their wayes; for by their calling of Christianitie they bee members of Christ. Now if they be not faithfull and answerable to their profession, he will surely deale with them, as with unfaithfull ministers, put them under his feet of brasse, and confound them for ever. They must therefore make conscience of all sinne, and become not hearers only, but doers of his will; so shal Christ protect them in this life, and save them eternally.

And out of his mouth went a sharpe two edged sword. This sword that came out of his mouth, is nothing else but the doctrine of the Law and the Gospell, uttered and propounded in the writings and ministerie of the Prophets and Apostles: Hebr. 4. 12. The Word of God is lively, mightie in operation, and sharper than any two edged sword. And it is thereto compared, because as a sword with a double edge entreth sharply into the flesh, and pierceth deeply into the bones, even to the very marrow: so the doctrine of the Law and the Gospell entreth sharply, and pierceth deeply into the very marrow of the heart of every man, to the dividing of the thought and the spirit. This two edged sword, the Word of God, hath a twofold operation: One upon the wicked: Another in the elect. It woundeth the wicked at the very heart with a deadly wound, and thereby brings them to eternall death: Isay 11. 4. Christ shall slay the wicked with the breath of his lips: that is, with his word, which is this two edged sword. Herewith shall he consume Antichrist, 2 Thes. 2. 8. visit Leviathan, and slay the dragon; that is, the greatest enemies of his Church, Isay 27. verse 1.

Here consider how the Word of God should kill an impenitent sinner. There bee three degrees of spirituall death: First in this life, where an impenitent sinner receiveth his deadly wound: The second at the end of this life, when the bodie is laid in the grave, but the soule goeth to the torments of the damned: The third at the end of the world, when body and soule together goe to hell eternally. Now a sinner receiveth in this life his deadly wound after this manner; Christ in the giving thereof hath a threefold worke in the heart by the ministerie of his Word, which is the two edged sword. First, hereby he revealeth unto him his sinnes, as hypocrisie, pride, and rebellion of heart, with all other his horrible and damnable transgressions against the first and second table: 1 Cor. 14. 24, 25. When all prophesie, and there commeth in one unlearned, he is reproved of all: the Prophets by the Word judge him, and thereby lay open unto him the secret sinnes of his heart, with the sinnes of his life. Secondly, Christ hereby revealeth unto him his indignation and wrath, which is the curse of the law due due unto him. In which regard the law is called a 2 Cor. 3. 6. a killing letter, shewing no mercie, but onely thundering out the fierce wrath of God upon transgressors. Thirdly, hereby Christ awaketh his guiltie conscience, sharpneth the sting thereof, and terrifieth him at the hearing of his Word. Thus wicked Felix trembled when hee b Act. 24. 25. heard Paul preach b of repentance, righteousnesse, and the judgement to come. So when c Dan. 4. 6. king c Belshazzer saw the palme of the hand, writing things against him upon the wall, his countenance was changed, his thoughts troubled him, his joynts were loosed, and his knees smote one against another. And all these are wrought in the wicked without apprehension of mercie, or reformation of life. It may please God to recover one that is thus wounded; but while he is in this estate, he hath received a deadly wound, and without unfeined repentance, is already in the first step towards eternall death: for these horrours of conscience, severed from the apprehension of Gods mercy in Christ, are no grace, but the flashes of hell fire, and the beginning of eternall woe. And thus we see how Christ by his word woundeth his enemies.

Hence we are to learne sundry duties. First, how to carrie our selves towards them that after they have heard the Word preached unto them, will rage and storme against it, and the preachers thereof, because it touched them. We must not despise or maligne them, but rather be moved with compassion towards them. For this their behaviour is a token they are wounded with the sword of Christ at the very heart, and these their ragings are nothing but struglings before death eternall; unlesse the Lord in mercy recover them of this deadly wound.

II. Hereby we are let to see and know the lamentable state of the greatest number in those congregations where the word hath long been preached; for we shall finde by lamentable experience, that in those places few come to true knowledge, repentance, and obedience; but most remaine ignorant and impenitent: now this their condition is most fearefull. A terrible judgement of God is upon them: for when men have long heard Gods Word, and are not thereby bettered, for knowledge in minde, and obedience of life; they are thereby wounded unto death.

This two edged sword hath alwayes his worke: it either cureth unto life by working repentance and other graces of salvation; or woundeth unto death them that receive it not.

Wee must therefore lament the case of such persons, as remaine ignorant and impenitent under the ministerie of the Word; for they are as yet dead men for ought we know, howsoever they may make a faire shew by their civill honesty. If any man should come into a field, & there behold many thousands slaughtered, and gushing out bloud, some in the head, some in the side, &c. this sight would make his heart to bleed. Well, this is true in Gods Church, though it be not seene with bodily eyes, the most men are wounded with this sword of Gods Word, and lie pittifully wallowing in the bloud of their soules, while they continue in ignorance, in security and want of repentance.

III. This must admonish us all to labour earnestly to have further things wrought in us, than a knowledge of our sinnes, an apprehension of wrath, or horrour of conscience: namely, true faith and repentance, and sound reformation of life: for without this, we have nothing in us but the deadly wounds of Christs enemies. And thus much for the worke of the Word upon the wicked.

The second worke of this two edged sword is in Gods elect; in them it hath sundry works, all which tend to their subjection. First, it woundeth to the quicke the corruption of their nature. This is one special cause why it is called a two edged sword, because it entreth deeply into the heart of Gods children, and giveth their corruption such a deadly blow, as it shall never recover againe: It killeth not the person, as it doth in the wicked: but quickening the soule, it woundeth his corruption. Paul ministred the Gospel, a that the offerings up of the Gentiles might be acceptable. Where resembling Gods Church to a sacrifice, he giveth us to understand, that every true Christian must bee slaine, though not in body and soule, yet in regard of sinfull motions, corrupt affections, and rebellious actions, by this two edged sword of the spirit. And this is his conversion whereby the root of corruption is stocked up.
a Rom. 15. 16.

Secondly, after conversion, this two edged sword serveth to cut off and pare away the remnants of unbeleefe, doubting, impietie, anger, and other sins that be in the elect: Every branch (saith Christ) that bringeth forth fruit in me, my Father the husbandman pruneth, to make it bring forth more fruit.
Ioh. 15.

Thirdly, it serveth to keepe Gods children in awe and subjection unto him. In this vision, Christ standeth in his Church, holding up the scepter of his kingdome, which he beareth in his mouth for this end, that though his enemies will not bee brought in subjection unto him, yet his owne children might hereby be kept in awe of him. He therefore that will not at the lifting up of the two edged sword tremble and feare before Christ, is but a rebellious subject: If there be brawling in humane societies, let the Magistrate but shew himselfe with the sword of justice, and straightway every one is quiet; if any resist, he is taken for a rebell. Now shall this be affected in civil policie, and not be true in Christs spirituall government? unlesse therefore we will shew our selves rebels against Christ, let us cease from sin, and tremble before him, seeing he holdeth out unto us the scepter of his Word.

Fourthly, this sword serveth notably for our de-defence and victorie in all temptations: Eph. 6. 17. The sword of the spirit, the Word of God, is one peece of the compleat armour of a Christian. Herewith did Christ vanquish Sathan, Mat. 4. And thus wee see how the Word of God is a two edged sword, in regard of the elect.

D Hence we are taught, that when wee have the doctrine of the Law and of the Gospell preached unto us, wee must with all reverence heare and receive the same. Men will heare it while it is taught generally, but if it once touch their particular faults, then they cannot brooke it. But wee must suffer it to ransacke our hearts, and be glad thereof: for by this meanes our corruption is wounded, and sinne slaine in us; our soules are converted unto God, and shall be saved. If any man were diseased with a Fistula, or any other dangerous sore, hee would willingly suffer the Surgeon to search and pierce into the same. Shall we doe this for our bodily health, and shall we not suffer the word of God to enter into our hearts to rip up our sinnes, that they being wounded and subdued, wee may be healed, and so our soules live for ever? we cannot live unto God, till we die unto sin: and we cannot die unto sinne, till the same bee wounded in us by this two edged sword. Away therefore with all nicenesse, in disliking the word when it crosseth our humour; and if wee love eternall life, let us then embrace it most willingly.

Saint John saith further of this two edged sword; that it came out of Christs mouth. Other kings carrie their swords and scepters in their hands; but Christ beareth his in his mouth, to teach us this speciall point. That we must receive no doctrine from any man, which he hath not received from the mouth of Christ. For first, God revealeth his will unto his sonne, and Christ delivereth it unto his Prophets and Apostles by the spirit, and to his Ministers in their writings. They therefore must deliver nothing unto Gods people, but that which they have from Christ: if they deliver ought else, they hold not forth Christs sword: neither can it have that powerfull effect, either in the godly or in the wicked.

And his face shone as the Sunne shineth in his brightnesse. Here is the last branch of this description of Christ; he is compared to the shining of the Sunne, and that in his strength: because Christ is unto his Church as the Sunne is to the world. And looke what duties the Sunne performeth unto the world, the same duties Christ performes unto his Church in a more excellent manner, as their resemblance will evidently declare.

First, the Sunne in the world dispelleth night and darknesse, and maketh the day by bringing light: so Christ the Sunne of righteousnesse, Malach. 4. 2. sendeth downe the bright beames of knowledge and grace into his Church, whereby blindnesse and ignorance is taken away, 2 Cor. 4. 6. And hereby every one, of what

A sort or place soever, is taught first, to labour for knowledge in the will of God. A great shame it is for any to be ignorant herein: when the day commeth we set open our windowes, to let in the light of the Sunne for our comfort: behold Christ Jesus is ever a shining light in his Church: Why then should wee not open our hearts, that the beames of light and knowledge which descend from him, may enter into us, and give us light? Secondly, we must hereby learne in out whole conversation among men, to walke by this light. We are here but pilgrims travelling towards heaven: and the way of this miserable world is full of darknesse: yet Christ Jesus is in the middest of his Church, shining as the Sunne in his strength, to give the light of
B knowledge, whereby we may see the right way thither. Without him there is nothing but darknesse and wandring: his Word is the light, and himself is the day starre. We therefore must attend unto him in all our affaires of this life: and in the particular duties of our lawfull callings, take direction from the light which shineth from his face.

Secondly, the Sunne serveth most excellently to comfort and revive cold and dead starved bodies; as experience in the spring time teacheth: So Christ Jesus by the worke of his spirit, conveyeth spirituall life and heat into the dead and frozen heart of man: he is of power to comfort them that mourne, to give life to the broken-hearted, and to revive the spirit of the
C humble, Isay 57. 15. and for this most excellent worke, may well be called the Sunne of Righteousnesse. In regard whereof, we must labour above all things, to be partakers of this life and joy which commeth from Christ. In Winter time men use to stand in the Sunne, to comfort and warme themselves with the heat thereof. Behold, Christ Jesus is the Sunne of righteousnesse to his Church, which giveth heat and life to all the true members thereof. We therefore must seeke above all things, to have his blessed beams of grace to shine upon our cold and frozen hearts, that by his spirituall heat wee may be received unto everlasting life. In this world nothing is so much regarded, as riches, honours, and pleasures; Who will shew us any
D good, is the worldlings song. But with godly David we must say, Psal. 4. 4. Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us, quicken thou us with thy spirituall life, and comfort us with the beames of mercie. Quest. How may I get gracious beames of grace and life, to come from this Sunne of righteousnesse into my heart? Answ. Before a man can live by Christ, he must be killed in himselfe. Men doe not kill those whom they would restore to temporall life, but the Lord taketh that course. Thou therefore must suffer this two edged sword to enter into thee, yea, to be thrust up to the hilts into thy heart, that so thy vile sinnes and corruptions may bee ripped up, and the wrath of God deserved thereby made knowne unto thee, that in thy selfe thou mayest bee out of hope: and then, and not before art thou to receive comfort and life by Christ; as a man that is cold in bodie, is most fit to receive heat by cloaths and other meanes of warmenesse. Now being thus humbled in thy selfe, thou must use the meanes which God hath ordained, to wit, the hearing, reading, and meditating in his Word, with earnest prayer for grace and mercie; and then shalt thou perceive the joyfull beams of life shining into thy soule. If any man had all the world, and wanted this grace of life and comfort by Christ, it were but a curse unto him: but though a man want all things else, yet by this life of grace in Christ he is blessed for ever: and therefore above all other things men should labour for it.

unto

Thirdly, the Sunne serveth to discover all things. In the night nothing is discerned, but all things appeare in one forme: but when the Sunne commeth forth, all things are made manifest, even the small motes in the aire. Even so Christ Jesus the Sunne of righteousnesse, hee seeth all things, and can discover the most hidden secrets of men: nothing is hid from the light of his countenance, so infinite is his divine wisdom and knowledge. In regard wherof wee must bee moved to looke unto all our wayes, both thoughts, words, and actions, that they bee such as Christ approveth; for though we may deceive the world by a false glosse, yet all that wee doe speake or thinke, is naked and bare before him; he knoweth the same, and can and will reveale it.

If this were beleeved and remembred, it would be a meanes to suppresse much fraud and injustice, and many grievous sinnes which are rife in the world. Men thinke if they can bleare the eyes of the world, all is well, they may doe what they will: but wee must thinke upon the shining face of Christ, which discerneth and discovereth all secrets; and labour thereupon to make conscience of all our wayes, yea, of our secret thoughts, that God may approve the same.

V. 17 And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead: then hee laid his right hand on mee, saying, Feare not, I am the first and the last.

V. 18 And I am alive, but I was dead: And behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen: And I have the keyes of hell and of death.

A Here Saint Iohn describeth Christ further by other arguments: namely, by sundry actions of his. The first whereof is a confirmation of Iohn being sore afraid, set downe in this and the next verse. In which action note two things; First, the occasion thereof: Secondly, the means of his confirmation. The occasion was Iohns exceeding feare, set downe in these words: And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. The meanes of confirmation, in the words following, Then he laid his hands upon me, &c.

For the occasion. Iohns feare was exceeding great, and that of death, as appeareth by Christ his confirmation: wherein he telleth Iohn, That he liveth, and hath power over death. In this his feare note sundry points: The cause, the effect, B and the kinde of this feare. For the first; The cause was Christ his appearance in glorie and majestie unto Iohn, set downe in these words, When I saw him. Where we learne, that sinnefull men since Adams fall cannot abide the presence of God. [a] Adam before his fall talked face to face with God without feare: but so soone as hee had sinned, [b] hee fled away at the hearing of his voice, and hid himselfe among the trees of the garden. This feare commeth by reason of mans guiltinesse before God. Hence Manoah said to his wife, [c] We shall surely die, because we have seene God.

[a] Gen. 2.
[b] Gen. 3. 8.
[c] Iudg. 13. 22.

First, by this, that no sinfull man can abide the presence of God, wee are taught to labour to become new creatures, to have the image C of sinne defaced in us, and the image of God restored in righteousnesse and true holinesse. True happinesse consisteth in fellowship with God: but wee can never have true fellowship with him while we live in our sinnes: 1 Joh. 1. 6. If we say we have fellowship with him, and walke in darknesse, we lie. We therefore must labour to be purged from our sinnes, and so his presence shall be our joy.

Secondly, this feare of Iohn at Christs presence in glorie teacheth us, That the sight and presence of Gods majestie is a most excellent meanes to humble a man, and to make him know himselfe to be nothing in himselfe. When Abraham talked with God, the more hee beheld the majestie of God, the more he humbled D himselfe, confessing at last, that he was but dust and ashes, Gen. 18. 27. And Peter by a great draught of fishes seeing but a glimmering of divine majestie in Christ, could not abide it, but cried out, Depart from me, for I am a sinfull man, Luke 5. 8. And so the holy Angels, when they stand before the Majestie of God, are said to cover their faces and their feet with their wings: to signifie that they are nothing in regard of the exceeding majestie of God, and in themselves unable to behold his glorie.

Thirdly, hereby we are taught to acknowledge Gods great goodnesse towards us in the Ministerie of the Word: wherein he vouchsafeth to speake unto us, not in his owne person, as he did in mount Sinai, which would be so terrible ble that none could abide it: but favourably and familiarly by the ministery of men that are like unto our selves. Many abuse this mercy of God, and despise the Word because of the messenger; but we must learne by this bountie of God to receive the Word with all reverence as from the Lord.

Lastly, in this exceeding feare of Iohn, who was an Apostle and a very godly and righteous man; we learne that the most holy man that is will be astonied even to death with the presence of Gods glorious majestie. And if no man, be hee never so holy, can stand before Gods presence, much lesse can the most righteous works of any man endure the triall of his judgement: if his person cannot abide his presence, his works will never beare his judgement. For the person must first bee approved, before the works be accepted. Therefore damnable is the doctrine of the Church of Rome, which teach that such as in themselves are sinfull men must stand before Gods judgement seat, bringing with them works of grace, as meanes of their justification, and part of satisfaction to Gods justice. It is a doctrine of desperation: for how can our works be perfectly holy seeing our persons are but sanctified here in part? And who can think that the infinite justice of God can be satisfied by the imperfect righteousnes of man.

II. Point. The effect of this feare in his body; He fell downe as dead at his feet. This was no small feare, but exceeding great, astonishing his senses, and laying him downe as dead. Physicians say, and that truly, the minde followeth the temperature of the body. But hence we may as truly say, That the body followeth the disposition of the minde; for the affections of the soule will worke upon the body like unto strong diseases. Iohns feare casteth his body into a swound: And so horrour of conscience when the heart is cold will make the body hot, & the intrals to roule in the body. The same may bee said of anger: 1 Reg. 21. 4. when Ahab could not obtain Naboths vineyard he laid him down on his bed in displeasure, & was almost dead: even so will other affections worke upon the body.

Hence we learne, that the bodies of men being diseased, must not alwaies be cured by bare Physicke, but sometimes by curing of the mind, and ordering of the affections: for when the distemper of the body ariseth from the disorder of the minde, then till the minde be well composed and settled, physicke will little availe.

III. Point. The kinde of this feare is insinuated in these words, he fell at his feet; whereby the holy Ghost giveth us to understand, that this was a religious reverent feare, which he bare to Christ. For this kind of prostrating the body betokeneth humilitie, and argueth a reverent estimation of the thing feared.

Hence wee are taught, when wee come into the presence of Christ to prostrate our selves as Iohn did, and looke that wee bee stricken with a religious feare of his majesty. If any shall

A thinke that Christ is now ascended into heaven, and therefore we cannot now fall down at his feet as Iohn did. I answer, though Christ bee now in heaven, yet hath he his feet upon earth, at which we must fall downe. In the old testament the mercy seat was the pledge of Gods presence; and therefore it is called Gods foote-stoole, Psal. 99. 5. before which the Jewes were to fall downe. Well, though the mercy seat be now taken away, yet some thing is in stead thereof: For where soever Gods people assemble themselves in the name of God, there is his foote-stoole: and therefore in the assemblies of Gods Saints, we must cast downe our selves before Christ Jesus, and doe all duties unto him with all feare, awe, & reverence of his majesty.

B This feare of Iohn, though it was holy, yet is it tainted with some sin and corruption: for it was immoderate feare of death which made him thus astonished and affright. Whence we learne that the most holy affections of righteous men are not perfectly holy, but mixed with imperfection according to the measure of their sanctification, which is alwayes in part in this life. Whereby it appeares that no man hath in him a filiall feare of God alone, but some servile feare (wherby we feare God for his judgments) is mixed therewith. And thus much for Iohns feare, which is the occasion of his confirmation.

Now followeth the meanes of his confirmation in these words, Then hee laid his right hand upon me, saying, Feare not, I am the first, and the

C last: and I am alive, but I was dead: and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen: and I have the keys of hell and death. Here note two things first, the time when Christ used the meanes for Iohns confirmation: secondly, the meanes themselves. The time is noted in this word, then; that is, after his presence had stroken a feare in my heart, which made me as dead, then the Lord used meanes to comfort me. The meanes of comfort and confirmation are then used when the partie is humbled. And thus the Lord dealeth with all his servants in the matter of their salvation: First, hee bruiseth their stonie hearts, and woundeth their sinfull soules, before hee powreth in the oyle of grace. First, a man must be a lost sheep, and then Christ findeth him and

D layeth him on his shoulders, and bringeth him home. And indeed they that would finde sound comfort by Christ, must first bee humbled in themselves. And the reason why men reape so little comfort either by the Word or Sacraments, is the want of true humiliation before they come, whereby the soule is fitted for grace and consolation.

II. Point. The meanes used by Christ to confirme Iohn, and they are two. First, a sensible signe, He laid his right hand upon me. Secondly, comfortable words, Feare not.

Here first observe in generall, Christs gracious dealing with Iohn: he useth not one meanes apart, but in great mercy, that he may thorowly confirme Iohn, he giveth him both a signe and and words. And so he hath alwayes dealt with his servants: When he called Moses to be a deliverer of his people; First, hee gave him his word, saying, I wil be with thee: and then a signe, saying, Upon this mountaine shall ye serve God, Exod. 3. 12. So when hee would confirme the heart of Ahaz against his enemies, hee first gives him a promise of deliverance, v. 7. then biddeth him aske a signe, v. 11. And for this cause Christ in the publishing of his Gospell, addeth signes and miracles unto his Word, that the truth thereof might be fully confirmed. And so in the worke of our salvation, besides his mercifull promises, which were sufficient in respect of his fidelitie, he giveth us further signes and seales to support our weakenesse, and to confirme our faith in the assurance thereof, even the use of the holy Sacraments.

Esa. 7.

This teacheth us, that Christ hath a speciall care over his Church and people, in that hee doth so condescend and abase himselfe unto their weakenesse, adding unto his Word, which of it selfe were sufficient, signes and tokens, that by both he might more evidently give that assurance, which by one alone our weakenesse would not so well conceive.

Againe, in this meanes of confirmation, note the order which Christ useth: First, he giveth him the signe of his presence; Laying his hand upon him, to assure him of protection from all danger of death. Then he giveth him his word, bidding him not to feare. Hence we may learn, that the assurance of Gods presence and protection, is a soveraigne remedie against all feare. When Moses feared the great calling hee was sent about; to take away that feare, the Lord saith, I will be with thee. Hence David saith, He will not feare though he walk through the valley of the shadow of death, because God is his stay and comfort. Wherefore it concerneth us to labour to be assured not onely of Gods presence, but of his providence and speciall protection: And so in all dangers both of life and death we shall have stay and comfort for our soules.

Exod. 3. 12.

Psal. 23. 4.

The Lord having used these two meanes to confirme Iohn, both a signe and his Word; doth yet further condescend unto Iohns weakenesse, and establisheth his own word by two reasons: The first, in these words, I am the first and the last. Christ is the first, because nothing was or could be before him: The last, because nothing is or can be after him. These two titles are given unto Christ, to expresse his Godhead and eternitie, as before we have heard, v. 8. Now here they are againe set downe, to give us to understand, that he hath in his owne power the beginning and end of all things; and therefore is able to protect his servants from all dangers, and from death: and will make good unto them all his promises unto eternall life.

v. 18. And am he that liveth, but I was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen: And I have the keyes of hell, and of death.

These words containe the second reason to confirme Iohn. And it may thus be framed by way of a distinction; Although I was dead, yet I am he that liveth, (for so the words are) and behold I am alive for ever, Amen; yea, I have power over death and hell. This distinction containeth three parts: First, Though I was once dead, yet I am he that liveth. Secondly, Though I was once dead, yet I live for evermore. Thirdly, Though I was once dead, yet I have the keyes of death and of hell. Of these in order.

I. Part. And am he that liveth, though I was dead. Here life is ascribed to Christ in a speciall manner: For Christ liveth in a peculiar sort different from the life of other creatures. For first, he hath sufficient life in himselfe, and from himselfe: Secondly, he giveth life to others. For the first, that we may better conceive it, we must know that life is twofold, uncreated and created. Uncreated life is the life of God, whereby God liveth: This life is eternall and infinite in it selfe, and from it selfe. Now as Christ is God, he liveth this uncreated life; which is all one with the Godhead. Againe, created life is twofold: The first is naturall, preserved by meanes of meat and drinke. The second is spirituall, both begun and continued by meanes of the immediate operation of Gods Spirit, whereby we have fellowship with God. And this spirituall life is more perfect than the naturall. Now Christ liveth not the naturall life, but as he is God liveth the uncreated life: and as he is man he liveth the spirituall life, his body and soule having all their subsisting, and sustentation in the second person in Trinitie: and therefore he hath in himselfe most absolute and perfect life, and so liveth of himselfe.

Secondly, Christ is here said to live, because he giveth life unto men: & that two wayes: First, as he is God; and so he giveth life to all good & bad; For in him every thing liveth, moveth and hath his being, Act. 17. 28. Secondly, as he is mediatour, God and man; and so he giveth spirituall life unto his Church and people. Hence he saith to his Disciples, Because I live, ye shall live also, Joh. 14. 19. For looke as Christ died not for himselfe, but for us, that we might not die eternally: so now he liveth in heaven the spirituall life, not for himselfe alone, but for us, that we might live that spirituall life in and by him eternally. And therefore our life is said, To bee hid with God in Christ. And for this cause in the Sacrament, we do eat the body, and drinke the bloud of Christ really by the mouth of faith, that we might know that our life is to bee fetched from him. For as we receive grace from his grace; so we receive life from his life.

Hereby we are taught to seeke for this spirituall

tual life at Christs hands: that we may say with Paul, I live not now, but Christ liveth in mee, Gal. 2. 21. and that our life is hid in Christ, as in a head and root. For hee liveth in heaven that wee might live by him. Our care must not be so much for our temporall life, which is but a vapour, and like a fleeting shadow, as for this spirituall life which is eternall. But the practice of this dutie is rare to be found, though the omission of it bee a grievous sinne. Mens whole care is for temporall life: few thinke on this, how to procure to themselves this spirituall life by Christ; though hee have said, I live that you may live in mee. This appeareth by their common practice: They will goe ten, twentie, yea an hundred miles to provide meanes for their bodily preservation; and yet will scarce goe one or two miles to provide the meanes of their salvation for ever. The cause thereof is, the hardnesse of mens hearts, which are not touched for their sinnes, nor feele the smart and weight thereof. This we may see plainly in the woman of Samaria. For when Christ sate at the Well of Iacob talking with her, and telling her that he was the well of life, of whose water whosoever dranke should never thirst, she did nothing but cavill with him: But when he laid to her heart her principall sinnes, then she left off cavilling, and in reverence, and some beginning of faith, acknowledged him to be the Messias. Even so let the Minister say unto his people, hee can bring them to the water of life; they will nothing regard, but cavill at the doctrine of the Gospell, till their sinnes bee touched, and their soules humbled by the sight thereof. Wherefore if we would have our hearts fitte to receive spirituall life by Christ; wee must first labour to have a sense of our sinnes, and to feare Gods wrath due unto us for the same. Hereby we shall be weaned from the dangerous love of earthly things, and our soules shall bee ravished with desire of Christ Iesus. Hee is the Well of life: and if once we could feele a parching heat in our soules, by reason of our sinne, then would wee thirst and never be at rest till wee had drunke our fill, and dived our selves in his saving merits. This naturall life is but vanishing, and therefore wee must labour for this spirituall life by Christ, which is eternall. This will comfort us in all distresse: and take from us the feare of death, of hell, and all danger.

The second part of the distinction: Though I was dead, yet behold, I live for evermore, Amen. This point is uttered and propounded by two notes to be observed: first, by a note of certaintie, Amen. Secondly, By a note of attention, Behold. The note of certaintie, Amen serveth to assure us, that this is an infallible truth which Christ affirmeth of himselfe, saying, I live for evermore. The note of attention which is prefixed, Behold, serveth to stirre up Iohns minde, and the minde of every one of us, to a serious consideration of this which Christ saith, I live for evermore. And because it pleaseth Christ to propound this point in this manner, let us a little stand thereon, and herein consider two points. First, in respect of what nature Christ is said to live for ever. Secondly, for what end he liveth for ever. For the first. No doubt as Christ is the Mediator of the Church, he liveth for ever: and therefore this must be understood of Christ, in regard of both his natures, Godhead and manhood. In respect of his Godhead, he is coeternall with the Father, and with the holy Ghost, living of himselfe that uncreated and eternall life, which is all one with the Godhead, being eternall, without beginning or ending. Secondly, he liveth for ever as he is man: for after his death hee ascended up to heaven, where in full glory he enjoyeth immediate fellowship with the Godhead: for in him dwelleth the fulnesse of the Godhead bodily; his manhood being wholly & immediatly sustained by his Godhead.

II. Point. The end for which Christ liveth for ever, is to give eternall life to his Church, and to every true member thereof. So S. Iohn saith, This is the testimony of God, even the Father, that hee hath given us life everlasting, and this life is in that his Sonne. And here Christ must bee considered of us, as the head of his Church, as the root and ground of our salvation, and the fountaine of all our happinesse. For as the root of a tree liveth not for it selfe, but for the body, and for all the branches: even so Christ Iesus he hath eternall life in him, not for himselfe alone, but that hee may convey the same to all his members. Yea, we must consider Christ as the common treasurie and storehouse of all true felicitie; wherein life eternall is laid up for all the members of his Church: for which cause hee saith, His flesh is meat indeed: and whosoever eateth his flesh, and drinketh his blood, shall live for ever; to give us to understand, that his man-hood hath quickning vertue in it: yet not of it selfe, or by it selfe, but as it is the manhood of the Sonne of God. For from the Godhead it receiveth this quickning power, to give eternall life unto the Church. And here the meanes must bee considered, by which Christ giveth life unto his Church: namely, by vertue of that mysticall union which is betweene him and every member of his Church. Which union is thus caused: God the Father giveth Christ unto his Church, and to every one that is to be saved by Christ; and that really and truly, according to the tenour of the covenant, in which hee hath promised to give Christ with all his benefits to every one that beleeveth. The manner and order of this gift is this: Whole Christ God and man is given to every beleever, even as hee is Mediatour. And yet the God-head of Christ is not given with the man-hood, but onely the vertue and operation of the God-head in the manhood; by which the manhood is made able to merit for the beleever. But the man-hood of Christ is given both for substance, and in regard of all benefits that are conveyed to man by it, as justification and redemption:

1 Ioh. 5. 11.

Ioh. 6. 54, 55.

demption; as truly as lands and goods are given of man to man. And when God giveth Christ to any, he doth withall give unto the same party the spirit of Christ: for hee that hath part in Christ, hath part in his spirit, and this spirit createth in his heart the instrument of faith, by which Christ given of the father, is received and apprehended; both his body and bloud, and the efficacy and the benefits thereof. Christ is not received in imagination, as men receive things by conceit in the braine, but as hee is given of the Father; namely, in the word and Sacraments really and truly, though spiritually. And the same spirit that worketh this faith, doth knit the beleever unto Christ really, though mystically, making him one in Christ; so as Christ is the head, and the beleever a member. And thus is this mysticall conjunction wrought, from whence proceedeth this eternall life.

The benefits that come from this mysticall conjunction are these:

I. Hereby a beleever begins in this world to live eternall life: for by the worke of his spirit, Christ maketh that man that is thus united unto him, to begin to die unto all sinne, and to live unto him spiritually as himselfe liveth.

II. Hence commeth the resurrection of the bodie: for this conjunction being once begun, remaineth eternall, and is never wholly broken off, no not from the body, while it is consumed to dust and ashes. Looke as in the winter season the sap returneth to the root of the tree, and then all the branches seeme as they were dead: but when spring time commeth, by vertue of the sunne, the sap ascendeth, and maketh them fresh and greene againe: even so, the bodies of Gods children have their winter season, while they lye dead and rotten: but yet by vertue of their union and conjunction with Christ at the last day, shal life be conveied from Christ Iesus unto them, whereby they shall bee raised to life.

III. Hence commeth eternall life to every beleever: that is, glory and blisse in bodie and soule in heaven for ever and ever: so being once begun (as it is in this world) it is never dissolved. And thus wee see how Christ conveyeth eternall life unto his members.

The words bearing this sense, doe containe in them the foundation of two maine Articles of our beleefe: namely, the resurrection of the body, and life everlasting: for both these are effected to us, by vertue of our union with Christ; for he liveth for ever to give life to us. And this is the ground of all true joy: as wee may see in Iob, who in the middest of his misery stayed himselfe on this, That he knew his Redeemer lived, and that he should rise againe, and behold him with those same eyes wherewith he saw other creatures, Job 19.25,26.

2. Againe, if Christ live in heaven to give unto us eternall life, then must wee learne to have our conversation in heaven with Christ; for where our life is, there should our conversation bee. Now that our conversation may bee with him, wee must often seriously consider with our selves of this everlasting life, which Christ there keepeth in store for us: and for this cause principally doth Christ here say, Behold, I live for ever.

3. This also must move us to put all our affiance in him, and to place all our joy and rejoycing in him. Men have most regard to that part of their body, by which the whole bodie and every member liveth. Well, wee professe our selves to bee members of Christ, and in him is hid our spirituall life; wee therefore must set our hearts and affections on him especially.

The third part of the distinction is this: Though I was dead, yet I have the keyes of death and of hell. Here we must not imagine that hell is a bodily place kept with locke and key, and doores, as mens dwelling houses are: that cannot bee proved by any place of Gods word. Neither yet that the torments thereof are bodily, such as be inflicted in this world: but rather they are spirituall, being the apprehension and feeling of Gods wrath and vengeance, whose jealousie burnes like fire. But Christ in this phrase borroweth a comparison from stewards of great houses, who at their installing into their stewardships, have the keyes of all things given unto them. Which giving of the keyes is a token of regiment and authoritie bestowed upon them. And the meaning is this; That Iesus Christ though hee once died, yet by his death did vanquish hell and death, and hath obtained full power and dominion over them both for evermore.

Hence arise sundry instructions; first, that power and authority to forgive sinnes properly belongeth only unto Christ. No meere creature hath this power: for hee that can forgive sinnes, must bee able to take away the punishment of sinne, namely, hell and death; which none can doe but Christ alone, who hath the keyes thereof. And to say, that a man can properly forgive sinnes, is to say, that a man hath power in himselfe over hell and death. And therefore the Priesthood of the Church of Rome is full of blasphemy, who take upon them properly to pronounce unto men the pardon of their sinnes of themselves: and they deride the custome of reformed Churches, who from God pronounce the pardon of sinnes unto them that repent.

Secondly, hereby we are taught to reverence Christ, and to performe unto him all due honour and royall obedience. If wee have done this heretofore, we must now begin: and if wee have done it, wee must indevour to doe it more. For Christ hath the keyes of hell and death, he can open the gates thereof at his pleasure, and cast thither whom he will. Many deceive themselves through their false conceit of Christ: they thinke not of him as of a Judge, but as a Saviour onely: they make him all of mercy and pittie; and thereby they take occaoccasion to goe on in sinne. But wee must consider, that Christ is likewise a righteous Judge, who hath the power of hell and death in his hands, and therefore wee must not flatter our selves in our evill wayes, but strive to please him continually with feare and trembling, lest by our sinnes we stirre up his wrath against us, and cause him to cast us into hell, whence is no redemption.

Thirdly, this is a matter of great comfort unto all those in Gods Church, that in this life unfainedly cleave unto Christ: and especially in time of affliction and temptation, and at the houre of death; for Christ having the keyes of hell and death, is able to keepe them from hell, and from the sting of death. And this hee will do because they trust in him, for he hath promised it. If this were alwaies sounding in our ears, it would minister endlesse joy unto our soules against the servile feare of hell and death.

V. 19. *Write the things which thou hast seene, and the things which are, and the things which shall come hereafter.

Here Saint Iohn propoundeth a second action of Christ. For having confirmed Iohn against his great feare, he giveth him a commandement to write the things which he had seene, &c. This Commandement was given to Iohn in the eleventh verse, and is here againe repeated for these causes: First, that Iohn might see the speciall care of Christ over his Church, that hee still continueth a provident head thereof, for their good estate after his ascension. Secondly, that Gods Church in all ages may understand, that it is necessary men should know the estate of the Church to be subject unto troubles, that thereby they may better arme themselves against the evils to come. Thirdly, that Iohn might bee fully assured of his calling, to write and publish this booke. Fourthly, that Gods Church in all ages might be out of doubt, that this booke is no device of man, but a booke of God, and part of holy Scripture revealed from Christ to Iohn for the good of his Church. If it be said: though Christ did faithfully reveale his will, yet Iohn might erre in publishing it. Ans. As Christ delivered this to Iohn, so he received and published it faithfully, without all fault either in matter or manner; for wee must make a difference betweene the Prophets and Apostles and all other teachers. As the Prophets in former times, so the Apostles in the new Testament were called immediately by Christ, and had such speciall assistance of Gods spirit, that they could not erre, when they propounded by preaching or writing any doctrine of Christ unto the Church of God: this appeareth by the promises of Christ made unto them, Luk. 10.16 He which heareth you, heareth me, and he which refuseth you, refuseth me; and he which refuseth me, refuseth him that sent me. Againe, Mat. 10. 20. It is not you which speak, but the spirit of your Father speaking in you: Ioh. 14.26. he promiseth to send his spirit to bee their comforter, which shall teach them all things: yea, to lead them into all truth, Iohn 16.13. Which promise some apply to all Gods Ministers; but if we marke the circumstances thereof, we shall see that properly it agreeth to the Apostles: for though in others the certainty hereof cannot bee affirmed, yet in them it may: for which cause, in the Councell at Jerusalem thus they write unto the Churches; It seemeth good to the holy Ghost, and to us; as being assured of the certaine direction of the holy Ghost: which no Ministers ever since could say, being subject to errour both in speaking and writing. This distinction must bee held for the certainty of our faith in the points of religion, and for our assurance of the faithfull penning and publishing of this booke. And thus much of the causes of this repetition. Act. 15.28.

In the words of this Commandement is contained the division of this whole booke, Write the words which thou hast seen: that is, set down what I have shewed thee in this vision. And which are; that is, all things which I reveale unto thee touching the present estate of the Church. And which are to come hereafter; that is, those things which concerne the future estate of the Church to the end of the world, as I will reveale unto thee. Thus then is the whole booke distinguished: I. It containeth things touching the present estate of the Church in Iohns dayes. II. It intreateth of things which concerne the future estate thereof from Iohns time, to the end of the world.

Hence observe the lawfulnesse of the art of Logicke: for divisions are lawfull, (else the holy Ghost would not here have used them) and so by proportion are other arguments of reasoning: and therefore that art which giveth rules of direction for the right use of these arguments, is lawfull and good. Those men then are farre deceived, who account the arts of Logicke and Rhetoricke to bee frivolous and unlawfull, and in so saying, they condemne the practice of the holy Ghost in this place.

V. 20. *The mystery of the seven starres which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlestickes is this: The seven starres are the seven Angels of the Churches, and the seven candlestickes which thou sawest, are the seven Churches.

This is the third action of Christ: namely, the interpretation of the Vision in the principall parts thereof; which hee expoundeth for these causes: First, Iohn in this businesse was to shew himselfe a Prophet of God, by declaring the present and future estate of Gods Church. Now the principall part of a Prophet, is to expound visions or dreames revealed either to himselfe, or to others; as we may see in Daniel and the rest of the Prophets. Secondly, that Iohn might be encouraged in the publishing of this booke, and of the things revealed unto him: For Iohns calling respected the Church of God. And when he should perceive these visions to concerne the Churches, this would stirre up his diligence, in observing and penning the things revealed.

Now Christ expounded not the whole vision, but two principall things therein: namely, what was meant by the seven starres; to wit, the seven Angels, or the seven Ministers of the Churches: And what was meant by the seven golden candlesticks; namely, The seven Churches themselves. The reasons why both were so called, wee have shewed before, with the use thereof. Here onely I will observe these three points: First, why Christ in the interpretation of his vision doth not expound the whole, but onely two principall parts thereof. This hee doth for these causes: First, because he hath given unto his Church the gift of interpretation, which hee would have them to exercise about this vision: For if he had expounded every part himselfe, then hee had left herein no matter to his Church, whereabout shee might exercise her gift. Secondly, to provoke Gods Ministers especially, with other members of his Church, unto all diligence in studying this and other parts of Scripture. For if all things were easie and plaine, then men would grow careless in reading and searching out the knowledge of Gods word. Thirdly, to stirre up in every Reader of this booke an earnest and hearty desire to understand the same. Fourthly, to excite all his servants to prayer and invocation upon God for his grace, that they may with reading the Scripture understand the true meaning thereof.

II. Point. Note here, the Ministers of the Churches are called Angels. What these Angels are, appeareth in the Chapters following, to wit, the Pastors and Ministers of these seven Churches of Asia. So Matth. 11. 10. Iohn Baptist is called Christs Angel or Messenger: whereby we have good light for the expounding of a place in Paul, 1 Corin. 11. 10. saying, That the woman ought to have power over her head, that is, be covered, because of the Angels. Where, by Angels may well be understood the Preachers and Ministers of the Gospell. And the reason of that precept may be this: Among the Corinthians the covering of the head was not as it is with us, a token of preheminence and superiority, but a signe of subjection. And therefore the Apostle would have the women of Corinth, when they came into the congregation, to have their heads covered according to the custome of their country in other assemblies, to signifie their submission and reverence unto the ministery of the Gospell.

Use. Whereas Ministers are the Lords Angels and Ambassadors: hence we gather that every Minister of the Gospell must carry himselfe as the Messenger of the Lord. Messengers have regard of two things; of the matter of their message, and of their manner of delivery, that they speake all which they are commanded, and in such order as their Lord and Master would have it spoken, or speake it himselfe if hee were present: and hee that faileth in either of these, may justly bee challenged of unfaithfulnesse. The Minister therfore being Christs Messenger, must deliver the whole will of Christ alone unto his people: as also in that manner which Christ approveth, and would himselfe observe if he were present. Now can wee once imagine, that Christ would deliver his will partly in English, partly in Latine, and other languages, or intermingle with the testimonies of the Prophets and Apostles the sentences of Fathers, of Philosophers, Poets, and other writers? Those therefore that in this sort dispense Christs Gospell, doe hereby bewray unfaithfulnesse in their deliverie. Indeed this is counted the learned kinde of preaching: But it is not that manner which Christ approveth. And besides, if this kinde of teaching may take place, it will bring in as great barbarisme, in regard of true Divinity, as was among the Schoolemen, when Gods word was wholly turned unto needlesse disputation, yea, it would shortly banish the Gospell out of this land.

III. Point. Note the phrase which the holy Ghost useth; hee saith not, The seven starres signifie the seven Angels, but are the seven Angels: and the seven candlesticks are the seven Churches; giving to the signe the name of the thing signified. Wherein we have a good warrant for our exposition of that phrase in the Sacrament, This bread is my bodie: this cup is my blood: Which the Papists understand properly of the very bodie and bloud of Christ by reall transmutation. But as these seven starres are said to be seven Ministers, because they did signifie the seven Ministers; so is the bread called the body of Christ, because it signifieth and representeth his body, and the cup his bloud. And as it is absurd to say, the seven Ministers were indeed seven stars, because they are so called: so it is absurd to hold the bread in the Sacrament to be really Christs bodie, or the wine his bloud, because it is so called. And thus much of the third action of Christ in the interpretation of this vision.

CHAP. 2.

Chap. 2.

Vers. 1. *Unto the Angel of the Church of Ephesus write; These things saith hee that holdeth the seven starres in his right hand, and walketh in the middest of the seven golden Candlesticks.

IN this chapter and in the next, is contained the fourth action of our Saviour Christ: wherein hee giveth seven particular commandements to Iohn, to write unto the seven churches of Asia, and to send unto them seven letters or Epistles. The first of which commandements is expressed in the beginning of this first verse, Unto the Angel of the Church of Ephesus write: Then after followeth the Epistle, These things saith hee, &c. continuing to the eighth verse. First, for the commandement: the partie to whom Iohn must write, is the Angel: which word may be expounded two wayes: either to signifie the minister or pastor of the particular Church of Ephesus, and so it is commonly taken of the most: or else it may betoken the company of the Ministers, Teachers, and Governours of the Church of Ephesus: for therein were many Pastors and Governours, as appeareth, Acts 20.28. Where Paul calleth together the Bishops (as the Word signifieth) and giveth them charge over their particular flocks. Now in Scripture the name of one person taken collectively, oftentimes signifieth the whole multitude; as Exod.4.22. Israel is my sonne even my first Borne. Where the whole bodie of the people of Israel is called by the name of one man. And so though Antichrist be not one particular man, but a state and company of men in the succession of the Popes; yet is that whole estate noted by the speciall name of one man: As that Antichrist; that man of sin, and sonne of perdition. Thus we see how the word Angel may be taken: and whether we understand it of one man, or of the whole company of elders, it is not much materiall.

In this particular commandement, note two points: First, that Christ his intent is to write to the whole Church of Ephesus, as appeareth Chap.1.11. where Iohn is commanded to write in a booke, and send to the Churches: as also by the conclusion of this Epistle, where it is said, Let him that hath an eare to heare, heare A what the spirit saith unto the Churches: and yet he directeth his epistle not to the whole church, but particularly to the Angel or pastor thereof. This he doth for two causes: First, to intimate unto this Minister his dutie, which stood in two things: In teaching the contents of this Epistle unto the whole Church: and in becomming a pattern and example to them all, of doing the things therein required. Secondly, because either much good or much evill comes to every particular Church by the Ministers therof; such is the efficacie of his place and calling. If he be faithfull, he bringeth great good to the Church: if unfaithfull, exceeding great hurt: as may easily bee proved by many examples in all ages. Now Christ writeth to the Angell of this Church, that he might be a means of much B good unto them all, by exciting them to the practice of all good duties required in this Epistle.

II. Point. Among all the Churches of Asia, Christ writeth first to the Church of Ephesus: not for that this Church had authority over the rest, (for they were all candlesticks, and all of gold) but because Ephesus was the mother city farre exceeding the rest in riches and estimation. Whereby Christ giveth us to understand, that his will is, that those people, townes, and Cities which excell others in estimation and wealth, should also goe before them in knowledge, obedience, and other graces of God. C And so answerably should it be with particular persons: They which excell others for outward reputation and temporall blessings, ought to go before them in spirituall graces, as godlinesse and religion. Those which shall faile herein, and suffer others that are far their inferiours to goe before them in spirituall graces, shall finde it true to their shame before men, but especially at the tribunall seat of Jesus Christ.

Thus much for the Commandement. Now followeth the Epistle it selfe, which containeth three parts (as all ordinary Epistles doe.) A preface, a proposition, and the conclusion. The preface in these words, These things saith hee that holdeth the seven starres in his right hand, and walketh in the middest of the seven golden candlesticks. The proposition and conclusion, in the verses following. The preface is borrowed from the former chapter, vers. 16. and 13. where also it was handled. The intent of Christ herein, is to draw this Church to a reverent adoration of his person: and to cause in them a greater care to embrace and obey his admonition. This appeareth by that twofold action which hee avoucheth of himselfe, to wit, his holding the seven starres in his right hand, and his walking in the middest of the seven golden candlesticks: by the first whereof is signified his power in protecting and governing his Ministers: and by the second is noted his presence in the middest of his Church, guiding and blessing his Ministers with all the members thereof. As if he had said; If I be he that have power to protect and governe, that am present also to blesse and direct both Ministers and people; then my admonitions are to be reverenced and obeyed.

In this preface note two speciall points; first, that Christ here againe repeateth that which was before delivered, touching his presence in his Church, and his mighty power and providence over the same in protecting, guiding, and blessing both Minister and people. By which repetition he would give us to understand, the speciall weight and moment of this point, to wit, that it ought to bee ingraven in the hearts of every one in Gods Church. And indeed till we be perswaded thereof, we shall never learne religion soundly. The ground of true religion is this: To take the true God for our God: and Christ Iesus for our Redeemer: and it consisteth not in a swimming motion hereof in the braine, but in the sure perswasion of the heart, which wee never have till wee bee resolved both of Christs presence with us, and of his providence over us, for our blessing and defence.

II. Point. In this preface also note, that the perswasion of Christs presence and speciall providence in his Church, is a notable meanes to draw us on to all good duties: for thereby Christ would perswade both the Ministers and people of Ephesus, to receive and embrace this his Epistle. And no doubt hee that is indeed perswaded hereof, cannot but bee moved to walke before God in all holinesse and obedience: as did Enoch, Abraham, and all the godly Patriarkes. Thus much for the preface.

V. 2. I know thy workes, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not forbeare them which are evill, and hast examined them which say they are Apostles and are not, and hast found them lyers.

A Here beginneth the second part of this Epistle, to wit, the proposition, containing the substance and matter of the whole Epistle. This proposition hath two points: First, a commendation of this Church, in the second and third verses. Secondly, a rebuke and reprehension, in the 4. verse. The commendation is first generall, in these words; I know thy workes. Then more particular, for speciall duties and actions, in the words following, and thy labour and patience, &c. For the first, I know thy workes: many doe expound this of workes of mercy and liberalitie: but that will not so well stand: for he saith to every Church, I know thy workes; and yet some of them are blamed for want of these good workes. By workes then is meant, the B wayes, that is, the practices and dealings of the whole Church, as well of Ministers as people, in all their affaires. Also by knowledge here wee must understand, a knowledge that goeth with approbation, as may appeare by comparing this with the fourth v. whither it hath relation: for thus they must go, I know thy works and approve of them: and yet I have something against thee. So that his meaning is, I know thy workes, that is, all thy wayes and dealings in thy life and conversation are manifest unto mee, and I doe generally approve of them.

Here first in this testimony of his knowledge, Christ ministreth a remedy against secret sinnes and offences. The theefe, the murtherer, and adulterer wait for the night wherein to attempt their shamefull practices: The C tradesman in secret falsifieth his weights, and mingleth his wares: among most men, fraud, oppression, and injustice doe abound; and all because they thinke, that if men see not, all is well: as David saith, the wicked man saith, God shall not see, he will not regard. But if men could thinke and bee perswaded of this, that Christ seeth and knoweth all their wayes, it would cause them to make conscience not onely of grosse sinnes, but even of their hidden and secret offences.

Secondly, whereas this knowledge is joined with approbation, it may bee demanded, how this can stand with the justice of God, to approve of that which is not answerable to the D tenour of his law, as the best workes of the most righteous man are not, being stained with some corruption, Isa. 64. 6. Ans. The Gospell, which is another part of Gods will, revealeth more unto us than ever the Law could doe: namely, that if a man be in Christ, to him there is no condemnation; and that God will accept this true desire and endevour to please him, for the deed it selfe, 2 Cor. 8. 12. And thus according to the tenour of the Gospell, Christ approveth of their workes in this place, though they were not able to abide the rigour of his law. But a Papist will here reason thus: If a righteous mans workes bee approved of God, then they are no sinnes, (for God will not approve of any thing that is sinfull,) and if his workes workes bee no sinnes, then hee may fulfill the law; and so be justified by his workes. Answ. That which Christ approveth simply, hath no sinne in it; but here hee onely approveth of their workes in part, namely, so farre forth as they came from the worke of his spirit in them. But as they proceed from the will of the worker, which is in part corrupt, they are not free from the staine of sinne; and so hee approveth them not. Againe, workes of grace are approved of Christ with the pardon of sinne; for accepting of the person, hee remitteth the faults that bee in his good workes, and so onely approveth his owne worke in him. And so here wee must conceive of his approbation of their works, to wit, as proceeding from his spirit, and having the faults thereof remitted in his owne merit.

The speciall commendation of this Church is for particular actions: The first whereof is diligent labour, which is an excellent worke, especially in a Minister of Gods word to be painfull in his particular calling, for the faithfull instruction and godly regiment of his particular charge. Hence Paul saith, 1 Tim. 5. 17. Hee that laboured in the word and doctrine, is principally worthy double honor. And herein Paul matcheth, yea, preferreth himselfe before other Apostles, that he laboureth more abundantly in the ministery of the Gospell, than they all, 1 Corin. 15. 10. Hence wee learne that the worke of the ministerie, if it bee done as it ought, is a worke full of great paines and labour; contrary to the common opinion of men, who thinke that the life of the Minister is full of ease, and his calling a matter of nothing, such as may be done with the turning of the hand: but here the judgment of Christ is otherwise, who useth not thus to approve a light or idle worke. Vse.

Secondly, this commendation of diligence in the Minister, must admonish all Christians that desire to bee approved of Christ, to give all diligence to learne and know the will of God, that they may doe the same. And here a common fault is to bee reproved: many will heare, but where is their labour to grow in knowledge and in grace? that is wanting: which is the cause of such fruitlesse hearing as is common in the world. For earthly things men refuse no paines; but Gods heavenly knowledge and graces are not regarded. What a shame is this that men should bestow their strength and wit about base and transitory things, and yet neglect the maine good which concernes their soules for ever?

Thirdly, the Ministers diligence in teaching must provoke conscience of obedience in the hearers; that is the end of his worke, without this hee spends his strength in vaine, and therefore with the Apostle, they must endevour in all things to keepe a good conscience before God and all men, Act. 24. 16.

The second thing which Christ here commends, is patience in bearing the crosse, which doth usually accompanie the Gospell of Christ. And this indeed is praise-worthy in the Angell of this Church; for herein hee goeth before sundry worthy Prophets. Ieremie was marvellous impatient, for the hardning of the people? Ier. 28. 14, 15. And though Ionas had beene schooled in the Whales belly, yet when all things went not according to his minde in the destruction of Nineve, he became exceeding discontent.

Herein must all the Ministers of the Gospell become followers of the Angel of this Church. While they labour in the Gospell of God, they must possesse their soules with patience, and make knowne to all men their meeke and mild spirit. Yea, every Christian in the profession of religion must learne to practise this duty: Luke 8. 16. The good ground receiveth the seed, and bringeth forth fruit: but how? with patience: Neither can we possibly attaine to eternall life, unlesse wee arme our selves with patience to beare the crosse: for whosoever will live godly must suffer afflictions, 2 Tim. 3. 12. Through many tribulations wee must enter into heaven, Act. 14. 22. Vse.

II. Againe, here observe how Christ joyneth labour and patience together: this he doth for two causes: First, to let us see the fruit of sin which God hath set on the labour of man. Before the fall, the labour of mans calling was practised without all trouble or paines; but since mans fall, the best callings have their crosses and vexations, which are the punishments of mans transgression. Secondly, to shew the malice of Satan against the good progresse of the Gospell. Paul saith to the Thessalonians, He would have come to them, but Satan did hinder him. Hee seeketh the trouble and sorrow of the Minister, not onely by stirring up persecution, but by keeping his people from profiting by his ministerie: and therefore every Minister had need to take pains with patience in his calling. 1 Thess. 2. 18.

And as Christ joyneth together labour and patience in the worke of the ministery: so should every Christian after this direction joyne patience with his paines in the duties of his particular calling, whether it be in Church, commonwealth, or family. For look what is the estate of the Minister in his place, such should bee the estate of every childe of God in his. This therfore they must doe: first seek to know the duties of their particular callings, and therein labour and take paines with all good conscience: Then considering the crosse doth accompany godly diligence, they must labour to joine patience with their diligence, for their continuance in welldoing even under the crosse. And for attaining of this patience, they must set before them the promises of Gods blessing and protection while they so continue; not suffering themselves to bee dismaied by any affliction. And if wee shall thus walke in the duties of our particular places painefully, and with patience, we shall have our commendation of Christ Iesus and his blessed reward, which farre surpasseth the praise of men, and their rewards. But on the contrary, if we walke in our callings negligently, or else forsake them because of afflictions; or bee impatient in labour, we shall loose our reward, and undergoe the rebuke of Christ, which is worse than all outward evils that can befall us.

The third speciall worke for which Christ commendeth this Church is, severitie shewed against wicked men; in these words, And how thou canst not beare them which are evill. By evill men, hee meaneth such as lived offensively, and maintained manifest errours and heresies. These shee could not beare, but judged them as burdens: and therefore sought to disburden her selfe of them.

The Vse. D

Hence wee may gather, that it is a necessary thing for every Church to bee purged of evill men. The Church of God in all ages hath put in practice this worke. So soone as Caine had slaine his brother Abel, God cast him out from his face, as appeareth by his owne complaint, to wit, from that particular place where Adam and his family worshipped God. When false Prophets and Idolaters did rise among the Israelites, the Lord commandeth, That they should bee killed and taken from among them. And therefore hee saith to Ieremie, If thou turne and repent, I will bring thee againe, and if thou take away the precious from the vile, thou shalt bee according to my word. 1 Corinth. 5. 4, 5. Paul commandeth in the name of Christ, that the incestuous man bee delivered unto Satan, the Church purged of that old leaven, and that wicked man be put from among them, vers. 13. Besides the evidence of these testimonies, some reasons may bee added to prove the necessitie of this separation. First, God will be worshipped in an holy manner; and they that worship God must bee purged and sanctified; but evill men defile Gods worship, and therefore they ought to be severed from the Church. Secondly, lest the whole Church be infected with the contagion of their doctrine, or the infection of their life: for as leaven sowreth the whole lumpe, so will evill men defile the whole Church. Thirdly, they are burdens to the Church, and therefore must bee cast out. For the Church should bee eased of every burden.

Gen. 4 14.

Deut. 13. 7, 8.

Ier. 15. 19.

This doctrine is the truth of God, and ought to be practised of Gods Church. Whereby we may see a common fault in the most congregations among us; wherein all that will are admitted not onely to the hearing of the Word, but also unto the Lords Table, hand over head without restraint, as though every man were a good and sound Christian: Whereas experience sheweth, that many bee ignorant, many contemners of the Gospell, many Sabbath-breakers, drunkards, and blasphemers, all which ought to be barred from the Sacraments: and in that respect severed frō the Church as burdens.

A

Secondly, hence we may gather, that Christ hath given to his Church a power Judiciall, to suspend evill men from the Sacraments, and to excommunicate them from the outward fellowship of the Church: for else hee would not have commended this minister with his church, for the execution of his power. The reasons alleaged to the contrary, are of no force. I. Say they, the parable, Matthew 13. 30. alloweth the growing together of tares and wheat till harvest; and therefore evill men must be suffered in the Church without separation. Answ. In that parable Christ speaketh not of any particular purging of the Church by Ecclesiastical jurisdiction; but of the universall purging of his whole Church by his holy Angels in the end of the world: for there the field doth not signifie any particular Church, but the whole world; and the servants are not men, but Angels, that must gather together all both good and bad in the end of the world, to the last judgement. Againe, they alleage, Luke 14. 23. Compell them in the high wayes to come into the supper. Here (say they) all must be brought in, but none must bee excluded the societie of the Church. Answ. Christ speaketh not of compelling men unto the Sacraments, but unto the Ministery of the Word, whereto men must bee caused to subject themselves; which hindereth nothing why the ungodly should not be debarred from the Sacraments, which are the seale of Gods mercy in Christ, ordained onely for such as repent and beleeve. Quest. Seeing this separation must be made, how farre forth may wee converse with those that are openly evill and offensive, either for life or doctrine? Ans. Evill men must be considered divers wayes: first, as they be members of some common-wealth, of some city, and incorporation: secondly, as they are members of some particular Church by toleration. In the first regard, it is lawfull for us to converse with them. I. for outward dealings and civill affaires, as bargaining, buying and selling, &c. II. we may maintaine outward civill peace with them; So Paul commandeth the Romanes to have peace with all men as much as in them lay: that is, so farre as it would stand with faith and good conscience. III. In this civill conversing with the wicked, wee must performe all duties of outward courtesie and love unto them, so farre forth as it doth not dishonour God, or hinder the good of the Church. And therefore Paul commandeth us to bee soft and courteous, shewing all meekenesse unto all men; even to evill men, as the reason following sheweth: For we our selves were in time past unwise, disobedient, deceived, &c. and then were we evill.

Secondly, consider them as dwellers in the Church, and members by permission: and so we may live with them in it: for we must not make a separation from the Church, because wicked men are permitted therein. Christ lived among the Jewes, though their teachers and rulers were were both hereticks and hypocrits: and yet we must remember, that living among them, and beholding their wicked conversation, we must not approve of their ungodlinesse, but be grieved for the same, as righteous Lot was for the abominations of Sodome, 2 Peter 2. 7. Further, if it fall out by the negligence of the Governours, that evill men be admitted to the Sacraments, we must not for their company refuse to communicate: for our Saviour Christ living among the Jewes, communicated with them in their Sacraments and service of the Temple, though many of them were notorious both for wicked life and false doctrine. The reason is, for that another mans evill conscience doth not defile our good conscience: but wee may keepe a good conscience in that action wherein the wicked is defiled. Now though wee may thus converse with evill men, yet these two caveats must be observed: I. To have no private company with knowne and open evill persons. This Paul expresly forbiddeth, saying, I have written unto you, that you company not together: that is, in private and familiar manner. II. We must not shew speciall familiaritie to evill persons. God will not take the wicked by the hand, Job 8.20. and we should be followers of God. Therefore S. Iohn saith, If any man come unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into house, neither bid him God speed, 2 Joh. 10. which must be understood of speciall familiaritie: for thereby wee doe not onely performe outward dutie to the person, but also give countenance to their sinnes: which in any case wee must not doe. And thus wee see how to converse with evill men.

1 Cor. 5. 10. 11.

Vse.

Hereby all those are justly blamed, which fit themselves for the humours and dispositions of all companies. This ought not to bee. If any be knowne to be openly wicked, either for life or opinions, wee must not keepe private company with them, or afford them our speciall familiarity; but by withdrawing our selves from them, ease us of such burdens.

Our Saviour Christ having commended this Church for her severity against the wicked, in that shee could not indure them, doth prove the same to bee true by two argumens. The first whereof is contained in these words, And hast examined them, &c. to the end of the third verse. The second, in the 6. verse. For the first, it is taken from the sharpe and round dealing of this Church against evill men; and it hath two parts. First, her discoverie of false Apostles, And hast examined them which say they are Apostles, and are not, and hast found them liers. Secondly, her opposing her selfe against them, being discovered, in the third verse, Thou hast suffered, and hast patience, &c.

In their discoverie of these false Apostles, note two speciall points: first, that God hath given to particular Churches the spirit of discerning. This appeareth by sundry testimonies of Scripture, 1 Corinth. 2. 15. The spirituall man, that is, he which is endued with Gods holy Spirit, discerneth all things. And Paul affirmeth, That the faithful Corinthians did discerne the Lords body, that is, see and put a great difference betweene the bread and wine in that Sacrament, and other common bread and wine: which none that want the spirit of God can doe. Againe, hee biddeth them prove themselves whether they bee in the faith or not: to give us to understand, that they had a gift of discerning, whereby they did know their owne estate, whether they were under the curse, or under grace. And Saint Iohn biddeth the Church trie the spirits: that is, those doctrines which men pretending the gifts of the spirit, did teach. And in this place this Churches discovering of false Apostles, declareth plainly, that shee hath a gift to discerne who bee sent of God to teach his Church, and who not. And hence the godly learned in the Church, are said to have their senses exercised to discerne both good and evill, Heb. 5. 14. And in this regard, the Churches of God differ from all other companies of men. For unlesse men bee of Gods Church, they want this gift of discerning spirituall things that differ; as true Apostles and false, good and bad, truth and falshood, &c.

1 Cor. 11. 29.

2 Cor. 13. 5.

1 Iohn 5. 1.

Vse.

Hence wee may gather, that the Church of God hath a gift to discerne which is a true Church, and which is not: for the Church can discerne whether a man bee a true Apostle, or not, and by the same gift it may discerne the state of any particular Church. Whence also it followeth, that wee may easily see whether the Church of England bee a true Church, or not. It pleaseth some to call it into question, as it now standeth; and they avouch, That it is no Church of God, that there are no true Ministers, no true preaching, or right administration of the Sacraments in it; and that these things with us are illusions of Satan, and our Church his synagogue. But that ours is a true Church of God, is thus proved. The Churches of Germany, France, Scotland, and Italy, that have received the Gospel, are the Churches of God: and they have the gift of discerning which is a true Church of God, and which is not. Now they give the right hands of fellowship unto us, and reverence our Church as the Church of God. To whose testimony wee must rather cleave, than to the opinion of a few private men; and so resolve our selves, that we are the true Church of God.

Secondly, hence wee may gather, that the Church of God hath a gift to discern Scripture from that which is no Scripture. The Papists say the Church indeed hath this gift: but it is by counsell and commission from the Church of Rome: which is a meere forgery. For the Church of Ephesus, which could discerne of false Apostles, could no doubt by the same gift discerne of the bookes of God, and that without counsell from the Church of Rome? for at this this time when Iohn writ, it was a more famous Church than the Church of Rome, and therefore went not thither for counsell.

II. Point. In what things this discerning of false Apostles doth consist. It is a Judiciall action of the Church, consisting in two things here noted; First, in examination of false doctrine and false teachers; secondly, in condemnation afterward. The examination of them is set downe in these words; And hast examined them that say they are Apostles, and are not. Their condemning or sentence-giving, in the words following, And hast found them lyers.

For the first; examination is a gift of God to his Church, and was here used for the triall of false Apostles. Quest. How may any Church try a false teacher? Ans. This is a point of large discourse; but the heads of true examination are these.

First, that Church, or that man that would rightly examine a false Teacher, must prepare himselfe thereunto after this manner: hee must looke that he have a meeke spirit, and a humble heart; for God revealeth his will, not to the proud, but to the meeke and lowly; and as Isay saith, to them that are of a contrite spirit, Isay 57. 15. And in this humbling of himselfe, a man must renounce his owne naturall wit and reason, and become nothing in himselfe but even a foole, in respect of his owne conceit. Also he must unfainedly pray to God, that he would reveale unto him his truth. Aske (saith Christ) and it shall be given you, even the holy Ghost, unto them that desire of the Father. Luke 11. 13. And S. Iames saith, If any man lacke wisdome, let him aske of God, which giveth to all men liberally. Iam. 1. 5.

Secondly, after preparation hee must labour to know throughly what the false teachers are, and what be their opinions, with the grounds and foundations thereof; wherein they agree, and wherein they differ from the truth of God, maintained by the Church: for it is a foule oversight to misconceive the state of the adversaries question, by propounding it otherwise than they hold, as it falleth out with many in the handling of controversies.

Thirdly, due proofe must be made, whether the adversaries doctrine bee of men or of God. This is Gods Commandement, 1 John 4. 1. Prove the spirits, whether they bee of God, or not. And for triall hereof, we must have recourse unto the word of God; it must bee judge in this cause: Isa. 8. 20. To the law, and to the testimony; if they speake not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. Joh. 5. 39. Search the Scriptures, for in them ye look to have eternall life, and they are they which testifie of mee. Who so fit to judge in the matters of God, as God himselfe? and so hee doth in his written Word, of all doctrine and opinions in religion. The Scriptures shew whether the doctrine examined bee directly gathered thence, and by just consequent or not.

Fourthly, serious consideration must be had of the faith and lives of the teachers examined: for a false teacher by Gods just judgement is usually a wicked liver. And therefore Christ saith, Ye shal know them by their fruits: if they be throughly examined, such they will appeare, howsoever for a time they may blear the eies of men: as the histories of the Church in many famous heretikes doe plainly declare. Matth. 7. 16.

The second branch of this discovery, is sentence-giving, in these words: And hast found them lyers. The Church here giveth out a sharpe and severe sentence against them, shee calleth them false Apostles, and lyers; and yet she sinneth not, for Christ commendeth her for it. Though to raile or taunt cannot beseem any, yet Magistrats and Ministers in their places may give out severe speeches against offenders, in token of detestation of their sinnes, and not offend. Thus Iohn called the Scribes and Pharisies a generation of vipers, Matth. 3. 7. and our Saviour Christ called Herod a Fox, Luke 13. 32. and Paul called the Galatians fooles, Gal. 3. 1. And in this place the Church calleth these false teachers lyers, which is very much: for therein she accuseth them of three things: First, of teaching that which was false indeed: Secondly, that they knew it to bee false, and so sinned of knowledge: Thirdly, that they did it of malice, with intent to blinde the eyes of the Church and to deceive the people.

In this discovery, wee may observe the just accomplishment of Pauls prophecie, Acts 20. 29, 30. namely, that there should rise up among the Ephesians grievous wolves, and men speaking perverse things; and such were these false Apostles, who after examination were found lyers. Vse.

Againe, seeing in the dayes of this Apostle Iohn, men durst presume to claime Apostolike authoritie, and call themselves Apostles, when they were not: no marvell if the Pope of Rome six hundred yeares after, did challenge to himselfe to bee Peters successour, and to have Apostolike authoritie: and that they dare now avouch some bookes to bee Scripture, which are not: as also bring in their traditions and unwritten verities, to bee received and obeyed equally with Gods word.

V. 3. Thou hast suffered, and hast patience, and for my Names sake hast laboured.

Here our Saviour Christ declareth how this Minister & Church of Ephesus opposed themselves against false teachers after their discovery. The manner wee shall see in handling the points particularly as they lie in order. Thou hast suffred, or, thou hast borne a burden: for the word signifieth to be pressed down under a great burden: this burde̅ was the troubles which false Apostles stles brought upon them after they were discovered, partly by open affliction and persecution, partly by the spreading of their hereticall and schismaticall doctrine. These false teachers were Ebion, Cerinthus, Marcion, and such like, who in the daies of Iohn troubled this Church, as histories doe shew.

Here wee may observe, that it is Gods will, that the best Churches should bee troubled by wicked men, and hereticall teachers, who both by false doctrine, and persecution, become grievous burdens. This the Lord permits for weighty causes: I. That true beleevers may be excited more constantly to embrace the sincere doctrine of the Gospell: and therefore Iude Iud. 3. most worthily exhorts the Christians in his time, to fight for the common faith. II. That professors may be tried whether they soundly hold the doctrine of the Gospell, or not: 1 Cor. 11. 19. It is meet (saith Paul) that there should bee heresies in the Church, that they which are sound in the faith and approved, may bee knowne. III. That God may execute his judgements upon wicked men and hypocrites, that have not loved his truth revealed unto them: 2. Thess. 2. 10, 11. God gave them up to strange illusions to beleeve lies, because they have not loved his truth: for many know the word that love it not.

Vse. This must teach us to take heed of a common scandall in the world, which is to bee offended at religion, because there bee in the Church schismes and heresies: which come not from the Gospel, but from the malice of Satan, who soweth his tares among the Lords wheat. We must consider that it is the will of God there should bee such evils in his Church: and therefore should labour to bee so farre from offence, that hereby we be rather provoked with more cheerefulnesse and courage to love and embrace religion.

And hast patience, and for my name hast suffered, &c. Here is set downe the dealing of this Church against these false Apostles in all their persecutions. But first note the coherence of this vertue with the former: Thou hast suffered trouble, and hast had patience. Quest. How can these stand together? It is against mans nature, in trouble to bee patient: for troubles and afflictions make men discontent, and to fret against God and man. Ans. They stand not by nature, but by grace; Rom. 5. 4. Tribulation bringeth forth patience; namely, to all those that have received to beleeve in Christ: for to them God giveth the spirit of meeknesse in their troubles, shedding his love into their hearts, whereby they are inabled to suffer any thing for his name, even with joy.

And hast patience. This is the first meanes whereby this Church opposed her selfe against the false Apostles: they troubled her two waies, by persecution, and by false doctrine. Now by patience this Church opposeth her selfe against their persecutions. And indeed, that is the most excellent means for any man or any Church to oppose themselves against their enemies, and to vanquish them; for hereby they shall stop their mouthes, and if it be possible, win them to their faith and religion.

Use. In this their practice we have an example for our direction, how to oppose our selves against wicked men, with whom wee live; or any enemy that shal trouble us, either by oppression, or hereticall doctrines. Wee must not render taunt for taunt, and abuse for abuse; but labour for patience, not in bearing with their sinnes (that may not bee) but in a meeke enduring of their injuries and wrongs wherby they trouble us. Thus shall we stop their mouths and soonest overcome them.

And for my names sake hast laboured. Here Christ setteth downe the second meanes whereby this Church opposeth her selfe against the spreading of false doctrine by these false Apostles, which was the second way whereby they became a burden unto her. The meaning of the words is this; that they had taken much paines to maintaine the glory of God, and the true doctrine of Christ Jesus, labouring therein as much as the false Apostles did to broach their damnable heresies.

Here we are taught a second duty, how wee are to oppose our selves against all hereticall and schismaticall teachers; namely, as they labour to publish their false doctrine, so must we endevour to maintaine the glorie of God and his true religion. Hereunto a twofold labour is required, partly of the Minister, and partly of the people. The labour of the Minister stands in these things principally: I. He must endevour by reading and studie to furnish himselfe with the true knowledge of the foundation and substance of the Gospell and true religion, that hee may bee able soundly and plainly to teach the same. For this cause Saint Iohn is commanded to eat the little booke, Revel. 10. 9, 10. which was as it were by studie and meditation to have the same digested and settled in his heart. Hence Malachie saith, The Priests lips should preserve wisdome, and thither should the people come for instruction. Mal. 2. 7. And every Scribe taught of God, must have store in the treasurie of his heart, like a good housholder, Matth. 13. 52. Secondly, hee must deliver the whole will and counsell of God, concerning salvation, truly and distinctly unto his people, as it is propounded in the bookes of the Prophets and Apostles. This Paul commendeth by his owne example, Acts 20. 27. testifying unto this Church that hee had taught them all the will of God, and kept backe nothing which hee was commanded to deliver unto them. III. He must labour to discerne, and be able to discover false teachers unto the people; that he may not only know them himselfe, but also cause the Church to take notice of them: Tit. 1. 9. Paul requireth that the teacher in the Church, Be able to convince the gainesayers to his truth. In this discoverie very he must doe two things. First, detect the hereticall doctrines. Secondly, their wicked manners. Thus dealt our Saviour Christ in his owne person living in the Church of the Jewes, with the Scribes and Pharisies: he did detect unto the people their false interpretations of the law, Matth. 5. 21. to the end. And also their wicked lives and dammable hypocrisie, Matth. 23. 3, 4. &c. to the end. And S. Paul in all his Epistles, laboreth to discover the wicked lives, and to confute the hereticall opinions of the false Apostles. IV. Hee must endevour that the doctrine of the Gospell thus published, may edifie. This is the end of all teaching, as Paul sheweth, 1 Corinth. 14. throughout the whole Chapter. Now it doth edifie, when it is so applyed to the hearers, that thereby they are won to Christ, suffering themselves to bee reformed by it in heart and life, and so made fit for the kingdome of God. V. He must be careful in his owne person to become a patterne of the doctrine of the Gospell which he teacheth, that so the people may have a double light to follow. This is a notable meanes in the Minister to make men to love the Gospell, and the neglect thereof causeth many to contemne and despise the same. VI. Lastly, hee must bee diligent in praying for his own and other particular Churches of God, that they may know, beleeve, and obey the same doctrine which is taught them out of Gods word. Thus did Paul, as we may see in his particular Epistles, pray for every Church, that by the blessing of the spirit, they might embrace and obey the Gospel of Christ, Phil. 1. 4, 9, 10. Col. 1. 9, 10, 11.

The people also for the name of Christ and his religion, must undergoe a threefold labour. I. Every one must see thor himselfe know and beleeve the true and sincere doctrine of the Gospell. This Christ injoineth to all, in this Commandement, Repent, and beleeve, which none can do unlesse they first know and understand the doctrine thereof; and therefore every one must doe as Mary did, for which Christ so commends her; namely, lay aside matters of lesser moment, and give our selves to heare and learne the doctrine of Christ, Luke 10. 39, 42. II. Every one must use all good meanes, that knowledge of religion which himselfe hath received, bee conveyed to others. And indeed, if we truly beleeve, we cannot containe our selves, but we must needs teach others. For, as Christ saith, He that drinketh of the water of life that he hath, shall flow rivers of water of life streaming out for the good of others. Quest. How should private men convey their knowledge unto others? Ans. I. All masters and governours of families are bound in conscience to teach those that are under them, the maine points and grounds of true religion: in place of which gifts, and God doth so increase for every Christian family should be a little Church as it is said of the house of Aquila and Priscilla, 1 Cor. 16. 19. II. Every man in his place must labour to convey that knowledge he hath unto his neighbour, yea to his enemies. The Jewes would compasse sea and land to make a man a proselyte: And Idolaters at this day will travell farre and neere to make a man of their profession. Much more therefore must all true Christians labour to convey their knowledge to others, so to winne them unto Christ. III. Every man is to edifie those that be members of the same Church, in these three things; faith, hope, and love; as Jude notably exhorteth in the end of his Epistle, Edifie one another in your most holy faith, v. 20. have compassion of some in putting difference, and others save with fear in pulling them out of the fire, v. 22. 23. IV. Every private man must professe and defend the true religion of Christ against all the enemies thereof: 1. Pet. 3. 15. Be readie alwaies to give an answer to everie man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you. And this confession must be, not only in word, but in deed. For by a blamelesse and holy conversation everie Christian holdeth forth the word of life, Philip. 2. 15. 16.

Seeing the maintenance of true religion is so excellent a worke, we must be admonished every one in our place to take paines in all the duties that belong unto us, that by us Christs religion may be furthered. For Gods Church is not called the pillar of truth, onely because the Minister thereof maintaineth Gods truth; but also because every member of the Church hath a pillar in his place to maintain and professe the true doctrine of Christ for his glorie. Besides, this is a dutie of the first Table, and therefore we must have more speciall care for the performance thereof. And thus we see the meanes whereby the Church of Ephesus opposed herselfe against false teachers. And hast not fainted. Here Christ setteth downe in what manner this Church laboured to maintaine his true religion, and thereby his honour and glorie: namely, by constancie and perseverance in labour. This is an excellent vertue, and a notable example for us to follow: for we through Gods goodnesse have the true religion of Christ among us, and for many yeares sundry among us have maintained the same against all enemies, though not without some trouble and danger. Now this which hath been done is nothing, unlesse we hold on in our good course constantly, and labour unto death in the maintenance thereof. This exhortation is the more necessary, because wee know not how long we shall enjoy the Gospell with peace; for usually after long peace God trieth his by persecution: neither know we by what meanes of triall God will exercise us. Therefore as wee now professe the Gospell, so let us continue constant therein, and not turne with time or state: for then wee lose our commendation at Christs hands. And thus much for the commendation of this Church for her ver-

v. 4. Nevertheleſſe I have ſomewhat againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt left thy firſt love.

These words containe the second part of the propoſition of this Epiſtle, to wit, a ſharpe and ſevere reproofe of this Church for decay in grace; as will appeare in the opening of the words. Nevertheleſſe I have ſomewhat againſt thee: Here Chriſt ſpeaketh as a Judge unto this Church, and to the Miniſter thereof, and laieth this action unto their charge; that they had left their firſt love, that is, that love which they bare to God and his religion, and to their brethren, at that time when they were firſt called unto the profeſſion of the Goſpell. This love they are ſaid to have left, not as though they had quite loſt it, but onely becauſe they ſuffered it to decay, and to wax cold in good works. But ſome will ſay, they are before commended for their zeale and labour for Gods glorie, and for their ſeverity againſt falſe teachers; how then had they left their firſt love? Anſ. At this time when Chriſt doth thus reprove them, their love was commendable; but yet it was nothing in regard of that which they had at the firſt converſion.

Vſe. If Chriſt have ſomething againſt this Church for leaving her firſt love; then no doubt he hath ſomething againſt the Church of England, and againſt us at this day: howſoever we may perſwade our ſelves that we be high in his favour, yet we are in the like, or a worſe eſtate than this Church now was: for a great part of the bodie of our Church hath left off their firſt love; and the greateſt part hath no love at all. That many have left their firſt love is too too evident. For ſuch as in Queene Maries time were content to ſuffer for the Goſpell, as the hiſtories of our Church doe ſhew, after they injoyed a little quietneſſe, became meere worldlings, as their lives have teſtified afterward. And in ſuch congregations where the Word hath long beene preached, this is too apparent, that men who for the ſpace of twentie, of ten, or ſeven yeares, have ſhewed fervent love to Chriſt and his Goſpell, and to their brethren, doe now fall away, and ſhew none at all. Hee that hath but halfe an eye, may ſee many for a yeare or two very forward and zealous in religion, who ſoone after ſuffer pleaſures, profits, or preferments, to draw them quite away: ſome I confeſſe through the mercie of God are free from this decay. But there is yet a more grievous fault among us: for the greateſt part of our people have no love at all. Theſe are the dayes whereof Chriſt ſaid, love ſhould wax cold: and whereof Paul ſaid, Men ſhould bee lovers of themſelves: for take the moſt congregations where the Goſpell hath beene long preached, yet you ſhall finde that the hearers are neither bettered for knowledge, nor for obedience, but Matth. 24. 12. 2 Tim. 3. 2.

A remaine ſtill as ignorant and prophane as ever they were. This argueth that they have no love of God in their hearts, though they have a formall profeſſion of his name in their mouth; for where the love of God is, there muſt needs be increaſe in knowledge, in grace, and in obedience. Againe, ſee how men generally walke in their callings, and therein behold a meere defect of love. All the paines they take is for their private gaine and pleaſure; no regard is had of Gods glorie, of the maintenance of true religion, and of the good of their brethren: herein their owne conſciences ſhall be the witneſſes. So that generally this may be ſaid, We have no love at all. What an action ſhall we then thinke hath Chriſt againſt us? It muſt needs be grievous; and ſo our caſe fearefull and dangerous. B If an earthly Prince and Potentate had an action againſt us, and his caſe were good, it would make us looke about us, yea to tremble and quake, and to be at our wits end. Behold, not a worldly Prince, but the King of heaven and earth hath a matter againſt us, juſt and grievous: oh how ſhould this move us to ſearch our ſelves, to trie our eſtate, and to humble our ſelves upon the knees of our hearts before his Majeſtie. We may not imagine that this charge of Chriſt doth not concerne us: the concluſion of this Epiſtle ſhews it belongs to all that have eares to heare. And therefore we ſhould labour to prevent Gods judgements, by judging our ſelves for our decay and want of love.

C Againe, this rebuke of Chriſt for decay of love, ſhould teach us to labour for increaſe in love to God and to our brethren; adding grace to grace in our hearts, as we adde day unto day in our lives, that ſo our love may abound; read 1 Theſſ. 4. 9, 10. where Paul urgeth this dutie at large: hee confeſſeth they did love one another, and yet beſeecheth them to increaſe therein, Phil. 3. 13, 14. in Pauls perſon wee have a worthy preſident, which wee muſt follow, if we thinke to come whither he is gone before: though hee had gone farre in the love of God, yet hee laboured to perfection; and therefore conſidered not that which was paſt, as reſting in it, but rather how farre he was too ſhort, that ſo he might uſe meanes to increaſe in love, and D in all other good graces, till hee come to perfection. A Chriſtian mans life is a way that leadeth to heaven, wherein wee once ſetting foot, muſt ever goe forward, and not ſtand ſtill or turne backe, leſt wee never come there. The ſtate of a Chriſtian is like unto a childe, which ſtill groweth till it come to a perfect ſtrength: and ſo muſt every child of God labour to grow in the graces of God, till they bee perfect men in Chriſt: For if they ſtand ſtill, Chriſt hath ſomething againſt them.

The Rhemiſts in their annotations abuſe this place, to prove that a man may quite fall away from grace. Therefore to cleare this text, and to confirme our hearts in the truth of Gods word, this queſtion muſt be ſcanned, Whether a many may quite fall away from grace? Answ. Grace in Scripture is taken two waies: First, for that favour of God, whereby he accepteth of some for his children in Christ. This is the first grace and the fountaine of all other: and taking grace in this sense, I say, that the signes of grace and the sense thereof in the heart, may be lost: but the favour of God it selfe cannot bee lost of them that truly beleeve. When an earthly father is displeased with his childe for some notorious crime, he will turne the signes of his favour into signes of displeasure, and shew the same partly by words, and partly by stripes; and yet he still continueth his Father, and holdeth him for his sonne, without any purpose to disinherit him: Even so God dealeth with his children; for their sinnes and corruptions, he will turne away his loving countenance from them, and change the signes of his favour into anger and displeasure; when as yet the good purpose of their adoption is not altered, but remaineth firme for ever: and God is still their father, though an angrie father through the provocation of their sinnes. Secondly, grace in Scripture is taken for the gifts of grace which are bestowed on them that beleeve in Christ. These gifts of grace be of two sorts, some more principall, of absolute necessitie unto salvation, without which none can be saved; as faith, and also hope and love, which proceed from faith. There be others also lesse principall, which be very profitable and requisite, yet not absolutely needfull unto salvation: As the feeling of Gods favour, alacritie in prayer, and sense of joy, and comfort in the holy Ghost. These lesse principall graces also may be lost. The principall graces also may be decayed, lessened, and covered in regard of operation, even in Gods children: but quite extinguished they cannot bee, for God upholdeth them by perseverance: where faith, hope, and love are once truly wrought by Gods spirit, they are never wholly or finally taken away, but only in part, and in sense and feeling for a time. This answer is agreeable to this text, for the Church of Ephesus is here blamed, not for quite losing her love, but because she had left her first love, suffering it to decay and wax lesse than it was at their first conversion.

And because this doctrine is oppugned earnestly, not only by the Church of Rome, but also by some churches & schooles of the Protestants: I will first shew the truth thereof out of Gods word, and then scan their chiefe reasons that are brought against it. That grace cannot bee wholly and finally lost, these reasons prove: I. Matth. 16. 18. The promise is made to Peter, and in him to all the faithfull; That upon that faith which hee professed, Christ would build his Church, and the gates of hell should not prevaile against it. Which last words must bee marked, for they intimate, that the devil with his adherents would shew much force and violence against the faith of the elect, but yet they should never get the victory or overcome it wholly. II. Mat. 24. 24. Christ foretelling that false Prophets should come, saith, They should seduce, if it were possible, the very elect. Where he taketh this for granted, that the elect, albeit they maybe assaulted grievously, yet they can never be wholly or finally drawne away from their faith. III. Joh. 10. 27, 28. My sheepe heare my voice (saith Christ) and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternall life, and they shall never perish. To this they answer; It is true they shall never perish, so long as they remaine the sheepe of Christ. But that cavill is cut off in the next words, Neither shall any plucke them out of my hand: my father which gave them me, is greater than all, and none is able to plucke them out of my fathers hands: And therefore neither the devill, nor the world, nor the flesh, can by any temptation draw the sheep of Christ from their faith, and make them no sheep. IV. Reason. Joh. 3. 36. He that beleeveth in Christ, hath eternall life. They say hee hath it in hope, and no otherwise. I answer: If they have it in hope, they shall never perish: For hope maketh not ashamed. V. Reason. Rom. 8. 30. Whom he predestinated, them also he called: and whom he called, them also he justified: and whom he justified, them also he glorified. Those which are elected, called, and justified by faith, must needs be glorified; and therefore cannot fall away finally: for such shall never be glorified. And in the end of the chapter, v. 38. he addeth, That neither death, nor life, Angels, principalities, nor powers, nor any thing else can separate us, viz. the faithfull, from the love of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. But if the faithfull might fall away finally, the they might be severed from the love of God. VI. Reason. Rom. 11. 29. The gifts of Gods calling (that is, the peculiar gifts that pertaine to salvation) are without repentance. They say it is true, God indeed never repenteth him of his gifts: but yet a man may perish and fall away, because he may refuse and reject Gods grace given unto him. This answer is frivolous, maintaining this absurdity; that the powerfull will of God should be brought under the silly will of the creature: if a man could repell Gods grace given unto him, then should mans will take place, and Gods will bee made frustrate and void. VII. Reason. 1 Joh. 3. 9. Whosoever is borne of God sinneth not: because his seed remaineth in him; neither can he sinne, because hee is borne of God. How is that true? for chap. 2. 10. Hee that saith, he hath not sinned, maketh God a lier, and his word is not in him. Answ. The place must bee understood thus; Hee that is borne of God sinneth not; that is, with full consent, and with all his heart. Sinne doth not reigne in him: for the regenerate man consisteth of two parts, flesh and spirit; he sinneth not as he is spirit, that is, regenerate; but as hee is flesh and sinfull. His will sinneth not as it is spirituall, but as it is carnall. The Papists say, indeed hee sinneth not, not, so long as hee continueth to bee borne of God. This shift is cut off by the word of the text, Neither can hee sinne, because the seed of grace, even the word of God abideth in him. This place plainly proveth, even in the judgement of the Papists, that the child of God cannot wholly or finally fall from grace. They say it is an hard place, and indeed they cannot answer to it. VIII. Reason. If a man may finally fall from grace, then may hee be wholly cut off from Christ: for grace is never wholly lost, till a man bee quite cut off from Christ. But it cannot bee, that a member of Christ can bee quite cut off: for then it should follow, that one and the same man must bee often joyned to Christ; namely, so often as hee falleth by sinne, if hee would bee saved. Whereupon this would also follow, that one and the same man must be often baptized: for Baptisme is the Sacrament of initiation, the meanes of admission into the Church, and the seale of our union with Christ. But Rebaptization may not bee admitted. The Church of God denieth it upon this ground, because a man is onely once borne of God. IX. Reason. Christ teacheth us to pray thus; Lead us not into temptation: that is, suffer not Satan and sinne wholly to vanquish us. This petition being taught by Christ, must needes bee lawfull and according to Gods will: and therefore hereunto, as to every lawfull petition, belong these two things: First, Gods Commaund to make it: Secondly, his promise to assure us it shall bee granted. Whereby this is evident, That there is in Gods word a promise assuring every child of God, that he shall never wholly be conquered of the devill; and therefore hee can never wholly or finally fall from grace; for if hee might, then were hee wholly overcome in temptation.

Rom. 5. 5.

The contrary arguments bee of three sorts; places of Scripture, Examples, and Reasons. For the first, Exod. 32. 32. when the Israelites had sinned that great sinne of Idolatry, Moses prayeth God to forgive them; If not (saith hee) blot mee out of thy booke. Hence they gather, that a childe of God may bee blotted out of Gods booke of life, and so finally perish. Ans. That place must be understood with this condition, If it be possible: as in the like prayer it is expressed by Christ, Father, if it be possible, let this cup passe from mee. This condition must needs be added: for else we must say, that Moses prayed for that which he knew was impossible; namely, that one private man should suffer eternall punishment for the sinnes of others; though in temporall punishment such a thing may be, yet in eternall it is impossible. Againe, Moses in this prayer doth principally shew his exceeding affection and zeale for Gods glorie, and for the safetie of his brethren, both which he preferred before his owne life; as if he should say, Lord pardon them, and rather than thy name should lose glorie, blot me out of thy booke. The like affection was in Paul, when

A he said, He could wish himselfe to be separate from Christ for the love of his brethren the Iews. They further urge the Lords answer to Moses, v. 33. Whosoever hath sinned against me, I will put his name out of my booke. But as the Lord therein answereth to Moses prayer, so must it be understood, with the like exception. Rom. 9. 3.

II. Object. Ezek. 18. 24. If the righteous man turne away from his righteousnesse, and commit iniquitie, and doe according to all the abominations that the wicked man doth, shall he live? All his righteousnesse that he hath done shall not bee mentioned: but he shall die in his sinne. Here (say they) it is plaine, that a man may fall from grace. Answ. Righteousnesse is twofold: of the outward action, and of the person. So Paul distinguisheth, when he desireth to be found not in his B owne righteousnesse, which is of the law; that is, such as was in him while he was a Pharisie: but in the righteousnesse of Christ. The righteousnes of the action is, when a man for outward actions keepes the Law of God. The righteousnesse of the person is that, whereby a man is accepted righteous before God. And answerable hereunto, there be two kinds of righteous men; one that is outwardly righteous before men, though not indeed: the other, that is truly righteous before God. Now of the former of these two, must that place bee understood: for the Lord there pleadeth with such as did esteeme and avow themselves to be righteous, saying, Their fathers had eaten sowre C grapes: that is, had sinned, and they were punished for their fathers offences, though they were righteous: And the holy Ghost speaking according to their owne conceit and opinion of themselves, calleth them righteous: and of such it is true they may turne from their righteousnesse. Phil. 3. 4.

III. Object. Luk. 8. 13. Some beleeve for a time, and in time of temptation goe away. Ans. There be three kinds of faith; Historicall, Temporarie, and saving faith. In Historicall faith, is knowledge of the Word of God, with assent unto it. In temporary faith are 3. things; knowledge of the Word, Assent, and Approbation also, with some joy. In saving faith, there are foure things: Knowledge, Assent, Approbation, and Apprehension: that is, in applying of the D promises of God unto a mans selfe; whence proceedeth joy. And answerably, there are three kinds of beleevers: I. such as know the word of God, but yet have no love thereof: II. such as know it, assent unto it, and rejoyce in it also for a time. The third are such as apprehend the promises, and apply them to themselves. Now the two first kinds of faith may be lost; and the two first kindes of beleevers may fall away, whereof Saint Luke speaketh: But hence it followeth not, that saving faith may be lost; for hee that is endued therewith can never fall away. But faith (say they) is only one: Eph. 4. 5. There is but one faith, one God, one hope, and one Baptisme. Ans. By one faith is there meant one religion, and doctrine of ſalvation: as elſwhere is uſuall by the name of Faith, 1 Timoth. 1. 19.

Their ſecond kind of arguments are Examples: which are chiefly two: one of Adam, the other of David. For Adam; they ſay hee was created righteous, and yet he fell wholly from grace: and therefore any beleever now, may much more fall away, who have far leſſe grace than he had. Anſ. This argument is not good: for though Adam had a greater meaſure of grace than we now have, yet our grace hath a greater privilege than his had; his grace came by creation; ours is by redemption and regeneration. Adam had the firſt grace, to be able to obey; but he wanted the ſecond to be ſure to perſevere: becauſe God would permit his fall, to make a way, both to manifeſt his juſtice and mercy in our redemption by Chriſt. But the child of God after his converſion, wherein he hath the firſt grace to repent and beleeve, hath alſo an infallible promiſe, That he ſhall receive the ſecond grace to abide in that faith. And therefore Paul ſaith, I am perſwaded, that hee which hath begun this good worke in you, will performe it untill the day of the Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Phil. 1. 6. And againe, The Lord is faithfull, who will ſtabliſh you, and keepe you from evill. 2 Theſ. 3. 5.

Secondly, David (ſay they) by his two grievous ſinnes fell wholly from grace. Anſ. Hee fell indeed grievouſly, but not wholly: for after his fall he contemned not Gods Word, hee hated not God, nor deſpaired of mercie; which hee muſt have done, if hee had fallen wholly. And therefore he had remorſe for his ſinne, ſo ſoone as the Propher Nathan came unto him. But (ſay they) he prayeth God to create a new heart in him, therefore he had then no grace: For creation is a making of that which hath no being. Anſw. David then ſpeaketh not as hee was before God, but as hee was in his owne ſenſe and feeling: for by his ſinnes Gods graces were ſore decayed. But (ſay they) he repented not for the ſpace of one whole yeare: Now, where there is no repentance, there is no faith, and conſequently no grace nor pardon. Anſw. In repentance there be two things: the gift of repentance, and the act and practice thereof. The gift of repentance was in the heart of David when hee yet lay in his ſinnes: but the act lay hid, and he wanted the renewing thereof all that time. Againe, David had the pardon of his ſinnes paſt, though he had not the pardon of thoſe two ſinnes, till he repented of them. Neither was his repentance loſt, but decayed onely; he wanted not the power of it ſimply, but the practice of it only in the act.

Their third kinde of arguments are drawne from equitie and reaſon.

I. He that is a member of an harlot, and of the Devill, ceaſeth wholly to be a member of Chriſt: but a childe of God truly beleeving, may become the member of an harlot, and of Satan, as David did. Anſ. There be three kinds A of members; dead, decayed, and living members. A dead member is that which is onely in ſhew a member: as a legge of wood, or braſſe in a mans bodie. A decayed member is a true member, though weake, as is a legge or arme that is taken with a palſie, or ſore wounded. But a lively member is that which doth move and doe all it functions perfectly. So in the Church there be ſome members dead, and only in ſhew; others feeble and weake, that by reaſon of ſome grievous ſinnes are not able to doe their duties. And there be lively members which ſerve God with an upright and perfect heart. Now, though a member of an harlot cannot bee a lively member of Chriſt, becauſe by his ſinnes he weakneth and woundeth the graces of God (for every adulterer and fornicator doth as much as in him lyeth cut himſelfe B off from Chriſt) yet he may be a decayed member of Chriſt. And this may the rather ſtand, becauſe a man is made the member of Chriſt one way, namely, ſpiritually; and the member of an harlot another way, namely, bodily.

II. Reaſon. If a man cannot fall from grace, then preaching, prayer, the Sacraments, and all meanes of perſeverance are needleſſe. Anſw. Nothing leſſe: for they have all their good and neceſſarie uſe unto them which have grace; even to make them conſtant in grace. For where the Scripture teacheth the certaintie of ſalvation, it implyeth the uſe of the means of perſeverance. Paul in his journey to Rome was certaine they ſhould all come ſafe to Land by the C promiſe of God: yet when the mariners would have gone out of the ſhip, He telleth the Captaine, unleſſe they ſtay in, wee cannot bee ſaved: becauſe they were the meanes to bring them to land. So when Iſay had told Ezekias from the Lord that he ſhould live fifteene yeares longer, he was thereby aſſured of recoverie, and yet he uſed a bunch of figges as a meanes thereof, as alſo food and raiment to preſerve his life afterward. Act. 27. 24. verſ. 31. Iſa. 38. 21.

III. Reaſon. This doctrine of certaine perſeverance maintaineth men in ſecuritie. Anſw. Securitie is twofold, carnall, and ſpirituall: carnall, when a man regardeth not at all the means of his ſalvation, but giveth himſelfe wholly to D the profits and pleaſures of this world. Spirituall, when a man relieth on God for his ſalvation, by beleeving his promiſes: and this ſecuritie it maintaineth, but not the carnall ſecuritie: For it teacheth the uſe of the meanes of perſeverance, as prayer, hearing, and reading of the Word, and receiving the Sacraments. And thus I conclude this queſtion, That the true child of God, who truly beleeveth when he ſinneth, doth neither wholly nor finally fall away, neither can doe.

Laſtly, if this were true of this famous Church of Epheſus, which was founded and preſerved by the Apoſtles, that ſhe ſuffered her firſt love to decay; then how can it be otherwiſe with us, but that we ſhould ſuffer our firſt love

loue as well towards God as man, to leſſen and diminiſh? and that this is ſo, our conſciences will tell us, if we looke to that loue and zeale we had at our firſt calling: and though we have not felt this decay, yet we muſt know we be in danger of it continually. And therefore wee muſt take heed, that wee ſuffer not our good affections in religion to diminiſh. Water that hath beene once hot, will afterward bee moſt cold, and freeze the hardeſt: even ſo, when our hearts have beene once heated with the fire of the Lords Altar, as true loue and other graces of the ſpirit; if we ſuffer them to decay, we ſhall become more frozen in iniquitie than any others. The hawke while ſhe is quicke to take her prey, is ſet upon the hand of Kings and nobles, but if ſhe wax weake and die, ſhee is caſt off to the dunghill. Even ſo we while we are hot and cheerefull in loue towards God and his Church, wee are carried as it were on Gods owne hand: but if we faint and decay in loue, we ſhall be caſt lower than if we had neuer beene ſo exalted. This loue of God in us is like a little flame of fire, for the maintaining whereof we muſt doe three things: Firſt, take heed of all manner of ſinne, which quencheth loue and other graces of the ſpirit, as water quencheth fire. In the old teſtament the prieſts kept fire burning upon the altar day and night, to bee alwayes readie to ſacrifice unto the Lord: and ſo muſt wee keepe a flame of loue and other graces continually burning in our hearts, that thence we may offer up acceptable ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving unto the Lord. Secondly, wee muſt ſtir up the gifts of grace that are in us, as Paul ſaith to Timothie, 2 Tim. 1. 6. uſing a compariſon from the fire, which burneth more bright and cleare when it is ſtirred up. Laſtly, we muſt exerciſe our ſelves in the duties of pietie, as faith, repentance, loue, and ſuch like: and ſo ſhall they not decay. And thus much for the ſinne of this Church.

V. 5 *Remember therefore whence thou art fallen, and repent, and doe thy firſt works: or elſe I will come againſt thee ſhortly, and will remove thy candleſticke out of his place, except thou amend.

Our Saviour Chriſt the faithfull Phyſician of our ſoules, having ſharply rebuked this Church, doth here preſcribe unto them a ſoueraigne remedy againſt their ſinne of decay in loue. From whence we may learne, that the law whereby ſinne is reproued is to be taught, but with this qualification, that withall the doctrine of the Goſpell bee joyned thereunto, A that the ſinnes which are ripped up by the law, may be cured by the Goſpell. This is Chriſts manner of preaching in this place, whoſe practice is a moſt worthy platforme for all his miniſters: for we have no warrant at this day to preach the law barely, which only maketh the wound, without the Goſpel which alone ſheweth the remedy.

The remedy here preſcribed is of ſpeciall uſe, and worthie our conſideration: generally by it we have direction to anſwer to two neceſſary queſtions of practice, which often fall out in the life of man. Firſt, a man is effectually called to profeſſe the Goſpell, and yet after his converſion, either through the corruption of his nature, or by the temptation of the Devill and the world, falleth into ſinne againe: what muſt this man doe for his recoverie? Anſ. He muſt remember whence he is fallen, and repent of thoſe his ſins, and doe his firſt works. The ſecond queſtion is this: A man that hath all his life long lived in ignorance and ſinne, is now touched in conſcience for his looſe life; how ſhall this man eſcape the wrath of God, and become reconciled unto him? Anſw. He muſt firſt remember whence he is fallen by Adams ſinne, and by his owne tranſgreſſions: Secondly, he muſt repent of his ſinne: Thirdly, endevour to doe the firſt workes, whereto he is bound by the law of creation; and ſo ſhall he eſcape the wrath of God, and bee received into his loue and favour.

In particular, this remedie hath three parts: The firſt, Remember whence thou art fallen: The ſecond, And repent: The third, And doe thy firſt workes. Theſe words following, Or elſe I will come againſt thee, &c. are a reaſon of this remedie, to perſwade them to doe the duties preſcribed.

For the firſt, Remember whence thou art fallen. The words beare this ſenſe; Examine thy ſelfe thorowly, and ſee in thy ſelfe the decay of thy former loue: and then ponder the ſame in thy heart ſeriouſly and thorowly. Here Chriſt injoyneth to his Church two duties. I. Examination, whereby ſhe muſt deſcend into her owne heart, and ſearch out her owne wants, eſpecially the want of her loue to God, to his word, and to her brethren. II. Conſideration, whereby ſhee muſt often thinke of theſe her wants, and lay the ſame to her heart unfainedly.

This courſe which Chriſt taketh with this Church, teacheth us firſt that it is a dangerous thing for any perſon in Gods Church not to be acquainted thorowly with his owne eſtate, that ſo he may ſearch out his owne wants, and deeply conſider of the ſame. For this very thing Ieremie blamed the people in his time, that no man ſaid with himſelfe, what have I done? And Chriſt layeth this ſinne to the charge of the people of the old world, that they were ignorant of their eſtate; They knew nothing till the flood came and tooke them all away. And this is the common sinne of this age: no man almost doth examine himselfe and consider in his heart his owne estate, by reason of his sinnes and wants. Nay, men are growne to this, that they count it a meanes to breed melancholy, and therefore doe flie the practice of this dutie, and so nuzzell themselves in their fearefull securitie.

Ier. 8. 6.

Matth. 24. 38, 39.

Secondly, here we learne that it is a speciall dutie for them that live in Gods Church, to be thorowly acquainted with their owne estate, to examine and search out their owne sinnes, and often to consider seriously of their particular wants. Zephanie preaching the doctrine of repentance unto the people, beginneth thus, Search yee, search your selves, oh nation, not worthy to bee beloved. Chap. 2. 1. Where the word translated search, signifieth such a search as a man would make for some small thing in a great heape of chaffe. This is the Lords counsell, Hag. 1. 7. Consider your owne wayes in your hearts: and it must be our practice if wee would bee saved. This dutie is the beginning and ground of true repentance, and therefore Christ here giveth it the first place; for no man can truly repent before he be acquainted with his own infirmities, and with his owne fearefull and damnable estate, by reason of his sins. And therefore David saith, I first considered my wayes, and then I turned my feet into thy testimonies. Psal. 119. 59. The cause why so few in the world doe truly repent, is want of consideration from whence they are fallen; and what be their sins, and the dreadfull judgements thereby deserved. For till the mind doe truly conceive her owne miserie, the heart can never rightly hunger after mercie. Sinne must be our greatest woe, before Christ become our chiefest joy. The secód part of this remedie is Repentance it selfe: for after a man is well acquainted with his wants, and hath thorowly considered of his owne miserie, then he commeth to repent. In handling hereof five points are to be observed. I. What repentance is. II. How it is to bee practised. III. Who commandeth it. IV. To whom it is commanded. V. For what they must repent.

For the first, Repentance properly is in the minde, as the word in this place doth import: for it signifieth thus much, After some folly or overslip to be better advised. Repentance then in the minde is a change from evill to good, or a turning from sinne unto God: Act. 27. 20. Repent and turne to God. Which latter words expound the former, and plainly shew what repentance is. And this change in the minde standeth in this resolution, whereby a man by Gods grace purposeth to leave all his former sinnes, and to cleave unto God in holy obedience unto all his Commandements. And when this resolution is in the minde, therewithall followeth a turning of the whole man in will, in affections, and in all the actions of his life. This appeareth by that description of the practice of repentance, which Paul reduceth to seven heads, viz. Care, clearing of themselves, indignation, feare, great desire, zeale, and revenge, 2 Cor. 7. 11. whereof some are renewed affections, and some reformed actions.

Hereby appeareth, that their description of repentance is not so fit and proper, which say it standeth in these three; contrition, faith, and new obedience. For contrition is not a part of repentance, but a cause thereof, and so is faith, as Christ teacheth us in his wel known sermon, Repent, and beleeve the Gospell; Mark. 1. 15. where they are plainly distinct. And indeed a man must first beleeve in Christ, and then followeth repentance, and for new obedience it is not a part of repentance, but a fruit thereof. Others make regeneration and repentance all one, but that cannot so well stand: for regeneration goeth before, and repentance followeth after as a fruit thereof: for godly sorrow which is a part of regeneration, causeth repentance. The minde therefore must first bee renewed, and then it turneth it selfe unto God, and withall turneth the whole man. And thus we see what true repentance is.

II. Point. How must repentance be practised? The practice of it standeth in two things: in true humiliation, and true reformation. In humiliation a man humbleth himselfe under the hand of God, making true confession of all his sinnes, from a sorrowfull heart, condemning himselfe for the same, and earnestly craving pardon for them, at the hands of God in Christ. Reformation is a change of all bad actions into good: and if case require, a making of satisfaction unto others for injuries done unto them. Example hereof we have in David; who having committed those two great sinnes of whoredome and murder, when he was reproved by Nathan, repented, confessing his sinnes, and made the one and fiftie Psalme, and (as it is thought) the 32. Psalme, therein notably shewing both his humiliation in heart, and reformation of life. So Manasses, when he was converted, hee repented, humbling himselfe before God, and praying for the pardon of his sinnes; God heard him. 2 Chron. 33. 12. And thus came the prodigal child unto his Father, saying, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, I am not worthy to be called thy son, make me one of thine hired servants. Luk. 15. 21. And so in all the Psalmes of repentance, we may see these duties of humiliation and reformation joyntly practised, as Psal. 6. and 38. and 77. and 130, 143.

Here then consider the fearefull practice of the Church of Rome in their doctrine of repentance, received generally for many hundred yeares. Repentance with them standeth in three things: In contrition, in confession of all his sins to the Priests, and in satisfaction to God by good works. But all these things may a wicked man do. For Judas was grieved for betraying his master; he confessed his sins; and also gave againe the money wherewith he was hired. A second abuse is, that they make contrition ons a part of the practice of repentance; by contrition we must understand remorse of conscience for sinne; which is no grace of it selfe, though it may be an occasion thereto in Gods elect. A third abuse is, that they prescribe a confession of all a mans sinnes unto men; which is a gibbet for any mans conscience; wherein they require more than God doth. A fourth abuse is, that they require satisfaction to Gods justice by mans good works; whereby they overthrow satisfaction by Christ, and exact that of men which none is able to performe. Wee therefore must reject their wicked doctrine, brought by the Devill into Gods Church, and imbrace that saving repentance which standeth in true humiliation and reformation.

III. Point. Who is it that commandeth repentãce unto his Church? namely, Jesus Christ. Many, not onely Papists but Protestants, gather upon this and such like commandements, That God giveth to every man sufficient grace to repent if he will: For else (say they) he should but mocke them, in bidding them repent: considering that without his grace it is as impossible for any man to repent, as for a man to rise and walke that is fast bound hand and foot. Answ. This collection is unsound: For the manifestation whereof, I will first lay downe the grounds of the true answer; and then apply the same. First, this commandement to Repent, is not given to every man, but onely to the Church of God, or to that people which is to bee a Church: and God giveth it to them for this end, that hee may gather among them his elect. In Gods Church there bee two sorts of men; Elect, and Reprobate; both which are mingled in this life. Now when the commandement to beleeve and repent, is given out in Gods Church, it is directed properly to the elect; and to the other whom God hath refused onely by consequent, because they are mingled with the elect. Againe, these commandements bee given to the elect for two causes. I. To teach them, not what they are able to doe of themselves; but what they ought to doe. II. To be an outward meanes to bring them to repent and beleeve. For with the Commandement Christ is present by his spirit to worke in the elect grace to repent and beleeve: Phil. 2. 12. Worke out your salvation in feare and trembling: rendring this reason in the next words, For God worketh in you both the will and the deed. In the Church there be some reprobates, who have the same commandement given unto them; but for other uses: as I. To keep them in outward order. II. To teach them their owne impotencie. III. and principally, that God in his justice may make them void of all excuse at the last day. From hence I answer thus: This proposition is not true, to wit, If God command men to repent, then hee giveth them grace to repent, unlesse it be thus qualified; That God command them to repent, for this end, that they may practise repentance. For God giveth out his Commandements for divers ends: Some that they may be practised; and others, to take from men all excuse in their disobedience. Thus he commanded Pharaoh to let the people goe; that by his disobedience his heart might be more hardened, and God more justly manifest his glorie in his destruction. So he commanded Isay to goe and preach unto the people: not for their conversion, but to blind their eyes, and to harden their hearts. And so hee commands the reprobate to repent; but neither directly as he doth his children, in whom hee intends the practice of repentance; but by consequent, because they live among his children: nor yet with intent they should obey, but rather to harden them, and to make them inexcusable, because of their sinnes. And therefore in them his commandement cannot import any ability to obey. Isa. 6. 9.

IV. Point. Who be commanded to repent? namely, The Church of Ephesus, that is, the Minister with the whole body of the Church. This may seeme strange, that hee should command them to repent, seeing they had alreadie repented at their conversion. Here therefore we must learne that there bee two degrees in the practice of repentance: First, the beginning of repentance: Secondly, the renewing of the same. And in these two consisteth the whole state of a Christian mans life. He must begin to repent when hee is received to mercie: hee must renew that repentance for his daily offences.

If God therefore have given us grace to repent, we must not content our selves with that good beginning, but adde more repentance daily unto it. So no man liveth that hath received grace to repent, but he seeth in himselfe continuall cause of renewing the same, by reason of his daily falls and wants; for every sinne decayeth grace, which must bee repaired by a new practice of repentance. This dutie must needs bee practised. It is the most dangerous case that can be for any man to lie in sinne, for sin makes a man liable to all Gods judgements. And it is not so much the act of sinne, as the lying in sinne that bringeth damnation. For this cause Paul 2 Cor. 5. 20. speaking to those that were reconciled to God, doth still most earnestly beseech them to bee reconciled unto him, saying, We beseech you in Christs stead, as though God did beseech you through us, that ye be reconciled to God: Intending thereby to provoke them to the daily renewing of their repentance, that thereby they might get a more full assurance of their reconciliation. Vers.

V. Point. For what must they repent? namely, for the decay of their love: not for the want thereof, but for that they suffered it to wax lesser, both towards God and his Word, and towards their brethren. The same thing is spoken to us daily in their ministerie of the word: that whereas our first love is gone, many having fallen from it, and moe having none at all,

we

we should unfainedly repent, of this our decay and want: that if we have had love, and now wax cold, wee may renew it; and if wee never had it, we may labour for it; that so wee may be answerable to his blessed desire. And here observe, that Christ enjoyneth us a strait repentance. It is not enough for men to repent them of grosse sinnes, as whoredome, theft, drunkennesse, and such like; but they must repent them of their wants of grace, as of the knowledge, and feare, and love of God, & of brotherly love, and of decay in any grace, be it never so little. We have many justiciaries in conceit, that bee Pharisaically minded, thinking too well of themselves, that they need no repentance, because they live civilly, and are not tainted with grosse sinnes: But these consider little what God doth here require; even repentance for our secret wants and decayes. And great reason it should be so, for else to what end should we examine our selves of our secret wants, unlesse wee should repent us of them, having found them in us.

Againe, if this Church must repent for her wants; then what great cause have we to repent in this last age of Atheisme, a grosse and common sinne: of outward pride in apparell, a sinne flat against Gods word: and for contempt of the Gospell, a sinne that enlargeth it selfe more and more among us; and for crueltie and want of mercie and compassion, all which are rife in our Church: and may more easily remove the candlesticke from us, than want of love could remove the candlesticke from this Church. And thus much for the second part of this remedie.

The third part of this remedie, is, to doe their first workes: that is, shew the like zeale and servencie of love to God, to his Word, and to their brethren, that they did at the first time of their conversion. This dutie Christ addeth to the former; because true repentance never perisheth in the heart, but alwayes breaketh out into action in the life.

Here then is an excellent lesson for us to learne and put in practice: we must search our owne hearts, and see what good things have beene in us; what good motions and desires, or good affections. We must also call to minde our former waies, and see what good things we have done: and if in heart or life we find decay, we must recover our losse, and seeke to doe our first workes, and strive to continue so doing to our lives end; that so we may escape this heavy charge of decay in grace. Thus much of the parts of this remedie.

If not, I will come against thee shortly, and remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou amend.

In these words Christ layes downe a reason to perswade the Church of Ephesus to the practice of the former remedie, especially for repentance. This reason containeth three parts. I. A generall commination in these words, If not, I will come against thee shortly. II. A particular threatning of a particular judgement, And remove thy Candlestick out of his place. III. The condition of them both: except thou amend.

I. Point. If not, I will come against thee shortly: that is, if thou doe not practise this remedie, and the duties therein prescribed, especially the dutie of repentance; then I will come against thee shortly. The words may as well be read thus, If not, then will I come to thee shortly: For so they are in the originall, and doe containe in them sufficient and profitable instruction. God is said to come to any people two wayes, in mercy, and in judgement. In mercy, when hee testifieth his presence by workes of mercie: As when Christ in spirit went unto the old world, and preached unto them in the person of Noah an hundred and twenty yeares before the flood, 1 Pet. 3. 19, 20. Secondly, God commeth in judgement, when he testifieth his presence by judgements. In the second commandement God saith, Hee will visit the sinnes of the fathers upon the children, that is, he will make inquirie among the children for the fathers sinnes, and if he finde them to live in the same sinnes that their fathers did, then will he punish them; that is properly to visit. So in this place, If thou repent not, I will come unto thee, and testifie my presence, not in mercie, but in judgement.

In this generall threatning we may observe, Vse. that when a Church or people decay in love to God, to his word, or to their brethren; or else lie in any sinne: then God prepareth himselfe to come unto them in judgement: Amos 4. 12. Because I will doe thus and thus unto thee, for thy sinnes, therefore prepare to meet thy God, O Israel; meaning, that because they lay still in their sinnes, therefore hee would make knowne his presence by more fearefull judgements: This doctrine according to Christs direction is to be applyed to us, and to our Church: for the sinnes that were in the Church of Ephesus, are the sinnes of our church and people. They decayed in love to God, to his Word, and to the brethren, so doe we. Nay generally there is no love at all in us, as hath beene shewed: and besides these wants, there be many grosse sinnes wherein our church and people doe lie; as in Atheisme both in judgement and practice; in contempt and neglect of Gods worship and true religion; in crueltie, oppression, and want of mercie: and that which is more, though God summon men to repent by his daily judgements, yet few or none by true humilitie prepare to meet God, and to prevent his judgements. Security spreads it selfe over the whole body of our people. And this being our case and state, it must needs be that God hath beene long since in comming to us by his judgements; and at this day he is still comming, because wee still decay in our love and other graces, and more and more goe on in sinne. So that if we thus continue, the truth is

he

he will come shortly unto us, and thereby most fearefull judgements. For this was written to the Church of Ephesus, to bee a direction not onely unto them, but to all Churches to the end of the world, that be in the like or worse case. What shall we then doe?

Our duty is taught us in these words (If not;) that is, if thou repent not. Wee must prevent the Lords comming in judgement by unfained repentance: every man and every family apart must repent privately, and the whole Church openly and publikely: no way else we have to stay the Lords comming against us by his fearfull judgements.

The second part of this reason, is a more particular threatning than the former; I will remove thy Candlestick out of his place. Where he sheweth with what particular judgment hee will punish his Church: namely, by removing away the candlestick. The meaning whereof may bee gathered out of the former chapter, where particular Churches were called candlestickes; therefore here he threatneth to remove his Church from the citie of Ephesus: to take away the ministerie of his Gospell, and the profession thereof; and in his just judgement to send among them, Ignorance, Apostasie, and heresie, in stead of the knowledge of his truth. This particular judgement must bee referred to the first words, If not; that is, if thou repent not, this will I doe; I will make thee to bee no Church, and take my Gospell from thee.

In this particular threatning, three points are to be observed; one concerning the Minister; the second concerning the whole body of the Church; the third concerning every private man. Touching the Minister note this; If hee shall decay in love to God, to his Word, or to his brethren, or if he lie in any one sinne known to himselfe, it is a meanes to deprive him either of his calling, or of Gods gifts bestowed on him; for this threatning is here directed especially unto the Angel of this Church of Ephesus. When Ieremie had beene wanting in delivering the Lords will unto the people, partly for feare, and partly through impatience; then the Lord becomes a Prophet unto him, saying, If thou returne, I will bring thee againe, and thou shalt stand before mee. Whereby he would give him to understand, that if he returned not he should cease to be a Prophet unto him. The same thing is true of all Gods Ministers: if they decay in love, faile in their dutie, or lie in any sinne, they must speedily renew themselves by repentance, or else God will deprive them either of their calling, or of the gifts thereof. True repentance and the renewing thereof is needfull unto all Christians; but especially to Gods Ministers, if they would continue in his favour, and stand before him, becomming his mouth unto the people. Ier. 15. 19.

The second point concerneth the whole body of a Church; to wit, if a Church or people decay in love to God, to religion, and to their brethren; or doe lie in any common sin, they procure hereby the removing of the Gospel from them, and the abolishing of true religion. The Prophet is a foole (saith the Lord) and the man of the spirit is mad: This was a great and fearefull judgement: but marke the cause; All is for thine iniquitie: that is, for the sinne of the whole Church doth God send foolish Ministers. If this be so, then we have just cause in our Church to feare the removing of the Gospell from us, for there is a generall decay of love in many, and in the most no love at all. Many scorne and contemne true religion, and hate the professors therof. In regard whereof, wee may wonder at the great patience of God, that yet continueth his Gospel among us: For God giveth men up to strong delusions, to beleeve lyes, because they love not the truth. Wherefore being in this danger, our dutie is, to use all good meanes to prevent this judgement of God: which can no other way be done, than by true and unfeined repentance by the whole Church in generall, and by every man apart, and every family apart. For when God shall speake suddenly against a nation or kingdome, to root it up, and to destroy it; if that people repent of their wickednesse, the Lord will repent of the plague and judgement which hee thought to bring upon them, Jer. 18. 7, 8. Hos. 9. 7. 2 Thes. 3. 13.

The third point concerneth every private man, and it is this: If any man decay in love, or want love to God and to his brethren, or lie in any sinne knowne to himselfe: This is a meanes to remove the candlesticke from him; to deprive him of his knowledge and other graces of God. The affection of love in the heart is like the watch of the clocke: if the watch stand, the wheeles stand; as the watch goeth fast or softly, so goe the wheelss answerably. And so it is in man: if his love to God and to his Gospell doe increase, then doth his knowledge and other graces of God increase in his heart: but if this love decay, then other graces decay; and if love be gone, then farewell all pietie and true religion. If we would know the cause of such palpable ignorance as is in many that have long heard the Gospell preached, it is nothing but want of love. Hebr. 3. 12, 13. the holy Ghost sheweth by what degrees men come to fall away from God. First, sinne deceives them, by drawing them to commit it: then their hearts are hardned by the custome of sinning. Thence follows unbeleefe in many points of religion: and so they make Apostasie from God, and set themselves against his truth. Take heed therefore of lying in any sin, for that is the high way to finall Apostasie: rather strive to increase in love unto God and unto his Word, and so shall all his good graces increase in thine heart.

Out of this particular threatning some gather, that a man may be cut off from Christ, and fal away finally from true faith and repentance. For (say they) if a whole Church may be cut off off from Chriſt, and become no Church: then may any one member of the Church be cut off and become no member: But a whole Church may be cut off, as here we ſee, and therefore may any one man. Anſw. This reaſon is not good: there is great difference betweene the ſtate of a whole Church, and of one man that is a true member of Chriſt. For a particular Church is a mixt company of true profeſſours and diſſemblers: like unto a field wherein are good corne and tares; and like unto a barne floore, wherin is wheat and chaffe mingled together; and yet all are reputed beleevers, becauſe they profeſſe the Goſpel outwardly. Now by reaſon of this mixture, it may come to paſſe, that a particular viſible Church may fall away, and become no Church; either when the godly are taken away, and hypocrites and diſſemblers made manifeſt; or elſe when true beleevers waxing few, are not able to maintaine the publike profeſſion of the truth, againſt the might and multitude of the enemies, which may daily increaſe. But the caſe is not ſo with a particular member of Chriſt; he cannot finally fall away, as hath bene ſhewed at large, ver. 4. And thus much for the ſecond part of this reaſon.

The third part of this reaſon, is the condition of both the former threatnings, in theſe words; Except thou amend, that is, I will come in judgement unto thee, and take my Goſpell from thee, unleſſe thou prevent my comming by true repentance.

Here note, that all the threatnings of the old and new Teſtament are conditionall: Ionas commeth to Ninive, and crieth, yet fortie dayes, and Ninive ſhall be deſtroyed. He ſaid no more; but yet that threatning muſt bee underſtood with this exception, unleſſe they repent. Why (will ſome ſay) are the threatnings in Gods Word propounded conditionally? Anſw. Gods whole will and pleaſure is one alone in it ſelfe: and yet it may thus be diſtinguiſhed, to be partly ſecret, and partly revealed. Gods ſecret will is touching thoſe things which he hath not made manifeſt unto men. His revealed will is touching thoſe things which are manifeſted in Scripture, or do fal out every day. Now Gods ſecret will is without condition; for as every thing commeth to paſſe, ſo God willed it: when good things come to paſſe, them he willeth ſimply: when evill things fall out, them he permitteth to be done. And to make Gods ſecret will conditionall, is to bring Gods will under the power of man, and to ſubject the Creator unto the creature. But Gods revealed will is conditionall; becauſe it containeth the matter of mans ſalvation: and this manner of propounding it, is a moſt effectuall way to bring the ſame to paſſe; for it keepeth men more in a awfull obedience, than if it were abſolute.

In this condition note two things, that Chriſt repeateth it twice, both in the beginning of this reaſon, If not; and in the end, Except thou amend. Hereby he would give us to underſtand, That when men commit ſinne, and lie therein; or when they decay in any grace, then have they moſt neceſſary cauſe to repent, if they would eſcape Gods fearefull judgements. And ſeeing our eſtate is like to the ſtate of this Church, or elſe worſe by much (for wee lie in ſinne, and thereby cauſe God to come to us in judgement) as we tender our owne good both in this life, and after death, let us turne from our ſinnes and repent, every man apart, every family apart, and the whole Church publikely: for repentance is moſt needfull, elſe would not the Lord have doubled this condition.

V. 6. But this thou haſt, that thou hateſt the workes of the Nicolaitans, which I alſo hate.

These words are a ſecond reaſon to prove that which was ſet downe in the ſecond verſe: namely, That this Church could not abide them that were evill. In the ſecond verſe this was made manifeſt, by their diſcoverie of the falſe Apoſtles; & here he proveth it by their affection of hatred, towards the workes of the Nicolaitans. Theſe Nicolaitans were certaine hereticks in the primitive Church that held theſe two opinions: Firſt, that adulterie and fornication were no ſinnes; Secondly, that men might communicate with the ſacrifices of idolaters in their Idoll temples; and according to their opinions were their practices. Theſe hereticks (as it is thought) came of one Nicholas, one of the ſeven deacons mentioned Act. 6. who though for a while hee did faithfully diſcharge his duty outwardly, yet after fell away, and became head of this hereticall ſect.

But this thou haſt. This Particle, But, hath reference to the former verſe. As if hee ſhould ſay, Though this be thy fault, that thou faileſt in thy firſt love; yet for this I commend thee, that thou hateſt the works of the Nicolaitans.

Uſe. This practice of Chriſt diſcovereth the common ſinne of this age: which is, to ſet out in their colours mens faults and infirmities, to their greateſt diſgrace; and yet by ſilence and oblivion to burie all their vertues, which are praiſe-worthy. This ought not to be ſo: wee muſt follow Chriſts example, who with juſt reproofe adjoyneth due deſerved praiſe. If our friend or our foe have a fault, when we are called thereunto, we may ſpeake of it, and wee muſt reprove them: but yet withall wee muſt commend the good things that bee in them. Secondly, Chriſt here teacheth us, That it is not ſufficient to any mans good eſtate before God, that he have good things in him; for that a man may have, and yet bee in danger to bee cut off from Chriſt. Saul had good things in him at the firſt entrance into his kingdome, but what was he afterward? Iehu was very zealous for Gods glorie, in killing all the Idolatrous priests, 2 King. 10. 28, 31.

priests, but he would not depart from the sins of Ieroboam. And Iudas no doubt had many good gifts while hee was with Christ, but his end was most fearefull: And this Church had many good things in her; yet is shee in danger of being cut off from Christ: And so many among us have excellent gifts: some for knowledge, some for mercie and conceiving of prayer: and yet for all these they may bee cut off from Christ. Therefore wee must not content our selves with these, but labour for the principall, which is true, hearty, and unfained repentance, which we must daily renew for our continuall falls. And this will keepe us in Gods favour, and from his judgements.

More particularly Christ here commendeth this Church, for hating the errours of the Nicolaitans. Whereby hee would teach us our duty if we be Christians; namely, to take knowledge of the sinnes and errours of our times, and to hate the same unfainedly. Yet note, hee commendeth them for hating their workes, not their persons: giving us direction how to temper our hatred in the world. We must set it against the sinne, not against the person of any man. Some will say, the Prophets prayed against the persons of the wicked. And David professed hatred of the men, Psal. 139.21. Doe not I hate them that hate thee? Ans. David was an extraordinarie Prophet, and had no doubt this revealed unto him; that those his enemies were obstinate, and would not repent. Againe, imprecations of the Prophets in Scripture, must be understood as prophecies of Gods judgement to come upon those against whom they prayed. But we which want that extraordinarie spirit, must keepe our selves to our ordinarie rule: Hate the sinnes, and love the persons.

Further, observe the workes here hated: namely, Idolatry, and Adultery, which are joyned together in these Nicolaitans. Adulterie is the punishment of Idolatrie; and Idolatrie the punishment of Adulterie. Spirituall Adulterie is punished with bodily Adulterie. This was verified in the old Jewes; when they fell a whoring after strange gods, God gave them up to uncleane lust. And it is palpable in the Church of Rome: they being fallen to idolatrie, doe abound in all uncleannesse: for they tolerate Stewes for fornication: and adultery and Sodomie are common among them.

Againe, sundrie men may here bee well admonished, who will be of no religion, because there are many sects and schismes among the professors thereof. These men should consider, That in the best Churches planted by the Apostles, there were sects and heresies, even in the Apostles times, as here in Ephesus. And therefore no marvell, if there bee sects and schismes among us at this day. This offence should not move any to dislike the Gospell, but rather cause them more firmely to cleave unto the truth.

Which I also doe hate. This Christ addeth to encourage them to goe forward in the vertue for which he commended them, in hating evill workes: for what could more provoke them to zeale and constancie therein, than to know they did that which Christ himselfe did? And here wee see, that Christ would have everie member of his Church to be like minded, and like affected unto him, as he was man. We must love those things which Christ loveth, and hate those things which Christ hateth, rejoyce wherein Christ rejoyceth, and mourne for those things for which Christ mourned. And great reason it should bee so: for wee professe our selves to bee members of Christ, bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, for out of his bloud sprung the Church: and there must be consent and conformitie betweene the head and the members. Quest. If Christ hated these wicked men, why did he suffer them to live, and not cut them off from troubling his Church? Ans. Because hereby he would manifest his love to his Church, and his justice upon the wicked: for he can bring light out of darknesse, and good not only out of good, but out of evill.

V. 7. Let him that hath an eare, heare what the spirit saith unto the Churches: To him that overcommeth, will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the middest of the paradise of God.

These words containe the conclusion of this Epistle: the scope whereof, is to excite this Church to the more carefull performance of the duties before prescribed. This conclusion hath two parts: a commandement, and a promise. The commandement in the beginning of the verse; Let him that hath an eare, heare what the spirit saith unto the Churches. In this commandement note three points; I. who are commanded, Those which have eares; II. The dutie commanded, They must heare. III. What they must heare, namely, What the spirit saith unto the Churches.

I. Point. The parties commanded are thus set forth, He which hath an eare: who these be, Christ doth more fully expound, Matth. 13.9. when hee saith, Let him that hath an eare to heare, heare. Where he maketh this distinction of hearers; that some are deafe hearers, some hearing hearers. The deafe hearers are those that bring with them to the ministerie of the word their outward eares onely, but their hearts are not affected with it: neither doe they care to learne to beleeve, or obey that which is taught them. The hearing hearers are all such as beside their bodily eares, have eares pierced ced in their hearts by the spirit of grace, whereby they do not only heare the word outwardly, but their hearts are also affected with it, and made pliable unto it; so as they beleeve it, and bring forth obedience unto it. This hearing eare is set foth by David, when he saith: Sacrifice and burnt offerings thou wouldest not have: but mine eares hast thou opened and prepared; and then I said, Loe I come. Psal. 40. 6. Hereof Isay saith, Thou openedst mine eares, and I was not rebellious. Isa. 50 5. And this hearing eare Lydia had given her, when God opened her heart, whereby she became attentive to the word of God preached by Paul. Act. 16. 14.

By this distinction of hearers which Christ maketh, we may learne, that Gods grace unto salvation is not universall, that is, God giveth not unto all men such measure of grace, whereby (if they will themselves) they may beleeve, repent, and be saved: For in Christs time, and ever since, there have beene in the Church these two kinds of hearers; whereof the deafe hearer doth not receive nor beleeve the Gospell unto salvation. Neither is it true, that God giveth grace sufficient unto all, whereby they might be saved, if they by their malice and sinne did not abolish the same. For though he admit all sorts into his Church, yet not all, but some only have eares pierced by the spirit of grace that they can heare. And therefore when the Disciples asked Christ, Why he spake in parables? he answered thus, To you it is given to know the will of God, and the secrets of his kingdome: but to others it is not given. Matth. 13. vers. 11. Shewing plainly that the gift of hearing to salvation is not given to all, and in some made void by their owne wilfulnesse: but to some it is given, and they have hearing eares: and to some it is not given, and their eares are deafe.

Secondly, seeing this commandement is directed to the hearing hearers; we must hereby be admonished to use all good meanes to become good hearers of Gods word; bringing with us not onely the bodily eares which wee have by creation, but the spirituall eares of the heart, which we have by regeneration. For it is not sufficient to our salvation to receive the word into the outward bodily eares, unlesse the inward eares of the heart be opened, that our soule may be affected with the word, and fitted to receive, to beleeve and obey the same. Thus did good king Iosias heare the law read; the text saith, His heart melted within him. 1 Chr. 34. 27. And thus did David heare when the Lord said to the Church, Seeke yee my face: his heart answered, I seeke thy face, O Lord. Psal. 27. 6. And as wee must be carefull to get spirituall eares; so wee must take heed of deafe eares. Which is when a man commeth and heareth the word of God, but yet hath no care in his heart to learne, beleeve, or obey the same. This deafe eare is a fearefull judgement of God, whereof we may read, Isay 6. 9. where the Prophet is sent, To make their eares heavie, and their hearts fat, that they might not heare, nor beleeve: lest they A should turne and bee saved. And this the rather we must looke unto, because it is a judgement of God upon many among us at this day. The greatest part of hearers are deafe hearers: which appeareth by this, that after long teaching they neither increase in knowledge, nor in faith, nor in obedience; but remaine the same for blindnesse of minde, hardnesse of heart, and profanenesse of life, that they were at the first hearing of the Word: these must know that Gods judgement is on them; and if they would bee saved, they must labour to come out of this estate, and endevour so to heare with their hearts, that they may be turned unto God both in minde, heart, and life.

II. Point. The duty commanded: namely, B to heare. Hearing in Scripture is not onely to listen with the bodily eare: but to be attentive to that which is taught, and with attention to bring faith, conversion, and obedience every way. Eph. 4. 21, 22. the hearing of Christ is notably described: It is not so much to conceive the doctrin of Christ in our minds, and to be able to utter it, as to die unto sinne, and to the lusts of the flesh, and to rise to newnesse of life. And indeed, a man doth heare and learne no more of Gods Word, than he doth beleeve and practise. From whence we are againe to be admonished, that we so heare with attention, that by hearing we suffer our selves to be changed, and that with our change we joyne care to beleeve, and conscience to obey. This is that saving hearing which bringeth eternall life: all C other hearing doth increase our sinnes to our further condemnation. Whereby also appeareth the fearfull state of many, who lend onely the outward bodily eare to heare the Word, but their hearts be not moved, nor their lives changed thereby.

III. Point. What is to be heard? namely, That which the spirit saith unto the Churches. Which words must be referred to that which went before, and not to that which followeth: for this commandement belongs to the matter of the Epistle which went before. The promise following rather concerns the persons themselves than the matter. The things then that are to be heard, are these; Christ his sharp D reproofe for sinne: his threatnings of punishment: a remedy prescribed, and motives to practise the same, especially repentance: for of all these Christ spake before.

Vse. From this, that Christ bids them heare these things which concerned their estate in sinnes, and amendment by repentance, we learne two things. First, that it is a most necessarie thing for every Church of God, and every member thereof, to know and consider their owne wants and sinnes, and also the judgements of God that hang over them for the same. Secondly, that after any man, or any Church hath considered of their sinnes, and of Gods judgements; it is a most necessarie thing, to turne unto God by true repentance, if they have not repented: and and if they have repented, to renew the same daily, and doe it more: that so Gods judgments both private and common may be avoided. We therefore must hereby bee moved to search into our owne wayes, to finde out our owne sins, and to consider of Gods judgements thereby deserved, that by true repentance we may turne unto God, and so escape his fearefull judgements.

Further, these words, What the spirit saith unto the Churches, containe two reasons to move every man to heare. I. Because they are spoken by the spirit, that is, the holy Ghost. II. because they are not spoken to one man, or one Church alone, but to all Churches. For the first: It may be demanded seeing Christ spake these words, How can it bee said that the spirit speaketh them? Ans. Both may stand: first, because all the outward actions of any persons in Trinitie are common to the rest: but to teach the Church is an outward action of Christ, and therefore it agreeth to the Father, and to the holy Ghost. As when the Father created things in the beginning, the Sonne also created, and the holy Ghost created them. So here when the Sonne teacheth, the Father teacheth, and the holy Ghost teacheth: For as the three persons are one in nature, so must they be joyned in all outward actions. Secondly, Christ saith the spirit speaketh, because hee now sitting at the right hand of the Father, doth not teach his Church in bodily presence, but by his Spirit, which after his ascension hee sent to bee their comforter and instructer.

Here then observe that the holy Ghost speaketh to the Church in Scripture. The Church of Rome appoints a Judge to speake unto men in matters of controversie, which is the Church: because (say they) a Judge must speake: and Christ is absent from his Church: and the word is a dumbe letter, and cannot speake: Therefore the Church must needs be Judge. But they erre grosly: The Church cannot be Judge. It is but Christs Minister to put in execution that which hee commandeth. Christ therefore must bee Judge unto his Church by Scripture, which is not a dumbe Judge; for therein his spirit speaketh plainly and sufficiently for the resolving of any point in controversie, that is needfull in Gods Church.

The second reason to attention is, because these things are spoken to all Churches. Where wee see that things spoken to one Church agree to all, From whence we must learne this speciall dutie in reading and hearing Gods holy Word; namely, to read and heare with application. Wee must not rest in a flourishing knowledge of the story, but apply every precept and example unto our selves. If it be an example of vertue, we must apply it to our selves for imitation; if it be an example of vice, we must apply it to our selves to move us to eschew and avoid the like. For God would have all to learne that which hee speaketh unto one. And thus much of the Commandement.

A

To him that overcommeth I will give to eat of the Tree of life, which is in the middest of the Paradise of God. These words containe the second part of this conclusion, to wit, a most excellent promise: wherein consider two points. First, to whom it is made: Secondly, what is promised. For the first: The promise is made to him that overcommeth, that is, to him that in fighting prevaileth against all the spirituall enemies of his salvation, sinne, Satan, hell, and condemnation. There bee three things requisite to make a man able to overcome these enemies. First, he must be borne anew in Christ, of water, and of the spirit, 1 John 5. 4. Hee that is borne of God overcõmeth the world, so by regeneration he is freed from the bondage of hell, death, sinne, and Satan. Secondly, hee must have true faith, by vertue whereof he must deny and renounce himselfe, and be whatsoever he is in the death, passion, and obedience of Christ. Therefore S. Iohn saith in the same place: This is the victory which overcommeth the world, even your faith: for when a man is in Christ, by faith he is made partaker of Christ his victory upon the crosse, and by it receiveth power to subdue his owne corruptions, the world, and the devill. Thirdly, hee that would overcome must keepe faith, that is, true religion, and a good conscience, standing out in life and death against all adversary power whatsoever.

B

In this, that life everlasting is promised to them that overcome; First, we observe, that the doctrine of universall grace, affirming that the promises of the Gospell for life and salvation, belong to all and every man whatsoever, unlesse hee will reject them, is a device of mans braine. For life eternall is not promised to every man as he is a man comming of Adam; but to a man as hee is in Christ by faith, and a new creature. The promises of the Gospell be universall indeed to all that overcome: but that is a propertie which restraines them wholly to true beleevers. Secondly, hereby we are taught so to live, that we may say truly in the testimonie of a good conscience, we have overcome all our spirituall enemies, and doe continually stand conquerours over them. This is a matter of endlesse joy and comfort, which will cheere the soule in great distresse. But to live and lye in sinne, is or will bee a hell to the conscience. What availe the treasures and honours of this world to any man, while his conscience shall tell him hee is a vassall to sinne and Satan? for while he continueth in that estate, hee is out of the favour of God, and hath no part or portion in the kingdome of heaven. Therefore it standeth us upon, to labour to feele in our heart the certaine evidence of the victorie over our spirituall enemies, by the sure testimonie of the spirit of grace.

C

The second point is the thing promised, to wit, life everlasting, noted by this gift, To eat of the Tree of life. And it is set out unto us by two circumstances. First, by the cause of it: Secondly, by the place where it is to bee found. The cause is Christ Iesus: I will give to him to eat of the Tree of life. Where hee maketh an opposition betweene himselfe and the first Adam. The first Adam sinned; and thereby cast himselfe and all his posteritie out of the earthly Paradise, and lost the benefit of the tree of life: But Christ the second Adam, commeth and suffereth for sinne: and thereby openeth the way to a better Paradise, than the first Adam lost: and to all that overcome he giveth libertie to enter in, and to eat of the tree of life. The Tree of life properly, was a tree placed in the middest of the earthly Paradise: and it was so called; first, because it was a pledge and Sacrament unto Adam, that he should live for ever, if he continued in obedience to God: secondly, because it had in it (as may bee proved) vertue and power, whereby it would have preserved him from death and old age for ever, if hee had stood in his innocencie.

The earthly Tree of life was a figure and signe of Christ our Saviour and Mediator; who liveth an eternall spirituall life, not onely as hee is God, but as hee is Mediator, and that not for himselfe alone, but for this end, that he may convey quickning spirituall life to all that beleeve in him: and for this cause hee tearmeth himselfe the tree of life. Further hee saith, Hee will give hereof to eat: To eat, sometime signifieth to beleeve, Joh. 6.50. but it cannot here be so taken; For faith endeth with this life, and hath no use afterward. Therefore to eat, in this place signifieth to have immediate fellowship with Christ in Heaven: where Christ shall bee unto him a tree of life to make him live for ever.

In this promise note two points. I. In what things eternall life consisteth: namely, in immediate fellowship and communion with Christ in heaven. Secondly, that life eternall standeth not in outward meanes, as meat, drinke, clothing, physicke, recreation, sleepe, and such like: but in an immediate partaking with Christ in all his blessings. So that when Christ is all in all unto us immediately, then doe wee eat of the tree of life, and thereby shall live eternally.

I. Circumst. The place where eternall life is to bee had is in the Paradise of God. This Paradise of God is the third Heaven, a place wherein the Lord doth manifest himselfe in his glorious Majestie, and which he hath prepared for the glorie of all his Elect. Hence Christ spake to the theefe on the crosse, saying, This day shalt thou bee with mee in Paradise, Luk. 23. 43. and hither was Paul rapt in vision, and saw and heard things that cannot be uttered: and hee calleth it the third heaven, in respect of the heavens under it: for the place wherein we breath is the first heaven, the starrie firmament is the second heaven, and the Paradise of God is the third: which is therefore called Paradise, because it is a place of endlesse joy and pleasure. And the adding of the name of God, doth not only put a difference betweene it, and Adams earthly Paradise, but also sheweth it to bee a great and most excellent place. So Rahel saith, I have wrestled with my sister the wrestlings of God, that is, strong wrestlings. And in the Psalmes, The Mountaines of God, doe signifie high and mighty Mountaines. And that this Paradise is such an excellent place, appeareth at large, Revel. 22. For therein must come none uncleane thing, but the Saints and Angels doe there enjoy the presence of God, and behold his glory so much as the creature is able to comprehend: There God communicateth himselfe to all the elect, and becommeth all things unto them immediately; so that this must needs be a place of all joy and comfort.

2 Cor. 12.

Gen 30.8.

The consideration whereof must admonish us to seeke the things that bee above, that wee may have a place in this heavenly paradise. For why should wee set our hearts upon the vaine glory of this world, which passeth away as a shadow and commeth to nothing, and in the end is but labour and sorrow, when wee have all that the world can afford? But the joies and glory of this paradise of God bee endlesse and unspeakable: let us therefore deny our selves, depend upon Christ, and in all things keepe faith and a good conscience unto the end. And thus much for the first Epistle.

V. 8. And unto the Angel of the Church of the Smyrnians, write these things, saith hee that is the first and the last, which was dead and is alive.

In this verse and the rest that follow to the twelfth, is laid downe the second letter or Epistle of Christ to another Church of Asia, called Smyrna. Before the Epistle Christ gives a second particular Commandement unto Iohn touching the writing hereof unto this Church, in these words, and unto the Angel of the Church of the Smyrnians write.: Which is prefixed to this Epistle, that this Church and all other Churches of God might bee assured, that Iohn had sufficient warrant and calling for the writing hereof. Which thing is necessary to every penman of the holy Ghost, that the Church need not to doubt of the authority of Scripture, but receive the same as the pure word of God.

Use. Hence we may gather, that all ordinary Ministers of the Gospell, must have warrant and calling for every doctrine which they teach in Gods Church; for the Apostles, that were extraordinary men, of more excellent gifts, might doe nothing without warrant. Of the parts of this commandement we spake in the first verse of this chapter.

The Epistle it selfe followeth, containing three parts, a Preface, a Proposition, and a Con-

Conclusion. The Preface containeth a preparation to the matter of the Epistle in these words; These things saith he that is the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive. In this Preface hee sheweth in whose name this Epistle was written unto this Church, namely, in Christs name: which he setteth downe for two causes. First, to stir up the people in this Church to a religious attention, and a reverent care of receiving the things therein written, as the pure words of Christ Jesus. Secondly, because no Commandement in the matter of Gods worship and religion is to bee received from any creature, but from Christ alone. And therefore this Epistle concerning the true worship and religion of God, is propounded in his name alone. In this preface Christ is described by two notable Arguments: first, To be the first and the last: secondly, that hee was dead, but is alive. The meaning of them both was shewed in the 17. and 18. verses of the former Chapter, whence they are borrowed. By the first, Christ would signifie, that he is everliving God, without beginning or ending, before all creatures, and after them. By the second, that hee is true man, and assumed mans nature to suffer death for our sinnes, and rose againe to life for ever, and to give to man eternall life.

In this description two points of doctrine are expressed.

I. That Christ is a person, consisting of two natures, Godhead and Manhood: He is the first and the last, and therefore God: Hee was dead, and is alive, and therefore is true man. If any aske how one person can consist of two natures; Answ. As body and soule concurre to make one man, so the God-head and Man-hood of Christ concurre to make one Christ; and therefore are united.

II. Doct. Here is the foundation of all true comfort unto Gods Church and people, in any misery and affliction. Which standeth in two points: first, that Christ is able to helpe them in any misery; either by freeing them quite from it, or easing them in it, seeing he is God, the first, and last. Secondly, that as hee is able, so hee is willing and readie to helpe them: for he is man, who tooke on him our nature, dyed for us, and rose againe unto life, to give to us eternall life. This is the very scope and end for which Christ thus describeth himselfe to this Church that was in affliction. Here then we have direction, where and whence to seeke for true comfort in any tribulation of this life; namely, wee must have recourse to Christ, and in him consider both his abilitie and his willingnesse, to ease all his children in affliction. And by these wee must arme our selves against despaire, and against immoderate griefe and sorrow under the crosse.

v. 9. I know thy workes, and tribulation, and povertie, A (but thou art rich) and I know the blasphemie of them which say they are Jewes and are not, but are the Synagogue of Satan.

Here beginneth the Proposition of this Epistle, containing the matter and substance of the whole Epistle. This proposition hath two parts; a commendation of this Church, and counsell how to behave her selfe in the time to come. The commendation is in the 9. v. wherewithall are mingled some comforts unto this Church, being in affliction.

B I know thy works. These words were handled in the former Epistle. The meaning briefly is this: I know all thy dealings, and thy wayes, I know the whole tenour of thy life; and I doe withall well like and approve of them. Here Christ setteth downe an excellent property touching himselfe: namely, that he seeth and knoweth all things whatsoever, nothing is hid from him: and that this Church might bee resolved hereof, he repeateth this unto them; I know thy workes. Neither is it any vaine repetition, being indeed the ground of all true piety, and sincere obedience.

Wee therefore in all our affaires are here taught to labour to be fully resolved in our consciences, that Christ is with us, and seeth us, and knoweth the whole tenour of our wayes in C thoughts, words, and deeds. David had learned this, when as hee said, Thou knowest my sitting and my rising, thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Thou compassest my paths, and my lying downe, and art accustomed unto all my wayes: there is not a word in my tongue, but thou knowest it wholly. This perswasion is very necessary: for it will move a man to make conscience of every thought, word, and action, and of his whole behaviour; but where this perswasion is wanting, there is no religion in the heart, nor good behaviour in the life. When this takes place, Religion beginneth and increaseth with it; so doth good conscience and true obedience; for hee that hath the Lord alwaies before him, will not greatly fall, Psa. 11. 8. D

Psal. 139. 2, 3.

And tribulation. Marke here how workes, that is, a godly conversation, and tribulation goe together. Hence we learne, that God will have tribulations joyned with his grace; where he bestowes his graces, there also he layeth tribulation: and that for weighty causes; as to humble them for their sinnes past, to make triall of their faith and other graces, and to prevent in them sinnes to come. The consideration whereof must move all Gods children in this our Church to looke for some tribulation: for God hath bestowed among us plentie of his graces, with long peace, and many outward blessings: and his will is, that trouble and affliction ſhould accompany the ſame.

Further, Chriſt ſaying, I know thy tribulations, would hereby comfort this Church; as if he ſhould ſay, True it is thou art in great trouble, but it commeth not by chance, but by the ſpeciall providence of my Father: and I doe know and regard the ſame. Pſalm. 113. 6, 7. the raiſing up of the poore and needy, is made a fruit of Gods beholding the things that are done upon the earth. This is an excellent comfort for any Church or people that be in affliction: for when they ſhall know, that beſide the hand of God therein, Chriſt Ieſus regardeth their ſorrowes; this muſt needs arme them with long ſuffering and joyfulneſſe. Wee in this Church (as hath beene ſhewed) may perſwade our ſelves, that God will ſend tribulations among us; now when they come, what ſhal we do? ſhal we ſink under them? No; but we muſt now forecaſt to uſe the means whereby we may ſtay our hearts under the ſmart and burthen of them; that is, by ſetling our hearts in this perſwaſion, that Chriſt ſeeth our affliction, and withall hath ſpeciall care to comfort or deliver us, as hee ſeeth moſt for his glory, and the good of our ſoules.

In the next words Chriſt ſetteth downe two kindes of tribulations in this Church, Poverty, and Reproach: By Poverty he meaneth want of temporall things to maintaine this naturall life. Where obſerve ſundry things: I. That true religion and pietie will not free any from outward povertie. The religion of this Church was excellent, and yet they were in want: and therefore let no man thinke, becauſe he is godly, hee ſhal be rich, or not fall into poverty. If it be aſkt 1 Tim. 4.8. Godlineſſe hath the promiſe not onely of the life to come, but alſo of this life, that is, of earthly bleſſings and riches: I anſwer, it is true; but yet with difference: Eternall bleſſings onely are promiſed abſolutely; and temporall bleſſings with reſtraint, namely, if they ſerve for Gods glory, and the good of his children: otherwiſe they muſt want as this Church did. II. The Lord would comfort this Church in her povertie, by ſaying that hee knew it and regarded it. Where wee ſee a meanes to comfort all thoſe that bee in want of outward bleſſings: They muſt conſider, that Chriſt ſeeth and obſerveth their want whatſoever; and if they bee his ſervants, hee will free them from it, ſo it be for his glory and the good of their ſoules; or elſe arme them with patience to beare it, if they pray unto him. III. Chriſt here approveth of workes where he acknowledgeth poverty, ſo that good workes and poverty may ſtand together. And therefore good workes doe not conſiſt onely in large Almes, as the Church of Rome would have it; though theſe have due reward and praiſe in their place. But every worke of a mans lawfull calling, done in obedience to God, with an honeſt heart, from a good conſcience, and for Gods glory, is a good worke, be the calling never ſo baſe. Thus may the ſhepheard praiſe God in his calling, as well as the Magiſtrate or Miniſter. For it is not the matter of the worke that commends it to God, but the manner of doing.

A

But thou art rich. Here Chriſt intendeth both to praiſe and to comfort this Church: as if hee ſhould ſay, Notwithſtanding thy outward poverty, yet thou art rich in God, as Luk. 12. 21. Men are rich in God in two reſpects: I. When they are reconciled to God in the merits of Chriſt. 2 Corinth. 8. 9. Chriſt became poore for our ſakes, that wee through his povertie might be made rich; that is, that wee might have the pardon of ſinne, and bee received into Gods favour. Hereupon David cals the Lord his portion and his cup. And durable riches and righteouſneſſe are with wiſdome, Proverb. 8. 18.

B

II. When they receive his grace, whereby they are enabled to bring forth good workes, both in duties to God and man. Of this Paul ſpeaketh, when he exhorteth rich men to be rich in good workes, and to lay up for themſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, 1 Timoth. 6. 16.

In this commendation ſundry duties are to be learned: I. Poore men are here taught, ſeeing God denieth unto them earthly riches and wealth, to labour to bee rich in God, to be reconciled unto him in Chriſt, and to get ſuch grace, that they may doe good duties both unto God and man, in faith and with a good conſcience. II. Rich men, on whom God beſtoweth outward wealth, muſt hereby bee admoniſhed to embrace Pauls charge, 1 Timoth. 6. 17, 18. Above all things ſeeke for true riches in the living God: and not ſuffer theſe outward bleſſings to puffe up their mindes; but uſe them as a meanes to make them rich in God, by getting Gods grace, doing good workes, and diſtributing to the poore. This admonition is moſt neceſſary, for though the promiſes of Gods grace be not denied unto the rich, yet ſure it is, riches doe choake the ſeed of grace in the heart, and hinder the care men ought to have for ſpirituall riches. And hence it commeth, that more of the poorer ſort receive and obey the Goſpel than of the rich. III. Herein behold the madneſſe of the world. For the moſt mens greateſt labour and care is after worldly wealth and honour: never regarding the true treaſures of Gods grace, which will commend them unto God, when the other muſt periſh and the wicked owners thereof. Let us therefore judge as Chriſt doth of true riches, and accordingly labour to be rich in his ſight.

D

The ſecond part of their tribulation is the reproach and blaſphemy of their enemies, in theſe words; I know the blaſphemy of them which ſay they are Iewes, and are not, &c. that is, I know the grievous ſlanders and revilings which thine enemies faſten upon thee. For blaſphemy ſignifieth not only ſpeeches of diſgrace againſt God; but againſt men: As Naboth was accuſed, 1 King. 21. 10. to have blaſphemed GOD and the King. And of this Paul ſaith, ſaith, When we are reviled, we bleſſe: when we are blaſphemed, we pray, 1 Cor. 4. 12, 13.

Hence we learne, that all Churches and men that deſire truly to ſerve God, and to keepe good conſciences, muſt looke for ſlaunders and revilings: neither muſt this ſeeme ſtrange unto them; for Chriſt hath ſaid, it muſt bee ſo. Nay rather they might marvell, if they ſhould ſuffer no reproaches for Chriſts ſake, ſeeing hee hath ſaid, curſed are you when all men ſpeak well of you, Luk. 6. 26. It is indeed a grievous thing to bee ſo evill rewarded for well doing; but this muſt bee their comfort and ground of patience, That Chriſt heareth and knoweth every reproach, and will in his good time remedy the ſame.

The perſons which blaſpheme this Church are thus deſcribed; Which ſay they be Iewes, and are not, but are of the Synagogue of Satan. As in other famous cities, ſo in Smyrna dwelt ſome of the Jewes, who had their Synagogue, that is, ſuch places of aſſemblies, where they ſerved God after their manner: and though they denied Chriſt, yet they thought themſelves to bee the onely true worſhippers of God in all the world; and therefore did blaſpheme and raile upon the Chriſtians that beleeved in Chriſt. And of theſe Chriſt ſaith, though by birth they were Jewes, yet indeed they were not the Iſrael of God, nor his true worſhippers, as they accounted themſelves. Whereby in generall we may ſee, from whom come raylings and reproaches on Gods ſervants; namely, from thoſe which ſay they are true worſhippers of God, and are not: For hee is not a Iew, that is one outward, Rom. 2. 28. He therefore that ſlandereth the truth, and the profeſſors thereof, is an enemie to Chriſt, as well as to his ſervants: for no friend of Chriſt can poſſibly ſpeake evill of his Goſpell and religion. This ſhould bee conſidered for the comfort of the godly, becauſe they that endevour to ſerve God in ſinceritie, are of all men moſt ſubject to reproach: Hee that refraineth from evill, maketh himſelfe a prey, Eſay 59. 15.

Touching theſe Jewes, two points are to bee conſidered: I. What they are in their owne opinion: II. What they are in the judgement of Chriſt. For the firſt, becauſe they were Jewes, by birth deſcending from Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, Gods ancient ſervants, therefore they thought themſelves the onely true worſhippers of God, as their forefathers were. And this is the manner of all wicked men; To bleſſe themſelves in their wickedneſſe, and whatſoever they do, yet ſtil to ſay and think, God wil bleſſe them. Take an heretike, who overthrowes the truth of God by his errours, and hee will ſay he teacheth that which in conſcience hee is perſwaded is the truth, for which hee will ſhed his bloud, and whereto he would have all men yeeld. So take a profeſſed witch, man or woman, they will ſay, all that they doe is by the power of the good Angels, and by ſome ſpecial

A gifts given unto them above others; but they will not be brought to acknowledge that they doe any thing by vertue of their league with the Devill, from whence indeed commeth all they doe. And ſo the carnall Proteſtants of our time, they looke for Gods bleſſings in this life, and for eternall life by Chriſt after death, and yet walke in the broad way to deſtruction, in ſinne and profaneneſſe Thus they bleſſe themſelves in their evill wayes, and make Chriſt a packe-horſe for their iniquities. But in the example of theſe Jewes, wee muſt learne to lay downe all preſumptuous thoughts of our owne goodneſſe, and vaine perſwaſions of Gods favour, without his true grace; and rather looke unto our ſinnes, and be humbled for them, that

B God may lift us up. II. Point. Chriſts judgement of them is this; They are not Iewes, but a Synagogue of Satan; that is, a companie of men that ſeemed to ſerve God after the Jewiſh manner, but did indeed worſhip the Devill. Herein are many things to bee conſidered. I. How this could be true of any company of the Jewes, who were the choſen people of God? Anſw. Election is twofold: ſpeciall, and generall. Gods ſpeciall Election is, when in his eternall counſell hee chooſeth a man to life eternall: and this befell not all the Jewes, but ſome onely: Gods generall Election is, when hee vouchſafeth any people to become his Viſible Church, to have and carrie the outward ſignes and privileges of his covenant: and thus was the Nation of the Jewes Elect, and therefore were circumciſed, and received the Paſſeover.

C From this generall Election, a Church and people may fall, as the Jews did, and ſo became the Synagogue of Satan; being indeed never within the particular calling, from which a man cannot fall away: for Gods Election remaineth ſure, 2 Tim. 2. 19. His calling is without repentance, Rom. 11. 29. Rom. 7.

II. Point. At what time did the Jewes begin to bee a Synagogue of Satan? Anſw. Not at the crucifying of the Lord of life, (though that were a moſt heinous ſinne) for though ſome therein ſinned of malice, yet many did it of ignorance. This Peter confeſſeth, Act. 3. 17. and therefore in his firſt Sermon after Chriſts

D Aſcenſion telleth them, that the promiſe belonged to them and to their ſeed that were afarre off, Acts 2. 39. But when the Apoſtles had a long time preached Chriſt unto them, and convinced their conſciences out of the Old Teſtament, that hee was the true Meſſias, and yet they remained obſtinate; rejecting and perſecuting both them and their doctrine; then they ceaſed to bee a Church of God, and became a Synagogue of Satan: for this cauſe Paul and Barnabas ſhooke off the duſt of their feet againſt them, and turned to the Gentiles. Whereby we ſee, when a Church of God becommeth no Church; namely, not ſo ſoone as they hold an hereſie: for the Church of the Galathians held juſtification by workes, yet thereupon ceaſed Act. 13. 46. 51.

not to be a Church; but when they embrace an heresie against the foundation of religion, and bee convicted of it, not by private men, but by Apostolicall authoritie, or by publike judiciall sentence of the Church from the authority of Gods Word.

Hence we may learne, first what wee are to thinke and judge of the Church of the Papists, of the Libertines, and Anabaptists, family of Love, and such like; namely, that they are no Churches of God: for they hold heresies against the foundation, which the Church long agone condemned by Apostolical and judicial authoritie. Againe, here wee learne what to judge of this our Church of England: many there bee that say we have no Church among us, because some private men have reproved the same for some things that are amisse, and yet they are not reformed. But this is a fond and foolish reason: For first, the errour must be against the foundation; and yet that maketh not a Church to bee no Church, unlesse it be obstinately maintained after sufficient reproofe and judiciall conviction by the word of God: But no such thing can be affirmed of us, and therefore we remaine the true Church of God.

III. Point. How became the Jewes a Synagogue of Satan? Answ. Through their unbeleefe: as it is plainly proved, Roman. 11. 20. Object. But they held the Word of God, and defended the bookes of the old Testament, for which wee are beholding unto them. Answ. Indeed they held the letter: But if wee regard the true meaning of the Prophets, and the subject of the old Testament, which is Jesus Christ, that they razed out and denied. And so though they held the letter, yet worshipping God out of Christ, they worshipped an Idoll, and not that God which would give unto them eternall life: For out of Christ there is no salvation. And so we may say of the Church of Rome: though they hold the bookes of the Old and New Testament, with the Creed of the Apostles (whereupon some say wee ought not to depart from them,) yet the truth is, that indeed they hold them not. The Christ of the Papists is but a fained Christ; for they take from him both his nature (especially his humanity) and his offices: and therefore we have just cause to separate from them.

This example of the Jewes, that were once a most famous people, but are now become the Synagogue of Satan, must be set before our eies continually. For when all the world were rejected, they stood high in Gods favour; but now for their unbeleefe they are cast off from God, and are become the Synagogue of the Devill. Which must admonish us, Not to bee high minded, but to feare, Roman. 11. 20. for if God spared not the naturall branches, them that were his first chosen people, he will not spare us that are but wilde olives graffed into the true vine. We must therefore take heed of unbeleefe, and labour for true faith, which we must testifie by obedience in our lives and conversations.

V. 10. Feare none of those things which thou shalt suffer: Behold, it shall come to passe that the Devill shall cast some of you into prison that yee may bee tried, and yee shall have tribulation tenne dayes. Bee thou faithfull unto the death, and I will give thee the crowne of life.

Here followeth the second part of the Proposition of this Epistle, to wit, that heavenly and spirituall counsell which Christ giveth to the Church of Smyrna: which I call counsell, because in the next chapter our Saviour Christ calleth such kind of instruction by the name of counsell. First, here note that Christ commendeth this Church, and giveth her counsell, but doth not at all rebuke her for her faults, as hee did the Church of Ephesus. Hence the Papists gather, that Gods Church, and so the members thereof, may live without sinne, and fulfill the law. But they are deceived: Christ therefore abstaineth from reproofe of this Church, not for that he had not any thing against them, but for these two causes especially. First, because this Church of Smyrna did truly repent and beleeve, and did not decay in grace as the Church of Ephesus did: and therefore had the pardon of her sinnes, and was in Gods love and favour. Secondly, this Church did indevour to obey Christ, and to testifie her faith and love thereby. Now God accepteth the desire and will of obedience in his children, as obedience it selfe: and therefore did not reprove them for any fault that was among them.

Seeing this Church being in affliction is so farre forth accepted, that Christ reproveth nothing in her; we are taught, it is profitable for Gods Church and people sometime to bee in affliction: for thereby are the gifts and graces of God preserved, as Faith and Repentance: and many grievous sinnes prevented, which otherwise Gods children might fall into.

The counsell it selfe containeth three parts. A precept. A prophecie. And a precept againe. The first precept is in these words, Feare none of these things which thou shalt suffer. This precept may seeme to bee against other places of Scripture; as Phil. 2. 12. Worke out your salvation in feare and trembling. And, Roman. 11. 20. bee not high minded, but feare. Answ. There bee three kindes of feare: I. Naturall feare. II. Feare proceeding from grace. III. A distrustfull feare proceeding from unbeleefe. The naturall feare feare is a declining and eschewing of death and those things that tend thereto: this feare is in all men, in as much as every thing desireth to preserve it selfe: this was in Christ, who in his agony feared death, as it was a separation of soule and bodie asunder: yet this was no sinne in him, but onely an infirmitie without sinne. The second kinde of feare, is that which commeth from grace, Malac. 1. 6. If I bee a father, where is mine honour? If I be a master, where is my feare? This feare is a reverent awe towards God in regard of his mercy and judgements: and this is a vertue and no sinne. The third is distrustfull feare, when men for affliction forsake religion and obedience to God, standing more in feare of men than of God: and this is that feare which Christ in this place forbiddeth, being a sinne that draweth men from God unto perdition.

In this Commandement Christ doth two things. First, hee giveth them and us to understand, what is the sinne in which every man is conceived, and the seed whereof remaineth still in the children of God; namely, distrustfull unbeleefe, whereby men feare the authority of the creature, more than the glorious Majestie of the eternall God: which proceedeth from this, that men consider not of God as hee extendeth his providence over all things, and as hee is a mighty Judge taking revenge upon all sinne and wickednesse.

Secondly, here Christ describeth the meanes whereby Gods people may arme themselves against all perils and troubles whatsoever, to wit, Christian fortitude: which is a gift of God proceeding from true faith, enabling a man to lay aside all feare, and with courage to undergo all dangers whatsoever, that he may in life and death maintain faith, and a good conscience: this vertue God prescribed to the Prophets when they were to enter into their calling, and our Saviour Christ to his Apostles, & to his Church of Smyrna. And it were to bee wished, that all the Ministers of the Gospell might speake unto their people as Christ speaketh unto this Church, Feare not. But the truth is, if they deale faithfully, they must change their note, & say with Ioel, waile and howle yee Priests and people, lying in sackcloth and ashes, because the day of the Lords vengeance is at hand. For it is lamentable to see the state of the whole bodie of our people, of whom we may generally say with the Prophet, There is no knowledge of God in the land. And where knowledge is, there is little conscience to live thereafter. Consider also how the most are carnall minded, dead in sinne, they savour not the things that pertaine to Gods kingdome, but their hearts are wholly possessed with earthly desires and delights, and spirituall things affect them not. Yea, in all places we shall see, that as naturall sleep wrappeth up the senses of the body: so a spirituall slumber benummeth their mindes and hearts. For though God preach daily unto us by his judgments, yet like the old world wee know nothing of the evill day; wee never call to minde the judgement to come. And if hereunto wee joyne the common crying sinnes of this land, as swearing, cursing, oppression, sabbath-breaking, drunkennesse, whoredome, and all uncleanenesse, yea, Atheisme it selfe the ground of all; How can wee say with Christ, Feare not? yea, rather we must call men to repentance in sackecloth and ashes. For God is jealous for his glory, neither will hee alway bee chiding, nor winke at our iniquities, he hath whet his sword and bent his bow, and unlesse wee repent, the day of havocke will come shortly, wherein he will take vengeance upon all our iniquities. And although this bee the common state of the land, yet Christ hath his remnant among us, who doe mourne for the sinnes and abhominations of the times, and doe endevour to keepe faith and a good conscience in all things: and to these it may be said, Feare not, but take to your selves Christian courage, and arme your selves therewith; lay aside all distrustfull feare, and glorifie God in your hearts, strive to keepe the faith in a pure conscience unto the end, and so shall Christ appeare to your joy, when the wicked shall bee ashamed. And to move Gods children to this Christian fortitude, first let them consider what a judgement of God is due unto them that are distrustfully feareful, when they should suffer any thing for the name of Christ: Revel. 21. 8. they must have their reward in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone among the damned. Secondly, let them observe the Lords presence and his gracious promise of protection in distresse, He will cause his Angels to pitch their tents about them, that no perill shall hurt them. 2 King. 6. when a mightie armie came against Elisha, his servant was sore afraid: but marke how hee comforted him, Feare not (saith he) for they that bee with us, are more than they that bee with them: And so it is with Gods children. Thirdly, let them consider that it is a most honourable estate to suffer any thing for the name of Christ. And therefore the Apostles rejoyced exceedingly when they had beene beaten, That they were counted worthie to suffer any thing for Christs sake, Galat. 5. 14. The crosse of Christ is Pauls whole rejoycing. And if hee would boast of any thing, it should bee herein, 2 Cor. 12. 9, 10. Thus were Gods servants affected: and therefore they that repent and beleeve, need not to feare what flesh can doe unto them.

The second part of Christs counsell is his prophecie: which is a prediction of that particular affliction which this Church of Smyrna should suffer; and first he prefixeth this note of attention, behold: then hee setteth downe the prophecie it selfe, The devil shall cast some of you into prison. Behold, hereby he would teach us an excellent lesson: that wee must often consider before hand of the day of our visitation, wherein God will trie us, lest we perish therein;

Luke 19.41. our Saviour Chriſt comming towards Jeruſalem wept over it, and when hee came to it hee foretold the finall deſtruction of that citie: which therefore came upon them, becauſe they conſidered not the day of their viſitation, neither the things therein fore-told that did concerne their peace. And the like deſtruction will come upon us in this land, if wee conſider not the dayes of our viſitation: let us therefore now in the dayes of peace forecaſt what is to come, and prepare our ſelves againſt the day of the Lords triall; and ſo ſhall wee eſcape the fearefull and finall deſtruction that ſhall come upon the wicked. It ſhall come to paſſe that the Devill ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon, that yee may bee tried, and yee ſhall have tribulation ten dayes. Theſe words containe Chriſts prophecie, wherin hee ſheweth himſelfe to be true God; for as Iſay in many places ſheweth, it is the property of God alone to fore-tell a particular affliction that is contingent. But ſome will ſay, others can foretel certaine things to come: as the Phyſitian, the ſicke mans death; and the Aſtronomer the time of the eclyps; how then is this proper to God? Anſw. The Phyſitian foretelleth the ſicke mans death, onely by vertue of cauſes preſent, in which the future death is to him apparant: And the Aſtronomer foretelleth the eclyps, by the conſideration of the naturall and ordinary courſe of the Heavens in preſent, and by that can come to foretell it in time to come. So that ſimply none can foretell a thing contingent, except hee ſee it preſent in the cauſes; but Chriſt foretelleth things to come ſimply of himſelfe, though no cauſe be preſent, as appeareth in this place.

Iſa. 44.7.

In this prophecie Chriſt deſcribeth this affliction by ſundry arguments. Firſt, by the cauſe thereof, which is the Devill. Secondly, by the parties that were to bee afflicted, Some of you of the Church of Smyrna. Thirdly, by the kinde of puniſhment, Impriſonment: fourthly, by the end thereof, their triall. And fifthly by the time of it continuance, for ten dayes.

I. Argument. The cauſe of their affliction is the devill. Queſt. How can that bee, for being a ſpirit he cannot offer violence to mens bodies to caſt them into priſon? Anſw. True, but hee is the God of the world that ruleth in the hearts of the wicked; hee inclineth their wils to hate Gods children, he ſtirreth them up to perſecute, and maketh them his inſtruments to caſt Gods ſervants into priſon.

In this that the Devill cauſeth the afflictions of Gods Church, we may learne ſundry points. I. What manner of men thoſe bee that perſecute the Church of God? namely, wicked men, ſuch as are inſpired by Satan, and wholly guided in minde, will, and in affection by him: this made Paul ſay, Hee was the head of all ſinners: becauſe in perſecuting the Church of God hee was guided by the Devill, and made his miniſter: which muſt teach us to take heed how we perſecute the Church of God, or any member

1 Tim. 1.15.

A thereof, either in word or deed: for he that doth ſo is the vaſſall of Satan in that action, and while he holdeth that courſe, he ſheweth himſelfe to bee no better than one that is wholly guided by the devill: for the devill is the principall agent in perſecutions, and wicked men be his inſtruments.

II. Hereby we are taught to take pitty upon all perſecutors, bee they Kings or Monarchs, or whatſoever: yea, we muſt pray for them though they be our enemies: becauſe they are poſſeſſed and guided by the Devill, and in their perſecutions doe his will, and become his ſervants and vaſſals.

III. Here we learne with what weapons we are to defend our ſelves in time of perſecution: B namely, with ſpirituall weapons of prayers, and invocation, wherein we muſt ſhew our faith in Chriſt, our repentance and true obedience; for our principall adverſary is a ſpirit, and hereby we ſhall beſt defend our ſelves againſt him, and get the chiefeſt victory. Elias for his prayer is called, The Chariot and horſman of Iſrael. Nothing doth ſo much prevaile in troubles and perſecutions, as prayer from a penitent and beleeving heart. And if God ſhould ſend a forrain nation againſt us, howſoever the weapons of the ſouldier muſt bee uſed, yet our principall weapons muſt be praier and faſting: for thereby we ſhall ſooneſt foyle our principall adverſary Satan, who feareth not the ſpeare nor ſword, and yet will flie before theſe ſpirituall weapons.

2 King. 2.12.

C II. Argument. The parties that muſt bee afflicted, were ſome of the Church of Smyrna, not all.

III. Argu. The kind of their affliction was impriſonment.

IV. Argu. The end of their affliction, was the triall of their faith, hope, love, and patience, with other graces of God, and the manifeſtation of the ſame, firſt to their owne conſcience, and then unto the world. In theſe three Arguments, note firſt a ſpeciall point touching Gods providence, to wit, that it is the firſt cauſe of all, above all cauſes ruling and diſpoſing them all. God in governing the world by his providence uſeth inſtruments of two ſorts: good, or evill. The good inſtruments are good Angels, D and regenerate men; by whom commeth no diſorder, for God worketh both in them and by them. Wicked inſtruments are the Devill, and wicked men, and though God uſe them wel, yet from them is much diſorder and ſinne, for he worketh not in them, but only by them, permitting their ſins and diſorders, that thereby hee may ſhew forth his juſtice, mercie, and power: which herin do notably appear, in uſing theſe inſtruments which be evill in themſelves, that notwithſtanding their malice hee cauſeth wonderfull order: firſt by his providence he reſtraineth their fury and rage, ſo as they cannot ſhew it to the full as they deſire. See this in the Devils perſecution againſt this Church: hee cannot kill the members thereof, but only caſt them into priſon: hee cannot impriſon them all, but ſome onely: neither can he keepe them in priſon alwayes, but for a ſhort time. Secondly, by his providence he turneth all that they doo, to the good of the Church: the devill afflicteth the Church for the deſtruction and damnation of their ſoules; but God turneth it unto their good, to make their faith manifeſt, and to prevent many ſinnes in them. Theſe things wee ſhould often thinke of, and bleſſe Gods name for ever, that by his providence he doth maſter Satans power and malice; and ſo diſpoſe of all actions of the wicked, that they tend to the good of his Church. This muſt alſo teach us to renounce our ſelves, and to put all our truſt and confidence in Chriſt his providence, making that our comfort, our ſtay, and protection in all diſtreſſe.

can-

Againe, whereas the end of afflictions in Gods Church is the triall of faith, and other graces; hence we are taught many things. Firſt, to labour to have in our hearts the power of godlineſſe in true faith and unfained repentance; and not content our ſelves with the forme and ſhew thereof in a naked profeſſion onely. For wee muſt bee caſt into the firie triall of afflictions, to ſee what is in our hearts. In the day of triall, ſhewes will not ſerve the turne, nor ſtand us in ſtead. Trialls and afflictions will conſume them, as the fire doth droſſe and ſtubble. Secondly, to be joyfull and glad, when the Lords will is to call us to ſuffer for his ſake: becauſe this is a meanes to make knowne good graces in our hearts. Iames 1. 2. Brethren, count it exceeding great joy, when ye fal into divers afflictions, knowing that the triall of your faith bringeth forth patience.

V. Argument. The time of their continuance in affliction is for ten dayes. By which ſome underſtand a long time: according unto that which Iacob ſaith to Laban; Thou haſt changed my wages ten times, that is, often. And ſo the Iſraelites are ſaid to ſinne, ten times againſt the Lord: that is, many times: but this expoſition will not ſo fitly ſtand in this place; for Chriſt intendeth to comfort this Church. But what comfort could this bee, to ſay they ſhould bee ſo long in affliction? Others expound ten dayes to be ten yeares. And ſo the word dayes is ſometime uſed to betoken yeares; for in the Scripture there bee yeares of dayes, as well as yeares of weekes. But though this expoſition may well ſtand with the words, yet none can ſhew by true record, that this Church was afflicted onely for ten yeares, and no longer. Therefore a third expoſition is this. That by ten dayes is meant ſome ſhort ſpace of time: and ſo I underſtand this place, becauſe it is moſt ſuitable to all circumſtances. For here Chriſt intendeth to comfort this Church, which is moſt fitly done, by fore-telling a ſhort time of their affliction.

Gen. 31. 41. Numb. 14. 22.

In this circumſtance of time, Chriſt ſetteth A downe two things; Firſt, that the afflictions of Gods Church and people are for a certaine time decreed of God, which cannot bee changed, lengthened, or ſhortned. Particular proofes hereof wee have in Scripture. So God foretold Abraham, That the afflictions of his people ſhould be 430. yeares: which time they were afflicted, eſpecially in Ægypt: but at the ſame night when thoſe yeares were expired, they were led out of Egypt, and their afflictions ceaſed, Exod. 12. 40. And the 70. yeares captivitie were well knowne unto Daniel to be determined of the Lord: And therefore hee armed himſelfe with patience during that time, and prayed not for deliverance, untill it ſhould bee expired.

B The conſideration hereof muſt move us to arme our ſelves with patience when God ſhall ſend affliction, becauſe wee cannot deliver our ſelves before the time which God hath appointed: for the continuance of our afflictions is ſet downe by God, and cannot be changed by us. Secondly, here Chriſt ſheweth, that the afflictions of his Church are but for a ſhort time: and therefore Paul calleth them momentanie, in regard of the eternall weight of glory which ſhall be revealed at the end of this life, and never have end. Which is a ſingular ground of comfort unto the childe of God in any diſtreſſe. 2 Cor. 4. 17.

Thus wee ſee the parts of this prophecie; yet in the words there is a further thing intended; for every word containeth a reaſon to comfort C this Church: as firſt, from the cauſe of their perſecution, which is the Devill; and therefore they muſt not feare, for if hee caſt them into priſon, their caſe is good: hee is Gods enemy, and ſo the Lord is on their ſide, who then can bee againſt them to doe them hurt? Secondly, not all your whole Church, but onely ſome (ſaith Chriſt) muſt bee afflicted. Thirdly, Satan cannot kill you, but onely caſt you into priſon. Fourthly, his impriſonment ſhall not tend to your damnation, but make for the triall of your grace. And laſtly, it is but for a ſhort time. In all which you may ſee the power of Gods providence overruling your enemie, and turning his rage unto your ſalvation; and therefore take comfort and courage unto your ſoules, lay aſide all feare and all dread, and keepe faith, and good conſcience to the end. D

The third part of this counſell, is a moſt bleſſed precept, containing, moſt heavenly advice: Bee thou faithfull unto death, and I will give thee the crowne of life. Gods ſervants are called faithfull, in regard of their fidelitie which they owe to God, and that is in two reſpects: 1. Every member of Chriſt is baptiſed; wherein God for his part promiſeth Chriſt, with life everlaſting: and the partie baptized promiſeth unto God againe, that he will deny himſelfe, and caſt himſelfe wholly upon God in life and death, and keepe faith and a good conſcience. Which promiſe is called the ſtipula-

tion

tion of a good conſcience, 1 Peter 3. 21. And when a man keepeth this promiſe made to God, then is he faithfull, and when he breaketh it, hee is unfaithfull. II. God giveth unto his children many good gifts and graces, as knowledge, faith, repentance, and care to keepe a good conſcience, which hee would have them in all things to keepe and preſerve. And therefore Paul biddeth Timothie, keepe that thing which is committed unto him of truſt. Now a man is faithfull unto God, when hee maketh good uſe of the gifts and graces of God, and ſtill preſerveth the ſame, uſing them for Gods glorie, and the good of his owne ſoule, and of his brethren: like as wee are counted faithfull with men, when we keep that thing ſafe which is committed unto us of truſt. The meaning then of Chriſt is this: Thou haſt made a promiſe unto mee in baptiſme, to renounce ſinne and Satan, and to keepe faith and a good conſcience unto death; therefore performe this thy promiſe: and for thoſe gifts which I have committed of truſt unto thee, ſee thou keepe them well, and uſe them to my glory in the good of thy brethren.

1 Tim. 2. 19.

Againſt this precept three ſorts of men offend, and be unfaithfull unto God. I. Thoſe that being baptized, doe yet live in ignorance and ſecurity, never ſeeking to know God, or to underſtand his will, no not ſo much as for their owne vow in baptiſme; although none will brag more of fidelitie unto God, than theſe men doe. II. Thoſe that have knowledge and underſtanding in Gods will, and yet make no conſcience to live accordingly. III. Thoſe that for a time ſhew forth many good things, as care to get knowledge, and to keepe faith and a good conſcience, but after ſuffer themſelves to be intangled and drawn away with the profits and pleaſures of the world, or elſe to be driven back by trials and perſecution. And of theſe three ſorts bee moſt men generally; whoſe caſe is fearefull and dangerous, for they ſhall never have the crowne of life, if they continue thus unfaithfull.

To induce men to fidelitie, Chriſt addeth a moſt forcible reaſon: promiſing thereunto, The crowne of eternall life. Hence the Papiſts conclude, that Martyrs by ſuffering martyrdome, doe merit the kingdome of heaven; becauſe it is called a Crowne, therefore ſay they it is a reward. Whereunto I anſwer two wayes: I. The kingdome of heaven is called a Crowne onely in reſemblance, becauſe as with men after the race is run, they receive the garland; even ſo after men have fought the good fight of faith, and kept a good conſcience in this life, then in the life to come they receive the crown of glory. For the keeping of faith and a good conſcience is not the cauſe, but the Antecedent of eternall life. Secondly, the reward is promiſed not to the martyrdome, but to the Martyr: and yet not for his ſufferings, but becauſe hee is a member of Chriſt, and by ſuffering death hath ſhewed his faith in Chriſt; for whoſe merit alone he is ſo rewarded. And ſo muſt this, and all other promiſes of like ſort bee underſtood: for the Papiſts doe foully erre when they apply the promiſes unto the workes, which are made unto the workers. By this promiſe, wee all that have made our vow to God in baptiſme, muſt learne to become faithfull in keeping the ſame unto the end. It is a ſhame for a man to bee unfaithfull unto men, much more with God. And the more fearefull is this ſinne, becauſe onely the faithfull ſhall inherit eternall life. Secondly, all ſuch as have made a ſhew of good things heretofore, and now doe ſuffer the ſame to decay, muſt call to minde from whence they are fallen, and become faithfull keepers of the graces of God, holding faſt true religion and good conſcience, and walke conſtantly in obedience: and then ſhall they have the crowne of life, though not for their deſerts, but onely for the merits of Chriſt.

V. 11. Let him that hath an eare, heare what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches: he that overcommeth, ſhall not bee hurt of the ſecond death.

Theſe words containe the laſt part of this Epiſtle: namely, the Concluſion. Wherein obſerve generally, as alſo in the two next verſes, that Chriſt repeateth the ſame things which he ſpake before in this and the former chapter, yea in the very ſame words. This muſt bee conſidered, becauſe it is done by Chriſt, who is the Doctor of his Church; whoſe example both for matter and manner of teaching muſt bee our rule and precept. The like did the Apoſtles; It grieveth not Paul to write the ſame things; Phil. 3. 1. And Peter ſaith unto the diſperſed Church, That hee will often put them in minde of the ſame things before his departing, wherein they had knowledge and were eſtabliſhed. Hereby all Miniſters of the Goſpell in their miniſtery have warrant, often to teach and repeat the ſame points of doctrine, even in the ſame words. Yea, Gods faithfull Miniſter may preach the ſame Sermon oftentimes, if hee doe it not for eaſe to himſelfe, but for the benefit of the people. And therefore if any hearer of Gods word, ſhall at any time marke the Miniſter to deliver the ſame things often, he is not curiouſly to finde fault with his miniſtery, for by that reaſon they may finde fault with Chriſt, who ſeven times repeateth the ſame things unto theſe Churches.

2 Pet. 1. 12.

This Concluſion hath two parts: a Commandement, and a Promiſe: The words of this Commandement have beene expounded in the ſeventh verſe, with the doctrines and uſes thereof; yet here is to bee obſerved what the Spirit commendeth thus ſeriouſly to our hearing. The things are three, which were handled in in the former verses. First, touching Gods providence, that heedeth and regardeth the tribulations of his Church. The second, touching triall, that Gods Church and people ought before-hand to consider of the day of visitation, and thereby arme themselves with courage against all afflictions, that they suffer not themselves to be overmuch daunted with any feare. The third touching faithfulnesse: Gods people must consider what promises they have made to God in Baptisme, namely, to keepe faith, true Religion, and good conscience unto the end; and these they must performe unto death. These things being so carefully commended unto us by Christ, we must labour to have them engraven in our hearts, that wee may practise them in our lives. And to incite us hereunto, wee must marke the two reasons contained in the words. First, because the Spirit of Christ speaketh unto us. Secondly, because they concerne all Churches, (though principally they were spoken to the Church of Smyrna) and therefore none may seeke excuse to exempt himselfe from learning and obeying these things.

The promise, Hee that overcommeth shall not bee hurt of the second death. Of the meanes of overcomming, wee have spoken in the seventh verse. By second death, is meant the condemnation of the soule and body forever and ever. For there be two kindes of death mentioned in Scripture: the first is the separation of bodie and soule asunder at the end of this life: The second is, when soule and body both are severed forever from Gods comfortable presence, Rev. 21.8. The second death is expounded to bee an abode in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. The meaning therfore of the promise is this; that they which overcome, though they may suffer the first death, yet they shal never suffer damnation; their soule and body may bee severed one from the other for a time, but neither soule nor bodie shall ever bee severed from God, to goe into that lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. Which is a most gracious and happy promise.

Here first marke to whom this promise is made, namely, To them that overcome. Where learne, that it is not sufficient for a man to professe and approve, or to teach the doctrine of the Gospell; but withall he must joyne a fight against himselfe, against sinne, the world, the devill, and against all the enemies of his salvation, and not suffer them to reigne over him, but to fight, as by Gods grace hee may overcome; and then shall the second death never hurt him. It is nothing to professe, if we still live in sinne: and therefore wee must not content our selves with knowledge, but labour to feele in our hearts such power of grace, as will make us truly to say wee are conquerours over our spirituall enemies. This is that blessed state of all those, unto whom life everlasting belongeth, who shall never taste of the second death.

A Secondly, here is answered a great question, which every mans conscience will move unto him; namely, How may I scape the second death, that lake that burneth with fire and brimstone? Answ. Thou must in this life truly turne unto God from all thine evill wayes, renounce thy selfe, and put all thine affiance in Christ his death and passion: and evermore labour to keep true religion, faith, and good conscience unto death in all estates. This doe, and though thou taste of the first, yet the second death shall never touch thee.

Thirdly, hereby Christ giveth us to understand, that of the two deaths the second is the worser. The bodily death is terrible unto nature, but the second is the proper death indeed, B the destruction of the creature in soule and body eternally. And yet behold the madnesse of man, who feareth greatly the first death, and regardeth nothing the burning lake: like unto little children that feare their owne shadowes, and yet are not afraid of fire and water, that wil burn and drown them. This is mans miserable estate, through the blindnesse of his minde, and the hardnesse of his heart.

V. 12. And to the Angell of the Church which is at Pergamus write, This saith hee that hath that sharp sword with two edges.

C Here is the third particular commandement which Christ gave to Iohn, whereof wee have spoken before in the first verse: shewing there what is meant by Angel, and why this particular commandement was given unto Iohn. This third Epistle of Christ, as the former, hath three parts: a Preface in this verse. The proposition of the Epistle, vers 13. and so forward unto the 17. And the conclusion in the 17. verse.

I. Part. The Preface sheweth in whose name this Epistle is written; namely, in Christs name. The causes whereof we have shewed before in the first verse. Christ is here set forth by an D action of his Kingly office, borrowed from the former Chapter, verse 16. These things saith he, that hath the sharpe two edged sword: that is, He who is not onely Priest and Prophet of his Church, but the King thereof, to guide and governe the same. The sword which he hath in his hand, or in his mouth (as Isay saith) is that two edged sword, yea, that sharpe two edged sword: thereby is signified the whole word of God, the Law and Gospell; which is so called by reason of the operation thereof, as it is Heb. 4.12.

Christ is thus described to comfort this Church of Pergamus. For hereby three things are signified: First, his wonderfull power in slaying originall sinne and corruption by his Word, word, in all them that beleeve in him: ſo as there is no hope of recovery for ſinne, after it is once wounded. Secondly, that he wil ſtrengthen and preſerve his Church, and all the true members thereof, by the ſame word, againſt all their enemies. This it doth after this manner: The whole word of God both law and Goſpel muſt be knowne, and beleeved; then whenſoever any temptation commeth, faith maketh the ſame word powerfull in us to repel the temptation, and to ſtrengthen us in affliction: for it is that ſword of the ſpirit, whereby wee wound all our enemies. But if it bee not beleeved, it is but as a ſword in a ſheath, and will nothing helpe us. Thirdly, hereby he ſignifieth that hee deſtroyeth all their enemies: this is the chiefe end why he ſo deſcribeth himſelfe in this place. How Chriſt woundeth his enemies here-with, we have ſhewed in the former chapter, and the ſixteenth verſe, with the uſes thereof.

Verſ. 13. I know thy workes, and where thou dwelleſt, even where Satans throne is: And thou keepeſt my Name, and haſt not denied my faith, even in thoſe dayes when Antipas my faithfull Martyr was ſlaine among you, where Satan dwelleth.

Here beginneth the ſecond part of this Epiſtle; to wit, the Propoſition: which containeth two parts; A commendation of this Church in this verſe, and a Reproofe, verſe 14, 15. The commendation is twofold: Firſt, generall in theſe words, I know thy works; then ſpeciall, in the words following, I know where thou dwelleſt, &c. Of the generall commendation we have ſpoken in the former Epiſtles, v. 2. and 9. This yet muſt be obſerved, that Chriſt herewith beginneth the matter of all his epiſtles: intending no doubt, hereby to ſettle the perſwaſion of his preſence deeply in every one of our hearts: for it is indeed the ground of the holy feare of God, which is the beginning of all true religion and godlineſſe. And here Chriſt giveth this preſident for his Miniſters: namely, that the firſt thing they muſt teach their people, is to bee perſwaded of this preſence of Chriſt; whereſoever they are, Chriſt is with them, and whatſoever they doe he ſeeth them. This will cauſe them make conſcience of all their waies, and it is impoſſible that any ſhould ever have ſound knowledge or good conſcience, till hee bee perſwaded hereof. Abraham A knew well that in Abimelechs court they would make no conſcience of murther, becauſe they wanted this feare of God: to feare God and keepe his Commandements, is the whole dutie of man: and therefore wee ſhould give all diligence hereunto. It is indeed a hard leſſon for us to learne, and of our ſelves wee cannot learne it: but if we uſe the meanes, Gods bleſſing will be upon our endevour, and then ſhall wee have knowledge upon knowledge, and grace upon grace, with the comfort of a good conſcience. Gen. 20. 11.

The particular commendation of this Church is, for her conſtancie in maintaining the doctrine of the Goſpell, in theſe words, I know where thou dwelleſt, even in a place where Satans B throne is, and yet for all that thou keepeſt my name: that is, thou holdeſt ſtill my true religion and doctrine. The throne of Satan is any place where ſuperſtition, idolatry, or prophaneneſſe is maintained without controlement, and from whence wickedneſſe is conveied to other places. For the devill is the God of the world, and he hath his thrones among men. Pergamus was a great city of the Gentiles which maintained Idolatrie, and perſecuted the Goſpell, from whence alſo iniquity was derived to other townes and places: therefore it is called the devils throne.

Herein wee may obſerve ſundrie points of great importance. Firſt, the exceeding policie of Satan: hee hath his kingdome in this world, and for the eſtabliſhment thereof, he muſt have C his thrones where wickedneſſe and Idolatrie is maintained without controlement, and whence ſinne is derived to other places. In all ages it hath beene thus, and will continue ſo to the end. In the old world hee had his thrones among Caines poſteritie: In the Church of the Jewes, even in the dayes of the Kings of Iſrael, the high places and groves, where the people ſacrificed to their idols, were the devils thrones: the oracles of the Gentiles where the Devils gave anſwer unto men, were his chiefe thrones: in the dayes of Popery, every Church and chappell were thrones of Satan, wherein were erected Images and holy roods for the worſhip of Saints, whither the people came to worſhip from countrey to countrey. In moſt ſchooles of D learning for many hundred yeares, the Devill had his thrones: for therin was nothing taught but errours, hereſies, and moſt abominable idolatries. In theſe our dayes the devill hath his thrones among us, where any wizzard dwelleth or cunning perſon (as they are called) for thither whole countries doe flocke for helpe, and for counſell, and ſo yeeld homage to Satan. All dicing, and all brothell houſes, wherein abhominable wickedneſſe is freely committed, are Satans thrones. Yea, all thoſe families are the devils thrones, where men live without love or practice of religion, in blindneſſe, and in ignorance, in blaſphemie, drunkenneſſe, whoredome, injuſtice, or any ſuch impieties.

And

And in reason it must needs be thus, for the Devill being a Prince of this world, will have his throne in some parts thereof.

Use. Hereby wee see it is most needfull in every Christian kingdome, there should be thrones of Justice in civill courts, for the maintenance of equitie, the reward of vertue, and for the repressing of injustice and iniquitie. And also thrones of Ecclesiasticall jurisdiction for the reprehending and punishing of all those sinnes which the civill court reacheth not unto. And it is necessarie that in these thrones, justice should bee administred without partialitie, that Gods throne may be erected, which is opposite to the throne of Satan.

Againe, the Devils cunning appeares notably in the choice of the place where he setteth up his throne: it was no pettie towne or village, but a chiefe and famous citie, which had beene the seat of many Kings. This hath beene his practice in all ages, to choose the chiefest places for the seat of his throne. Great Babylon in Scripture is called, A citie of iniquitie, that is, a throne of the Devill. And Rome that was once a famous Church, is now, and hath been long that spirituall Babylon, the throne of the devil. Yea, in Jerusalem the citie of the great King, had the Devill got up his throne, when Christ called the temple a den of theeves. And in our dayes the people of great townes and cities are generallly more backward in embracing the Gospell, than in little villages. The cause hereof is, the malice of the Devill, who will have his throne in chiefest places, for the greater hinderance of religion: there he much prevaileth by choaking the word with pride, profit, and pleasures, causing them to content themselves with a forme of godlinesse, when as they want the power thereof. And thus he dealeth in greater townes, that thence impietie may bee derived to the country round about, as tradesmen doe their wares from place to place. And therefore the people of great towns especially, must labour not onely to know the Gospel, but to beleeve and obey the same. Every man must reforme himselfe, and every family themselves, that Gods throne may be established, and the Devils throne battered downe among them.

Secondly, whereas this Church dwelleth where the Devils throne is, wee may observe, whence the Church of God is gathered; namely, out of Satans kingdome. Gods Church is a company of men ordained to salvation, taken from under the power of the devill: though after their calling they be Gods peculiar flocke, yet they are by nature the children of wrath. Thus Paul speaketh of all the Gentiles, Act. 26. 18. And particularly of the Church of Colossa, Colos. 1. 13. That God delivered them from the power of darknesse, and translated them into the kingdome of his deare Sonne.

Hence we learne, I. That no man is to stand upon his Gentilitie, or glorie in his parentage for nobilitie and great bloud, but only rejoyce in this, that he is drawne out of the kingdome of darknesse, and from under the power of Satan, and placed by Christ Jesus in the kingdome of grace. For what will it profit a man to weare about his necke a chaine of gold, if so bee his heart, will, and affections, be chained to the devils service? and what availeth it Princes to sit upon their stately thrones, if they themselves be in subjection unto Satan, and doe homage unto his throne? yea, what will all the treasures, honours, and pleasures of the world availe to him that is debarred from the riches of Gods love in Christ, and destitute of the treasures of his grace, and so led captive by Satan at his will and pleasure? Secondly, some doe think that a man may be saved by any religion; the Jew by his religion, the Turke by his, the Papist by his, &c. yea it is the common received opinion of our ignorant people, that every one shall be saved by his good meaning. But all these are meere dotages of mens braine: for a man may hold his good meaning, and yet serve the Devill at his throne. It is not sufficient to hold this or that religion, or to practise civill vertues, as justice, temperance, &c. unlesse a man be one of Gods Church, severed from the companie of them that serve Satan. Thirdly, here all Gods servants have a notable meanes of stay and comfort in afflictions. If they bee persecuted, and cast into most darke dungeons for the name of Christ, they must call to mind that they are taken out of the devils prison in the kingdome of darknesse, and placed in the glorious kingdome of Jesus Christ, and made members of his Church, and shall bee inheritours of his glorie. Fourthly, hence we learne, that the preaching of the Gospell hath in it a divine power: no creatures, except the good Angels, have power comparable to the devils; and yet the preaching of the Gospell is stronger than all the power of Satan: for it gathereth a Church where the devill hath his throne, delivers them from under the power of Satan, and placeth them in the glorious liberty of the sonnes of God: although therefore it be preached by sinfull man, yet it must bee reverenced as the power of God, and his owne arme to save his Elect. Fifthly, hence wee gather that God will have his people to dwell with wicked and ungodly men: for the Church of Pergamus dwelleth where Satans throne is. This he doth for good causes: I. That their faith, obedience, and repentance might bee exercised, and they preserved from many sinnes, which otherwise they should fall into. Moses telleth the Israelites, that the Cananites must not be all cast out at the first entrance, but dwell among them, lest wilde beasts did grow up which would devoure them; and so the wicked must dwell among the godly to exercise Gods graces in them, lest they fall into sinne and securitie. II. That they might shine forth as lights unto the wicked, by their godly conversation, Philip. 2. 15. That yee may be blamelesse and pure, the sonnes of God without rebuke in the middest of a naughtie and crooked nation, and among whom yee shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life. And thus the godly must doe, that by their unblameable life, others might bee wonne to the faith: for godly example is a notable meanes to draw men to love and embrace faith and true religion, 1 Pet. 3. 1. 1111. That God may shew on the godly tokens of his speciall love and favour, which hee doth, when hee sendeth judgements upon the wicked, and spareth his children. Hence it was, that when the Lord would bring a common judgement upon the Jewes, he caused those that mourned for their owne sinnes, and for the abominations of the people, Take a marke in the foreheads that they might bee spared. So that if any godly person dwell among such as hate religion, and be prophane, he must content himselfe, knowing it is Gods will his Church should be vexed and troubled by the societies of the wicked and ungodly. Sixthly, hence it appeareth that Gods people may lawfully dwell among wicked and ungodly men, alwaies remembring that they communicate not with them in their sins and rebellions against God: For so Lot dwelt in Sodome, and this Church of Pergamus where the Devill had his throne. 1 Cor. 7. 1. this question is answered; a master is a heathen man, and his servant is converted to the faith; whereupon he thinketh he is free from serving his master: but Paul telleth him he must doe externall service still, so farre forth as he keepe good conscience, and bee not constrained to renounce true religion. Lastly, hence we have direction to answer a question much urged against us by the Papists, to wit; Where our Church was foure score yeares agoe, when Luther first began to preach: they intend hereby to prove our Church to be but of foure score yeares continuance, and so our religion to bee new. We answer by the like; Where was the Church of Pergamus, when the Devils throne was in that citie? Surely it was there where the Devill had his throne. And so when Antichrist that man of sinne, had spread Poperie over all Europe, at that very time was Gods Church in Europe where Poperie was professed, mingled with the Papists: which to bee thus appeareth by this, that in all ages there have bene some, who openly have oppugned Poperie, more or lesse, partly by writing, and partly by speaking, as the records of all ages doe testifie and make manifest: so that though iniquity had the upper hand, yet our Church had his being in the midst of poperie.

Ezek. 9. 4.

And thou keepest my name: That is, though thou dwell in a place where the devill hath his throne, yet thou holdest fast my name, so as neither force nor fraud of the adversarie can take my name from thee; so much the words import. By Christs name, we must understand the doctrine of the Gospell: so Paul is said to be A chosen vessell to carrie Christs name among the Gentiles: that is, to publish among them the doctrine of the Gospell.

Here this Church of Pergamus is particularly commended for her constancie, in holding fast true religion against all adversarie-power whatsoever. Hence we learne that it is not sufficient to teach, or know and beleeve the doctrine of the Gospell in time of peace; but wee must bee constant in holding it fast against all gainsayers, and not be turned about with every wind of doctrine; but in life and death keepe sure the truth, that neither fraud nor force of any adversarie-power draw it from us, or us from it. Matth. 13. The kingdome of heaven is compared to a treasure hid in the field, which when a man findeth, hee goeth and selleth all he hath to buy the field. The scope of that parable is this: If any man should come into any of our fields, and by searching finde a gold mine, he would not make it knowne to any, but cover it close, and goe his way, and sell all that he had to buy that field, that thereby he might inrich himselfe: even so having found this, that the Gospell revealeth the way to life everlasting, though we must not conceale the same from others, yet we must bee like this man herein, that wee could be content to part with all that wee have, that so we might make the Gospell ours. 1 Tim. 3. 9. Deacons must have this propertie, To have the mysterie of faith in a pure conscience. There a good conscience is compared to a sure treasure-house, which cannot bee robbed by any adversarie-power: and faith, that is, true religion is the treasure there safely laid up: such a storehouse must we get for the preservation of the faith. Any thing else we may lose; but if we part with true religion, salvation is gone, and all is lost. And therefore in life and death we must keepe fast faith.

Further, Christ amplifieth the praise of their constancie by two arguments: First, that they held Christs name without deniall: Secondly, that they kept the faith in the time of bloudie persecution. For the first in these words, And hast not denied my faith. This is an excellent commendation; for many will hold the doctrin of the Gospel for a time, and yet after denie the same by a apostasie: but this church held fast true religion, without any revolt at all. Their practice must we follow, and so hold fast true religion, that therin wee never make revolt: for if we shall once denie religion, we know not whether God will give us the grace of repentance, that we may professe it againe; which if he doe not, we perish eternally. Consider Esaus example, who sold his birthright for a messe of red broath, and after lost the blessing; which when hee would have recovered, hee was rejected, and found no place to repentance, though hee sought it with teares. Therefore to prevent the fearefull danger of not repenting after revolt, wee must still hold fast true religion

Heb. 12. 17.

Here in this place the faith of Christ, is all one with Christs name, that is, with the true doctrine of the Gospell. And it is called Christs faith: First, because Christ with the Father and the Spirit, is the author thereof: Secondly, because Christ revealeth the same from the bosome of his Father: for God revealeth his Gospel unto men by his Sonne Christ Jesus: Thirdly, because Christ is the substance and matter of the Gospell: for indeed Christ Jesus is the principall subject of the whole Bible, being the end of the Law, and the substance of the Gospell.

The second argument of their praise for constancie is taken from the circumstance of time; they held fast true religion in the time of bloudy persecution: Even in those daies (saith Christ) when Antipas my faithfull martyr was slaine, among you where Satan dwelleth. Who this Antipas was, is not knowne, neither certainly recorded in any historie: it is thought he was the Minister of the Church, who opposed himselfe against Idolatry and Gentilisme in this citie of Pergamus.

In this argument note two points. I. That Christ commends Antipas, calling him his faithfull martyr. Whereby we see, that in Gods Church, it is lawfull to honour Saints and Martyrs. For that which Christ doth, his Church may doe. This their honour must stand in two things: In due deserved praise and commendation, and in a carefull imitation of their good vertues and godly lives: and for this end doth Christ commend Antipas unto his Church, that they might follow his good conversation: but as for Popish honour of invocation and adoration, it hath no ground in Gods Word. Againe, in calling him faithfull Martyr, he commendeth more the cause of his death, than the death; to shew that the cause maketh a martyr, not the death: For an hereticke may be put to death for his damnable opinions. Therefore Antipas is a martyr, not because he was slaine, but because he was faithfull unto death for the maintenance of Christs true religion.

II. Point. In the end of the verse Christ sheweth who were the authors of Antipas his death, namely, such among them in whom Satan ruled: for he was slaine (saith Christ) among you, where Satan dwelleth. Which words he repeateth, to give us to understand, that all persecuters, let them carrie what face they will, are in truth such, in whom the Devill ruleth, where he hath his hold, and keepes possession. Quest. Why did Satan more dwell there than in other places? Ans. Because many in this place were gentiles, who contemned and mocked the Gospel, & maintained Idolatrie, whereby they became the holds of Satan. And by proportion we may gather, that all contemners of religion, and all that walke in their owne wicked wayes, are indeed the stables and holds of the Devill, though they should be the Temples of the holy Ghost. And so many families as there are, where religion is mocked, Gods name blasphemed, injustice and impiety practised; so many holds of Satan there are where the devill ruleth: and such they continue till they reforme themselves of their impieties, and embrace the Gospell sincerely. And therefore all masters of families especially should love the Gospell, and see that in their families religion be taught, embraced, and obeyed, that so the devill may have no hold in their families. Quest. Whether might not Antipas being Pastor of this Church, have fled for the safety of his life? Ans. There be two kinds of persecution, one that is directly intended against the Pastor principally: the other against the whole Church equally. In the persecution directed against the Pastor, this must be considered; Whether God gave him opportunitie and libertie to flie, or not: if God gave him libertie and opportunitie, he may flie, and the Church is to assist him, and to use means for his preservation; but if God denie him meanes to escape, then he must judge himselfe to be called of God to suffer death for his name, and so he may not flie. And such was the cause of Antipas in this Church. But if the persecution bee directed against the whole Church equally, then the Pastor may not flie, but take part in their sufferings, that he may be a means to stay and comfort his brethren.

V. 14. But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that maintaine the doctrine of Balaam, which taught Balac to put a stumbling blocke before the children of Israel, that they should eat of things sacrificed unto Idols, and commit fornication.

Here followeth the reproofe of this Church of Pergamus, which is first generally propounded in these words, I have a few things against thee: Secondly, in particular, for want of zeale, in suffering among them such as maintained the doctrine of Balaam. Thirdly, he setteth downe a reason or confirmation thereof in the end of the 14. vers. and in the 15.

The generall reproofe is the same which was given out against the Church of Ephesus, vers. 4. Whereby he would teach us a speciall duty: namely, that every man must seriously consider with himselfe, what sinnes he hath in him, which Christ may have to lay unto his charge. For this very cause doth Christ rehearse it unto this Church. And therefore wee must call our selves to reckoning, and examine our selves not by our owne wits, but by the rule of Gods Word, and search out all our thoughts, words, and actions; and see how many things Christ may have against us, that so making a forehand reckoning, and seeking to be cleared by true repentance, we may not be condemned for them at the last day: for if we would judge our selves, we should not be judged. This is a necessarie dutie, and the practice of it is the ground of all grace, and conscionable obedience: as on the other side, the want hereof is the cause why many that live in the Church doe perish eternally. For a day of accounts will come, wherein we shall never escape, unlesse by a forehand reckoning in the practice of true repentance from dead workes, and by faith in Christ Jesus we prevent the same. Lamentable and fearefull is the state of all those, that never call themselves to this account: it causeth them to goe on in sinne without remorse, Hos. 7. 2. Hereof Iermie complained, That no man said, what have I done. And for that cause he denounceth fearefull judgement against the people. This was the sinne of the old world: men knew nothing till the flood came, and destroyed them all. This securitie bringeth mens soules to hell, before they wot where they are: and therefore David crieth out, Psal. 50. 22. Oh consider this (meaning the account that God will take with them) lest God teare them in peeces, and there be none to deliver them. The end of preaching and hearing Gods Word, is to bring the soule to eternall life and salvation: but the want of this account, maketh the holy ordinance of God to be of none effect to many a one. For how should men embrace with comfort the word of reconciliation, till they feele in themselves their enmitie with God, and desert of condemnation.

Ier. 8. 6.

Matth. 24.

II. Point. Because thou hast them that maintaine the doctrine of Balaam, &c. Here is the particular reproofe of this Church for want of zeale, in that they entertained and suffred heretical Ministers to live among them, which maintained the doctrine of Balaam. This shewed, that though they loved the Gospell, and embraced it, yet it was very coldly, and without that fervent zeale which they ought to have shewed against such hereticks.

Vse. Here first, Christ teacheth this Church to shew forth zeale in excommunicating and casting out such hereticks, as by damnable doctrin did trouble them. This place is a sufficient ground for the practice of that Ecclesiasticall censure. When men hold hereticall opinions, the Church after two or three admonitions is to excommunicate them and cast them out. So did Paul to Hymeneus and Alexander. 1 Tim. 1. 20. Secondly, Christ reproving this Church for entertaining such hereticks and wicked men, doth give us to understand, that every member of Gods Church should have a great dislike of all persons, that hold not the doctrine of Christ in truth, but maintaine errours against the tenour of Scripture, and the profession of the Church. For this cause Paul chargeth Timothie to separate himselfe from such as teach otherwise than hee had given direction, and consent not unto the wholesome words of our Lord Iesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godlinesse, being puffed up and knowing nothing. This then must bee our carefull practice: we have by Gods mercie true religion among us, which we must maintain with zeale: and if any bring in other doctrine, we must reject it, and shew forth detestation to him that bringeth it, not bidding him God speed, 2. Joh. 10. Wee must rather lose our lives, than suffer the truth of God to be defaced. Thirdly, that which Christ layeth to the charge of this Church, may in sundry respects be charged upon our Churches and congregations at this day: namely, want of zeale against sinne, and severitie against sinners: for though the governours of our Church repel the heresies of Poperie, Anabaptists, and family of Love, and suppresse all doctrines that raze the foundation, which are commendable things; yet in the middest of our congregations be abundance of Atheists, who by deed and conversation deny Christ Jesus: for many know nothing in the matters of religion, and moe be profane: who both thinke and speake most basely of religion, and of the teachers and professors thereof. Yea, we have flat Epicures permitted to live in our Church, such as make their belly their God, who give themselves wholly to eating, drinking, sports, and delights, without all regard either of the generall duties of Christianity, or the particular duties of their calling. Wee have also among us many cruell & mercilesse persons, that in their affairs abound in the practices of fraud, wrong, usurie, and oppression, whose treading is upon the poore, in the pride of their covetousnes, whereby also they eat the flesh of Gods people, and flea off their skin from them, and breake their bones, and chop them in peeces as for the pot, and as flesh within the cauldron, Mich. 3. 6. And yet all these because they submit themselves to the civil authoritie, are permitted without controulement to bee partakers of the privileges of Gods Church, even to the receiving of the seales of Gods covenant, being themselves flat enemies to the grace of God. Yea, many of these are greatly countenanced and graced for wisdome and reputation; when as such as feare God and make conscience of their wayes, are counted vile. All which, as it argueth exceeding want of zeale in severity against sinne; so it cannot chuse but provoke the Lord to come against us in judgement, as he did against this Church. The meanes whereby this evill is to be reformed, doth follow afterward.

1 Tim. 6. 3, 4, 5.

Amos 5. 11.

III. Point. The reason or confirmation of the former reproofe, whereby the Lord would move his Church to detest these false teachers, is taken from the effect of their doctrine, and and it is layd downe in this similitude: As Balaam the false Prophet taught Balak to put a stumbling blocke before the children of Israel, to cause them to eat of things sacrificed to Idols, and to commit fornication; so this Church maintained among them Nicolaitans, who taught, it was lawfull to eat things sacrificed at Idol feasts, and to commit fornication. The first part of this similitude is in the end of this 14. verse: Which taught Balac to put a stumbling blocke, &c. The second part is in the 15. verse.

Touching the doctrine of Balaam we are to observe three points: First, what a stumbling blocke, or an offence is. Secondly, what it is to cast a stumbling block. Thirdly, by what means king Balac did cast a stumbling blocke before the children of Israel. For the first, a stumbling block is properly any thing, as wood, or stone, or such like, that is cast in a mans way, to hinder him in his gate, and to cause him to trip or fall: And by resemblance in this place, an offence is any thing that causeth a man to sinne against God, and so to slip or fall, or to goe out of his way that leadeth to life. Further, an offence is twofold; either given, or taken. An offence given, is any speech or deed, whereby a man is provoked to sinne: and so was Peter an offence unto Christ, though he tooke it not, Matth. 16. 23. An offence taken, is when any man taketh occasion to fall and sinne, by that which is well done by others: so were the Pharisies offended at the sacred preaching of our Saviour Christ. II. Point. The casting or putting of a stumbling blocke, or giving an offence, is the doing or saying of any thing, whereby a man is occasioned to sinne: and this is done, either about things evill in themselves, or in things indifferent. Things evill are such as Gods word forbiddeth: and they are twofold, either perswasions, or examples. Bad perswasions, are false doctrine, and evill counsell. Bad example, is also giving of offence, because it doth embolden evill men in their sinne, and draw the godly to evill. Againe, in things indifferent, as meat, drinke, apparell, &c. may offence bee given, when as they are used unseasonably, not in fit time and place, and before fit persons. And of this Paul speaketh, saying; If I knew my eating did offend my brother, I would not eat flesh while the world standeth. The offence here spoken of was an offence given in evill things, for it was an evill act done by Balaam, and accordingly received and taken of the Israelites: for hee used outward provocations to allure them unto sinne. III. Point. The meanes whereby king Balac did cast a stumbling blocke before the children of Israel, is set downe in the end of the verse, by provoking them to eat of things sacrificed to Idols, and to commit fornication. That we may understand this fully, read Numb. 25. The summe of the historie is this: When Balaam had assayed sundry wayes to curse the children of Israel, and could not, he gave Balac counsell to use meanes to cause them to sinne. At his counsell Balac sent forth the most beautifull women in his kingdome into the campe of Israel, to intice them to the service of their Idols, and to banquet with them at their Idoll feasts, that so they might draw them to fornication; whereunto the Israelites condescended, and so sinned against God. Thus much of the meaning of the words.

First, here observe a speciall propertie of false teachers, namely, to cast offences before men, to cause them to fall in the way that leadeth to salvation. By this Christ intendeth to make known unto this Church the false doctrin of Balaam. Paul in his Epistles calleth the doctrine of the Gospell, a truth according to godlinesse: because the intent of the Gospell is, to lead men to true godlinesse. On the contrarie, the doctrine of Antichrist is called the mystery of iniquitie; because the scope thereof is to draw men to all iniquitie and abomination. Here then we have a rule, whereby wee may judge betweene true doctrine and false, even by looking into the end and scope thereof: if it ayme at true piety and sincere obedience, wee may judge it to be good; but if it tend to draw men to idolatrie and sinne, then it is a false doctrine. Thus we might scan all false religions, as the religion of the Turke and Jew at this day. But because wee are more troubled with the doctrine of Poperie among our common people, who call it The old religion, therefore let us a little examine the same by this rule.

Vse.

1 Tim. 6. 3. Tit. 1. 1.

2 Thess. 2.

The end of Poperie is to pull downe the kingdome of Christ, and to disanull his lawes; as will appeare by a short view in every commandement: and therefore it cannot bee the true religion. The first commandement teacheth us, To chuse and acknowledge the true God for our God alone. But the Church of Rome teacheth to make more gods than one, and to acknowledge the creature to bee God; for by their doctrine men are to pray unto Saints, whereby they make them gods in giving this divine propertie unto them to know the heart. Their doctrine also ascribeth unto Saints, power to merit; which is a property of God: for none can merit but he that is God. The humane nature of Christ could not have merited any thing, unles it had been joyned to the Godhead. Yea, they make the wood of the crosse to bee god: for in their masse-booke at this day, they call (not Christ crucified on the crosse, but) the verie crosse it selfe, our only hope: yea, the Virgine Mary, who is but a creature, they place as Queene in heaven, giving her power over Christ to command him in the matter of salvation, and so they disanull the first commandement. The second commandement they revoke, in teaching it to bee lawfull to make images of the Trinitie, according as they shewed themselves in the old and new Testament: the Father like an old man, the Sonne as he lived, and the holy Ghoſt like a dove; and therein to worſhip them. Againe, they teach that men may adore the Images of Saints, which is flat againſt that commandement. The third commandement they diſanull, in teaching it to be lawfull to ſweare by Saints, and not by God only. The fourth they diſanull, by making the feſtivall dayes of Saints, equall with the Lords Sabbath, and to be kept holy unto God as ſolemnly as the Lords day. Whereby alſo they take away the liberty of the Church in the lawfull uſe of ſix dayes, for honeſt labour in a mans calling. The fifth they diſanull, in giving freedome and immunity to their clergie from ſubjection to civill authoritie, and in diſpenſing with ſubjects for their loyaltie and allegeance to their lawfull Princes: and with children and ſervants from yeelding due helpe, ſervice, and obedience, to their Parents and Maſters. The ſixth, by their houſes of refuge which they call Sanctuaries, wherein murderers may be in ſafety; and by maintaining ignorance in religion, through which they murder many a ſimple ſoule. The ſeventh, by tolerating of ſtewes, and allowing of inceſt; for by their law it is lawfull for the great uncle to marrie his neece, deſcending from his brother or ſiſter, ſo it be without the fourth degree, which is againſt nature. The eighth, by making ſale of all things, of heaven, hell, of earth, of pardons, and delivering men from purgatorie: which is flat robberie, and moſt groſſe deceit and couzenage. The ninth they diſanull, by falſifying the canon of Scripture, for they make that canonicall which is no Scripture: and beſides in their doctrine practicall they defend a lie, for when a man hath confeſſed his ſins to the Prieſt, if the Magiſtrate aske the Prieſt what ſins the man confeſſed, they teach the Prieſt to ſay, I know not, that is (ſay they) to tell it to thee: which is a flat lie. And whereas they would defend this by an expoſition of Chriſts words when he ſaith, The day of judgement is not knowne to the Sonne of man: that is, (ſay they) to reveale it unto others; they doe but deceive the ſimple by an expoſition which is not fit. The laſt commandement they diſanul, by holding concupiſcence before conſent to be no ſinne, when as we know by Gods Word, that the firſt evill motions in us be ſinnes. So that hereby we may ſee, that Poperie is but a falſe religion, though it have falſely among our common people the name of The old religion, and therefore we muſt abhorre the ſame as ungodly.

Matth. 24. Mark. 13. 32.

Now whereas ſome doe charge the doctrine of our religion to be ſundry wayes ſcandalous, they may be eaſily anſwered: Firſt, they ſay, it is a doctrine of deſperation, becauſe it imports, that God created men ſo, as he will ſave but a few, making them for this end, to caſt the greateſt number to hell. To this I anſwer two things: Firſt, touching the number of them that are to be ſaved: of which little is ſaid in Scripture, and therefore I will not ſay much: yet this may be averred, The number of the elect in it ſelfe is a great companie, but being compared with them that ſhall be damned, it is but ſmall. II. Touching the end of mans creation, our doctrine is not, that God created men for this end, to caſt them to hell: but this wee teach, that God created all men to manifeſt his glorie in them, in ſome, by their juſt and deſerved damnation for ſin. We teach not that men are otherwaies condemned than for their ſins, and therefore he that is condemned hath his juſt reward. II. Charge. They ſay further, our doctrine is a doctrine of blaſphemie; for that we teach God to have decreed the fall of man, and ſo make God the author of mans ſin. Anſ. We teach indeed that God decreed Adams fall, but thence it followeth not, that he is the author of mans ſinne. For Gods will is twofold, generall, and ſpeciall. Gods generall will is, to permit that which is evill, not ſimply, but becauſe with God evil hath ſome reſpect of good, and in this reſpect we ſay God decreed Adams fall. Gods ſpeciall will, is his approving will; whereby he taketh pleaſure and delight in that which is good: and in this regard God nilled Adams fall, and mans ſinnes: And yet in ſome reſpect he may be ſaid to will them. A Magiſtrate, though he take no comfort or delight in the death and execution of a malefactor, yet he decreeth and appointeth it, and ſo may bee ſaid to will it. Even ſo God who out of darkneſſe can bring light, permitteth evill, becauſe with him it hath ſome reſpect of good, and ſo may be ſaid to will it. III. Charge. They ſay alſo that the doctrin of our church is a doctrine of ſecuritie, becauſe we teach that a man may be certaine of his ſalvation, and of perſeverance in the faith unto the end. Anſ. This is not a doctrine of carnall ſecurity; becauſe we doe impoſe neceſſarily the uſe of meanes to them that would be certaine of their ſalvation, and perſevere unto the end; as namely deniall of themſelves, and humbling themſelves in continuall prayer, with hearing and meditating in the word of God, and receiving the Sacraments for the increaſe of faith, and renewing of their repentance: All which will rather make a man fearefull and carefull than ſecure. For with the meanes, is certaintie of ſalvation, both attained and preſerved: ſo that our doctrine is not a doctrine of offences, but a true doctrine that beateth out the plaine way that leadeth unto life.

Rev. 7. 9.

Secondly, Chriſt his deteſtation of this doctrine of Balaam, muſt admoniſh us to bee ſo carefull of our behaviour everie way, that we give no offence unto any; for if we doe, we are Balaams ſchollers. This is a point of ſpeciall obſervation; we muſt looke to our communication, that it be void of railing and bad ſpeeches; and to our converſation, that it be holy and unblameable. In every thing wee muſt have care not to hinder others in the way of life. Woe be to them (ſaith Chriſt) that give offences: it were better that a huge milſtone (ſuch as an aſſe can but but turne about, as the word imports) were tied about his necke, and that he were caſt into the ſea. The reaſon is, becauſe when a man by any means giveth his brother offence, he doth as much as in him lyeth, to plunge his brothers ſoule into the pit of deſtruction, and therfore we muſt flie offences as hell it ſelfe; yea, rather on the contrarie, we muſt helpe our brethren forward in the way of ſalvation, and remove from them all ſtumbling blockes that cauſe them to fall. If this dutie were practiſed, our Church would abound with graces and godlineſſe: but this dutie is wanting, and hence it comes that we have ſo ſmall increaſe after long labour in preaching; for example and evill counſell doe quench the graces of the ſpirit in mens hearts.

Thirdly, hereby we muſt learne to have ſpeciall care againſt offences given by evill counſell or bad example. For if it bee the property of a falſe Prophet to caſt ſtumbling blocks before others, then it is a dangerous thing to fall upon them when they are laid before us. While we live in this world we ſhall ſee many offences given: but we muſt take heed wee take them not. And therefore Chriſt biddeth us, If thy foot offend thee, or thine hand, cut it off, or thine eye, plucke it out: Teaching us to forgoe the deareſt thing that can be unto us, if it would cauſe us to ſinne againſt God. And to move us hereto, marke the Iſraelites example in the wilderneſſe: while they kept a good conſcience, and obſerved the true worſhip of God, all Balaams curſes were turned into bleſſings; but when they fell to Idolatrie and fornication with the Moabitiſh women, then was Gods wrath kindled againſt them, and his plague ſeized upon them. Even ſo, if our Church bee carefull to keepe it ſelfe to the true religion, which by Gods mercy we enjoy, and withall have care to keep a good conſcience in becomming a penitent and obedient people unto God; then may Balaam curſe, and all our enemies ſpit their venome, yet we ſhall be ſafe. But if we let goe true religion and good conſcience, and fall to ſinne, then we muſt looke for Gods heavie iudgements to fall upon us in his wrath, as they did upon his own people. Fourthly, when Balaams curſing would not prevaile, then did faire women, and banqueting draw them to idolatry and fornication. Hence we learne, that temptations on the right hand, that is, taken from profits, pleaſures, and preferments, are moſt dangerous, and ſooneſt prevaile to draw men from God. The ſtate of a Chriſtian is like a beſieged citie; when a huge armie cannot ſack it, then ſilver and gold will open the gates therof: even ſo, when adverſity cannot make a man to forſake religion and good conſcience, then by proſperitie, eaſe, and pleaſure, hath the devill ſtollen away his heart. Thoſe therefore that have eaſe, pleaſure, and outward bleſſings at will, are in a far more dangerous caſe in reſpect of ſinne than others; unleſſe God vouchſafe unto them ſpeciall grace to watch againſt

Matth. 18. 8.

A theſe pleaſing temptations. This made godly Iob, To ſanctifie his children every day when they feaſted each other at their houſe, leſt any one then ſhould have blaſphemed God in his heart. Becauſe he knew the devill by pleaſures would ſooneſt winde himſelfe into their hearts. Iob. 1. 5.

Laſtly, note the order of theſe ſinnes: Firſt, they are drawne to ſit at Idol feaſts, and then to commit adultery: where we ſee that theſe two goe together; Spirituall adultery, that is, Idolatrie; and bodily adultery: one is the plague and puniſhment of the other; that people which give themſelves to Idolatry, will God give up to bodily adultery. As this was true in theſe Iſraelites, ſo it is to be ſeene among the Turkes; and with the Papiſts at this day, who maintaine
B fornication in tolerating ſtewes, and further it much by their vow of ſingle life, wherewith they bind the conſcience, though the partie want the gift of continencie.

verſ. 15. Even ſo haſt thou them that maintaine the doctrine of the Nicholaitans, which thing I hate.

Here followeth the ſecond part of the compariſon, where Chriſt ſetteth down two things: Firſt, what the Nicholaitans were: Secondly, how hee was affected towards them. What they were is expreſſed in the firſt words, Even
C ſo; which is a note of reſemblance or compariſon, having reference to the words going before. They may be thus deſcribed: The Nicholaitans were a ſect in the Church of Pergamus, that maintained two damnable opinions according to the doctrine of Balaam. I. That it was lawfull to eat things offered to idols in the honour of idols, ſitting in the idols temple. II. That fornication was no ſinne, but that a man might lawfully commit it. It may ſeeme ſtrange, that in the daies of the Apoſtles there ſhould be men profeſſing the name of Chriſt, and yet hold ſuch damnable opinions; but the truth is hereby evident, that there were ſuch in this Church. And that we doe not conceive a liking of their wicked opinions, let us examine their reaſons, whereupon they might ſeeme to be grounded.

D For the eating of things ſacrificed to Idols, they would plead thus: I. From the doctrine of Chriſtian libertie, Things indifferent may bee lawfully uſed: Things offered to Idols are things indifferent, as meats, and drinkes; and therefore may lawfully be uſed. Anſ. Meats and drinks, if they be conſidered in themſelves, are things indifferent, and may lawfully be uſed: yea after they have beene offered to idols, if they be ſold in the market, they may be lawfully bought and eaten in private houſes, if it be done without offence of the weake, as Paul teacheth at large, 1 Cor. 10. 25, 29. But if theſe meats be conſidered as they are offered to Idols, and eaten in the Idols temple in the honour of Idols, Idols, they be unlawfull. And yet the Nicholaitans held this to be lawfull.

II. Reaſon. An Idoll is nothing, 1 Cor. 8. 4. and therefore we ſinne not in eating meats offered unto them. Anſ. An Idoll is nothing, that is, in nature ſubſiſting: nothing created or ordained of God; it hath no property of the Godhead: but yet an Idoll is ſomething in mans imagination, which giveth to it the honour of God, and reputeth it as God, making it a God unto himſelfe.

2 King. 5. 18. III. Reaſon. Naaman the Syrian went into the Temple of the god Rimmon, and there kneeled downe; Even ſo may Chriſtians eat in Idols temples. Anſ. When Naaman went in thither, he did not kneele down to the Idol, but to the king, performing a civill duty unto his Prince; who uſed to leane on Naamans ſhoulder, & worſhip his falſe god. And though Naaman were preſent at Idol-worſhip and ſervice, yet it was with proteſtation againſt it: for being cured of his leproſie, he promiſed to worſhip no god but the God of Iſrael; and thereupon he laded two mules with the earth of the Land of Iſrael, in token of his publike profeſſion of thankfulneſſe to the true God for his cleanſing. If theſe in Pergamus whom Chriſt diſliketh, had gone as Naaman did into Idols temples, they had not ſinned as they did. And at this day, if men proteſt againſt the Idolatrie of the maſſe, they may enter into thoſe congregations where maſſe is ſaid: for this proteſtation is a flat condemning of their falſe worſhip.

The ſecond opinion of theſe Nicolaitans was, that men might lawfully commit fornication. This opinion they would thus juſtifie: Firſt, from the practice of Lot, Who offered to the men of Sodome his daughters, when they called for the ſtrangers that were come into his houſe. Which thing (ſay they) Lot would never have done, if fornication had beene a ſinne. Anſ. It ſeemeth that Lot cannot bee excuſed in that action, though his purpoſe was by a leſſer evill to prevent a greater; but God hath plainly taught, That no man may doe the leaſt evill, for the procuring of the greateſt good that can be, Rom. 3. 8.

II. Reaſon. The Lord (ſay they) commanded Hoſea, to take a wife of fornication, and children of fornication, Hoſ. 1. 2. It is not therefore unlawfull. Anſ. There be divers interpretations of that place. Some ſay, that was only in viſion, and not a fact done. Others ſay, it was in ſpeech only, becauſe he propheſied unto the people that he himſelfe was a man of fornication unto them. Theſe expoſitions may well ſtand. Yet others hold that the Lord commanding him this, it was to be done, and was done indeed. And ſundry circumſtances ſeeme to prove that it was a fact done: for the womans name is ſet downe to be Gomer, and her Fathers name Diblaim. Secondly, a thing in viſion or in ſpeech onely, doth not ſo much prevaile with wicked people, as that which is done indeed. Thirdly, the ancient opinion of beſt Divines that lived neereſt to the Apoſtles times avouch, it was a fact done. Object. But this maintaineth fornication, againſt good manners and the expreſſe law of God. Anſ. It were ſo indeed if the Prophet had done it on his owne head, but he did it by Gods ſpeciall appointment, who is Lord of his owne law, and may diſpenſe with it at his pleaſure. God in his law forbiddeth to kill; yet Abraham is commanded to kill his ſonne: which if he had done, he had not ſinned, becauſe he had a ſpeciall commandement for it; which a man muſt obey, though it be againſt a morall precept. Againe, Hoſea tooke a wife of fornication, not to maintaine her in her ſin, but to make her a chaſte woman. And whereas he was alſo commanded to take unto him children of fornication, it muſt not be underſtood of children begotten by him, but borne of her in fornication. As if he ſhould ſay, Take a wife with her children, which ſhee brought forth in fornication. So that this place which way ſoever wee take it, doth nothing maintaine their wicked errours.

III. Reaſon. Acts 15. The Apoſtles charge the Churches, To abſtaine from that which is ſtrangled, from bloud, and from fornication: There (ſay they) fornication is reckoned among things indifferent, and therefore may be uſed lawfully. Anſ. It is there reckoned among things indifferent: Firſt, becauſe it was ſo accounted of among the Gentiles: Secondly, becauſe the Gentiles did joyntly by theſe three things offend the Churches of the Jewes. But hence it followeth not that it is indeed a thing indifferent.

II. Point. The affection of Chriſt towards theſe men, is noted in theſe words: Which thing I hate. This hatred muſt be referred not to the perſons of the Nicolaitans, but to their opinions, lives, and practices.

Hereby Chriſt would inſtruct us in ſundry needfull duties. Firſt, if wee will follow him, we muſt hate all honour and approbation that may bee given to idols, bee it never ſo little. Theſe Nicholaitans might ſay, they abhorred Idols, and worſhipped them not; onely they went with their friends into their Temples, and ſate downe to eat meat before them: now even this dealing Chriſt hateth. Wherein he doth notably condemne the practice of the Romiſh church, which ſay, they worſhip not Idols, but the true God: and yet they doe that which Chriſt hateth; for they kneele downe before them, and adore them, and light candles unto them, and offer unto them rich Jewels, and much ſumptuous attire; which is a great deale more than the Nicolaitans did: And therefore they are much more to be condemned, and their practice alſo hated of us. Secondly, Chriſts hatred of the leaſt honour of Idols, doth afford a ſpeciall caveat to ſuch men as give themſelves to a travelling life; as into Italy, Spaine, and other Idolatrous places: they ſhould content themſelves within the precincts of the Church, and and not proceed further without warrant of a ſpeciall calling, whereby they may aſſure themſelves of Gods gracious protection. For hereby they give occaſion to themſelves to doe that which Chriſt hateth, though they ſay they hate idolatrie: For if a man eſcape to be preſent at their abominable ſervice, yet he cannot avoid the going to their Temples, where he is to offer ſome gifts, or performe ſome ceremonie after the cuſtome of the countrie; whereby he ſhall give ſome approbation at the leaſt of their idolatry: whereas he ought to hate the leaſt appearance thereof, even the garment ſpotted with the fleſh. Thirdly, by this his affection Chriſt would teach us to grow to an hatred of all familiar ſocietie with idolaters: for though we may have ſocietie of concord with them, yet ſocietie of amitie, which is a ſpeciall liking betweene man and man, we muſt not maintaine with them.

Fourthly, Chriſt hateth not only their idolatry, but their fornication alſo. Hereby teaching us to grow to a hatred of fornication, which the rather muſt be deteſted, becauſe the bodies of every man and woman bee not their owne, but Chriſts: and therefore ought not to bee imployed in the honour or ſervice of the Devill, but of Chriſt. Againe, the bodies of every Chriſtian man and woman are the members of Chriſt; now it is an unſeemly thing to take the member of Chriſt, and make it the member of an harlot. Thirdly, their bodies are temples and dwelling places; not for earthly Princes, but for the holy Ghoſt: and therefore muſt be furniſhed with Gods graces, and adorned with charity and other gifts of Gods Spirit, that they may bee fit manſion places for ſo worthie a gueſt. But by fornication they are made the ſties and ſtables of the Prince of darkneſſe.

verſ. 16. Repent thy ſelfe, or elſe I come unto thee ſhortly: and will fight againſt thee with the ſword of my mouth.

Chriſt having laid downe the ſinnes of this Church, and the errours of the Nicholaitans, doth here propound unto this Church; Firſt, a remedie for her recoverie: Secondly, a reaſon to inforce the practice of the remedie. The remedie is in theſe words, Repent thy ſelfe. In it conſider theſe points: Firſt, what it is to repent: Secondly, why Chriſt ſo often urgeth thereunto: Thirdly, to whom Chriſt preſcribeth this remedie. Of the firſt, we have ſpoken in the firſt verſe of this chapter: Briefly therefore; Repentance is a change of the minde from evill to good, and a turning from ſinne unto God. Here repentance muſt be taken more largely, for all the duties that accompany repentance in the practice thereof; as I. Humiliation of a man by confeſſing of his ſinnes unto God, and condemning of himſelfe for the ſinne. II. Prayer, whereby a man doth earneſtly intreat the Lord for the pardon of the ſame ſinnes. III. Reformation, whereby a man in heart purpoſeth, and in life endevoureth to leave all his former ſins, and for ever after to doe all things in obedience unto God: unto all theſe doth the holy Ghoſt exhort them in this place.

II. Point. Why doth Chriſt ſo often preſcribe this dutie of repentance, and ſo much urge it? Anſ. Not for that it is a cauſe or a meritorious meanes to procure remiſſion of ſinnes and life everlaſting, as the Papiſts doe falſly and damnably teach; for that nothing can doe but the obedience and paſſion of Chriſt: but firſt becauſe it is a token of Gods favour procured, and a moſt excellent fruit of faith, ſuch as maketh a man ceaſe to doe evill, and moveth him to doe good; II. becauſe it is a way wherein men muſt walke unto the end, that would have remiſſion of ſinnes, and life eternall.

III. Point. To whom is this remedie preſcribed? Anſ. Firſt, to the Church of Pergamus, and then to the Nicholaitans in that Church, though they were moſt wicked. Touching the Church of Pergamus: they were before commended for moſt worthy graces, for they had repentance: and yet note, Chriſt ſaith ſtill unto them, Repent thy ſelfe. Herein teaching us a moſt worthy leſſon, which every one ought to learne and practiſe; namely, that the life of a Chriſtian is a continuall practice of repentance. When a man hath once repented, that is not ſufficient; but every new day muſt have a new repentance for his daily ſlips. Wee are Gods Embaſſadours (ſaith Paul) for Chriſt: beſeeching you in Chriſts ſtead, that you would be reconciled unto God. Now they were reconciled to God before, for they are called The Temple of the living God. His meaning therefore is, that they ſhould ſtrive more and more after reconciliation with God; both in regard of their further aſſurance, and alſo for their particular ſinnes wherein they daily offended. Every Chriſtian muſt daily wreſtle with his owne corruptions, which he feeleth in himſelfe, that the longer he liveth, the more he may grow in diſlike with himſelfe. And in this diſtaſte of himſelf he muſt daily proceed, that he may every day more and more grow up in Chriſt. And leſt any ſhould thinke, that this was ſpoken to this Church alone, and not to us; conſider, that we are in the ſame caſe with them; their ſinnes are our ſins, as we have proved: We want zeale and ſeveritie againſt ſinne and ſinners. Now being in the ſame fault with them, wee muſt therefore practiſe the ſame remedy, and renew our repentance, though we have repented heretofore.

2 Cor. 5. 20.

1 Chap. 6. 16.

Secondly, he preſcribes this dutie to the Nicolaitans: they held two damnable errours, and no doubt lived accordingly in thoſe ſins: and yet Chriſt barres them not from his kingdome, but bids them repent. Where note that great and and grievous sinners are not barred from Gods mercie, if they will repent. Excellent is that saying of Isay, God is much in sparing: and that of David also, With God is plentifull redemption. This point is seriously to be considered: for we have in our congregations many that are well spoken of in the world: and yet for knowledge of God, and practice of life, are flat Atheists. We have also among us Epicures, blasphemers, murtherers, and fornicators, with these Nicolaitans. Now to all these and such like, this doctrine appertaines, not to embolden them in sinne, but to assure them there is mercy in store for them with God, if they will truly repent. They must not turne the grace of God into wantonnesse, and make his mercy a bolster to their iniquity; for this is despising of Gods bounty, whereby they heape up unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath: but if with Iob they humble themselves in dust and ashes, and crie to heaven for mercie from a broken heart, that carrieth a resolute purpose to leave all sinne; then, though their sinnes were never so many, they shall all be drowned in the bottomlesse sea of Gods mercy: though they were as crimson and scarlet, which will take no other die, yet in Christs bloud they shall bee made as white as wooll and snow: yea, though they have fallen often into the same sinnes, which is most feareful and dangerous, yet upon this unfained repentance they shall be restored to mercie: for the fountaine thereof cannot be dried up: but see they doe repent; for whosoever looketh for Christs merits, must know that he looketh for true repentance. Thus much for the remedy.

Psal. 130.7.

C

II. Point. The reason whereby Christ would set an edge upon the former remedy, containeth a twofold threatning or commination: the first, against the whole Church, in these words, If not, I come unto thee shortly. The second against the Nicolaitans in these words, And will fight against them with the sword of my mouth. For the first, If not, I will come unto thee shortly, these words were expounded in the fifth vers. The meaning is this: If thou repent not, I will come unto thee, and testifie my presence by taking punishment upon thee, for thy want of zeale, and severitie against sinne and sinners. To this effect the Prophet Isay saith, Chap. 30.27. The name of the Lord shall come from farre to take punishment upon the Assyrians.

D

In this threatning the phrase is to be noted: Christ saith; If not, I come unto thee: expressing a thing to come, by a word of the time present. To give them to understand, that this comming unto them by judgements was as certaine, as if it were present, unlesse they did repent. Where this general rule is to be observed of all: namely, that when a Church or people doe not repent, the Lord will come unto them to execute his judgements upon them. Yea, though they have before repented, if for particular sinnes and wants they doe not renew their repentance, he will surely come to punish them. This might be proved at large by testimonies of the Prophets and Apostles: but it is so evident in this text, that I omit all further proofe; only I will apply it to this our Church, of which this may bee truly said; Thou doest not repent, nor renew thy repentance for thy daily sinnes. For albeit there be some among us, that by Gods grace repent, and set themselves daily to the exercise thereof; yet take the greater part of our congregations, and they are so farre from renewing their repentance, that they doe not repent at all; for either they have no knowledge of Gods will, or if they have knowledge, yet they want care and conscience to put the same in practice. This being our case and condition, what man may not bee a Prophet against our Churches and congregations, being thus directed by this portion of Scripture, to say and that truly, That God will come unto us in judgements to plague and punish us for our sinnes and iniquities? We may sooth our selves in hope of mercy still, but the state of our Church continuing as it is, nothing can bee expected but judgements from the Lord. This then must be a motive to perswade us to repent, every person apart, and every family and congregation apart; we must humble our selves in dust and ashes for our sinnes past, intreating the Lord to be reconciled unto us, and purpose fully in our hearts, and strive in our lives to obey God in all his commandements: yea though we can say we have repented, yet for our daily wants and sinnes wee must renew our repentance. Thus doing, we shall stay the Lord when he is comming against us. But if we goe on in blindnesse, ignorance, and rebellion, following the lusts of our owne hearts, then nothing but vengeance and judgements are to be expected; for this conclusion must stand with all Churches and people: If they repent not, God will come in judgement against them.

The second threatning or commination is directed unto the Nicolaitans, in these words: And will fight against them with the sword of my mouth; That is, I will be at enmitie with them, and testifie the same by waging battell against those among you that maintaine the lawfulnesse of eating things sacrificed to Idols, and of fornication. Thus I say will I fight against them with the sword of my mouth; that is, with the preaching of my word, the law, and the Gospell.

In this commination Christ alludeth still to the storie of Balaam; for when he was sent for by Balac to curse the people of God, the Lord stood against him in the way with a naked sword, to keepe him from going: and when his eies were opened, that he saw the Angel of the Lord withstand him in that sort, he fell downe and adored the Angell, for it was the Lord: yet because he ceased not from his wicked covetousnesse, but gave bad counsell against the Israelites, when he could not curse them to cause them them to sin: therefore he was slaine with the edge of the sword among the Midianites by the children of Israel. Even so Christ dealeth with the Nicholaitans, because they give ouer to their bad counsell, perswading the lawfulnesse of eating things sacrificed to Idols, and also of fornication; therefore first he will fight against them with the sword of his mouth, the ministerie of his Word, thereby to reclaime them from their wicked waies, if it be possible; but if that will not serve, he will still fight against them, and with the same sword destroy them for ever.

Vse.

First, here marke, Christ saith not, I will kill them, but fight against them; for he intended not at the first to destroy these Nicolaitans, but his purpose was to withdraw them from their wicked waies; yet so, as afterward if they would not be reclaimed by his word, he would therewith destroy them. Wherin wee may behold the exceeding patience of Christ Jesus toward lewd and grievous sinners, that maintained the lawfulnesse of idolatrie and fornication, and gave themselves thereunto. So the Lord in spirit strove with the old world, and spared them 120. yeares, to withdraw them from their wickednesse by the preaching of Noe. So likewise he spared the Ammonites till their sinnes were come to the full; and the Egyptians also for many 100. years though they were most cruell persecutors of his owne people. And though the Jewes most maliciously crucified the Lord of life; yet he spared them fifty yeares, before he cut them off from being a people. Yea, daily experience teacheth us this his long suffering: wee may heare most bloudy and bitter oathes from blasphemers, whereby they daily crucifie Christ with their tongues. The like may be said of the adulterers and all cruell persons, and yet he forbeares the same: yea, in our owne selves we daily taste of this his patience; for so soone as we were borne, we deserved to be cast into hell, and yet in mercy he vouchsafeth unto us, to some twentie, to some thirty, and to some moe yeares, for a time of repentance; when as every day hee might in justice condemne us. This therfore must admonish us in the feare of God, not to abuse this his long-suffering any longer, but now while the day of mercy lasteth, to humble our selves and turne unto him by true repentance. These are the dayes of grace, but how long they will last, God only knoweth: for when death once comes, he shewes no more mercy. The old world because they abused the long suffering of God, were destroyed, and are now in hell in prison for it, as Peter teacheth: and undoubtedly the same prison will be our portion, if we take the same course that they did.

Gen. 6. 3.

Gen. 15. 16.

1 Pet. 3. 19. 20.

Secondly, in this threatning we may observe, that all irrepentant sinners have God for their enemy, to fight against them with a drawne sword. For this cause sinne in Scripture is called rebellion, and every sinner is a rebell against God. A fearefull thing it is to have God for an enemy: and yet this is the condition, not only of such as did never repent, but of all those that hold the name of Christ in profession, and yet continue in any one sinne, without renewing their repentance. This also must serve to induce every man that hath not repented, now to begin: and if they have begun, to repent more, daily renewing the same for their daily slips, and so shall they be the friends of Christ, as Abraham was, and as his disciples were.

Thirdly, in these two threatnings Christ shewes himselfe to be the true Doctor of his Church: for he will fight against these Nicholaitans, when as hee will onely come unto his Church. Where we see he divideth his word aright; wherein consisteth the principall wisdome of a true Prophet, giving comforts to whom comfort belongeth, and threatning judgements to whom judgement is due; and making difference of judgements according to the state of the persons against whom they are threatned. For the heavy judgements of God must not be threatned against all persons, but against the impenitent. And because there be degrees of judgements temporall, and eternall; therefore temporall judgements must be threatned to those to whom they belong, and eternall judgements denounced against those to whom they belong, observing the circumstances of time, place, and persons, according to Christs example in this place and elsewhere. So likewise the benefits of the Gospell are not to bee propounded to every person hand over head without difference, but with restraint to some only, as Gods Prophets have done. It is oft a great offence in the Church, when the benefits of the Gospell are propounded to all, and the threatning of the law denounced against all, without limitation or restraint. The conditions therefore of repentance, and impenitencie, of faith and unbeleefe, and also the degrees of the mall, must carefully bee observed in the dispensation of the law and Gospell.

Fourthly, the end of Christs fighting must be considered: for the first, he intends to reclaime them from their evill wayes, but if they will not be reclaimed, then to cause the same word to bee an occasion of their deeper condemnation. This must be deeply weighed of us all, who have had by Gods grace for many yeares the plentifull preaching of the Gospell, by which God hath continually rebuked and checked the sinnes that be among us, as ignorance, blasphemy, and filthinesse, cruelty and all iniquities whatsoever, and the same thing the Lord yet continues to do unto us. We therfore must thinke, that all this while the Lord is fighting against us: when ignorance is reproved in the ministery of the Word, the ignorant person must thinke the Lord is fighting against him, and so all Atheists, blasphemers, adulterers, oppressors, and cruell persons, when their sinnes are reproved, they must know that the Lord stands face to face against them with the sword of his mouth, seeking to reclaime them from these iniquities, as he did to Balaam in his way. And when any mans sinnes be thus touched, he must not rebell, but humble himselfe, as Balaam fell before the Angel: considering it is the Lord that wageth battell against him. When wee heare that forren nations shake their swords against us, how are wee moved, both high and low? Shall we feare the sword of mortall man, and shall we not tremble when we heare that the sword of the everliving God is shaken against us? Those therefore whose hearts are guilty of any one sinne, must humble themselves by true and speedie repentance; there is no withstanding of the Lord: if his sword doe not cure us, it will cut us in peeces: if his word doe not convert us from our sinnes, it will be an occasion to cast our soules deeper into hell. Thus he dealt with Balaam, when he would not be restrained from giving bad counsell; he was slaine among the Midianites. Few thinke on these things; from whence commeth such great contempt of Gods ordinance in the ministerie of the Word, as we see at this day: but they must know, that either death or life come by the stroke of this sword, and therefore they must repent.

Fifthly, note the title given to Gods Word: it is called, The sword of Christs mouth: not only because it was once delivered by himselfe, from his owne mouth, but because it doth daily proceed from his mouth: for the Ministers of the Gospell, which bee truly called, are the very mouth of Christ, from which Gods people receive his word. If thou shalt returne (saith the Lord to Ieremie) and shalt separate the precious from the vile, then shalt thou stand before me, and bee according to my word. 2 Cor. 5. 19. We are the embassadours of Christ, beseeching you in his stead: which is an high and wonderfull honour. The consideration whereof is a ground of sundrie duties.

Ier. 15. 19.

First, all students that are in the way of preparation to higher callings, must hereby learne to conceive a good opinion of the ministery of the Gospell, and to affect the same above other callings. For though the blind world count it a base calling, yet Christ we see maketh the minister his owne mouth: which honour is not given either to the Lawyer or to the Physitian.

Secondly, hereby every Minister of the Gospell is taught to deliver nothing in his publike ministery, but the pure Word of God, so farre forth as Christ shall enable him, and that also in so pure a manner, as in the perswasion of his own conscience he thinks Christ would speake, if he were there present; like unto faithfull embassadours, who speake only the will of their Lord and Prince, and in that manner which their Lord and Prince doth best approve. If this were weighed, we should not have such preaching as is commonly used, consisting of a mixture of testimonies; partly divine, and partly humane, considering that neither Christ nor his Apostles so preached.

Thirdly, the people also are hence taught their duty: when they heare a sinfull man like unto themselves speake unto them in the ministery of the Word, they must not despise Gods ordinance, because it is delivered by man, but receive the same, as from the mouth of Christ, and as the pure Word of God, so farre forth as it consenteth with holy Scripture. In this behalfe Paul blessed God for the Thessalonians, That they received the word from him, not as the word of man, but as it is indeed the word of God, 1 Thess. 2. 13.

Sixthly, where Christ saith, I will fight against thee with the sword of my mouth; Wee may observe, that the kingdome of Christ is spirituall, and not of this world: for if it were worldly, then a civill sword wielded by the hand of man should belong unto him. But he hath no such sword, he governes his Church and people by the sword of his mouth, his holy word. Whereby appeareth, that the primacie of the sea of Rome is from hell, not from heaven: for the Pope saith he is Christs Vicar, and yet he will bee armed with both swords: when as Christ dealeth not with the civill sword, but onely useth the sword of his mouth.

vers. 17. *Let him that hath an eare heare what the spirit saith unto the Churches: To him that overcommeth will I give to eat of the Manna which is hid, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth, save he that receiveth it.

These words are the conclusion of this Epistle, which containe two parts; a commandement, and a promise. The commandement in these words, Let him that hath an eare heare what the spirit saith unto the Churches. The promise in the words following, To him that overcommeth, &c. The commandement serveth to stir up Gods Church to attention, in marking that which Christ delivereth unto them, as hath beene shewed before, vers. 7.

In this commandement of Christ note two things: First, that all men in Gods Church are bound in conscience to frequent Sermons, whereby they may come to the knowledge of those things that God prescribeth unto them. At the Nativitie, Easter, and such good times, as they are called, ignorant people will come to the Church: but it may be not once more of a moth after, or a quarter of a yere. But Christ saith, my sheepe heare my voice. So that he that that will not come to heare the voice of Christ, is none of his sheepe. Matth. 16. 19. Christ saith to Peter, I will give thee the keys of the kingdome of heaven. There the preaching of the Gospell, is the key of the kingdome of heaven: So that looke how necessary it is for a man to have his soule saved and to enter into Heaven, so behoovefull it is for him to heare Sermons: For that is the turning of the key whereby wee enter into the kingdome, 2 Corinth. 5. 12. the preaching of the Gospell is the doctrine of reconciliation: and therefore looke how necessary it is for a man to bee reconciled to God; so needfull it is for him to heare the Word preached. He that is of God, heareth Gods word: and hee that heareth it not, is not of God, 1 John 4. 6. But men have many excuses to exempt themselves from hearing Sermons. Some say, if God himselfe would preach, or Christ, or an Angell from heaven, then they would heare; but so long as sinfull man preacheth, it is no great matter, though they absent themselves. Answ. This is a presumptuous reason; for the preaching of the Gospel by man, is Gods owne ordinance; and that for these causes: First, since Adams fall man cannot abide the voice of God: so as if man should heare God speake, hee would cry out with the Jewes, Exod. 20. 19. Let not God talke with us, lest wee die. And with Peter, Depart from mee, I am a miserable sinner. Luk. 5. 8. Secondly, God speaketh by man to try the obedience and humilitie of men; to see whether they would bee content to receive and beleeve his Word, being propounded by sinfull man that is like unto themselves. And thirdly, to maintaine love betweene man and man, by mutuall conversing in this holy ordinance. Others doe say, they may well enough keepe themselves in their families, for there they have their Bible wherein be the Sermons of Christ, and of his Prophets and Apostles, than which no Minister can preach better. An. It is Gods ordinance that these Sermons of Christ, of the Prophets and Apostles, should be againe handled, preached, and expounded in his Church: and therefore every man is bound in conscience to come into the congregations, and there to heare with reverence Gods holy word. Others will not come to the Church, for (they thanke God) they can serve God with as good a heart on horse-backe, or on their journeies, as those that come unto the Sermons. Answ. These persons are blinde and ignorant, a seduced heart beguileth them, and therefore they despise the ordinance of God; but let them heare what Salomon saith, Hee that turneth away his eare from hearing the Law, that is, the doctrine of God, even his prayer shall bee abominable. Prov. 28. 9. God speaketh to us in the ministery of his word, and if we refuse to heare him there, shall we thinke he will heare us when we pray? Know therfore if thou refuse his word, he wil refuse thy praier: neither indeed can any without the word pray aright. Such people deceive themselves, their prayers in their needlesse journeys shall bee their judges to condemne them; for therein they confesse God is to bee worshipped, and yet in practice they reject his direction for the same. Lastly, others say they have knowledge enough, the Ministers can reach them no more than they know: and therefore they need not goe heare so much preaching. Ans. These that pretend such perfect knowledge, are commonly the most ignorant, not knowing the end of this ordinance of God; for preaching serveth not onely to teach men to know God, and his will, but also to increase in knowledge, and to yeeld obedience to that which they know. If therefore thou hast knowledge, it is well: but that is not enough; if thou wouldest be blessed, thou must doe that which thou knowest, Joh. 13. 17. And for this cause the most learned man that is, must still frequent the hearing of Sermons, to further himselfe in obedience: because a man may know much, and yet want conscience to obey.

Secondly, in this Commandement men are injoyned the reading of the word, and hearing of it read, not only publikely, but also privately in their families: that thereby also they may come to the knowledge of that thing which Christ propoundeth unto them. Luk. 10. 26. Christ saith to one of the Scribes; what is written? how readest thou? taking it for granted, that men must read the Scriptures privately. And the Lord saith, My people goe into captivity, because they have no knowledge: yea, they perish, Hos. 4. 6. Isa. 5. 13. But wofull is the defect of this duty; for many have not the Bible in their houses for their private exercise in the word: and in many families it is set up for a shew, or lieth covered with dust, when as cards and tables are worne with use. It is not amisse for men to get statutes of the Land into their houses, and to read therin, for the knowledge of mens lawes; but yet herein they are blame-worthy, that either they have not, or els regard not the book of God, whereby they might be acquainted with the statutes of the Lord, for the better guiding of their unruly affections. Other things in this commandement have beene observed before.

The second part of this conclusion, is an excellent promise made to him that overcommeth, which for substance hath beene handled in the conclusion of the former Epistle. Here onely some speciall blessings are particularly promised: In the handling whereof two points are to bee considered: First, the persons to whom the promise is made, To him that overcommeth: whereof entreatie was made before, vers. 7. Secondly, the blessings promised, comprised in this threefold gift of God: First, To eat of the Manna which is hid: Secondly, To receive a white stone: Thirdly, A new name written in the stone. All which three signifie in effect, The election, vocation, justification, and glorification of Gods people. But I will handle them in particular. The 1. benefit is, The giving of the hidden Manna to eat. Manna properly signifieth that food which God gave from the clouds to the people of Israel, which for the excellency of it, is called, The wheat of Heaven, The food of the strong, or the food of Angels. In forme it was like Coriander seed, and in colour white, in taste it was pleasant and sweet. Herewith God fed his people in the wilderneſſe 40. yeares: to teach them, That man liveth not by bread onely, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. This is thought to bee the ſame white Manna which is uſed in ſhops at this day; but I will not diſpute thereof, ſeeing it is doubtfull. That Manna did repreſent a more excellent food: and therefore Paul calleth it, A ſpirituall meat, becauſe it repreſented unto them the ſpirituall food of the ſoule, Chriſt Jeſus the true Manna, The living bread that came downe from heaven: as we may ſee at large, John 6. And ſo in this place by Manna, we muſt not underſtand the Manna of the people of Iſrael; but Chriſt himſelfe the true food of life eternall. How Chriſt doth become unto us our ſpirituall Manna, and the true food of life, I will ſhew by theſe concluſions. I. Hee is this food, not in regard of his doctrine, or of his miracles, nor yet only in regard of the bleſſings of his death and paſſion: But Chriſt himſelfe God and man is true food of life, as is ſhewed at large, John 6. And in Chriſt himſelfe are his death and paſſion, and the benefits thereof, food unto the ſoule. II. Concluſ. Chriſt is this food, not as he lay in the manger, or as hee now ſitteth in heaven at the right hand of his Father; but as he ſuffered the wrath of God and pangs of hel upon the croſſe, and as he died and was buried: for our life commeth out of Chriſts death. III. Concluſ. He is this Food not in regard of his God-head: for that no creature can receive or apply to his juſtification, or ſanctification: but in regard of his Manhood, ſubſiſting in the perſon of the ſonne of God. Chriſts fleſh profiteth nothing, ſevered from the godhead: but yet his body and bloud have this vertue, to be true ſpiritual food, becauſe they are the fleſh and bloud of that perſon which is God. IV. Concl. Chriſt is not a bodily food to bee received with the hand, eaten with the mouth, and digeſted in the ſtomacke; but hee is a ſpirituall food, to bee received, applyed, and digeſted by faith: And being ſo received, he doth preſerve the ſoule unto eternall life. This faith is that whereby a man is enabled to beleeve that Chriſt crucified is his Chriſt. And thus doth he become our ſpirituall Manna, when by true faith we aſſure our ſelves that hee ſuffered for our ſin, and roſe againe for our righteouſneſſe.

Uſe. Is Chriſt crucified, the true bread of life, and our ſpirituall Manna? then ſhould we long after him, with a true ſpirituall hunger in our very hearts, as truly as any man longeth after meat and drinke. When a man is famiſhed, for the ſtaying of his hunger hee will pull his owne A fleſh from his bones, and eat it; Even ſo, for the ſatisfying of our hungry ſoules with Chriſt Jeſus this food of life, we muſt forſake the deareſt thing in all the world, though it bee our owne fleſh; for that which we will doe for our bodies, we muſt doe much more for our ſoules. Queſt. How ſhal we attaine to this true ſpirituall hunger? Anſw. It is with the hunger of the ſoule, as it is with the hunger of the bodie. In bodily hunger bee two things: A great paine in the ſtomack for want of nouriſhment: And a ſtrong and earneſt appetite, which continueth till the ſtomacke be filled. Even ſo wee ſhould feele a paine in our hearts, riſing from a ſenſe of the wrath of God for our ſinnes; And then we muſt labour to have a greedy appetite, B and earneſt deſire to be filled with Chriſt crucified; and never be at reſt till we be ſatiate with the merit of his paſſion, which only can free us from Gods wrath and fill us with true joy. But woefull be theſe times: for there is in moſt mens hearts a deadneſſe of ſpirit, whereby they are made inſenſible of inward wants and miſeries: They are like unto full men that feele no paine for want of food. There is indeed an hunger, nay, a greedy worme in many after the profits, pleaſures, and honours of this world; but few or none doe hunger after Chriſt. But if wee would have a part in the feaſt of the Lambe, wee muſt labour to have this longing appetite after Chriſt: If we be full ſtomacked, wee ſhall have no refreſhing from his merits. Mary ſaith truly in her ſong, God filleth the C hungry with good things, but the rich and full goe away empty. Which is a moſt fearfull curſe, when the ſoule is debarred from the food of life: But bleſſed are wee if wee hunger after Chriſt and his righteouſneſſe, for then wee ſhall bee ſatisfied: Chriſt will give unto us our fill of the water of life freely, Rev. 21. 6.

Rev. 19. 9.
Luke 1. 53.
Matth. 5. 6.

Secondly, here wee may take a view of the profane madneſſe of the world; for though this bread of life Chriſt Jeſus, be the moſt excellent food of all, farre ſurpaſſing the Iſraelites Manna, the food of Angels; yet it is nothing or little deſired. Men are like the fooliſh Iſraelites that had more regard to leeks and onyons, and to the fleſh pots of Ægypt, than to the Angels food which God gave them from heaven. They ſpend D their wits, and their ſtrength, by day and by night, that they may ſatiate themſelves with the fraile riches and vaine pleaſures of the world: And yet theſe men have the name to bee the onely men; whereas indeed they are prophane Eſaus, and wicked Iſraelites. As therefore this practice is damnable: ſo muſt wee learne to deteſt it. And on the contrary, ſeeing Chriſt Jeſus is the true Manna, our principall care and deſire muſt be to be fed therwith. Wee muſt thinke it is a great diſgrace to Chriſt Jeſus, which hee cannot indure without revenge, that we ſhould have leſſe regard to him the true bread of life, than to earthly food which periſheth.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, here we may see that which is usuall in the Scripture intreating of the Sacraments, to wit, the name of the signe given to the thing signified: for Christ here promiseth them Manna, meaning thereby not the Israelites food, but himselfe, whereof their Manna was a signe, a seale, a pledge: as appeareth plain, because Paul calleth it spirituall meat, 1 Corin. 10.2.

Further, Christ is not onely called Manna, but hidden Manna, to put a difference betweene himselfe and the Manna of the Israelites, which was visible that every man might see it. And Christ is called hidden Manna for two causes: first, because no man by nature knoweth this food, or desireth it: Secondly, because God doth not reveale this food to all men effectually; as may appeare, Matth. 11.25. I give thee thankes (O Father) that thou hast hidden these things, that is, the doctrine of the Gospell, and the mysteries of the kingdome of heaven) from the great and wise men of the world, and hast opened them unto babes.

Use. Is Christ hidden Manna? then first here learne to take knowledge of the state of men in the world: They know not Christ, neither doe they feele in themselves any want of this food, and therefore they know not what it meaneth: for meat and drinke is never knowne, till a man bee hungry. Yea, to many that live in the Church this Manna is hidden; for though men heare the doctrine of Christ, yet not one of an hundred feele in themselves any want of Christ: let the conscience speake, and this will prove true. Ignorant people blesse themselves, and say all is well, Christ is a Saviour: when as indeed to them Christ is hidden. Nay, which is yet more lamentable, to many which teach and preach Christ, Christ is hidden Manna: for many of them never felt in their hearts and conscience, that they had need of Christ for the pardon of their sins, and the salvation of their soules. It is not the knowledge in the braine that maketh Christ knowne to man; but knowledge in the conscience, when a man feeles in his heart and soule, that hee stands in need of the bloud of Christ, and all the benefits of his passion for his redemption and salvation. And seeing this is the condition of the world, we on the contrary must labour to feele in our selves, that wee stand in need of Christ, and of all the benefits of his passion, to free, our soules from the gulfe of hell, and the wrath of God. Away with bare mentall knowledge: for till wee have this true sense of our owne wants, wee can never get into our hearts any sound grace.

Secondly, is Christ hidden bread not revealed to all? Then calling effectuall to salvation (so as if he will, every man may be saved) is not universall: for then should Christ not bee hidden, but revealed to all: which is not so. Election therefore and effectuall vocation is definite and particular. And thus much of the first branch of this gift.

The second gift is a white stone. Here Christ borroweth a comparison from the custome and manner of the Gentiles, to whom the Epistles are directed. A white stone was of great use among them: For first, the Judges in giving sentence, used white stones, and blacke stones: the giving of a white stone, was a token of absolution; the giving of a blacke stone, a signe of condemnation. Here then the giving of a white stone, may signifie absolution from Christ of all a mans sinnes and trespasses. Againe, when the Gentiles would know, which were lucky dayes (as they speake) and which were unlucky; they used to cast lots with white and blacke stones, and that day which light on a white stone, was judged to be a lucky day, that which light on a blacke stone was judged to bee unlucky. This practice they used as might bee shewed by sufficient records. And though this practice have no warrant, yet may Christ allude unto it, to signifie unto them that hee will give them good successe in all their actions: yea, happie dayes, and a blessed life full of all joyes and pleasures. Others doe expound it of giving victory, whereof the giving of a white stone was a signe: but this is not so fit, neither can it bee shewed by true record that they had such a practice. I rather take it Christ alludeth to the first, and here promiseth to him that overcommeth, the true remission of all his sins and full absolution; not in regard of civill punishment, but in respect of guilt and punishment before God, which is eternall damnation.

Here note one infallible token of the pardon of sinne; namely, to overcome, that is, to renounce our selves, and by faith relie wholly on Christ, testifying this faith by maintaining good conscience, and true religion unto the end: And therefore if any desire to know whether God have absolved him of his sinnes, let him labour thus to overcome, and then shall this assurance be sealed up unto him.

The third gift, is a new name written in the stone. What this new name should bee S. John expresseth in his first Epistle, chap. 3. ver. 1. saying, Behold, what love the Father hath shewed to us, that wee should bee called the sonnes of God. This new name therefore is to bee the sonne and heire of God in Christ. And because it is given of God himselfe, therefore wee must not thinke it is an idle name, or a bare title onely: but withall God giveth him a new condition, whereof this name is a token and title. God changed Abrams name, and called him Abraham: but it was when he had changed his estate, and made him the Father of the faithfull. And there was a change in Iacob, when God called him Israel. This new name then signifieth the giving of a new estate to a man or woman, which they had not before: namely, their regeneration, whereby they are made to die unto sinne, and to live unto God: for therewith goeth the blessing of Adoption, wherby they become the Sonnes of God, and heires with Christ, and so have heaven and earth for their possession: and all miseries and crosses, yea, sinne it selfe turning to their good; they have also the protection of Gods holy Angels in this life, and at the last gaspe death to be no death, but a strait passage to eternall life.

Further, this new name is said to bee written in the white stone: that is, in the pledge of absolution; which sheweth the union of these two: Absolution, and Regeneration. So that whom the Lord of his mercie absolves from their sinnes, them in his bounty hee brings to a new estate and condition. Hee that is in Christ is a new creature, 2 Corin. 5. 17. A point to bee observed, as yeelding special advice to reforme the grosse and common abuse of Christ. Men perswade themselves, that Christ is their Saviour, and will pardon their sinnes, for he is mercifull: and thereupon they take occasion to live as they list. But let no man here-with deceive himselfe: for they that have absolution, have regeneration also: A new condition of life goes with the fruition of Gods mercy in Christ: they that goe on in sinne, have not the pardon of sinne: the corruption of sinne must be abolished where the guilt of sinne is absolved; and their lives are reformed that have their sinnes remitted. Here some man may say, why are not those called by this new name, to whom Christ gives it, for usually men are called after their names? The answer is made in the end of the verse: Because no man knoweth that name but hee that receiveth it: that is, in that manner and certaintie as hee that receiveth it. And therefore the children of God must not bee much offended when they are reviled for their profession, because the world knowes not their estate.

Here wee may observe divers points: First, that hee which is the childe of God, and hath this new name given him, knowes that hee is Gods childe, justified and sanctified. Neither is this knowledge by probable conjecture onely, and good hope, as the Papists would have it; but certain and infallible: for else others should know it as well as he that receiveth it: which is here denied. Each one is bound in charitie to bee perswaded, that godly professors are the Sonnes and Daughters of God: But the man himselfe that hath received this new name and new estate, he knowes it otherwise, and therefore certainly and infallibly.

Secondly, if no man know this name but hee that receiveth it, then can none beside God and the conscience, know from within the man, his particular faith and Adoption. And hereby wee are to bee admonished, to beware of charging the evill and hard censure of hypocrisie upon any that live in the Church; in so doing we overshoot our selves: this judgment belongs to God, not to man, save onely to the man himselfe: for wee cannot discerne the good within the man properly, but by effects. Quest. How farre forth may a man judge of another mans Election? Ans. There be two degrees of judgement; judgement of certaintie, and judgement of charitie. Judgement of certaintie, is when a man can set downe certainly, such a man shall bee saved: This is a peremptory judgement belonging unto God, and to some men onely, so farre forth as the Lord revealeth it unto them: as hee did the estate of some men, to David and to some Prophets. Whereupon David sometimes prayes for the finall destruction of his enemies; but this is not given ordinarily, no not to Gods Ministers. The judgement of charitie is that, which bindes a man to judge the best of another: and herein be two degrees. First, touching the unregenerate; charity bindes us, not to despaire of such as yet live profanely; but to hope that God will in good time call them. And touching the regenerate, who have given good testimonies of their vocation, charitie bindes us to be perswaded without doubt that they be the children of God. And this we may doe without repugnance to this place; for though wee cannot from within the man know his estate, yet by the fruits wee may; which is the highest degree of judgement that charitie can exercise.

Thirdly, here we see the Church of Rome is deceived, who makes Visibilitie the marke of Gods Church: for Gods Church is a companie of men which beleeve: The ground of the Church is Gods election and adoption, & mans faith, which none other can see but the parties that have them. The signes thereof may be seen, but properly the Church cannot bee seene. It comes to bee visible by the fruits of Election, and by the outward works of love, which proceed from faith. Wee therefore hold farre better, that we beleeve there is a Church, and not that we see the Church.

Lastly, if others know not the name of Gods children, then what marvell is it, if the wicked miscall them? 1 Joh. 3. 2. The world knowes them not. Gods children therefore must not be daunted at the reproaches of the wicked, but pray with Christ, Father forgive them, they know not what they doe, Luke 23. 34.

V. 18. And unto the Angel which is at Thyatira write, These things saith the Sonne of God, which hath his eyes like to a flame of fire, and his feet like fine brasse.

Here followeth the fourth particular commandement of Christ unto Iohn, as also the fourth particular Epistle. The Commandement in these words, To the Angell which is at Thyatira write: of the substance of this Commandement I have spoken before; onely remember the end end thereof, which is to certifie this Church of Thyatira, that Iohn had a calling and commandement from God to write this Epistle unto them: and further to certifie the whole Church of God, to the end of the world, of his calling to write this booke of the Revelation.

The Epistle it selfe containeth three parts: a Preface, a Proposition, and a Conclusion. The Preface in these words, These things saith the Sonne of God, which hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet like fine brasse: all which things almost have beene handled in the beginning of this Chapter, and in the former from whence they are borrowed. In the Preface, first is set downe in whose name the Epistle is written, to wit, in Christs name: the causes thereof wee have shewed before. Then Christ is described by three arguments: First, To be the Sonne of God: Secondly, To have eyes like a flame of fire: Thirdly, To have feet like fine brasse. For the first, in the former Chapter hee was called the son of man; but here he is called the son of God: where by God, wee must not absolutely understand the God-head of the whole Trinitie, but the person of the father, who being opposed either to the Sonne, or to the holy Ghost, is usually called God: not that hee is God more than the Sonne, or than the holy Ghost; but because hee is the first in order, and because he is that person from whom the God-head is communicated to the Son and to the holy Ghost. So that here Christ is called the son of the Father: which mystery wee cannot fully understand, for the Word hath not revealed the same; neither can we find it elswhere out of the Word. But yet for the better conceiving thereof, remember these two rules. I. That Christ is the Sonne of the Father, not in respect of his God-head, but in respect of his person. For the God-head of the Sonne is the same with the Godhead of the Father: the Godhead of the Father doth not beget, neither is the God-head of the Sonne begotten. II. Rule. Christ is the Sonne of the Father, not by creation, as the Angels and Adam were; nor by adoption, as every beleever is; but by nature, in that hee is begotten of the substance of his Father before all the world; for the father communicates from himselfe the whole god-head that is in himselfe unto his sonne.

Vse. Christ is here called the Sonne of God, to stirre up reverence, attention, and care in this Church, in marking and obeying the things that follow in this particular Epistle. And in their Example Christ also teacheth us, that when wee heare the word of God preached or read unto us, wee should receive with feare and trembling, and reverence: because he that speaketh unto us out of his word, is the sonne of God. When Pilat was about to condemne our Saviour Christ, hee heard it said that Christ was the Sonne of God: and thereupon hee trembled, and was the more afraid, Joh. 19. 8. Shall a silly heathen man that knowes not Christ tremble towards him when he heares his name, and yet wee that professe our selves to beleeve in him, bee nothing moved with reverence towards him, when hee speakes unto us in his Word? At his presence the hils melt, and at his voice the rocks cleave in sunder: and therefore if our heart shall not melt and cleave a sunder with a reverent feare when he shall speake unto us, wee are worser than these sensilesse creatures.

Secondly, Christ is said, To have eyes like a flame of fire: which we must not conceive literally. The words are borrowed from the former chapter, vers. 14. where Christ is described not as hee is in truth, but as hee appeared to Iohn in Vision. We have shewed before what is signified by these firie eyes: namely, Christs infinite wisdome in himselfe, and vigilant zeale over his Church. The end wherefore he so described himselfe to this Church, is to give them to understand, that hee can see and discerne their very secret sinnes; for sundry among them were given to private offences, as to fornication and idolatry, as wee shall see afterward.

Here then wee have an excellent remedie against secret sinnes: shame and feare of punishment restraine some from open sinnes, but yet the same men when they are in secret, doe without feare commit privie sinnes against the first and second table. But these men must remember, that being with-drawne from the presence of men, they are yet in the presence of Christ; for hee hath firie eyes, wherewith hee seeth these most secret sinnes, which they hide from the world. For though we may make faire weather with men, yet we can never bleare the eyes of Christ. If fornicators, wantons, usurers and blasphemers, would remember this, by Gods grace it would bee a notable meanes at least to restraine them from their secret sinnes, if not, to move them unto the practice of true repentance.

Thirdly, Christ is said to have feet like fine brasse. Whereby is signified (as hath beene shewed) his infinite power and strength, whereby hee doth subdue sinne, Satan, and all his enemies, first unto himselfe, and then unto his members. And Christ is thus described unto this Church, to terrifie certaine wicked men among them, that gave themselves to fornication, idolatry, and other sinnes: as also to affright this whole Church, who by their wicked companie were almost drawne away to the same sinne.

Vse. Here wee have a notable remedy against loosenesse of life, diligently to consider that Christ, whom we call our Saviour, walketh continually in his Church with feet of brasse, to tread Satan and all his enemies under his feet: and such are all they that will not submit themselves to the regiment of his word, Luk. 19. 27. If the blasphemer could consider this, it would stop his mouth; and when the adulterer, the theefe, or any sinner goeth about his wicked devices, this by Gods grace would bee a notable meanes to make him breake off his wicked purpose. When Benhadad heard, that the King of Israel would come against him in battell, He sent his men with ropes about their neckes to crave peace, and in them humbled himselfe. Shal men be thus afraid of the fury of man, and shall we not tremble and feare at the fury of Christ, who hath these feet of brasse to trample in peeces all his enemies? The want of this consideration is one maine cause why sin doth abound.

1 King. 10. 31.

V. 19. I know thy workes, and thy love and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy deeds, which are moe at the last than at the first.

Here begins the second part of this Epistle, to wit, the Proposition, which containeth the substance and matter thereof: and it hath two parts; a commendation of this Church, and a rebuke thereof. The commendation in the 19. verse; the rebuke or dispraise in the 20. verse, and those that follow, almost to the end of the chapter. The commendation is twofold; generall in these words, I know thy workes. This hath beene handled before, verse 2. The particular commendation standeth in five notable works: to wit, Love, Service, Faith, Patience, and Increase in godlinesse.

For the first, by Love, wee must understand Love to men: for afterward they are commended in duties to God, in faith and patience, but love and service are duties of man to man. Touching love, note three points: What this love is; What is the property of this love; and how it is to bee practised. First, Love to man is a gift of the Spirit of God, whereby a man is well affected to his neighbour for Gods sake. That love is a gift of the Spirit, is plaine, Galat. 5. 22. where it is reckoned among the gifts of the Spirit. Next I adde, That hereby a man is well affected to his neighbour. To be well affected to another, is to rejoyce at his good, and to desire and seeke the same; and withall to be grieved at his misery, and to heate the bowels of compassion toward him, being readie to releeve and helpe him to our uttermost. By Neighbour, wee must not understand onely those that are neere unto us in habitation, but even all those that are of the same nature with us, even any of mankind. He is thy neighbour, that is a man as thou art, and so bearing the image of God as thou doest, be hee friend or foe, neere or stranger unto thee; and to him must thou bee well affected. Lastly, I say, For Gods sake: For God is first and principally to be loved for himselfe, and man in God and for God, because he is the creature of God, and beareth his image. The love we beare to man, is a fruit of our love unto God; for this Commandement wee have of him, That he that loveth God, should love his brother also, 1 Joh. 4. 21.

II. Point. The propertie of this love is, To be fervent; and that for two causes: first, if need require, every man is bound within his calling to testifie his love by giving his life for his neighbour, though hee bee our enemie or a stranger: which wee shall never doe unlesse our love bee fervent. Secondly, there is much ingratitude, hatred, emulation, and many injuries in the world: now the persons from whom these come must be loved: the unworthinesse of the partie must not quench our love, but it must burne when the waters of mens injuries and malice would quench the same.

1 Joh. 3. 17.

III. Point. The practice of our love must bee squared by this rule, The love of our selves; as wee wish our owne good heartily, so wee must wish our neighbours good. This is the law of Nature, To doe as a man would bee done unto: And it is the law of God, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy selfe. Example: A man of some trade is to make a bargaine, and if hee will lie, or use false weights and measures, hee may advantage himselfe. This the Devil and his owne corruption will suggest unto him, while hee is about the bargaine: hee therefore must call to minde this rule of love, and examine his owne heart, whether hee would have another man to deceive him by lying, by false weights, &c. The same thing must men doe, when they are tempted to oppression or crueltie; let them thinke whether they would have others to wrong or oppresse them, and so shew forth love by this rule, doing as they would be done unto. It were to bee wished, that our Church might have the deserved praise of this vertue of love: But Christ foretold of these our dayes, That love should wax cold, Matthew 24. 12. And that men should bee lovers of themselves. And so it is, for every man now is for himselfe, no man seekes anothers good. Goe thorow townes, markets, and faires, and rare it is to finde a man that in his affaires seeketh the common good, as well as his owne. For this is the common rule, May I not make of mine owne what I will? But hee that hath the grace of love, Seeketh not his owne onely, but the good of others also, 1 Corinth. 13. vers. 5.

2 Tim. 3. 2.

Mich. 3. 2, 3.

Here then wee must learne to practise this vertue, that wee may have Christs commendation with this Church: every man in the generall calling of a Christian will make great shew of love; as when he comes to the Lords table, and in prayer: But in their particular affaires few shew forth true love, nay, many by lying, oppression, crueltie, Flea the skinne from the flesh, and the flesh from the bone of the poore, and breake the bones within the flesh, and chop them as for the pot, as the Prophet speaketh. These little consider this rule, or that account which the Lord will take of them, who hath sworne, never never to forget theſe workes, Amos 8.7. Learne therefore in thy particular calling to ſhew forth love: and imploy thy commodities, not for thy ſelfe alone, but for the good of thoſe with whom thou liveſt: herein is love, and hereby ſhalt thou be known to be the ſervant of Chriſt, John 13.35. and the childe of God, Tranſlated from death to life, 1 Ioh. 3.14.

The ſecond thing for which this Church is commended, is ſervice. To omit the divers ſignifications of the Word, here it betokeneth a worke of love, whereby a man within the compaſſe of his calling becomes a ſervant unto every man for that mans good. Reade. Heb. 6. 10. where this is both commended and deſcribed. Gal. 5. 13. Doe ſervice one to another in love, 1 Corinth. 13. 5. Love ſeeketh not her owne, but maketh her ſelfe ſervant unto all, to doe them good. And Chriſts commandement is, Let him that would be as the chiefe among you, be as the ſervant, Luk. 22. 26. Now the principal part of this ſervice is, when a man is readie with his goods, according to his abilitie, to helpe the poore, eſpecially thoſe that bee godly. This is a fruit of love, and therefore it is here ſet after it, as alſo in the places aforenamed, Hebr. 6. 10. Gal. 5. 13.

Vſe. It were to bee wiſhed that our Church and people might have the like praiſe for this vertue. But the richer ſort ſpend their ſubſtance and wealth upon haukes and hounds, buls and beares, upon coſtly attire, and banqueting: ſo as when the poore that are in need come for releefe, they have nothing to ſpare; and if any thing be given, it is drawn as hardly from them as a ribbe out of their ſide: Men wil give frankly, to delight themſelves with playes and paſtimes, and ſuch like vanities: but the poore that bee their owne fleſh; may die in the ſtreets for want of that which men give to their dogs: But if we reſpect the commendation of Chriſt Ieſus, let us abandon theſe vanities which hinder us in the practice of this vertue of ſervice for the good of our brethren. And to induce all men hereto, let them conſider, 1. How the Church of the old Teſtament was charged with giving the firſt fruits of their wine, corne, and oyle; and likewiſe with many ſacrifices and ceremonies which belonged to the Temple: Theſe things indeed bee ceaſed, and yet wee may not miſpend theſe goods which hereby are ſpared; for in the new Teſtament the poore are in ſtead of the altar, and they muſt have that which the Altar had among the Iewes. Againe, Iſay 58. 18. Hee that powreth forth his ſoule to the hungry, that is, hee that ſeeing the poore in miſerie, hath the bowels of compaſſion moved towards him, and from his pitifull heart releeveth their wants, according to his abilitie, his light ſhall never be put out, but ſhall ſpring out of the darkneſſe, and his darkneſſe ſhal be as the noone day. This is pure religion and undefiled before God, to viſit the fatherleſſe, and the widow in their adverſity. Remember this, Iam. 1. 27.

A Hee that hath mercy upon the poore, lendeth unto the Lord, Prov. 19. 17. So that when the poore come for releefe, God commeth to borrow of us ſome of that which he hath given us. The poore are the Lords collectors; now when the Lord would borrow of us, ſhall wee make deniall, and ſend him empty away? Thirdly, conſider that Chriſt himſelfe comes in the perſon of the poore that is hungry, ſicke, naked, or in any want; and therefore if wee would eſcape the fearefull ſentence of condemnation at the laſt day, Away from mee yee curſed into everlaſting fire: for I was an hungrie, and ye gave mee no meat, &c. Then wee muſt have regard unto the poore, and ſhew our bounty in their releefe, who are our owne fleſh: ſo ſhall we make God our debtor, and be commended B with this Church by Chriſt himſelfe in this world, and at the day of judgement heare that bleſſed voyce of his approbation, Come ye bleſſed, Mat. 25. 34.

The third vertue for which this Church is commended, is their faith. By faith here wee are to underſtand fidelitie; which is a vertue whereby a man is faithfull to God in keeping that vow and promiſe which hee made to him in his baptiſme: which was to renounce and deny himſelfe, and wholly to give up himſelfe ro acknowledge one God in three perſons; and accordingly to beleeve in, to worſhip and obey the ſame God all his life long. In this ſenſe is faith taken of Paul, when hee ſaith, Thoſe younger widowes have damnation, becauſe they C have forſaken their firſt faith: and in the former Epiſtles of Chriſt unto theſe Churches, where he commands them to be faithfull. 1 Tim. 5. 12.

Vſe. It were to be wiſhed that our Churches and congregations might in like manner bee commended for their fidelitie to God; but that cannot truly bee done of us generally. It is a common thing for men to ſweare by their faith; but it is a rare thing to finde a man to keepe his faith; as will appeare by this ſhort ſurvey of our people: For firſt, the greateſt part in all places are ignorant of God, of his word, and of their vow in baptiſme; and alſo voyd of care to attaine hereto. Now all theſe are unfaithfull unto God. Others, though they have knowledge, yet they have no love, nor care of good things, which concerne the Kingdome of heaven, but all their delight is in eating, drinking, gaming, and in paſtimes and pleaſures: Herein they ſpend their time and ſtrength; and theſe alſo have denied their firſt faith, and their caſe is dangerous: for as yet their belly and their pleaſure is their God, and their end will bee damnation. A third ſort are tearmed wiſe men of the world: but if wee regard their fidelity to God, there is nothing in them; they are worldly perſons and earthly minded, ſuch as ſpend both wit and ſtrength to get wealth; like unto the mole, who is alwayes in the earth. Theſe alſo are unfaithfull unto God, in regard of their vow in baptiſme. For as they account gaine godlinesse, so gold is their God, and they say to the wedge of gold, Thou art my confidence. Seeing then all these be unfaithfull unto God, wee must bee admonished to remember what wee have promised in our baptisme: And withall have care to performe the same as wee tender the salvation of our soules. For if we be unfaithfull, as Paul said of the younger widdowes, damnation belongs unto us.

The fourth vertue for which this Church is commended, is patience. Of this I have spoken before, vers.2. Here onely note, that it is joyned with love to men, with fidelitie to God, and with service both to God and men in the duty of love. Whereby Christ would signifie, that no good thing can bee done by any man, without patience. Love is no love without patience: neither is faith any faith without patience: for when a man loveth another, for his love he shall sometime receive hatred. Now unlesse he have patience to beare that hatred, his love will surcease. And so if a man have care to bee faithfull unto God in the world he shal be sure to have much contempt: so that unlesse hee have patience to beare the same, his faithfulnesse will faile; Patience bringeth forth experience, and experience hope, Ro.5.4. and 15.4. no comfort of the Scriptures, nor hope without patience. And therefore in the Parable of the Sower, The good ground bringeth forth fruit with patience: though a man have never so good gifts, yet without patience hee cannot put them in practice. This therefore wee must joyne with all the good graces wee have: as Peter counselleth us, 2 Peter 1.6. When a man is in temptation, and apprehendeth the wrath of God, which is the sorest thing that can be, without patience hee will despaire: Without patience a man will bee weary of wel-doing, both in duties to God and man, and to his owne soule. Hence the Apostle saith, ye have need of patience, Heb.10.39.

Luke 8.15.

And thy workes. Here Christ repeateth his generall commendation of this Church, which wee must not thinke to bee done in vaine, but hereby he would let us see, how exceeding well he did approve of their workes. The cause why hee liked them so well, was their increase in wel-doing: whereof we shall intreat afterward.

Use.

Christ repeateth his approbation of their workes after some worthy vertues, to shew unto us, what things are required in the doing of any worke that shall bee acceptable to God: Namely, these foure things, faith, love, service, and patience. Faith is necessary, because in wel-doing a man must testifie his fidelitie to God, which hee shall best doe, if first he learne out of the Word, whether God have commanded that worke to bee done or not, that so hee may bee sure to doe, or not to doe that which God will have him: for it is not sufficient to have a good intent in the doing of our workes, as is commonly thought, though falsly; but our workes must bee done in faith, that is, in a sure perswasion out of Gods word, that the things wee doe are approved of God; for whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne. Secondly, love is necessary in every good worke wee goe about, For faith worketh by love, Gal.5.6. Hence the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 13.3. If a man should give his bodie to bee burned, and bestow all his goods in Almes upon the poore: yet if hee did not these in love, it would not please God. Thirdly, service to man is required in our good workes. This must bee carefully marked: for the end of mans life is in his calling to serve man, and by that to serve God. Col.3.24. Servants must obey their Masters, and in their persons doe service unto Christ. And that which is there spoken of servants, must bee referred to the workes of every man in his calling: they must bee done for the good of men, so as God may be served in them. This overthrows the foolish conceit of the Papists, which think that the most excellent works of all are fasting, pilgrimage, wearing of rough attire, and whipping of their bodies: For good workes must bee done in faith and love, to benefit men, either in soule or body: but these workes of theirs are not done in faith, neither doe they profit the doers or any others: Fasting hath it place, yet it is no good worke, but a thing indifferent in it selfe. Lastly, patience is necessary in every good worke, that men faint not in doing that which is good: for they that doe any good thing, shall be sure of many crosses, partly from men, and partly from Satan, as also by Gods providence. Now when these befall a man in wel-doing, without patience they will stay his proceeding: And therfore it is truly said, That the good ground bringeth forth fruit with patience.

Use.

These being the vertues that make a worke acceptable to God: wee must labour in every action of our lawfull calling whatsoever it bee, to practise the same in faith, love, service, and patience. Wee must not tie good workes to Church matters only, as hearing the Word, and giving almes; but the practice of any worke of a mans lawfull calling, be it never so base, with these vertues is a good worke, and approved of God in it kinde, as well as the best worke that is, not for the worke it selfe, but because therein doth appeare faith, love, service, and patience: and because this Church so performed their workes, therefore doth God double his approbation.

The last vertue for which this Church is commended, is increase in godlines, in these words, And that they are more at the last than at the first. The Chuch of Ephesus was before reproved for decay and losse of the graces of God: but this Church did grow and increase in graces, and therefore are her workes more approved, than the workes of any other Church.

Use.

It were to bee wished, that our congregations might bee commended for their increase in godlinesse, in faith, obedience, and other good workes; but that cannot justly bee done, for the

the number of our people is increaſed, but their growth in grace doth not appeare. Many live in ignorance, and though they heare much, yet they profit little; ſo as it might bee ſaid of them, as the Author to the Hebrewes ſaith, Heb.5.12. Whereas concerning the time yee ought to bee teachers, you have need againe that we teach you the firſt principles of the Word of God. And as Paul ſaith of certaine women, 2 Tim.3.7. They are alwayes learning, and never come to the knowledge of the truth. Others alſo, though they know ſomething, yet they practiſe leſſe than they which know nothing. And which is worſt of all, many that heretofore have had good beginning in them, by their bad converſation, and the greedie cares of the world, have loſt the ſame againe, and goe backward in knowledge, in obedience, in faith, and love. Rare it is to finde thoſe that are like to this Church of Thyatira, whoſe workes are better at the laſt than at the firſt. A fearefull caſe it is, to bee ignorant of Gods will, and a great judgement of God, to decay in love, and other graces: and therefore that wee may prevent Gods judgements, wee muſt have care to get knowledge, and to increaſe therein, and with knowledge to joyne obedience in all good duties to God and man. Some plead for themſelves by reaſon of age, want of memory, and capacity: but theſe muſt learne to ſhew forth better affections, and more ſincere obedience.

The younger ſort alſo muſt imploy their wit and ſtrength to get knowledge, and with knowledge joyne obedience, that they may increaſe in grace as they grow in dayes. Yea, every one that hath any good beginning, muſt endevour to make it more: For to him that hath, ſhall more be given, and hee ſhall have abundance; but from him that hideth his gift, or abuſeth the ſame, ſhall bee taken away that which hee ſeemeth to have, Luk.8.18.

V. 20. Notwithſtanding I have a few things againſt thee, that thou ſuffereſt that woman Jeſabel, which calleth her ſelfe a Propheteſſe, to teach and deceive my Servants, to make them to commit fornication, and to eat meat ſacrificed to Idols.

Here is Chriſts reproofe of this Church of Thyatira, and it is twofold: Firſt, of the whole Church, in this 20. verſe. Secondly, of a woman in that Church, verſe 21. In the reproofe of the whole Church note two things: The reproofe it ſelfe; And the reaſon thereof. The reproofe it ſelfe is contained in theſe words,

A Notwithſtanding I have ſomething againſt thee: that is, though I have praiſed thee for many worthy works, yet there be ſome things which I doe not approve. This reproofe hath beene handled in the former Epiſtles. The reaſon of the reproofe followeth in theſe words, That thou ſuffereſt the woman Jeſabel, who calleth her ſelfe a Propheteſſe, to teach and ſeduce my Servants.

This reaſon of her reproofe containeth ſundry points worthy our conſideration. I. From the phraſe and forme of the words, wee may conſider the large power that God gave to his Church: which was, beſides the power to preach the Word, and adminiſter the Sacraments, a further power to appoint who ſhould preach among them, and who ſhould not B preach: and alſo a power to repreſſe evill men and evill women, and ſo keepe them in order. The like power was given to the Church of Epheſus, as wee have ſeene in the Epiſtle to that Church: they had power to diſcerne falſe Prophets, and Apoſtles, and to reſtraine the ſame. The like power did God give to all Churches, as wee ſhall ſee if wee reade the hiſtories of the Church; and great taxte there is hereof: for without this authority, no Church could long ſtand and be a Church.

II. Here note that it is not ſufficient for a Church to have the preaching of the Word, but it muſt have ſeveritie and ſharpe government, whereby wicked people may be reſtrained: this Church is therefore diſcommended, for that C ſhee uſed not that ſevere authoritie, which God had given her in ſuppreſſing of ſinne. And in our congregations the like fault is to bee found, where much preaching is, yet ſinne abounds, adulterie, blaſphemie, uſurie, and cruelties: and the cauſe is, for that this ſevere execution of government in reſtraining ſinnes, is not ſo ſtraitly put in practice as it ought to bee.

Againe, in this reaſon of his reproofe Chriſt doth charge them with two faults: Firſt, for ſuffering a woman to teach: Secondly, for ſuffering a woman to ſeduce his people. For the firſt, the word tranſlated teach, is in the new Teſtament commonly put for publike teaching in the Miniſterie. Their fault then was this, that D they ſuffered a woman to teach openly: and it is againſt the word of God, 1 Tim. 2. 12. I permit not a woman to teach. And, 1 Corinth. 14. 34, 35. Women ought to keepe ſilence in the congregation, and bee ſubject to their husbands, and learne of them at home. Object. But Deborah was a Propheteſſe, Jud. 4.4. And Hulda propheſied, 2 King. 22.4. For Joſiah ſent to her for counſell, 2 Chron. 3.4. And therefore women may propheſie. Anſw. Theſe women had extraordinary gifts and calling: and therefore upon their example we may not make an ordinary rule. II. Object. But it may ſeeme Paul alloweth it, when he ſaith, A woman praying, or propheſying uncovered, diſhonoureth her head,

1 Cor.

1 Corin. 11. 5. Answ. Hereto some doe answer thus, that in the infancy of the Church some women were extraordinarily indued with that gift, and did indeed prophecie. Others judge it to have beene a fault in that Church, and therefore say, in the 14. chapter, the Apostle reproveth it, commanding women to keepe silence in the Churches. Thirdly, a woman may be said to pray, when shee giveth her assent to the prayer of the Minister, by saying, Amen: And shee may be said to prophecie, when shee singeth Psalmes, or readeth the Scriptures: For so the Word is used in Scripture, 1 Chron. 25. 2. Asaph and his company propheſied with harps and viols: that is, (as it is translated) they sung prophesies, and plaid thereunto upon their instruments.

From the rebuke of Christ against this church, wee gather that it is not warrantable by Gods word for a woman to administer the Sacrament of baptisme. For baptisme is a seale of the covenant in the publike ministery, and so a part thereof, and must goe with the preaching of the Word, and may not be administred by women, who are not allowed to preach; no not in the time and case of necessitie when men are wanting. And although they may not teach publikely, yet they may teach at home; and in the absence of the husband it is her dutie to teach her children. Prov. 31. Lemuel, that is, Salomon is taught many worthy things of his mother. And Timothy was brought up a child in the Scriptures by his grandmother Lois, and his mother Eunice, 2 Tim. 1. 5.

Hence some would gather, that as a woman may not teach publikely, so shee may not publikely governe in a Common-wealth. But this consequence is not good: For publike teaching is flatly forbidden to a woman, so is not publike civil regiment. There is a special reason why shee may not publikely teach; for it is the will of God, that as Christ was a man, so they that stand in his roome and stead in the publike ministery, should also bee men. But the regiment of a kingdome is a civill thing, and so may lawfully bee administred by a woman when shee commeth unto it by lawfull succession to her father, whose whole patrimonie in the want of sonnes shee may rightly enjoy. Object. But the woman must bee in subjection unto the man. 1. Cor. 14. 34. Anſ. So she may, and yet have soveraignty in the kingdome. Object, But the man is the head of the woman. 1 Corin. 11. 3. Answ. That is, the man in that hee is a man is a person more excellent than the woman as she is a woman: Yet the person that in regard of sex is inferiour, may have more excellent gifts, and so likewise may exercise authority and rule: and wee finde by good experience, that the government of a woman is a happie government; no records of time can shew a more happy regiment for blessings temporall and spirituall under any man, than we have long enjoied under our noble Queene.

A The second fault of this Church is, that they suffered a woman to seduce and teach false doctrines, and thereby to seduce Gods people. That this is a fault, Christs reproofe sheweth evidently, and therefore I will not stand to prove it.

Hence wee may gather, that every man is not to bee left to his owne conscience, to teach and hold what doctrine hee will: but all such men or women as teach erroneous doctrines, by the governours of the Church are to bee restrained. It is a grievous fault in any Church not to restraine the authors and maintainers of sects and false doctrines, and of opinions which stand not with the truth of Gods word: and on the contrary, it is a vertue and a good gift in B any Church, when they restraine the authors & favourers of sects and false doctrine. And in this regard our Church is to bee commended and approved, and the Common-wealth likewise, for making laws to restraine both Popish recusants, and some Protestants, who depart from this our Church, as being no Church of God, but a member of Antichrist and of Babylon.

Now that Christ might aggravate these their offences; hee describeth the woman, first, by her propertie, in this name Iezabel, that is, one like Iezabel: secondly, by her action, Which calleth her selfe a Propheteſſe: her teaching is described in the end of the verse. Touching her property, Christ calleth her Iezabel for two causes: First, for that she was like to Iezabel, C and in her person revived the manners and opinions of Iezabel. For as Iezabel brought among the Israelites the false worship of the Idoll Baal; so this woman laboured to bring into this Church of Thyatira, Idolatry, and other sinnes.

Againe, Iezabel was given to fornication, as the Scripture recordeth of her by the mouth of Iehu, 2 King. 9. 22. and so was this woman given to fornication. Thirdly, Iezabel was a woman of authority, and by her place and dignity did countenance and maintaine Idolatry, and other wicked sinnes: so it is like, that this woman was of some place and authority, and did thereby countenance her wicked opinions and damnable sinnes.

In this reason of her name, note first a notaD ble practice of Satan for the furtherance of his kingdome, which is this: In succeeding ages he laboureth to revive the erroneous opinions and wicked vices of ungodly persons of former times. This we see plaine in this place: for long after Iezabels death (the wife of Ahab, a wicked woman) even in the Apostles time, he raised up another woman like to Iezabel both for wicked life and doctrine. And the like practice he useth at this day. In all such as follow the rules and counsell of Machiavel, is revived the craft of Achitophel: in the Papists are revived the opinions and manners of the wicked Scribes and Pharises; in the recusant-Protestants is revived the sect of the Donatists, and the the ſect called Audiani. The family of Love revives the opinions and manners of the Valentinians and the Montaniſts, and many other damnable errours. Now this the Devill doth becauſe he knows by experience the great hurt that theſe opinions and ſins have formerly done unto Gods Church.

Secondly, Chriſt calleth this woman Iezabel, that hee may provoke this Church to a greater deteſtation of her in regard of her damnable wayes: and that ſhee might bee in as great diſgrace with them, as was Iezabel in the Old Teſtament to the people of God, that ſo they might better eſchew her wicked ſeducement. And herein wee have a good direction for our profitable reading of the bookes of the Old and New Teſtament: namely, that when we meet with examples of wicked men and wicked women, wee muſt thereby take occaſion to bee unlike them. And if we find our ſelves like them any way, either in wicked opinion, or in practice, we muſt thereupon grow to a diſlike with our ſelves. Againe, finding the examples of good men or good women, wee muſt labour to conforme our ſelves thereto, and become like them: and in this regard approve our ſelves, when wee ſee our ſelves conformable unto the godly in any vertue and grace.

The ſecond Argument whereby Chriſt deſcribeth this woman, is her action: Shee calleth her ſelfe a Propheteſſe; that is, ſhee challengeth her ſelfe to bee one that doth teach Gods will by the inſtinct of his ſpirit. And herein ſhe became a notable patron of the damnable ſect of the Nicolaitans: for ſhe held the lawfulneſſe of fornication, and of eating things ſacrificed to Idols. And for the maintenance hereof, ſhee ſaith ſhe is a propheteſſe, one that ſpeaketh nothing but as ſhee is taught by Gods ſpirit. This is the practice of heretickes, under pretence of the ſpirit to maintaine their damnable devices, as might eaſily be proved by induction of particular heretikes, in former ages.

First, hence then wee are taught to labour to have the ſpirit of diſcerning, whereby wee may try the ſpirits whether they bee of God or not. Many will be of no religion, becauſe there bee ſo many falſe Teachers, and ſuch diverſitie of opinions in religion. But herein they bewray their profaneneſſe; they ought the rather to labour for this gift of diſcerning, whereby to know what is from God, and what is not.

Secondly, hence wee are taught, that when wee are unjuſtly ſlandered, diſgraced, or injured, we ought not to fret and fume, but by patience to content our ſelves: for wee ſee that wicked men to maintaine their wicked opinions and manners, will not ſticke to abuſe God himſelfe, and make his bleſſed ſpirit the Author and patron of their errours and ſinnes. Wee by our ſins deſerve diſgrace and reproach; but the ſpirit of God hath done nothing amiſſe. And therefore wee muſt bee patient, being in the ſame condemnation, as Luke 23. 40, 41. and rather rejoyce, in as much as wee are partakers of the ſufferings of the ſpirit, 1 Pet. 4. 3.

Againe, here obſerve how ſhee approved her ſelfe to bee a Propheteſſe, namely, by her owne teſtimonie onely; She calleth her ſelfe ſo. Where we may ſee the note and mark of a falſe Prophet; to wit, their owne bare word and teſtimony. A true Prophet or Propheteſſe hath ſundry teſtimonies, beſides their owne word, to prove the lawfulneſſe of their callings: as in the Primitive Church, they had the gift of ſpeaking divers languages without ſtudy, and of working miracles: they had alſo puritie of doctrine, joyned with integritie of life: and laſtly, many excellent gifts of God, as zeale, courage, and conſtancie to maintaine the ſame.

Chriſt having deſcribed this woman for her further diſgrace, as alſo to aggravate the fault of this Church in ſuffering her, proceedeth to deſcribe her doctrine. And firſt he ſheweth the end and ſcope thereof, namely, to ſeduce and to deceive. Wherein he giveth us a further note of a falſe Prophet or Propheteſſe; to wit, to teach ſuch doctrine as drawes men to ſinne againſt the firſt or ſecond Table. True doctrine is according to godlineſſe, and leadeth men thereto; but the end of falſe doctrine is impietie againſt God and man: as was ſhewed by the doctrine of Balaam, verſ. 14. and ſuch was the doctrine of this woman.

Sundry ſtudents now adayes are marvellouſly affected with the Sermons, Commentaries, and poſtils of Monks and Friers. Theſe they preferre before the writings of other godly and ſound Divines, which is a lamentable caſe: for they are in their kind Iezabels; the ſcope of their doctrine is to draw men to errours and tranſgreſſions againſt the law of God; yea, to bring men from Heaven to Hell. And therefore this exceeding approbation of them is no ſmall offence: being in truth the right way to bring in againe, Errours, Atheiſme, and Poperie. For turne a Papiſt from a morall point (wherein he often erreth) and his doctrine and Sermons are nothing but falſe and erroneous: and therefore as Chriſt would have this Church to hate the doctrine of this woman, becauſe it did deceive; ſo muſt wee labour to grow to diſlike with the commentaries and poſtils of Monks and Friers which tend to that end.

Secondly, Chriſt ſetteth forth the end of her doctrine, by two arguments; Firſt, by the perſons deceived, his ſervants: ſecondly, by the meanes whereby they are deceived, to wit, by cauſing them to commit fornication, and to eat meats ſacrificed unto Idols.

Touching the perſons. Whereas ſhee deceived not all men, but the ſervants of God, (for here is a plaine diſtinction of men) this increaſeth her fault, becauſe they belonged unto God. But here two queſtions may bee moved: Firſt, why ſome men are the ſervants of God, and ſome are not. Secondly, whether the ſervants vants of God may bee seduced by false teachers. To the first, some answer, that God would have all men to be his servants, and for his part doth all things needfull unto all men, to make them his servants; redeeming them, and giving them sufficient grace hereunto; yet some are not his servants, because they themselves will not, but wilfully reject his grace that is offered unto them. But this doctrine is against common reason, and doth much derogate from the glory of God: for hereby they make every man an Emperour, and God an underling subject unto man; they make Gods good pleasure to depend upon mans pleasure, and the accepting of his grace to depend on mans will. But God is the first cause of all things, his will overruleth mans will: and therefore it is absurd to say some men are not Gods servants, because they themselves will not. The true cause hereof is Gods good pleasure, electing some; and they alone become his servants, because hee hath chosen them. But God did never chuse all men first to grace, and then to glory: and therefore as Luke saith, so many as were ordained to everlasting life, beleeved: So wee may say: so many as are elected of God to grace and salvation, they beeome his servants.

Act. 13. 48.

The second question. Whether may Gods servants be seduced by false Prophets? Answ. There be two sorts of servants of God: servants in appearance, and servants in truth. Servants in appearance, are such as outwardly only embrace the word, and receive the seales of Gods covenant: and the greatest part of particular Churches are such servants. Now these may fall away, and that wholly: and hence it commeth that whole particular Churches may fall away, as did the Church of Galatia, and many other: and these are called servants, because wee must in charitie judge, that all which make profession of true religion in Gods Church, are the servants of God. But the true servants of God, though they may bee seduced in part, and for a time, yet they can neither wholly nor finally fall away: for the promise of Christ is to the contrary, Thou art Peter, and upon this rocke, that is, the faith which thou professest, will I build my Church: and the gates of hell shall not prevaile against it. Which last word (prevaile) insinuateth, that the Devill shall shew great malice and strength to vanquish their faith, but yet shall never wholly overcome it. And Mar. 6. 13. wee are taught to pray, Lead us not into temptation. To leade into temptation, is wholly to bee overcome in temptation; which being a lawfull petition, must needs have Gods promise to grant the same belonging unto it. And therefore though Satan may assay to overcome the childe of God, yet hee shall never get finall victory over him: for true faith purifieth the heart, and cannot stand with a purpose to continue in any one sinne: these two banish each other, sinne brings the childe of God upon his knees, but true faith doth raise him up againe.

Matth. 16. 18.

A

II. Point. The meanes whereby shee sought to seduce them, was by drawing them to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to Idols. Whereby it is plaine, she was a favourer of the sect of the Nicholaitans; whereof entreatie was made in the fourteenth verse. And thus much for the reproofe of the Church.

V. 21. And I gave her space to repent her of her fornication, and shee repented not.

B

Here Christ reproveth this woman for her obstinacy and hardnesse of heart, whereby she went on in sinne without repentance. By space to repent, wee are to understand liberty to live: for though by her sinnes shee deserved present death, temporall and eternall: yet God of his mercy gave her liberty to live, that shee might repent.

Use.

In her example we are taught what to judge of that space of time which God giveth us to live in this world: namely, that it is a time of repentance: for before a man be borne, and after this life, can none repent: but the time wee now live, or have lived, or shall live, is the only time alloted for repentance. This point ought seriously to bee considered of all estates: for it doth plainly rebuke the shamefull practice of many at this day, who leade not their life as a time of repentance, but spend it wholly in another course: some in following their vaine pleasures, as carding, dicing, &c. some in heaping up riches, seeking nothing but temporall profits: others in good fellowship, (as they call it) that is, in company keeping, in eating and drinking. God in justice might have cut off these men so soone as they were borne, and yet in mercy he gives them time to repent, to some twenty, to others thirty, fortie, or fifty yeares: but they abuse this mercy of God, and in stead of repenting imploy themselves in such workes as are contrary thereunto. Their case is most fearefull, they treasure up to themselves wrath against the day of wrath, and declaration of the just judgement of God: like unto a man that every day for some certaine time, carrieth a faggot for his owne burning in the end.

C

Secondly, from this end of life, all that have not repented, must learne not to deferre their repentance, but now beginne while it is called to day, and in the exercise thereof spend the whole time of their life. The end of all our endevours while wee live, should bee this, to get a roome in the kingdome of God, which we can never have without repentance.

Next consider, who it is that gives this time of repentance: neither man nor Angell hath this time in his hands, but the power of appointing it belongs unto Christ alone.

D

Hereby then all persons whatsoever are to be admonished, without delay to repent. The young man will take his pleasure in his youth, and repent when he is old: but hereby he robbeth Christ of his honour, who onely hath power to point out the time of repentance. Vse therefore the time present while thou hast it, and defer not repentance: for how knowest thou that thou shalt live to be old? And though thou doest, yet how canst thou tell whether God will give thee repentance, considering thou didst refuse, while he called for it? Men thinke, that if they die quietly and peaceably, all is well, they goe to Heaven straight: but herewith many are deceived; for unlesse they have truly repented, they goe straight to the Devill, let their manner of dying be what it will. A quiet death is a comfortable thing, but no sure signe of grace, because it may come by reason of some easie lingering sicknesse. Considering therefore wee have no title unto this grace of repentance, to claime it at our pleasure, it being the rare gift of God; nor any lease of our life, but be meere tenants at will; let us seeke to turne unto God with full praise of heart, while it is called to day: and if we have begun, let us daily renew this grace to the end of our life.

Thirdly, consider to whom God gives space of repentance: namely, to a wicked woman, as wicked as Iezabel. Wherein behold the endlesse mercie of God, that unto such a wicked person, who blasphemed God, in fathering her sinnes upon the spirit of grace, and dishonoured God by seducing his servants, doth yet vouchsafe a time of repentance. This hath beene, and is the dealing of God with most grievous sinners. Manasses was one that sold himselfe to worke wickednesse, giving himselfe to Sorcerie and Idolatrie: and yet upon his heartie repentance, God received him to mercy. And Salomon fell most fearefully, but yet before his death, wee may perswade our selves he repented and was received to mercy; for he was a pen-man of Scripture, all which were holy men of God, as Peter saith, 2 Pet. 1. 20. The Israelites were a people of Sodome, and Gomorrha, as bad as those who are condemned in hell, and yet mercie is offered unto them upon their true repentance and conversion.

Vse. Hereby no man must take occasion to live in his sinnes: but those that feele themselves laden with the huge burden of their transgressions, have here a comfort to keepe them from despaire: for if they can humble themselves, and turne unto Christ, and pray for the pardon of their sinnes, there is yet with the Lord mercy in store that they may be saved.

Lastly, Christ saith, He gave her space to repent of her fornication. No doubt shee had many other sinnes whereof she was to repent, for no sinne goeth alone, but every capitall sinne draweth many with it: Christ his meaning therefore is not that she should let passe other sinnes without repentance; but he nameth this one sinne of fornication, because it was a principall sinne in her: for shee both practised it in her owne body, and so made her selfe the stable of the Devill, who should have beene the Temple of Gods holy Spirit: and also maintained this sinne, and so drew others thereto. Now speciall and principall repentance must be of principall sinnes.

Vse. Here then is a patterne for all sinners how to practise repentance. They must begin with their capitall sinnes, which burthen their conscience, and whereto they are most addicted, and repent of them. For the man that truly repenteth of one sinne, repenteth of all: for true repentance maketh the heart alike affected to all sinnes: And that heart which is brought to hate his speciall sinnes, will never approve of pettie sinnes. This lesson ought carefully to be learned and put in practice: For the repentance of most men is only in generall, to say wee are all sinners, Lord have mercy upon me, or God forgive me. But this confused repentance is not good, it stands with a purpose to sinne againe. In particular therefore we must search our consciences, and see wherein wee have most dishonoured God, and what sinne hath neerest plunged our soules to the pit of hell; and with that wee must begin to bring our soule to heaven, by repenting truly for the same, and turning from it with all our hearts.

Hence the Papists gather, that man hath free will to doe that which is truly good before God, as namely to repent: for, say they, God gave Iezabel space of time to repent, and therefore she had power to repent, or else the giving of that time unto her had beene in vaine. Answ. The reason is naught: it followeth not because God gave her time to repent, therefore she had power of her selfe to repent: as will easily appeare, if we consider the ends for which God gives men space and time of repentance, and commandement so to doe. The ends are two. I. That in that time of repentance which he allotteth to men, he may give his children grace, whereby they may be enabled to obey his commandement and to repent: for the Lord useth the commandements and threatnings of the Law, and the promises of the Gospell, as outward meanes of giving grace unto men by the worke of his spirit. II. He giveth commandement and time to repent, that men may see what they should doe, not what they can doe: and that the wicked may be without excuse at the day of judgement, and bee ashamed of their slaverie, and bondage unto sinne in this life.

And shee repented not. Here the sinne of Iezabel is expressed, namely, her impenitencie and hardnesse of heart, whereby without remorse shee lived in her fornication and idolatrie. For the understanding of this her sinne, two points are to be handled. I. Where this sinne of impenitencie is forbidden in Gods Word. II.

What is the greatnesse of this sinne. For the first, there be two parts of Gods Word, the law, and the Gospell, which must not be confounded, but distinguished, or else wee shall overturne many points of Christian religion. The Law gives commandement touching things that were by nature in Adam before his fall, forbidding those things which are contrary to those vertues which were in his perfect nature. But the Gospell commands, and forbids things that are above nature, and in that part of Gods Word as the sinne of impenitencie forbidden; for the Law condemnes no more than it revealeth, but it never revealed repentance, and therefore it doth not forbid or condemne the want thereof. Secondly, for the greatnesse of this sinne, it may appeare, because hereby men heap sinne upon sinne, and wrath unto themselves against the day of wrath. Rom. 2. 5. Some to aggravate the grievousnesse of this sin, say that impenitencie is the sin against the holy Ghost: and that opinion is ancient, but yet false and erroneous; for the sinne against the holy Ghost is a blasphemie, Matth. 12. 31. but this is not a blasphemie. Againe, the sinne against the holy Ghost is in this life, but finall impenitencie is never before the end of this life.

Vse. Hence also the Papists gather free will to good by nature; shee did not repent, therefore shee had free will and power to repent if shee would. Anf. This reason is not good: thus much may hence be gathered, that shee had free will not to repent and to sinne: for every man sinneth freely, but yet it followeth not, that they have the same power to cease from sinne, or to repent without Gods speciall grace, without which no man can will or doe that which is truly good before God.

Againe, the same sinne which is reproved in this wicked woman, may bee laid to the charge of the greatest number in our Churches and congregations. God hath given unto men a long time of repentance, to some ten, to some twentie yeares, but they repent not, as their lives doe plainly testifie: for some live in irreligion and prophaneneſse, some in Sabbath-breaking, some in fornication and adultery, some in idleneſse, some in covetousneſse and extortion, giving themselves wholly, and spending all their time in seeking the things of this life, never regarding with reverence the things of God.

V. 22. Behold I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit fornication with her into great affliction, except they repent them of their workes.

Christ having reproved this Church and this woman for their severall faults, doth here give speciall counsell and direction unto them both, whereby they may avoid and escape the grievous judgements due unto them for their sinnes, both in this life, and in the life to come. This counsell of Christ hath two parts: First, to Iezabel and her company, v. 22. The second to the Church of Thyatira, v. 24, 25. The summe of Christs counsell to Iezabel is, to repent: which is not expressed, but in stead thereof the reason to move her to repentance is propounded. And it may be framed thus, If thou repent not, I will punish thee with sundry judgements: But thou wouldest not be so punished: and therefore repent.

This reason hath two parts: A threatning; and an exposition thereof. The threatning in these words, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit fornication with her into great affliction. And before this threatning, Christ prefixeth a word of attention (Behold:) whereby he would teach them and us, that wee ought seriously to consider of the threatnings that are propounded in Gods word against sinne and sinners. When Iosias heard the booke of the Law read, his heart melted; which it could never have done, unlesse it had first trembled at the judgements therein denounced. 2 King. 22. 19. And the pricking that was wrought in the hearts of the Iewes by Peters first Sermon, was nothing else but a compunction wrought in them, upon consideration of the judgements and condemnation due unto them for crucifying the Lord of life. Act. 2. 37. The cause why sinne is so rife in everie estate and condition of men at this day is, for that men set light by the threatnings of Gods Word. If men would tremble when they heare of Gods judgements, it would make them cry out, Men and brethren, what shall we doe? but because God is mercifull, therefore men feare him not, Isa. 57. 11.

This threatning hath three severall parts, according to the three severall sorts of persons whom it concerneth. The first is against Iezabel her selfe, who was the chiefe of them all, in these words, I will cast her into a bed. The meaning whereof may be gathered out of the like words of Ionadab to Ammon, bidding him lie downe on his bed, and make himselfe sicke. 2 Sam. 13. 5. So that Christs meaning is, that he will strike her with some grievous sickneſse: the place for the sicke person being put for the sickneſse it selfe: As if he should say, Iezabel takes her pleasure in fornication, and thereto abuseth the bed; I will therefore send on her some great sickneſse which shall cast her into her bed.

Vse. Here note Gods dealing with sinners: In those things which they abuse for the furtherance of their sinnes, will the Lord plague and punish them. Iezabel abused her bed with fornication, and thither shee must be cast with sickneſse: Dives in his life time abused his tongue and taste by gluttonie, and therefore is he now in hell therein most of all plagued and tortormented, as his crying for a droppe of water to coole his tongue, doth import: gamesters take their pleasures in carding & dicing, which many times God turneth to their woe: for thereby they are usually brought to extreme want and miserie. Ahab shed Naboths bloud to get his vineyard, and for that sinne must his bloud, the bloud of Iezabel, and his children, bee shed. And now in these dayes the covetous for their gaine doe sucke the bloud of the poore, but that bloud will have bloud from them againe; The Lord will spoyle the soule of him that spoyleth the poore, Prov. 22. 23. This must make us to beware how wee abuse any creature of God to serve us for any sinne: for the Lord will cause that to be a meanes of woe and punishment unto us, which we misuse unto our lusts.

Againe, note here who is the author of grievous sicknesses, namely, Christ himselfe: For he saith, I will cast her into a bed. Sicknesses come not by chance or fortune, but from the hand of God. This we must learne to beleeve, and it will cause us to make better use of sicknesses than usually we doe: If men did beleeve this, it would make the hardest heart to repent in time of sickneſse: for this they would say, Hath God cast me downe with sickneſse? no doubt it is to humble me for some of my sinnes, to make mee know them, to leave them, and to turne unto him. This use the servants of God have made hereof: when the Prophet came to Hezekias, and told him he should die, he turned his face to the wall and wept, as for other things, so for his sinnes especially. And Iacob being to die, leaned on his staffe, and by faith worshipped towards the beds head: lifting up his body to doe reverence unto God, thereby testifying his humilitie, faith, and hope. And the like ought we to doe; which if we could, we should finde our sickneſse would become a blessing unto us.

The second part of Christs threatning is the punishment of her followers, which received her doctrine, and committed fornication with her; They must be cast into great affliction.

Vse. First, this must teach all persons, that it is a devillish speech to thinke and say, that fornication is but a tricke and slip of youth: for great affliction is the punishment of this sinne, which notably argueth the heinousneſse thereof.

Secondly, hence we may gather some of the causes, why towns and kingdomes are afflicted with grievous warres, famine, and pestilence: among the rest these are two, fornication, and embracing of errours and superstition. Sodome for fornication and other sinnes was burnt with fire and brimstone from heaven: the Israelites for this sinne suffered most grievous afflictions. And among the Corinthians, for comming to the Lords table in this sinne, among others many were sicke, many weake, and many slept. And this land of ours hath beene afflicted with famine, and pestilence, as for other sinnes, so for fornication; which in time peace is multiplied; and so will continue til it draw upon us bloudshed also and great afflictions: For that which is said of the followers of Iezabel, must be verified of all that live in the like sinnes.

The second part of the reason is, the exception of these comminations: except they repent them of their workes. Where we may see: First, that all the threatnings of Gods judgements and of eternall destruction, must be understood with the exception of repentance. Whence also this followeth, that men of yeares living in the Church, are not so much condemned for other particular sinnes, as for living in their sinnes without repentance: every sinne makes a man subject to damnation; but it is this impenitencie that brings upon them actuall damnation. Want of repentance for sinne, is more dangerous than the sinne it selfe. The consideration whereof, must teach us not to lie in sinne, though wee have committed it, but turne to God by speedie repentance; for it is the continuance in sinne without repentance that casteth the soule to hell. When thou shalt turne from thy sinne by true repentance, thou art free from the threatning and the curse of sinne: For they admit the exception of true repentance, Jerem. 18. 8.

Further observe, how this exception of repentance is placed betweene two threatnings of judgements, which sheweth how God mingleth his judgements with mercie: he sheweth not wholly either justice or mercy, but tempereth them together in all the workes that concerne mans salvation.

Thirdly, here note that repentance prevents not onely eternall damnation, but also temporall judgements, as grievous sicknesses, and other plagues and afflictions. This point may have speciall use among us: We have by Gods mercy enjoyed his Gospel with long peace, but for our abuse thereof we may justly feare it shall be taken from us; and if we would escape that judgement, we must repent both high and low.

Of their workes. That is, of their idolatrie and fornication: where hee sheweth of what things true repentance must be, namely, of bad workes in particular, whereto men give themselves: every man that would truly repent, must consider of his particular faults: The drunkard in particular of his drunkennesse, and the covetous man of his covetousnesse: and in stead of injuries and hard dealing shew mercy to the poore. The common repentance of the world that is done in generall, is nothing but a vizard of repentance, and yet it is all that is used of the greatest part of our people: for they will come to heare the Word, and to receive the Sacraments, and in generall confesse themselves to be sinners; and then they thinke they have done enough: But true repentance is of particular sinnes: As David Psalm. 51. cried out of bloud-guiltinesse.

V. 23. And I will kill her children with death, and all the Churches shall know that I am hee which searcheth the reines and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to his workes.

Here is the third part of Christs threatning against Iezabels children: by children we are to understand properly those which are borne of her, and were of her household, and not her followers, for they were threatned with grievous afflictions in the former verse. It had been sufficient to have said, I will kill her children. But to note the certaintie and grievousnesse of this punishment, he saith, I will kill them (with death.) Quest. How can this stand with the justice of God, to punish the offences of the parents in the person of the children? Ans. God dealeth so for temporall punishments, not for eternall.

And though we could not perceive the justice of God in so doing, yet we must reverence the same, blaming our owne ignorance. Albeit, even in reason we may conceive of the equity of this course: for societies, as church, common-wealth, and families, are Gods ordinance, and the parties in them must bee considered, as members of those societies: so God conceiveth of them when he inflicteth the punishment deserved by one upon another, as of the Prince upon the people, of the parents upon the children. This he may justly doe by reason of that neere bond which is betweene the members of the same societie: like as in the naturall bodie when the stomacke is distempered, the head aketh: and when the heart is wounded, the stomacke is sicke, and the body may be smitten for the errors of the tongue. Thus when David sinned, the child died, and when he numbred the Israelites, the people were plagued. And thus is the child stained in bloud for the fathers treason against earthly Princes, and so God punished this woman in her children: that she might know the greatnesse of her sinnes, he smote her children with death.

Vse. Hence parents are taught to make conscience of every sin: for thereby they may bring judgements upon their children and family, even to death. Now what bloudy hearted parents are those that will make no conscience of doing that whereby they bring vengeance upon their owne children? And by the same reason must every man that lives in any societie be admonished to take heed of sinne: because thereby a man (especially if he be a principall member of a societie) may bring destruction upon many: As David did by numbring the people: And Achan by his covetous stealth, Josu. 7. And Ahab upon his posterity. So that impenitent persons which will not be reformed, but goe on in sinne, ought to be banished both Church and common-wealth, as hurtfull members, yea enemies to all good societies.

That these threatnings might take place in the hearts of Iezabel and her followers, Christ removeth two carnall conceits, whereby they might thinke to delude or escape these judgements threatned. The first is this, Iezabel and her company might thinke that their practices wert secret, not known to the world, and therefore they were not in danger of Gods judgements. This is a wicked imagination that comes into the minde of all sinners; but this Christ cuts off, saying, And all the Churches shall know that I am hee which search the reines and the hearts: As if he should say to Iezabel and her company: You may perswade your selves that because your sinnes are secret, therefore my judgements shall not befall you: But know, that I will discover your secret sinnes and practices in such sort, as all Churches shal know by experience in your persons, that I do see and discerne the most hidden thoughts of mans heart.

First, here observe to whom Christ will discover their sinnes; not to all the world, but to the Church of God; All Churches shall know. This Christ doth to terrifie Iezabel and her company: For as it is an excellent honour to be well esteemed of with the Churches of God, so it is a most shamefull dishonour to be in disgrace with the Churches of God: For whatsoever is bound or loosed by the Churches on earth, the same is bound or loosed in heaven. Matth. 18. And therefore by true proportion it followeth, that they which are in disgrace with Gods Churches on earth, are also in disgrace with God himselfe in heaven.

Vse. Hence wee are taught that howsoever wee must (so much as in us lieth) endevour to approve our selves to the whole world, yet especially wee must labour to be in good account with the Churches of God, and the members thereof: And on the contrary we must continually avoid the doing of all such things as may justly bring us into disgrace with the Church of God. Rom. 16. 16. The Churches of Christ salute you. And, 1 Cor. 16. 19. All the Churches of Asia salute you. Where the Apostle meaneth not, that they did by word of mouth send greetings unto them: But hereby he would signifie that all Churches did approve of them, which he saith for their great comfort. Paul received Timothy into the company, because the Churches gave him a good report, Act. 16. 2, 3.

But what is the thing that all Churches should know by experience in the persons of Iezabel and her company; namely, that Christ is hee which doth indeed search the reines and the hearts: where, by Reines and hearts, we must understand the same thing; namely, the thoughts and affections of men: for in that sense those words are often used in the old Testament. Qu. How can reines signifie the thoughts and and affections, ſeeing the thoughts are ſeated in the braine, and the affections in the heart? Anſw. The reynes are put for the thoughts and affections, not becauſe they are ſeated therein, but for that reſemblance and analogie that is betwene them; for as the reynes are ſeated in the moſt ſecret part of the body, ſo the thoughts and affections are ſeated in the moſt ſecret place of the ſoule: and the heart is put for the thoughts and affections, firſt, becauſe the affections are there ſeated; Secondly, becauſe the thoughts, though they bee ſeated in the braine, yet they have their operation in the heart, for joyfull thoughts make a merry heart, and fearefull thoughts an heavy heart. Againe, the word (Search) ſignifieth a moſt narrow ſearch, and ſuch an one as goeth with finding; thereby ſhewing, that nothing is ſo ſecret in man, but the Lord both can and doth ſee and diſcerne the ſame.

Vſe. Hence we learne firſt, that Chriſt our Saviour is not onely man, but very God, one perſon ſtanding of two natures. That Chriſt is man, heretickes deny not: but whether he be God or not, there is the queſtion. Which yet is here evidently proved: for he that hath in him the particular properties of God, muſt needs be God: But Chriſt hath in him the true properties of God; he can ſearch and diſcerne all the thoughts, and all the affections of the hearts of all men, which none can doe but God only: Jer. 17. 9, 10. The heart is deceitfull and wicked above all things: who can know it? I the Lord ſearch the heart, and trie the reynes. And therefore Chriſt is true and very God.

Secondly, hereby we are taught to beware and take heed of hypocriſie in all things, but eſpecially in the mattes of religion. Hypocriſie is, when a man ſeemes outwardly to be that which he is not inwardly. But wee muſt have care to bee truly in heart that which wee appeare to be in life and profeſſion: we muſt come as neere Chriſt in thought and affection, as in our outward action: for Chriſt knowes as well the whole ſtate of every mans reynes and heart, as he doth their ſpeeches and their deeds.

Thirdly, hereby wee muſt learne to ſuſpect our ſelves of our unknowne ſins, as of our unbeleefe and preſumption: not contenting our ſelves with an acknowledgement of our knowne ſins, for we can never diſcerne the depth of our corrupt heart, and yet God knoweth them. This was Davids practice, after due examination of himſelfe he yet crieth, Lord cleanſe me from my ſecret ſinnes: As if he ſhould ſay, I have O Lord ſearched my heart, but I cannot ſufficiently know my owne corruptions, therefore do thou O Lord help to cleanſe me from them. If this were practiſed, true religion would flouriſh: for many juſtifie themſelves, when as they know not what is in their hearts, little conſidering what Chriſt ſaith unto the Phariſies, You are they which juſtifie your ſelves before men, but Chriſt knoweth your hearts.

Pſal. 19. 12.

Luk. 16. 15.

A And I will give to every one of you according to your workes. Here Chriſt proceedeth to remove a ſecond wicked conceit, whereby they might ſeeme to illude Gods judgements threatned. For they might ſay, Let the Lord ſend judgements and plagues upon us, yet we ſhall eſcape them; as Iſay ſaid of the wicked in his time, That they made a league with death and hell, and ſaid the judgements of God ſhall paſſe over them, Iſay 28. 15. But to cut off this vaine conceit, Chriſt threatneth a juſt reward to every one according to his workes. As if hee ſhould ſay; You may ſooth up your ſelves, and falſly thinke, that you ſhall eſcape my judgements: but know it, that I will reward everie one of you partly in this life, and principally at the day of judgement, according to your workes, bee they good or bad. For theſe words muſt eſpecially be underſtood of the day of judgement, as they are uſed, Rom. 2. 6. Rev. 20. 12.

B Hence the Papiſts gather, that men are ſaved not onely by faith in Chriſt, but alſo by workes; for thus they reaſon: By that whereby we muſt be judged, muſt we be juſtified and ſaved; but by workes we muſt be judged, and therefore ſaved. Anſ. The propoſition is falſe: There is great difference betweene juſtifying and judging: for judging is only the declaration of a man to be juſt, but juſtification is the making of a man juſt. And becauſe the declaration of a man to be juſt, is by workes, therefore is judgement by workes. Againe, it is not ſaid, I will give to you for your workes, but according to your workes. If he had ſaid, I will give to every one of you for your workes, then it might have ſeemed they had beene juſtified by them: But here Chriſt doth only make works an outward ſigne or rule, whereto hee will conforme and ſquare the laſt judgement.

Vſe.

C Secondly, whereas every man muſt be judged, that is, ſaved or condemned according to his workes; hence wee may gather, that good works are neceſſary to ſalvation, yet not as cauſes thereof, either efficient, or helping any way, but only as a way or meanes to come unto ſalvation: For faith is neceſſary, and good works are the tokens and fruits of faith, and ſo are neceſſary.

D Thirdly, here we muſt be admoniſhed to be carefull to abound in good workes; not to win heaven by them, but to get aſſurance of ſalvation in our ſelves. And theſe good workes are the doing of the duties of piety unto God, and of charitie unto our brethren, even the duties of the Morall law; or more plainly, the doing of the generall duties of a Chriſtian, and the particular duties of a mans calling: for if theſe be done in obedience to God and to his glory, proceeding from faith and love unto our brethren, though the calling bee never ſo baſe, they are good workes. And on the contrary, this muſt admoniſh us to make conſcience of every evill way; for ſinnes bee the markes of condemnation; and so many wicked workes as we commit, so many markes and brands doe we set upon our selves of our just and deserved condemnation, unlesse we repent.

Lastly, hence we may gather, that there be degrees of joy in heaven, and of torments in hell. For judgements and rewards goe according to mens workes. And therefore they that testifie their faith by grace and many good works, shall have great reward: they that testifie their faith by lesser and fewer works, shall have lesser reward: and so for sinnes, the more heinous they bee, the deeper condemnation they doe procure.

A

V. 24. And to you, I say, the rest of them of Thyatira, As many as have not this learning, neither have knowne the deepnesse of Satan (as they speake) I will put upon you none other burden.

B

25. But that which you have alreadie, hold fast till I come.

Here Christ commeth to a second part of his counsell, which concernes the Angell, and the better part of this Church of Thyatira: and first hee beginneth with the preface of this counsell: wherein we may observe two points: First, who speaketh: Secondly, to whom he speaketh. For the first, hee that speaketh is Christ. I say, hereby Christ challengeth unto himselfe the absolute and all-sufficient authority of the supreme Doctor of his Church, in that he speaketh in his owne name. Whereby hee putteth a plaine difference betweene himselfe and all other his Ministers, either Prophets, Apostles, or ordinary Teachers; for they must not propound any thing unto Gods people in their owne names, but in the name of Christ. But Christ teacheth in his owne name; being the fountaine of all divine knowledge and understanding that is revealed in the Word of God. And thus Christ himselfe speaketh in his owne name, to strike the heart of the Angell of this Church, and the better part thereof, with reverence, and to move them to receive and obey the counsell following, considering it comes immediately from Christ, the Doctor of the Church.

C

II. Point. The parties to whom he speaketh, To you: that is, the Angell and the better part of this Church: for so Christ expounds it in these words following, though first hee say in generall, To you: that is, The rest of them of Thyatira.

D

When as Christ will behave himselfe as the Doctor and chiefe Angell of this Church, note that hee maketh a distinction of the persons in the Church, and also divideth his counsell, giving one doctrine and one judgement to one part, and a divers doctrine and judgement to another.

Vse. This giveth us good direction for sundry actions: for some may aske, how must doctrine be delivered in a mixt congregation, where some are Papists, some Protestants, some are hardned, others despaire? Ans. The persons must bee distinguished after the example of Christ, and sutable doctrines divided for them, that every one may have his due. Impenitent sinners must bee terrified, and threatnings delivered against them, with exception of them that repent; Comforts must bee propounded and applied to them that despaire, with restaint from all impenitent persons that goe on in sinne.

If any demand more particularly who these be whom Christ calleth, The rest of them of Thyatira; Christ answers directly (as the words import) To as many as have not this learning, neither have knowne the deepnesse of Satan. Where Christ giveth two notes whereby to discerne who bee the rest of them of Thyatira: The first is, the not receiving or maintaining of the false doctrine of Iezabel, whereof entreaty hath beene formerly made: The second note is, ignorance in the deepnesse of Satan: neither have knowne the deepnesse of Satan: that is, neither have acknowledged nor approved the doctrine of Iezabel, which is the deep and profound learning, as themselves doe judge.

In this observe a most wicked practice of Iezabel and her followers: they esteemed highly of their owne opinions, calling them profound and deepe learning: but for the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles in the old and new Testaments, in it there was no such matter. This in all ages hath beene the practice of wicked persons, highly to esteeme their owne conceits, and basely to neglect the word of God. The teachers of the Jewes doe hold to this day, that the Lord gave to Moses a most plaine and easie law which hee delivered to his people; but the most secret and profound doctrine was unwritten, shewed to Moses by revelation, and by him delivered to the Priests and Levits, which they keepe still in their Cabbala. And of the like judgement touching Scriptures are the Popish Churches: The word written is but an inkie word, a dead letter, or a nose of wax; but the most perfect Scripture is unwritten, which is, the consent of faith and of doctrine in the hearts of all Catholikes. And by such great termes, the Anabaptists, Libertines, and Arians, maintaine their doctrine, and abuse Scripture; calling the written word milke for every novice, but the consent of heart among themselves with Revelations, that is the strong meats. Yea, this opinion hath crept in among us in part: men thinke baſely of Scripture, and preferre other mens writings before it. For let a man preach plainly the bare word of God, and deliver doctrines and exhortations out of the ſame, this is but plaine preaching: But let another come and utter his minde partly in Latine, and partly in Greeke, and other languages, alleaging withall the teſtimonies of Fathers, Councels, and other writers: that is the learned preaching. And thus doe moſt men abaſe Scripture, and exalt the writings of men above it. But ſeeing this is the practice of Iezabel and wicked men, let us on the contray learne to reverence the written word, and give place thereto above all the teſtimonies and ſayings of men whatſoever.

The deepneſſe of Satan. As if he ſhould ſay: They count it deep learning; but it is the learning of the Devill, wherein you may ſee his profound craft and policie. Where note, that when Chriſt will alleage the ſpeech of Iezabel and her followers, he doth it with diſgrace unto them: for they counted their doctrine deepe learning; but Chriſt repeating their opinion, calleth it the deepneſſe of Satan.

Vſe. Hence I gather, that Chriſtians cannot ſafely act and play the Comedies of heathen men: for they are full of many blaſphemous ſpeeches and oaths flat againſt the word of God: which they ought not to repeat, but with diſgrace unto them. For Chriſts practice muſt be a patterne for our imitation: he would not repeat ſo much as one word of a wicked woman, without ſome note of diſgrace. If it be ſaid: they repeat theſe ſpeeches with diſgrace and diſlike: I anſwer, it is not ſo: for if they did, that would take away the whole Comedie, being full of ſuch bad ſpeeches. And this I take to be the equity of Gods Word, thus to reaſon from Chriſts example.

As they ſpeake. Theſe words Chriſt addeth: Firſt, to ſhew that the words going before were not his owne, but the words of Ieſabels followers touching her doctrine. Secondly, to ſhew the proud and preſumptuous mindes of heretickes, in maintaining their wicked opinions. Thus have falſe teachers upheld their errours, by proud and ſwelling words, as Iude the 16. and 2 Pet. 2. 18. The pure Word of God is not ſo maintained; but in the humility and lowlineſſe of ſpirit, and in the practice of piety from an humble heart: for God teacheth the lowly his wayes, and giveth grace to the humble, Pſal. 25. 14. And therefore this is a note of falſe doctrine, by ſwelling words to maintaine the ſame.

Hitherto we have ſpoken of the Preface before Chriſts counſell: now followeth the counſell it ſelfe in this ſentence, Though I lay no other burden upon you, yet I would have you to hold faſt that which you have already, till I come. This ſentence is a diſtinction, containing two parts: Firſt, in theſe words, I will lay no other burden upon you, than that which you have already:

A that is, howſoever I threaten my judgements unto Iezabel and her followers, yet I will lay none other puniſhment upon you but my reproofe only, for ſuffering Iezabel among you with her falſe doctrine and followers.

This branch of this diſtinction containeth a moſt comfortable inſtruction: namely, that all thoſe that give themſelves to maintaine purity of doctrine, and ſincerity of life, ſhall be ſafely preſerved in the time of common judgements, under the bleſſed protection of God, ſo farre forth as it is for Gods glory and their good. And conſidering this mercy is offered to the godly, wee muſt hereby learne to become followers of this Church of Thyatira: that is, wee muſt endevour to maintaine the pure
B truth of Gods holy Word, and withall have care to ſhew forth ſincerity of manners: in making conſcience of every ſinne, and endevouring our ſelves to walke in all the wayes of Gods commandements with cheerefulneſſe. Hereby wee ſhall get protection from common judgements, when they are laid upon the wicked: but if we partake with the wicked in their ſinnes, wee ſhall receive part in their plagues.

The ſecond part of this diſtinction is in theſe words, But that which you have already, hold faſt till I come: that is, mine Apoſtles have delivered unto you the pure and ſound doctrine of ſalvation; now I charge you that you hold that faſt, and maintain it untill I come to judgement. Here is a plaine and moſt excellent com-
C mandement, containing ſpeciall inſtructions meet for this Church of Thyatira, and all Churches. Before, our Saviour Chriſt had commended this Church for not approving the doctrine of Iezabel and her company; but here hee giveth them another commandement, To hold faſt the true doctrine of Chriſt, taught them by his Apoſtles; Wherby he would teach them, and in them all Churches to content themſelves with the pure doctrine of the Apoſtles, and not to affect or approve any other doctrine beſides, whatſoever: According as Paul biddeth the Galatians, though wee, or an Angell from heaven, preach unto you any other doctrine than that which wee have preached unto you, let him be accurſed.

Verſ. 25.

Gal. 1. 8.

D By the light of this commandement we are directed in ſundry duties. Firſt, not to regard unwritten traditions, which the Church of Rome doth ſo highly magnifie, for it cannot be proved that the Apoſtles ever taught them.

Vſe.

Secondly, not to regard the doctrines of men, which ſome bring unto us under colour of Revelation from God ſince the Apoſtles times.

Thirdly, hereby we learne what to thinke and judge of the three great religions of the Turkes, the Jewes, and Papiſts at this day. The Turkiſh religion is not to be regarded: for it had beginning ſix hundred yeares after the Apoſtles time, with whoſe doctrine onely wee must content our selves. Also the Jewish religion we must not regard, for they reject the doctrine of the Apostles. And the religion of the Papists we must renounce, because it is not of the Apostles teaching, but had it beginning by little and little long after their times. If this commandement were safely kept, which is laid on this Church, men would not be of so many religions: but all would be of one religion, cleaving fast to the doctrine of the Apostles, and contenting themselves with it; which is the true rule for reformation of life, and the right way to attaine salvation.

Lastly, here is a rule and direction for those which will be of no religion, because of the diversitie of opinions touching the same. They must have recourse to the doctrine of the Apostles, and content themselves therewith, nothing regarding new doctrines, be they never so glorious.

Till I come. Here Christ sheweth how long the doctrine of the Apostles must be held fast: namely, not for a short time, but till his second comming to judgement: whereby we learne, that it is the duty of Gods Church to preserve and maintaine the puritie of true religion unto the end of the world. This is no small matter, but a most needfull duty enjoyned unto us by speciall commandement, and withall a matter of great consequence: for the puritie of religion is the foundation and marke of the Church, and the right way to direct mens soules to eternall life. For this cause Paul chargeth Timothy, To keepe the true patterne of wholesome words, and to continue in the things which hee had learned. And in regard of this duty, the Church is called, The pillar and ground of truth. And Christ for this cause gave to his Church both Pastors and Teachers; Pastors to instruct in righteousnesse, for the maintenance of puritie in manners: and Teachers to maintaine the purity of doctrine, in soundnesse of judgement. This therefore must admonish us, that we have care not onely to learne religion in our owne persons, but also to convey the same to ages following, that the purity thereof may be preserved to the comming of Christ. This duty especially concernes the Preachers of the Gospell, they should teach the truth, and confute errour, and beat downe false doctrines, which poyson the truth of God. If in the night season a man set up a false light in the haven, all the ships that are comming to land are in danger of shipwracke: So in Gods Church, if the bright light of pure religion bee not set up and advanced, the soules of men are cast into the gulfe of hell. The want of care in performing this duty, is the cause why God sends heresies and Apostasies into his Church. Thus came in the Apostasie of Antichrist, 2 Thess. 2. 10, 11. Because men loved not the truth. And so no doubt will the Lord deale with us if we have not care to maintaine the puritie of Apostolicall doctrine.

Eph. 4. 11.

A

V. 26. For he that overcommeth and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over nations.

27. And he shall rule them with a rod of iron, and as the vessels of a potter shall they bee broken.

B

28. Even as I received of my Father, so will I give him the morning starre.

29. Let him that hath an eare, heare what the spirit saith unto the Churches.

Here is the conclusion of this Epistle, which containeth two parts: First, a promise, vers. 26, 27, 28. Secondly, a commandement, vers. 29. In the promise, note two things: the parties to whom it is made; and the benefit promised. The parties to whom, are every one that overcommeth; whom Christ describeth by a property of sincere obedience, To keepe his workes unto the end.

C

Here then we have a description of true obedience. First, the forme thereof consisteth in observing the workes of Christ: which wee must not understand, of doing them according to the rigor of the law, but of a purpose and endevour to keepe them. For this is a privilege belonging to all that are in Christ, that God accepteth their wils and endevours of obedience, for perfect obedience it selfe. This wee must know and hold for truth: for many have but little knowledge, and thereupon are driven to despaire: yet they must know for their comfort, that if they have care to get more knowledge, and make conscience to obey that which they know, then they are keepers of the workes of Christ, and shall have the reward promised.

D

Secondly, obedience is here described by the object or matter thereof; to wit, the workes of Christ: that is, all such workes as Christ hath ordained in his word, and those whereof he is the author by his spirit in his members.

Hereby we learne: first, that hee that will obey God in Christ Jesus, must not thinke his owne thoughts, speake his owne words, nor doe his owne deeds; but he must think, speake, and doe that which Christ would have him. Secondly, that no worke is or can be acceptable to Christ, but that which is ordained by him. Esay complaineth of them that would teach the feare of God by mens commandements: so that that there is no true feare of God, but that which is taught by Gods commandements, and the like may be ſaid of all other our obedience. This rule overthroweth all other religions beſides the true religion, as of the Jewes, Turkes, and Papiſts: For almoſt all their works are of mens inventing, and were never ordained by Chriſt: ſuch are moſt points in Popery, as ſaying of Maſſe, going on pilgrimage, faſtings, vowing, and praying to Saints, &c.

Vse.

Isa. 29. 13.

Thirdly, whereas he ſaith, my workes, meaning not one or two, but all his workes: wt learne that true obedience conſiſteth in doing all the works of Chriſt: For Chriſt and the devill will never part ſtakes: God muſt either have all our workes or none. And therefore David ſaith, I ſhall not bee confounded, becauſe I have reſpect unto all thy commandements. And good king Ioſiah is commended, For that he turned to the Lord according to all the Law of Moſes. This point muſt bee learned of all: For many thinke if they doe many good things with Herod, all is well; and for this cauſe many a man abhors covetouſneſſe, and pride, and yet is a contemner of the Goſpell: But true obedience muſt be in all things.

Pſal. 119. 6.

2 King. 23. 25.

Matth. 6. 20.

Unto the end. Here is the fourth branch of true obedience; it is conſtant. That obedience wich Chriſt will reward muſt not be for a day or a yeare, but from time to time thorow the whole courſe of our life to the end of our daies. And thus we muſt judge of obedience, not by ſome particular actions, but by the whole tenour of a mans life. Put caſe a man hath made conſcience of all his wayes, thorow the whole courſe of his life, and yet in ſickneſſe by reaſon of the extremity thereof is diſtracted and raveth, blaſpheming God, and ſo dyeth; What muſt we judge of this man? Surely wee muſt not cenſure him by his behaviour in his ſickneſſe, but conſider what hath beene the tenour of his life: if that have beene upright, then his obedience was good, and ſhall be rewarded.

II. Point. The benefits promiſed: and they are two. The firſt is, power to rule, verſ. 27. And he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron: And as the veſſels of a potter ſhall they bee broken: even as I received of my Father. The ſecond is the morning ſtarre, verſ. 28. where note by the way, that theſe words, Even as I have received of my Father, are referred amiſſe in our Engliſh tranſlation, to the giving of the morning ſtar, when as they properly belong to the former words in this ſenſe; As I have received power over nations of my Father, ſo will I give to him that overcommeth power to rule with the rod of Iron, &c. Now come to the benefits.

Verſ. 27.

First, here is promiſed by Chriſt, A power to rule over nations: Chriſts power as he is mediator is very great; and here is ſet forth by three arguments, borrowed from the ſecond Pſalme verſe 8, 9. First, by the largeneſſe of it; it reacheth not to one countrie alone, but to all countries, and to all men, in all nations. Secondly, by the Soveraignty of it: Chriſts power is abſolute in ruling and overruling. And this his Soveraignte conſiſteth in two things: First, in making lawes unto the conſciences of men; ſo as if they be not kept, hee may juſtly condemne them: and in overruling the wils of all men, conforming them to his will, will they nill they: which is ſignified by this, Hee ſhall rule them with a rod of iron. Secondly, in that he hath this abſolute power in himſelfe to ſave and to deſtroy, and therefore is ſaid to have The keyes of Heaven and Hell. Which is ſignified in the next words, And as the veſſels of a potter ſhall they be broken. Thirdly, by the fountaine of it; Chriſt receiveth this power from his Father. Indeed as Chriſt is God he is equall with his Father, and hath this power of himſelfe: But as he is Mediator, his power is given him of his Father, Matth. 28. 18.

Rev. 2. 18.

For the better underſtanding of this place, two queſtions muſt be handled: First, how far forth doth Chriſt give this his power unto men? Anſw. Chriſts Soveraigne and generall power over the whole world is not indeed given to any creature, nay it is incommunicable, and cannot bee conveyed to the perſon of any creature man or Angell: This truth wee muſt hold of all Chriſts offices, they are only in the perſon of Chriſt, and cannot paſſe from him to any other. II. Queſt. How then doth Chriſt ſay truly, that he will give him that overcommeth power over nations? Anſw. Not that his Soveraigne power is actually given to the creature; but becauſe the creature being in Chriſt, hath the fruit and benefit of this power in his ſalvation. And this power is in them two waies: First, hereby Chriſt makes all his ſervants (being his members) partakers of his glorie in heaven, whereas the whole world beſides is condemned in hell; and therefore we are ſaid to be raiſed up together, and made to ſit together in the heavenly places in Chriſt Ieſus. And againe, he ſaith, The Saints ſhall judge the world, not in giving ſentence upon them, but as witneſſes and approvers of Chriſt his ſentence: For the elect ſhall firſt receive the ſentence of abſolution; and then being taken up into the clouds ſhall ſit with Chriſt, and there approve of the juſt condemnation of all the wicked. Secondly, by this power he enableth thoſe that be his, in their owne perſon to overcome all the enemies of their ſalvation. His meaning then is this, as if he had ſaid, Howſoever my Soveraigne power over all creatures in my ſelfe cannot be derived to any other, yet by vertue of this my power, I will exalt them that overcome, to partake of my glorie; and will give them power in themſelves over their ſinnes, over death, hell, the world, and all the enemies of their ſalvation.

Eph. 2. 6.

1 Cor. 6. 2.

Here then behold unto what exceeding dignity every true ſervant of God is advanced, not in himſelfe, but in Chriſt: He hath rule over nations, nations, and victorie over all the enemies of his ſalvation, yea hee is made partaker of Chriſts glory.

Hence we are taught to make conſcience of every ſinne whatſoever; for the privilege of every Chriſtian is to have power to judge the wicked world: Now as it is a ſhame for a Judge that ſitteth and condemneth a murtherer or a theefe, to be a theefe or a murtherer himſelfe; ſo it is for any Chriſtian to live in any one ſin, ſeeing hee himſelfe muſt condemne the world of thoſe ſinnes. Neither can wee thinke that Chriſt will ever advance him that lives in ſinne, to condemne the ſame in others, unleſſe he firſt reforme it in himſelfe.

Secondly, the conſideration of this privilege of a Chriſtian, muſt be hid in our minds againſt the time of adverſity and affliction, and of the pangs of death. For he that hath kept faith and a good conſcience all his life, is a Prince in Jeſus Chriſt, and ſhall rule over all his enemies. And therefore though now hee bee afflicted and wronged by them, yet in Chriſt hee is their Judge, and ſhall one day condemne them that doe him wrong. And as for death it is ſubdued in Chriſt, and ſhall bee no death unto him, 1 Cor. 15. 54.

Againe, the words in the originall are thus; Hee ſhall feed and rule the nations, as a ſhepherd ruleth and feedeth his lambs with his hooke. The Papiſts upon the words of Chriſt to Peter, Joh. 21. 16. Feed my ſheepe, that is, feed and rule my ſheepe, would gather Peters ſupremacie over the Church in all the world. But their groſſe abuſe of that place will appeare, by comparing it with this promiſe of Chriſt, to every one that overcommeth: for if their collection be good, then hence will follow, that every Chriſtian man ſhould have the like ſupremacie, and be a Pope: which how abſurd it is, every man may judge. Therefore that place of Iohn muſt not be underſtood of any ſupremacie: for there Chriſt teacheth Peter the faithfull diſcharge of his office and dutie. From this firſt gift of Chriſt, the Papiſts gather two things. 1. That the ſeverall Saints in heaven are patrons of countries and kingdomes, as Saint George for England, Saint Denis for France, Saint Patricke for Ireland, &c. Secondly, that wee may pray unto Saints, for the Saints rule the Nations, and therefore know all Nations; and if they know them, then they muſt be prayed unto. But they ſwarve from the meaning of this text: for firſt, it is not ſaid, that the Saints ſhall have power, one over one countrie, and another over another; but every Saint hath power over all Nations: Secondly, they have power over all nations, not becauſe they rule them actually, but becauſe they have the fruit and benefit of Chriſts power, whereby they are ruled. And for their ſecond collection: we muſt by nations underſtand not all Churches, but unbeleevers: for the wicked are they that muſt be broken like porters veſſels. Now the faithfull have no power over the Churches, but over infidels: and therefore both their collections are abſurd.

I will give him the morning ſtarre. Here is the ſecond benefit promiſed by Chriſt to him that overcommeth. The morning ſtarre properly ſignifieth, that bright ſtarre which riſeth a little before the Sun, ſome time of the yeare, which the Heathen call Venus. And hereby is meant Chriſt himſelfe, as Rev. 22. 16. I am the bright morning ſtarre. Chriſt is called a ſtarre: Firſt, becauſe he illuminateth all men with the light of underſtanding, and his Church with the knowledge of the will of his Father, and that ſufficiently in all matters that concerne ſalvation. Secondly, to ſhew that the Prophecie by Balaam touching Chriſt, whom he calleth the ſtarre of Iacob, is now fulfilled, when as Chriſt by his Apoſtles hath plentifully revealed himſelfe to all nations. Numb. 24. 17.

Further, hee is called a morning ſtarre, for that ſpeciall reſemblance which is betweene him and it; for the morning ſtarre riſeth not in the beginning or middle of the night, but in the end of the night towards the beginning of the day when the ſunne is about to riſe, and then it ſhineth brighter than all other ſtarres. Even ſo Chriſt, he came not in the beginning or middle of the darke time under the law, but in the laſt age of the world, wherein after his incarnation he did ſhine moſt fully to all nations; ſo as there was no ſuch light or knowledge before his comming as hath beene ſince. This Peter verifieth when he ſaith, We have a moſt ſure word of the Prophets, to which yee doe well that ye take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a darke place, until the day dawne, and the day ſtar ariſe in your hearts. 2 Pet. 1. 19. Where the time of the Law and Prophets is called a time of darkneſſe: and their preaching then, as a candle light: but the preaching of Chriſt under the Goſpell, is as the day ſtarre which ſhineth moſt brightly; he is not called the morning ſtar, becauſe he ſhineth to all the world in all times as the morning ſtar doth, but becauſe he ſhineth unto men in the laſt age of the world.

It is further ſaid, I will give him it. Where is promiſed fellowſhip and participation with Chriſt, as he is the day ſtarre. And herein are two benefits compriſed: Firſt, perfect illumination, whereby ignorance ſhall be wholly taken away after this life, when as men ſhall know God fully, ſo farre forth as a creature can know the Creator. Secondly, the light of perfect glory: for by fellowſhip with Chriſt we ſhall bee made to ſhine as the ſtarres, as Daniel ſpeaketh: yea, we ſhall become Saints in light, as the Apoſtle ſaith. Dan. 12. 3. Col. 1. 12.

Vſe. Whereas Chriſt compares himſelfe to the morning ſtar: Firſt, we ſee the groſſe errour of many among us, who live in blindnes of minde and ignorance; walking in their wicked luſts and pleaſures, without care of keeping faith or good conſcience, and yet perſwade themſelves ſelves that they have part in Chriſt, and ſhall be partakers of his light and glory. But they are deceived: for all ſuch as live in blinde ignorance, and in ſinne, are meere darkneſſe, and ſo can have no fellowſhip with Chriſt, who is that bright morning ſtar: for what fellowſhip can bee betweene light and darkneſſe? This bright morning ſtarre ſerveth onely for them that receive the light thereof, and walke by it: but thoſe that walke in the darkneſſe of their ſinnes have no benefit by it.

Secondly, ſeeing Chriſt is this morning ſtar, we muſt have care to learne Peters inſtruction: namely, Labour that this bright ſtar may riſe and ſhine in our hearts. This we ſhall feele, when we uſe thoſe means whereby the beames of this ſtarre may ſhine upon us, not onely for the enlightning of our mindes, but alſo for the heating and reviving of our frozen and dead hearts. For as the Sunne in the Spring time quickneth by it warme beams ſome things that lie dead all winter; ſo Chriſt Jeſus this morning ſtarre by the beams of his grace doth enlighten A our mindes, and revive our dead and frozen hearts. And till ſuch time as wee feele theſe things wrought in us, wee cannot ſay, that this morning ſtarre is riſen unto us, or hath ſhone into our hearts.

Thirdly, whereas Chriſt appeareth in the morning, when darkneſſe is paſt; we are hereby taught to lead our lives in godlineſſe, righteouſneſſe, ſobrietie, and in all manner of upright and godly converſation: For the night is paſt, and the day is come, wherein wee may ſee to walke uprightly; And therefore we muſt caſt off the unprofitable workes of darkneſſe, as the Apoſtle exhorteth us, Rom. 13. 12. And know this, That thoſe who in this light doe not walke accordingly, but delight in ſins the works of darkneſſe, ſhall one day have their fill: He that loveth the darke, for the hiding of his talent, muſt B be caſt for his reward into vtter darkneſſe. Mat. 25. 25. 30.

Let him that hath an eare to heare, heare what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches. Here is Chriſts commandement, the ſecond part of this concluſion: But hereof we have ſpoken before. Verſ. 29.

CHAP. 3.

Verſ. 1. *And write unto the Angel of the Church that is at Sardis, Theſe things ſaith he that hath the ſeven Spirits of God, and the ſeven Starres; I know thy workes, for thou haſt a name that thou liveſt, but thou art dead.

THeſe words containe the fifth particular commandement of our Saviour Chriſt unto Iohn, wherin he is injoyned to write and ſend a ſpeciall Epiſtle to the Church of God in Sardis: of this commandement we have ſpoken before. The Epiſtle it ſelfe is contained in the ſix firſt verſes, and hath three parts: A Preface, the matter of the Epiſtle, and the Concluſion. The Preface in theſe words, Theſe things ſaith he which hath the ſeven Spirits of God, and the ſeven ſtarres. In this Preface, firſt is ſet downe in whoſe name this Epiſtle is written, to procure authoritie unto it: it is in Chriſts name, whoſe ſoveraigntie is deſcribed by two royalties, that is, by two prerogatives or privileges belonging unto him as hee is a ſoveraigne king of his Church: the firſt is, The having of the ſeven Spirits of God. The ſecond, his having of the ſeven ſtarres. For C the firſt royaltie: In the firſt Chap. verſ. 4. I ſhewed that by ſeven ſpirits, were meant the holy Ghoſt; from whom proceed all the gifts and graces that any men enjoy: and therefore whereas Chriſt is ſaid to have the ſeven Spirits of God, the meaning is, that hee hath the holy Ghoſt. And this is a royaltie of Chriſt, as he is the King and head of his Church. If it be ſaid, that other ſervants of God, as David, Peter, and Paul, had the holy Ghoſt: Anſ. It is true, but not in the ſame manner with Chriſt; for he hath the holy Ghoſt two wayes: in regard of his divine nature, and of his manhood: as Chriſt is God, he is the beginning of the holy Ghoſt: for the holy Ghoſt is a perſon in the Trinitie, proceeding from the Sonne as well as from the Father; in regard of which proceeding, Chriſt is ſaid to ſend the holy Ghoſt, and to doe whatſoever he doth by the holy Ghoſt; as to overcome death by the eternall ſpirit, and to riſe from death to life.

Secondly,

Secondly, as Christ is man, he hath the holy Ghost, because the holy Ghost powred into him the perfection of all graces and gifts whatsoever. And for this cause hee is said to bee anoynted with the oyle of gladnesse above his fellowes, and to be inriched with the perfection of all graces, and that two waies: both for number and degrees. For number: with men, some have some graces, and some men others; but Christ, he hath the graces of all men, and all Angels: more graces in number, than all men and all Angels have. And as they are in number perfect, so they are perfect in degree: for in measure, they exceed the graces of all creatures, men or Angels: and therefore the Father is said to have given the Spirit unto his Sonne without measure: and thus much is meant by the first royaltie of Christ. Now the end why Christ is said to have the holy Ghost, is to shew that he is a most lively head of his Church, who is filled with plentie of all store of graces, whereby he is able to enrich his Church, and to revive the members thereof, who are dead in their sinnes; and such indeed was the speciall estate of this Church.

Psal. 45. 7.

Ioh. 3. 34.

Vse. First, hence we learne, no man can have true fellowship with the holy Ghost but by Christ. It is manifest, that none can have fellowship with the Father, but by Christ: and here the same is yet verified touching fellowship with the holy Ghost, especially for the obtaining of those graces that concerne eternall life. This serveth for our speciall instruction: for among the Papists there are many that have worthy and excellent gifts of God, as knowledge, memorie, &c. and yet in them bee wanting the speciall gifts of the spirit; as, faith which justifieth, and regeneration: for touching assurance of these in themselves, they professe themselves to be ignorant. And whence commeth this, but onely from their want of Christ: for the Christ of the Papists, as they teach him, is an Idol-Christ; and therefore wee are not to marvell though we see the most learned among them to scoffe and mocke at our doctrine of assurance of faith, and certainty of election. II. We have many among us that will say, they looke to be saved by Christ, and to have their sinnes pardoned by him; and yet you shall perceive in them no grace of knowledge, or conscience of true obedience. But these things cannot stand together, to wit, loosenesse of life, and forgivenesse of sinnes: and therefore these men deceive themselves: for if they had Christ, they should have his spirit, and the graces thereof purging their hearts: for Christ and his spirit are never severed: he that hath the spirit of Christ working in him faith and good conscience, hath an infallible token that Jesus Christ is his. This must admonish us to labour for true union with Christ Jesus our head, to become flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone; that in him we may have fellowship with the Father, and with the holy Ghost: for till wee bee united unto Christ, we shall never have the graces of salvation wrought effectually in our hearts.

The second royaltie of Christ is, that he hath the seven starres: that is, the seven Pastors of the seven Churches of Asia: they are called starres, because in their ministery they inlighten men in the way that leadeth unto life. And Christ is said to have them because he is a soveraigne Lord over them, and they be his servants. For he appointeth that person that shall be his Minister among men: he giveth him gifts meet for his calling, he prescribeth also unto him his office and duties. But the Pastors of Churches (will some say) are made by the Church. Ans. The right of ordaining Pastors belongeth to Christ, as his royaltie: the office of the Church is to testifie, ratifie, and according to the Word of God to approve of them, whom Christ maketh and endueth with gifts: and for that cause is the Church said to call and ordaine Ministers.

The end why Christ is said to have soveraignitie over the Ministers, is to strike the heart of the Minister of this Church of Sardis, with conscience of his former negligence; and to stirre him up to diligence and carefulnesse in his place. And indeed the consideration of Christs soveraignty over them, is an excellent motive to stirre up all Ministers to be diligent in their place, and so likewise all Christians. For considering that they are Christs, and the gifts they have come from him; this must move them to make conscience of all good duties; for being Christs, they must give themselves wholly to doe the will of Christ, whose they are. If hee would have us live, we must be thankfull, because he is the Lord of life: if our death will glorifie him, we must be content, because wee are his. Thus much of the Preface.

The matter of this Epistle containeth two parts: A reproofe of a vice, with the remedie thereof, vers. 1, 2, 3. And a praise or commendation, vers. 4. The reproofe in these words, I know thy works; that is, I know all thy works, they are all manifest unto mee, and I mislike them. So must these words bee understood in this place, as may appeare by the reason of this reproofe in the words following, Thou hast a name that thou livest, but thou art dead. Wherein is set downe the fault of this Church, namely, Hypocrisie; for that they pretended Christian religion in outward profession, but yet wanted the life of Christianitie, and the power of godlinesse: for the meaning of the reason is this; Thou hast a name that thou livest: that is, Churches round about thee judge and speake of thee, as of a Church that is borne anew in Christ, and is guided by his spirit (for by life we must understand spirituall life, not corporall) but yet for all this thou art dead: that is, thou wantest true spirituall life by regeneration, and art indeed dead in thy sinnes: this is a great and a sharpe reproofe.

That which is here said of this Church of Sardis, may be truly verified of divers Churches

ches in this age. As firſt, of the great Church of Rome, who are guided by the Pope as by their head. That Church hath a name to be alive, and in their own pretence it is the only true Church of God in the world; but in truth and before God it is dead. Some ſay, it is as a body full of diſeaſes, and whoſe throat is cut: but yet the heart panteth, and life remaineth therein. But we may ſay, it hath no manner of ſpirituall life, but lieth ſtark dead as a carkas in the grave. The reaſons that ſome alleage for it are of ſmall moment: firſt, ſay they, it hath the Sacrament of Baptiſme, which is a note of a true Church: and therefore it hath ſome life. Anſw. Firſt, baptiſme is not alwaies a note of a true Church: for circumciſion in whoſe ſtead commeth baptiſme, was a Sacrament uſed of the Samaritans when they were no people of God; and ſo no Church of God. Againe, baptiſme without the true preaching of the Goſpell, is no infallible ſigne of a Church: it is but a ſeale pulled from the writing, or ſet to a bare paper to no uſe: and further, outward baptiſme, without inward baptiſme, is no note of a Church: but ſuch is baptiſme in the Church of Rome; it hath not inward baptiſme joined unto it, neither the true preaching of the word, for the doctrine which they teach is a quite overturning of Chriſt and his Goſpell: and therefore outward baptiſme may bee where there is no Church. Secondly, I anſwer, that baptiſme in the Church of Rome, is a Sacrament not to their Synagogue, but to the hidden Church of God among them. For God had his Church among them even in the middeſt of Poperie. There were alwayes ſome among them that renounced their Religion, whom God called home unto himſelfe by the means which were among them; as the uſe of this Sacrament, the Apoſtles Creed, and of other bookes of holy Scripture. For as God ſaid to Elias, in Ahabs time, I have reſerved ſeven thouſand that never bowed the knee to Baal; ſo it may bee ſaid of many among the Papiſts: God hath there his ſecret Church, who never yeelded to the Popes government and doctrine.

Second reaſon. Antichriſt (ſay they) ſitteth in the Temple of God. Now the Temple of God, is Gods Church; and therefore the Church of Rome is Gods Church. Anſw. He ſitteth there, not as a member thereof, but as an uſurper and deceiver. For in the Church of Poperie is the hidden Church of God: they are therein mingled, as a little wheat like much chaffe, and as little gold with much droſſe. So that though the Church of God bee where Antichriſt ſitteth, yet the Church whereof hee is head is no Church of God; for whether wee regard their doctrine or worſhip of God, there is no meanes to beget or preſerve ſpirituall life in their Church. Further, this which Chriſt ſaith of Sardis, may be ſaid not only of the Papiſts, but of the Churches of the Proteſtants; as of this our Church of England, and of the moſt congregations in the great townes thereof, though not for doctrine, yet in regard of mens converſations: for the bodie of our people ſeeme to bee alive by their outward profeſſion, but indeed they are dead in reſpect of the power of godlineſſe: for by occaſion of outward peace theſe ſins abound; fulneſſe of bread, pride, both inward in heart, and outward in attire: alſo cruelty, covetouſneſſe, and carnall ſecuritie; like as it was in Noahs time. Now where theſe ſinnes reigne, there the power of godlineſſe is wanting: men content themſelves with an outward profeſſion, but the ſpirituall life of grace is not to bee ſeene. And yet this doth not prejudice the ſtate of our Church to nullifie it from being the Church of God: for God hath his choſen among us in all places, who live indeed a ſpirituall life: though the body of our people be dead in ſin, and ſo will continue while peace abideth: the threatnings of the Miniſters will not awake men out of the ſleepe of ſinne; it muſt be the rod of correction that muſt put into them the power of Religion. Men are like to little Children, who beſides admonition, muſt feele the ſmart of the rod to bring them to their dutie.

Further, in this Church of Sardis, whom Chriſt calleth dead, though they had a name to live; note the ſtate of the Church of God: for this was a true Church of God, who among the reſt was waſhed in the bloud of Chriſt, c. 1. 5. and yet Chriſt ſaith, it is dead in ſinne: that is, in part, not wholly. And therefore a Church that is in a very corrupt ſtate both in regard of outward converſation, and of ſundry erroneous opinions, may yet remaine the true Church of Chriſt, if ſo be they erre not in the foundation. Which ſerveth for anſwer to them, that thinke our Church to be no Church; becauſe it maintaineth not that outward order which they think ſhould be in it. And therefore though we muſt preferre Church before Church, yet wee muſt not condemne a Church to be no Church for ſome corruptions that be therein: A true body may have ſome blemiſh; and a true Church ſome wants.

Againe, the Churches of God ſay, this is a Church; yet Chriſt ſaith, they are dead. How can theſe two ſtand? Anſ. The Churches about Sardis judged this to be alive, according to the rule of charitie, becauſe of their outward profeſſion of true religion; for as infants are not indeed all holy, as experience ſheweth; yet till we ſee the ſame made manifeſt, we are in charitie to judge them to be holy, that are borne of faithfull parents: even ſo ought the Miniſter and every one in Gods Church, to thinke the beſt of every one in Gods Church, till God make manifeſt what hee is, Paul following this rule, calleth whole Churches elect.

But thou art dead. Here are two judgements: one of neighbour Churches, the other of Chriſt; and Chriſts judgement is preferred. We muſt therefore regard ſpecially the judgement of Christ, and labour to approve our selves and our conversations unto Christ, rather than to men: for let men say what they will of us, it is Christ that must save and condemne: this made Paul to say, I passe little to be judged of you or of mans judgement: why so? for he that judgeth me is the Lord. 1 Cor 9.3,4.

Heb. 1. 5.

1 King. 19. 18.

2 Theſſ. 2. 4.

And indeed, without Christs commendation, the judgement of men is nothing: for Christ may condemne us, when men thinke well and speake well of us: therefore he saith, Woe bee to you when all men speake well of you, Luk. 6.26.

V. 2. Bee watchfull, and strengthen the things that remaine, that are readie to die: for I have not found thy workes perfect before God.

There bee two degrees of hypocrisie: First, when men professe that which is not in their heart at all. The second, when men make profession of more than is in their heart. This second kind of hypocrisie oft befalleth the children of God: and it is that which Christ reproveth in this Church of Sardis in the former verse. After which reproofe, here hee propoundeth remedie to their vice, and a reason to move them to use the same. The remedie is in the beginning of the verse, where are two duties prescribed: To be watchfull, and to strengthen or confirme the decayed graces of God in them. For the first, Be watchfull: To be watchfull, here is a most worthy and excellent dutie, it is not bodily but spirituall: and it is practised when any man hath a circumspect care and diligent heed in respect of the salvation of his soule. This dutie of watchfulnesse concerneth two things; sinne, and death. Watchfulnesse against sinne, stands in two duties; First, a man must daily and continually bethinke himselfe before-hand of all sinnes and vices into which hee may haply fall: and for the doing of this, he must consider in himselfe two things: his Nature, and his Calling. Touching his Nature, he must consider, that in him remaines the seed and root of all sinne, and therefore that he may fall into any sinne whatsoever. Againe, a man considering his nature, shall find himselfe more inclined to some sinnes, than to others; and those he must especially marke and observe. Secondly, for his calling: a man must mark the sins thereof; for since the fall of man, every calling hath his especiall sinnes, whereto men that walk therein are more incident. The Magistrate hath his sinnes, the Minister his, the Lawyer his, the Physitian his, and the Trades-man his. And touching these, a man must consider unto what vices and abuses men are most subject, that walke in that calling wherein hee liveth, and so shall have a fore-sight of the sinnes that hee A may fall into. Secondly, after this fore-sight of sin, hee must watch his heart with all diligence, that though it be tempted and assaulted, yet it be not tainted with any one sinne; as the wise-man counselleth, Keepe thy heart with all diligence, that so the fountaine of all thy actions may be kept holy and pure. The second part of this watchfulnesse respecteth death, or the second comming of Christ. In this two things must bee practised: first, a man must every day bethinke himselfe of his end, and of the comming of Christ, either in generall to all the world, or particularly unto him by death: and in this consideration he must esteeme and judge of every day as of the day of his death, or the day of judgement. Secondly, hee must prepare B himselfe against death, and against the day of judgement, every day, even this present day, as though hee should now die, or meet Christ in judgement; and the next day doe the like, and so goe on continually to the day of his death. And for our furtherance in this Christian watch we must be mindfull of temperance and sobrietie, that wee keepe mediocritie in the use of the creatures of God, and of the things of this life. For when men plunge themselves, either in the cares of this world, or in earthly delights, they quite forget both sinne and death, and the day of judgment: and thus we see what Christ meaneth by watchfulnesse. Prov. 4.24.

Use. As Christ prescribeth this dutie unto this Church, so are wee in the name of Christ to bee G enjoyned the same Christian watchfulnesse, both against sinne and death, and the day of judgement. And to move us hereto, consider these reasons: First, wee are watchfull for the preservation of the things of this life: as if a towne bee in danger of sacking or burning, there is watch and ward kept continually: and if a mans house be in danger of robbing, he will sit up night and day to save his goods: yea every man is very painfull and watchfull to heape up to himselfe the things of this world: Now, what a shame is it, that men should bee watchfull in temporall things, and yet have no care of their soule that must live for ever? Againe, want of watchfulnesse is the fore-runner of death, and eternall destruction. 1 Thess. 5. 3. When men say peace and safety, then shall come upon them sudden destruction. When the rich man D had enlarged his barnes upon the increase of his substance, he promised to himselfe ease and security, saying, Soule, soule, take thy rest, &c. but it was said unto him, O foole, this night shall thy soule be taken from thee. And the old world knew nothing, till the flood came and destroyed them all. Now, if the want of watchfulnesse be the fore-runner of destruction, how great a cause have we to watch? Luke 12.19,20. Matth. 24.39.

The second dutie injoyned, is to confirme the graces of God decaied in them: Strengthen the things which remaine, that are readie to die: as if hee should say, Sundrie bee the graces which I have bestowed on you; but many are are lost and gone: and those which remaine are about to perish, unlesse you confirme them; therefore see now you strengthen and repaire the same.

In this dutie, Christ teacheth this Church and us an excellent lesson; that whosoever hath received any gift of God, must have care to preserve it, and to make the same gift strong in him by continuall increase. If a man have received knowledge, faith, and repentance, or any other gift of grace, hee must not suffer the same to lye dead in him, but stir up, increase, and confirme it daily, that he may be a perfect man in Christ. For the gifts which men have are not their owne, but Gods also, who looketh to receive his owne with advantage. And therefore men like good Stewards must so use the gifts received, that they may returne them to God with increase. Thus Paul perswadeth Timothy, Stirre up the gift of God which is in thee: for else the receiver is an unfaithfull servant, and so shall be rewarded. And for the better performance of this duty, we must often read the word of God and meditate therein: wee must heare it often preached; and with due reverence and preparation receive the Sacrament, and pray continually, striving earnestly against the corruptions that be in us; and daily stir up our hearts to all good duties. Thus did David check the corruption and deadnesse of his heart; Why art thou so cast downe O my soule? and also stirre up the same unto all good duties, saying, I have applyed my heart to fulfill thy statutes alway even to the end, Psal. 119. 112.

1 Tim. 1. 6.

Psal. 42. 11.

Use. Hereby are reproved the common sort of professors and hearers of the word; who stand at a stay, and goe not forward in grace. This is a great fault: for as wee have received grace, so wee ought to stirre up the same, that wee may confirme and increase it daily.

Further, Christ addeth, which are about to die: where hee answereth to a question that is moved by sundry at this day, namely, whether graces that concern salvatiō may be utterly lost or no? Christ answereth by a distinction, that some graces that pertain to salvatiō, may be lost quite: and others may be decaied, so as they are about to die. For the graces of God that pertaine to salvation, be of two sorts: some be absolutely necessarie, so as without them a man of yeares cannot be saved; and such are faith and regeneration. Others bee lesse necessary, which sometime goe with faith, but not alwayes: such are, A plentifull feeling of the favours of God, joy in the holy Ghost, and boldnesse in prayer; these may be lost wholly for a time in the servants of God. Yea, faith and regeneration themselves, may decay grievously, and be ready to die, as this text saith. Secondly, consider faith and regeneration in themselves, and they may bee wholly lost: for nothing in it selfe is unchangeable, but God. The state of the Elect Angels by nature is changeable, for they stand by the power of God. Thirdly, these graces

A may perish and decay finally, unlesse they bee confirmed. Quest. Why then doe not the Elect finally fall away after their callings? Answ. Their standing commeth not from the constancy of grace or faith, but from the promise of God made unto them, and to their faith: so Christ saith to Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this rocke, that is, upon the faith which thou hast professed, will I build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevaile against it: that is, though they may assault it, and grievously weaken it, yet they shall never be able finally to overcome it.

Matth. 16. 16.

Seeing sundry graces of God may bee lost, & the most necessary graces greatly decay, yea, of themselves quite die: we that have received

Use.

B from God any grace, either of faith or repentance, are hereby taught not to bee presumptuous, or over-confident in our selves, but with feare and trembling worke out our salvation.

Phil. 2. 13.

The reason to enforce the former remedy, is this, For I have not found thy workes perfect before God: And therefore watch, and confirme the decaied graces of God that bee in thee. In this reason, Christ giveth them and us to understand, that he maketh a search in his Church

D of all the workes that men doe in the same, that he may accordingly reward them: for not finding doth presuppose a search. And so the Scripture speaketh of God usually. Before the old world was destroyed, it is said; The Lord saw that the wickednesse of man was great upon the earth; as if he had looked from heaven upon the earth, and beheld that it was corrupt;

Gen. 6. 5.

C speaking after the manner of men, to signifie that search which hee maketh into mens actions. And so he is said to come downe from heaven, at the building of Babel, Genes. 11. and before hee destroyed Sodome and Gomorrah, hee came downe to see whether they had done according to their crie, which was come up to him. And so before the Lord punished the wickednesse of the Israelites, Hee made a search into their wayes: And the second Commandement is this, God will visit the sinnes of the Fathers upon the children: that is, hee will make a search, whether the sinnes of the Fathers bee among the children, and if they be, hee will punish them.

Gen. 18. 21.

Ier. 8. 12.

D Seeing Christ makes this search into all mens actions, wee are taught in all things to have care to conforme our selves to the wil of Christ; and so see our selves to the doing of all good duties, according to his Word: If wee knew a Magistrate would come to make search in our house, we would be sure to set all things in order against he came: Shall wee be thus circumspect to prepare for the comming of an earthly man? and shall we not much more prepare our selves against the search of our Saviour Christ the everliving God, from whom nothing can be hid?

I have not found thy workes perfect. Workes are perfect two waies: by the law, or by the Gospell; ſpell. By the Law, when in our works we doe all that the law requireth: and thus are no mans workes perfect in this life. By the Goſpell, our workes are perfect, when they proceed from a beleeeving heart, that hath a care to pleaſe God in all things: and theſe workes are perfect not in themſelves, but in the acceptation of Chriſt. Here by perfect workes, Chriſt meaneth not the perfection of the law, but of the Goſpel: as if he had ſaid, I have ſearched into your wayes: you doe many workes in ſhew, but they proceed not from ſincere faith, nor from a heart that hath care to pleaſe God in all his Commandements, and a full purpoſe not to ſinne againſt him: you have a ſhew of godlineſſe, but you want the power thereof.

Here obſerve, that Chriſt condemneth this Church, not becauſe their works were not outwardly conformable to the will of God, but becauſe they proceeded not from a beleeving heart, that had a full purpoſe to forſake all ſin, and to pleaſe God in all things

Uſe. Wee therefore muſt take heed of all hypocriſie, by the example of this Church: and labour to bee of Davids minde; and pray with him, that our harts may be upright in the ſtatutes of the Lord: That we may ſay with Hezekias, Behold Lord how I have walked before thee with an upright minde: for this is a notable token of grace, and an infallible badge of him that is the childe of God.

Pſal.119.80.

Iſa.38.3.

Before God. Some may ſay, Chriſt here diſtinguiſheth himſelfe from God, and therefore he is not God. Anſ. By (God) in this place wee muſt underſtand, not God ſimply, but God the Father. For Chriſt here ſpeaketh of himſelfe, not as hee is God, but as hee is Mediator, God and man: in which reſpect, even as hee is now glorified, he is inferiour to his Father.

Where note, that Chriſt being now glorified in Heaven, carrieth himſelfe as Mediator: whence wee gather, that wee may lawfully and without preſumption pray unto Chriſt, without the meanes or interceſſion of Saints or Angels. The Church of Rome deny this; and ſay, becauſe Chriſt is now in full glory in Heaven, therefore wee muſt uſe unto him the mediation of Saints: but Chriſt being now in heaven, marks our works in particular: and therefore we may without preſumption come unto him by praier.

V. 3. *Remember therefore how thou haſt received and heard: and hold faſt, and repent: If therefore thou wilt not watch, I will come on thee as a theefe, and thou ſhalt not know what houre I will come upon thee.

A When Chriſt hath reproved them for their ſinne of hypocriſie, and preſcribed them a remedy with a reaſon thereof; he doth as a good Phyſitian and Paſtor, ſhew them the way how they may practiſe that remedie. For they might ſay; we are commanded to watch, and to renew our decaied graces; but how ſhall we doe this? Chriſt anſwereth, by doing three things: I. by remembring that which thou haſt received by hearing: II. by holding faſt: III. by repenting of thy ſinnes.

For the firſt, Remember therefore: that is, call to minde the doctrine of ſalvation which thou haſt beene taught by mine Apoſtles. This remembrance is a moſt excellent meanes to move a man to ſubjection to Gods will, to repent, and to practiſe all good graces. B When David ſaw the proſperitie of the wicked, his feet had almoſt ſlipt: But his remedy againſt that temptation, was his going to Gods Sanctuary, and there calling to minde the end of thoſe men. Againe, I have remembred thy name. O Lord, in the night, and have kept thy Law. Peter denied his maſter, when he forgot his word: but when hee was put in minde thereof by the looke of Chriſt, and the crowning of a cocke, he then repented, and wept bitterly, Luk.22.61,62. Sinnes committed by men of ignorance, are many and grievous: and therefore all ſinnes are called ignorances, Heb.9.7. but if men would by faith keepe in minde the word of God, it would bee a notable meanes to keepe them from ſinning.

Pſal.73.17.

Pſal.119.55.

C Here then wee have a ſoveraigne remedie againſt ſinne: namely, whereſoever we are, or whatſoever we doe, wee muſt call to minde the Word of God, and the promiſes of God: and thoſe will be a lanthorne unto our ſteps, and a light unto our pathes. The Devill laboureth above all things, to bring us to forget the word: for then hee knowes, he can eaſily draw us into any ſinne. Queſt. How ſhall we keepe in minde the word and promiſes of God? Anſw. That is a grace of God; and for the attaining unto it, wee muſt firſt labour to have our hearts affected with the love of Gods word and promiſes: for a man can never keepe in minde that, whereof he hath no liking. Secondly, we muſt labour to beleeve the word of God: for faith gives it rooting in our hearts, Coloſ.2.7. The cauſe why there is ſo little remembring of that which is taught, is, for that it is not mixed with faith in thoſe that heare it.

Uſe.

D Againe, the thing to be remembred is, How then haſt received and heard: that is, looke what doctrine thou haſt received by hearing, and that remember: where wee ſee Chriſt joyneth receiving and hearing together. Whence wee may gather, that teaching and receiving of the word of God by hearing, is the preſcribed general meanes, whereby God revealeth his will, counſell, and purpoſe touching the ſalvation of mankind; neither is there any other meanes appointed hereunto in the word of God.

This ſheweth, that their opinion is falſe, who teach teach that God calleth all the world effectually unto salvation: for how can they be called, that never heard of the word of God? but all in all ages never heard of the word of God; albeit since the comming of Christ, their sound hath gone forth into all nations. Secondly, this sheweth the fondnesse of their opinion, who defend the doctrine of universall grace: that God should give grace pertaining to salvation, to every man in the world, so as hee may be saved if hee will: for the meanes to receive grace is the hearing of the word: which all men in all ages never had vouchsafed unto them.

The second dutie prescribed, is the holding fast of this doctrine. To hold fast, here signifieth two things; first, to maintaine the doctrine of the gospel received and taught by the Apostles. Secondly, to put the same in practice in a godly life; of these wee have spoken before, Cap. 2. 25.

The third dutie is to repent: where by repentance is not meant the beginning of repentance, but the renewing and restoring of the same, for their hardnesse and deadnesse of heart, whereby they did slackly and coldly practise the good duties which they did professe.

Vse. Hereby wee are taught, not to content our selves with the beginning of repentance, but wee must renew the same continually, and that not for grosse sinnes onely, but even for the wants that bee in us; as for our dulnesse and deadnesse of heart, and for our hypocrisie, and decay in Gods graces.

And because this Church was very dead and dull of heart; therefore Christ addeth a reason to move them to the practice of this dutie: which is a most terrible threatning, in these words, If thou wilt not watch, I will come on thee as a theefe, and thou shalt not know what houre I will come upon thee.

Here marke Christs order and dealing: having prescribed a remedy for the fault, hee giveth them a direction to practise the same; and after addeth a most terrible threatning to drive them thereunto: as if hee should say, If thou wilt not watch against sinne, and against death, and for that end remember my Word, hold fast the same, and repent: then looke as a theefe comes upon a man on a sudden, and spoiles his goods, and cuts the throats of his children; so will I come on thee on a sudden, and powre upon thee my wrath, whereby I will even cut the throat of thy soule, and thou shalt have no meanes to escape my punishment.

Here Christ threatneth suddaine and speedy destruction: but yet with condition and limitation of repentance. Now because wee be like this Church (as hath beene shewed) by reason of the long peace which wee enjoy; wee may also use the same reason and threatning at this day, to stir up our dead hearts. We must watch against all sinne, and against death: and for this end must have in memory the word of God, and hold fast the faith unto the end, and repent

A continually of all wants: but if we doe not this, then are the vengeances, and eternall punishments of God, to be powred upon us without measure, and that suddenly, when wee cannot prevent them. If a man have but a sparke of grace, the consideration hereof will move him to repentance, and to watchfulnesse: but if this will not awake a man out of his sinnes, then nothing remaineth but a fearefull expectation of the wrath of God, which shall be unavoidable, and endure for ever. Indeed if a man had some thousand yeares allotted for the punishment of his sinnes, there were some cause why hee might continue in them: but seeing this punishment is eternall, and when many thousand yeares are expired, they are as far from the end of their woe as ever they were: therefore it must

B stir up all dead and drowzy hearts unto repentance, and cause them to shake off security, ignorance, and coldnesse in religion, and to break off the course of every sinne.

V. 4. Notwithstanding thou hast a few names yet in Sardie, which have not defiled their garments, and they shall walke with mee in white: for they are worthy.

C Here beginneth the second part of the matter of this Epistle, namely, the praise and commendation of some part of this Church. The words doe thus depend upon those which went before, wheras Christ had said, that this Church was dead in sinne, and had only a name to live; some man might aske, how it could bee a true Church. To this Christ answereth in the beginning of this verse; That though the greatest part in this Church were dead in their sins, yet some few there were among them that were alive in Christ, and did testifie the same by true and sincere obedience.

In this coherence wee may observe two instructions. 1. that a particular congregation on earth is made a Church of God, and so called in D regard of Gods Elect therein, who doe truly beleeve. For the privileges of a Church belong unto particular congregations, onely by reason of the faith of the Elect among them. The Catholike Church is the whole company of the Elect truly beleeving in Christ, and particular congregations are members of it, so far forth as they doe truly beleeve: the rest that doe not truly beleeve, are not members of the Church before God, but onely in the judgement of men: like unto superfluous humours which are in the body, but no parts thereof. This confuteth the doctrine of the Church of Rome, who teach that wicked men that are rejected in Gods decree, may yet bee true members of the Church of God.

Secondly, in this coherence Chriſt intimateth unto us a diſtinction betweene man and man in this Church: For all that were in this Church, were men called, profeſſing Chriſt and his Goſpell: and yet of them, ſome were dead in their ſinnes, and others were alive in Chriſt. Touching this diſtinction of men, wee muſt ſearch the cauſe thereof. It muſt not bee aſcribed to any power or will in man, but to the good pleaſure of God, as the Scripture teacheth; for when the body of the Iſraelites had given themſelves to Idolatry, there were yet ſeven thouſand that never bowed the knee to Baal. What was the cauſe why they did not live like to the other Iſraelites? Surely nothing in the will of man (though the Idolatry of the other was to be aſcribed to themſelves) but the text is cleare, it was the good pleaſure of God, who had preſerved and kept them.

Rom. 11. 4.

Uſe. By this wee ſee how erroneous and falſe the Divinitie of ſome Proteſtants is, which aſcribe the cauſe of this diſtinction betweene man and man, to the libertie of mens will being renewed by grace, ſaying, That God gives to everie man ſaving grace, by vertue whereof, hee may repent and beleeve if he will: but yet becauſe the will of man doth ſtill remaine ſinfull, hence it commeth, that hee hath liberty to obey, or not to obey. And therefore the cauſe why ſome men lie dead in ſinne is, becauſe they ſet their will to refuſe the grace of God; and the cauſe why ſome men live in Chriſt is, becauſe they incline their will to embrace the grace of God. But this doctrine doth greatly diminiſh the grace of God, in that it maketh the acceptance thereof to lie and depend on the pleaſure and will of man: when as the power of almighty God joyned with his will, is the true cauſe thereof, leaving ſome to themſelves, who doe fall, and enabling others to ſtand by his grace.

Now follow the words of this commendation: Notwithſtanding thou haſt a few names yet in Sardie: that is, There be yet in this Church a few perſons knowne to me by their names: (for by names, we muſt underſtand perſons named) which have not defiled their garments. Here (to omit many expoſitions) is an alluſion to the Ceremoniall Law, wherein God ſet downe a diſtinction betweene things cleane and uncleane, not in themſelves, but by his appointment: and among the Jewes, if any man had but touched an uncleane thing with his hand, or with his garment, therby he was defiled and his garment defiled legally; and ſo hee or his garment were reputed uncleane: whereupon they had a ſpeciall care not to touch the things that were defiled, no not with their garments. Now this ſignified another thing unto them, namely, That they ought to abſtaine, not onely from the outward ſinnes of the morall Law, but even from all occaſions, intentions, ſhews, and appearances of evill. And in this place, this is meant hereby; that ſome in this Church

A of Sardie, had ſo farre made conſcience of ſin, that they would not meddle with very occaſions and appearances of evill.

Hereby wee ſee, that the ſervants of God are but few in number: for the bodie of this people were dead in ſinne, and a few onely in this great place lived in Chriſt: ſo Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples, The flocke to whom the Father will give the kingdome of Heaven, is but a little flocke. The Prophet Iſaiah is ſent, To harden the hearts of the bodie of the people for their iniquities: and, the tenth part onely muſt bee ſaved: and in the Goſpell it is ſaid, The way to hell is broad, and many there be that walke therein: but the way to heaven is ſtrait, and few there bee that enter into it.

Luke 12. 32. Iſa. 6. 9. verſ. 13. Mat. 7. 13, 14.

B Uſe. Hereby then wee are taught not to follow the example of the multitude, but of the fewer and better ſort. It is a foule ſinne that keepes many from religion, and brings them to deſtruction, when they will live after the manner of the world, and as their fore-fathers have done. This is a falſe rule, and a dangerous courſe.

Thou haſt a few names: That is, perſons whoſe names I know, and have recorded. They are called names, becauſe Chriſt obſerves and knowes them by their names. Where note, that thoſe that are the true ſervants of God, are particularly knowne unto Chriſt: The haires of your head are numbred (ſaith Chriſt to his Diſciples) much more were their names knowne. Againe, hee biddeth them rejoyce that their names were written in heaven. And Chriſt the good Shepherd knowes his ſheepe, and calls them by their names, John 10. verſe 3.

D Luke 12. 7. C Luke 10. 2.

This is a matter of endleſſe comfort unto the people of God: for what can cauſe a man more to rejoyce, than to know that his name particularly is knowne to the King of Kings, and that accordingly hee hath ſpeciall regard unto him? When the Lord would comfort Moſes, and put courage into him in doing the duties of his calling, hee telleth him, That hee was knowne unto him by name. Yea, this is the foundation of mans ſalvation, The Lord knoweth who are his.

Exod. 33. 17. Pſal. 1. 19. and 17. 2 Tim. 2. 19.

Which have not defiled their garments: Here they are commended for uprightneſſe and ſinceritie of life and converſation, in that they kept themſelves from the very ſhewes and appearance of evil; when as the reſt of this Church was dead in ſinne.

In their example Chriſt preſcribeth unto us a patterne of true pietie, how we ought to carry our ſelves in the Church of God on earth: wee muſt not content our ſelves with a bare profeſſion of Religion, and keepe our ſelves from groſſe ſinnes onely, but abſtaine from the very ſhewes of evill. Yea, more particularly, here are three things taught us, touching ſin: Firſt, that wee ought to make conſcience of every ſinne in in our owne person. Secondly, that we ought to keepe our selves from the contagion of sinne in others, either by giving consent unto them, or furthering and allowing them any way therein. Thirdly, that wee ought to abstaine from the very occasions, and shewes, and appearances of sinnes: So Paul teacheth us to abstaine from all appearances of evill, Eph. 5.3. hee will not have sundry sinnes, as fornication, uncleanenesse, &c. so much as once named, thereby to give the least approbation unto them. We must therefore looke on this example, lay it to our hearts, and conforme our lives unto it: so shall we be good servants of God, and have the same commendation with these few: for true religion stands not in knowledge, but in obedience; and this is true obedience, to make conscience of every sinne in our owne persons; to take heed of the infection of sinne in others, and to abstaine from the appearance of evill. A happy Church should wee have, if these things were practised: but this is the shame and reproach of our profession, that wee have no care of true obedience in our selves and others, wherby we should glorifie God, and grace our holy religion.

1 Thess. 5.22.

The Church of Rome hence gather, that a man after baptisme may live without mortall sinne. For these few persons in this Church in their baptisme put on Christ, and after kept themselves from all occasions of sinnes, so as they had not committed any mortall sinne. But their collection is unsound: For first, though they had to this time abstained from all mortal sinne, yet how can they prove that they sinned not afterward? Secondly, they are said not to have defiled their garments, not for that they had not committed any sinne, but because they endevoured to keepe themselves from the appearance of all sinne; and so must the obedience which is ascribed to Gods children in Scripture bee understood, namely, of their sincere purpose and endevour to obey: and so among us, those that have a setled purpose and resolution to make conscience of every sinne, and in all things to doe the will of God, they are reputed for the keepers of the law. For God in his children accepts the will for the deed. And they shall walke with me in white] After the commendation of these few, Christ addeth a promise of living with him in glory. For so white garments have alwayes beene used to signifie joy, happinesse, life, and glory: Eccl. 9.8. At all times let thy garments be white, that is, take thy delight and pleasure in using the creatures of God. So that here these few have a promise to bee freed from all want, and to live with Christ in all glory, joy, and pleasure.

This benefit hath beene in effect further urged in the former Chapter: here onely I will note one doctrine: namely, That they which live in the world among the wicked, and do not communicate with their sinnes, shall not partake with them in their punishments; for the

A body of this Church must have Christ to come amongst them as a Theefe; but the godly must walke with Christ in white, in glory. Lot was freed from the destruction of the Sodomites, because hee partaked not with them in their sinnes: and among the Israelites, Those that mourned for the sinnes of the people, are marked in the fore-head, that when judgements came upon the wicked, they might be spared.

Gen. 19.

Ezek 9.6.

This point must be remembred: for by reason of long peace and prosperity among us, many sinnes abound, as ignorance, Atheisme, contempt of Religion, and prophaning of the Lords Sabbath, with innumerable sinnes of the second Table. All which call for Judgements from Heaven, and no doubt they will be punished, partly in this life, and partly in the life to come, unlesse our people doe repent. Those therefore that would not partake of the common Judgements that are to come, must now beware that they communicate not with the common sinnes that doe abound, and see that they keepe faith and a good conscience, having their righteous and zealous hearts grieved, for the abhominations among which they live.

After the promise is adjoined the reason thereof, For they are worthy. Hence the Church of Rome doth conclude, that a man by his works may merit Heaven, because they bee worthy of reward. A most blasphemous conclusion, and a manifest abuse of the word of God. Gods children indeed are worthy of life everlasting; but not by the merit of their workes, for then they should be done according to the rigour of the Law; but for the worthinesse of their person, when as they stand righteous before God in Christ: for when God will save any man, he gives Christ unto that man truly and really; so as he may say, Christ is mine. And with Christ God gives his spirit which worketh in his heart true saving faith, whereby hee doth receive Christ and so Christ and his righteousnesse belongs unto that man really; and by vertue thereof hee is worthy of life everlasting: and this is the worthinesse which Christ meaneth in this place, and not any worthinesse of their workes; so that this doth helpe them nothing at all, and yet it is the most probable place of Scripture, to prove and justifie the Doctrine of mans merits.

Two kindes of worthinesse.

V. 5. He that overcommeth shall bee cloathed in white aray, and I will not put out his name out of the Booke of life: but I will confesse his name before my Father, and before his Angels.

v. 6. Let him that hath an eare, heare what the spirit saith unto the Churches.

Here is the conclusion of this Epistle: and it containeth two parts; a promise, and a commandement. The promise in the fifth verse, and the commandement in the sixth. In the promise note two things: first, the parties to whom it is made, To him that overcommeth; whereof wee have spoken before. Chap. 2. 7. Secondly, the thing promised, to wit, glory and eternall happinesse; which is expressed three wayes: First thus, Hee shall be cloathed in white aray: that is, he shall have everlasting life and happinesse: so much is signified by white rayment, as we have already shewed.

Use. Hence the Church of Rome conclude, that a man may doe good workes respecting a reward. Answ. In some sort it is true; for so it is recorded of Moses, Hebr. 11. 26. Hee had respect to the recompence of reward. But yet the recompence of reward must not be the principall end of our good workes: for chiefly wee must thereby intend to testifie our faith, and our obedience unto God; and with that wee may have respect to everlasting life.

The second thing promised; And I will not put out his name out of the booke of life. For the understanding of this, two questions must bee scanned: First, what this booke of life is: Secondly, whether a man may bee blotted out of this Booke. For the first; this booke of life is nothing else, but Gods predestination or eternall decree of Election, whereby hee hath chosen some men unto salvation upon his good pleasure. And this is called a Booke, because it is like unto a booke. For as the Generall in a Campe, hath the name of all his souldiers that fight under him, in a Booke; and as the Magistrate of a towne hath the name of every free man and denizon inrolled; so God in the booke of his Election, hath the names of all that shall be saved.

For the second Question. A man may bee written in the booke of life two wayes: either truly before God, or in the judgement of men onely. Those whose names are truly before God written in this booke, cannot bee blotted out: For Gods counsell touching the eternall state of every man, is unchangeable. This the golden Chaine of Gods decree, doth plainely shew: For whom hee hath predestinated, them hee hath called; and whom he called, them also he justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified. Rom. 8. 30. Others there bee that have their names written in this Booke, onely in the judgement of men; and thus are all men written in the Booke of life, that professe the Gospel of Christ in his Church: for so charitie binds us to judge of them: And these may have their names blotted out. In this sense doth the Scripture often speake; as when the Prophet wisheth, That A God would blot his enemies out of the Booke of life (meaning Iudas principally) his meaning is, that it might bee made manifest, his name was never written therein. This then is the meaning of this promise; that they who doe avoid the occasions of sinne, and have care to keepe faith and good conscience unto the end, have their names written in the booke of life, and they shall never be blotted out. Psal 69. 28.

Hence I gather two things: First, that the number of the Elect, in respect of God, is certaine: for the names of those which are to bee saved, be as it were written in a booke; and being once written in, they remaine there for ever. Some doe teach, that all may be saved, if they will: but this is a meere fancy of man: for B what should there need any booke of life, if that were so? Secondly, hence I gather, that this number can neither increase, nor be diminished, let men doe what they can: If they had beene of us, they would have continued with us, 1 John 2. 19. All that thou hast given me have I kept, and none of them is lost, Joh. 17. 12.

Use. Whereas a man may be written in the booke of life, to wit, in the judgement of men, and yet be blotted out: hereby we are to be admonished, to looke unto our selves, and to make conscience of every sinne, and to avoid and shun the very occasions thereof. For so long as we professe the Gospel and obey the same, our names be in the book of life: but when we commit any sin, we doe as much as in us lieth, make C a pen, and reach it up to heaven to blot our names out of that booke: and they that keepe a course in sinning, doe plainly shew that they were never truly written therein.

Secondly, considering that the number of the Elect is certaine, it must bee a motive to cause us to labour for some assurance of Election, that wee may truly say, we have our names written in Gods booke. But here some bad person will say, seeing the number of the Elect is unchangeable; I will live as I list: for if my name be in the booke of God, it shall never bee blotted out; and if it be not in, it can never bee added. Answ. These men deceive their owne soules: for they that have their names written in the booke of life, shall live as these few did in this Church of Sardis, in true faith and holy obedience. For he that is ordained for glorification, is ordained to justification and sanctification: and it is impossible for him that shall bee D saved, to live alway in sinne: and therefore these men must rather labour to repent and beleeve, and to get some signes of their election, that they may know that their names are written in the booke of life.

The third benefit is this: I will confesse his name before my Father, and before his Angels. That is, in the day of judgement I will acknowledge and professe him to be mine; one of my elect, that keepeth faith and good conscience unto the end. I will take him from the company of the wicked world, and set him on my right right hand, and advance him to glory, pronouncing upon him the blessed voyce of absolution, Come, thou blessed of my Father, Matth. 25.34. The end why this benefit is thus propounded, is to draw this Church to professe the name of Christ in this world: for if they would professe Christ before men, hee will acknowlege them for his owne at the last day.

Vse. This same reason here propounded, must induce us to make a true confession of Christ, against the world and all Christs enemies: which to doe is a very hard matter. A man of himselfe cannot stand out; but yet the consideration of this, that Christ will confesse him at the last day, will bee a notable motive and meanes to inable him thereto. If any earthly Prince should come to a man among a great companie, and cal him by his name speaking kindly unto him, hee would esteeme it a great honour unto him: and for that hee would not sticke to die in the Princes cause. O then, what honour is this, that Christ Jesus will in the last day vouchsafe to all those that in this life doe sincerely confesse him, and overcome. He will confesse them to bee his, and receive them to his owne glory. But on the contrary, those that will not confesse him here, but disgrace him, either by false doctrine, or prophaneneſse of life, will Christ at the day of judgement utterly disgrace, by denying them to bee his, and there pronounce upon them the fearefull sentence of condemnation, Goe ye cursed, &c. Which if we would then escape, and also procure unto us the joyfull voice of absolution, wee must here labour to hold the truth of Christs doctrine, and also keep a good conscience unto the end. But if we onely professe him in judgment, and not in the practice of an holy life, surely Christ will professe that he knows us not, and then give us our portion with the devill and his Angels.

The Commandement followeth: verse 6. Let him that hath an eare, heare, &c. Of which we have spoken.

V. 7. And unto the Angell of the Church which is of Philadelphia, write: These things saith hee, which is holy and true: which hath the key of David, which openeth and no man shutteth, and shutteth and no man openeth.

Here beginneth the sixth particular Epistle of our Saviour Christ, from this vers. to the 14. And before (as to the rest) is prefixed a speciall Commandement unto Iohn, whereby hee is injoined to write this Epistle unto the Church of Philadelphia; the end of which Commande-

A ment, is to warrant the calling of Iohn to write this Epistle: but of this wee have spoken before.

The Epistle it selfe containeth three parts: a Preface, the matter of the Epistle, and the Conclusion. The Preface in this verse, These things saith hee, &c. Wherein is set downe, in whose name this Epistle is sent; namely, in Christs: where (as in the former Epistles) hee is exceellently described, for the winning of more credit unto this Epistle; and that, first by his properties, Holinesse and truth; secondly, by his Kingly office, in the words following.

For his properties. First, Christ is said to bee holy. Quest. How can Christ be said to be holy as hee is man, considering hee descended from B Adam, who conveyed his sinne and the guilt thereof, to all his posteritie? The common answer is this: That indeed Christ descended from Adam, as he is man; but his substance was sanctified by the holy Ghost in the wombe of the Virgin, and thereby hee was freed from Adams sinne. This answer is true, but not sufficient: for men, besides the corruption originall, take from Adam the guiltinesse of that sinne which Adam committed. Now sanctification taketh away the corruption of sinne, but not the guilt thereof. Therefore a more full answer is this; that all which come of Adam by naturall generation, doe receive by that order which God set in nature at the creation, saying increase and multeply, both the nature of Adam, C and the sinne and guilt thereof. But God for the preventing of this in the Incarnation of Christ, ordained that Christ should not come of Adam by naturall generation, but by a miraculous conception of the holy Ghost: whereby hee tooke the nature of man, with the infirmities thereof, without the sinne of mans nature, or the guiltinesse thereof. And thus is Christ free from sinne as he is man.

Further, Christ is holy two wayes. In himselfe; and in regard of his Church. In himselfe, he is holy sundry wayes: First, in regard of his God-head, for his divine nature is holinesse it selfe. Secondly, as he is man; for his manhood was not onely free from all manner of sinne, by reason of his miraculous conception, but it was D also inriched and filled with holinesse, and that in greater measure than all men and Angels: for hee received the gifts of the holy Ghost without measure. And againe, as hee is man, Christ is holy in regard of his obedience and actions; for living on earth hee did actually as our suretie fulfill the law for us. Secondly, Christ is holy in regard of his Church. First, because hee is the Author of that holinesse, which is in every member of his Church. Yea, hee is holy in regard of men in a further respect; namely, as the root of all mens holinesse, as hee is Mediator. For looke as from Adam is actually conveyed originall sinne, to every one of his posteritie that commeth by naturall generation; so from Christ is righteousneſse neſſe and holineſſe conveyed to all that beleeve in him: and for this cauſe hee is called our 1 Cor. 1. 31. righteouſneſſe and ſanctification: and in this ſenſe eſpecially is Chriſt ſaid to bee holy in this place.

Vſe. Whereas Chriſt is ſaid to be holy not only in himſelfe, but for us: here we muſt marke what is the principall thing in Chriſtian Religion: namely, to have care to bee ingraffed into Chriſt, that from him we may receive grace to become new creatures, and feele in us his power to kill our corruptions, and daily to renew his owne image in us, in righteouſneſſe and true holineſſe; and that as truly, as wee feele in us Adams corruption. It is not ſufficient for us to plead, that Chriſt will be our Saviour, and will free us from all ſinnes; but wee muſt labour to have Chriſt convey holineſſe into us, and that as ſenſibly as we ſee the root convey ſappe into the branches: and this holineſſe we muſt make to appeare in our lives, as the branches by their fruit and leaves, do ſhew they receive ſap from the root.

Secondly, here note, Chriſt propounds himſelfe unto us and to all Churches, as a notable patterne to bee followed; giving us to underſtand, that all that beleeve in him, and looke to bee ſaved by him, muſt bee holy as hee is holy, making conſcience of every evill way; for Chriſt is holy to make us holy. Let us therefore behold Chriſt, and ſee wherein hee expreſſeth himſelfe to bee holy; and therein let us follow him. So John ſaith: He that hath this hope, purifieth himſelfe as he is holy: that is, uſeth all good meanes to conforme himſelfe to Chriſts holineſſe.

Thirdly, hereby wee learne, that the common title given to the Pope, whereby he is called (Holineſſe) is a blaſphemous title: for to be holy, is here made a propertie of Chriſt. And yet more is given to the Pope, than to Chriſt in this place: for hee is called holineſſe, which is a title of God alone.

The ſecond propertie, whereby Chriſt is deſcribed, is Truth: Chriſt is ſaid to be true, in three regards: Firſt, becauſe hee is without all errour or ignorance, knowing every thing as it is. Truth is in Chriſt properly, and in the creatures onely by meanes of him. Secondly, becauſe whatſoever he willeth and decreeth, he doth it ſeriouſly, without fraud, deceit, change, or contradiction, as the whole tenure of Scriptures doe ſhew, wherein every part is ſutable and agreeable to another. Thirdly, becauſe hee maketh good every promiſe made in the word: for in him all the promiſes of God are yea, and Amen, 2 Cor. 1. 20.

Vſe. Whereas Chriſt is ſaid to be true, yea, truth itſelfe: Firſt, we learne a full difference between him, and all falſe wicked ſpirits; for they are ſpirits of errour and falſhood, for the devill is the father of lies, and the author thereof.

Againe, whereas Chriſt is true in all his wayes, wee ought without all doubting to beA leeve his word, and all promiſes made therein, that concerne our ſalvation. If Chriſt could erre or lye, and men bee deceived by him, then they might juſtly doubt of the truth of his Word: but ſeeing he is true in all his promiſes, we muſt beleeve in him: and in all our diſtreſſes either of bodie or minde, depend upon him: for hee hath made a promiſe to helpe, and he will never faile them that reſt on him.

Thirdly, in this propertie, hee propounds himſelfe an example, to bee followed of his Church and of us; that as Chriſt is ſerious in his decrees, and conſtant in his promiſes; ſo muſt wee purpoſe every good thing ſeriouſly, and alſo make good whatſoever good thing we promiſe. For, Lyars muſt bee deſtroyed, Pſal. 5. 6. They that love, or make lyes, muſt never come into heaven, but bee ſhut out thence, and caſt into the burning lake of fire and brimſtone, Rev. 22. 15. But it is a note of a man, that is a good member of Gods Church in this world, and that ſhall be inheritor of Chriſts kingdome in heaven, to ſpeake the truth from his heart, Pſal. 15. 22. And lying is a note of the childe of the devill, Joh. 8. 44.

Secondly, Chriſt is deſcribed by his Kingly office, which hath the keys of David, which openeth and no man ſhutteth, and ſhutteth and no man openeth. Where firſt, let us ſee the meaning of the words: for which purpoſe we muſt have recourſe to Iſay 22. 22. whence theſe words are borrowed, being there ſaid of Eliachim. The circumſtances of the text will eaſily ſhew the meaning of the words in this place: Shebna, who had beene an ancient Steward to many of the Kings of Iſrael, was Treaſurer alſo unto King Hezekiah. And becauſe hee was an hinderer of reformation intended by Hezekias, the Lord threatned to caſt him out of his office: and further, the Lord ſignifieth that Eliachim ſhall come in his roome and have the ſame office: now to expreſſe this thing, the Lord ſaith, The keyes of the houſe of David ſhall bee laid upon his ſhoulders: That is, Eliachim ſhall be made a Steward of the houſe of David, even of the Kingdome of David, whereof Hezekias was Governour: (for ſo the houſe of Juda, and the houſe of Iſrael, are often put for the whole kingdome of Juda and Iſrael.) And the giving of a key was an ancient token of placing and inveſting men in chiefe rule and authoritie; ſo that the meaning of this place, is this; that God hath given unto Chriſt ſoveraigne power and authoritie of governing his Church. Queſt. But why is Chriſt ſaid to have the key of David? for Davids kingdom was a temporal kingdome, but Chriſts kingdome is not of this world, John 18. 36. And yet it is ſaid, The Lord God ſhall give unto him the throne of his Father David: and he ſhall reigne over the houſe of Iacob: Luke 1. 32, 33. Anſw. Chriſt may be ſaid to have the keyes of David two wayes: Firſt, properly; for when hee was borne of the bleſſed virgin Mary, he was borne King of the

Jewes,

Jewes, by right diſcent from his father David, as his Genealogie plainely ſheweth, Luke 3. And alſo the queſtion of the wiſe-men at Jeruſalem, ſaying, Where is the King of the Iewes, that is borne? Matth. 2.2. And therefore when the Publicans asked tribute of him, he pleaded the privilege of a Kings ſonne; albeit, to avoid offence, hee was content to yeeld of his right, and to pay tribute; Thereby ſhewing, that hee had right to the kingdome of Iſrael, though he would not take it upon him; and therefore came in ſuch a time when the Kingdome was taken of the Romane Emperour. Secondly, hee may bee ſaid to have the key of Davids kingdome typically: for Davids kingdome was a figure of Chriſts kingdome, and David himſelfe a type of Chriſt: as it is moſt excellently deciphered in the Prophets, Jeremie 23. 5,6. Hoſea 3.5. where Chriſt is plainely called David, by the name of him that was his type, ſigne, and figure. Queſt. Why were not as well the kingdomes of Nebuchadnezzar, and Pharaoh, types of Chriſts kingdome, as Davids? Anſw. Becauſe Davids kingdome was a kingdome of light and pietie; but theirs were kingdomes of ſinne and iniquitie. And hee is ſaid to have the key of Davids kingdome, becauſe his kingdome and the righteouſneſſe thereof was figured by the piety in Davids Kingdome. And this kinde of ſpeaking is juſtifiable by Gods word. So Mat. 2.23. Chriſt is called a Nazarite: which place hath relation to that which is ſaid properly of Sampſon, who was a moſt excellent figure of Chriſt, and did moſt notably repreſent him in his death, wherein hee killed more than in his life. Now Chriſt is called a Nazarite, not becauſe he obſerved their rites and orders, for that he did not: he dranke wine, ſo did not the Nazarites: but becauſe hee was the truth and ſubſtance of that order; for in him was fully accompliſhed that holineſſe, which was figured by that order; for he was perfectly ſevered from all ſinne and pollution. And ſo here hee is ſaid to have the key of David, becauſe hee had the ſoveraigntie which was figured by Davids Kingdome.

Iudg. 13.

Which ſhutteth and no man openeth, and openeth and no man ſhutteth. Here Chriſts kingdome is compared to a houſe, which can bee opened and ſhut by none but Chriſt; whereby is ſignified, that none hath power above Chriſt in his kingdome, and that his power therein is ſoveraigne and abſolute. So that hereby is meant, that Chriſt Jeſus ſitting in heaven, hath ſoveraigne power & authority over the whole Church of God, to governe the ſame. That wee may the better underſtand this ſoveraigne power of Chriſt, wee muſt know, it hath three parts. I. To preſcribe. II. To judge. III. To ſave, or deſtroy. In preſcribing, Chriſt hath abſolute power, and that in ſundry things: as firſt, in preſcribing doctrines of faith, and religion unto his Church, to bee beleeved and obeyed, and that on paine of damnation. This

A power he puts in execution, when in bookes of the Old and New Teſtament, hee preſcribeth the doctrine of the Law and the Goſpel, to bee obeyed and beleeved. And none but hee can make an Article of faith, or a law to binde the conſcience: and therefore Paul ſaith, Whoſoever ſhall teach any other doctrine, then that which yee have received of us, let him bee accurſed, Gal. 1.8. Secondly, for regiment; hee hath abſolute power to preſcribe how hee will have his Church governed, and by whom: and therefore Moſes when hee was to make the Tabernacle, did all things according to the patterne that the Lord gave unto him. So David gave to Salomon patternes of all things that were in him by the ſpirit, touching the building of the houſe of God, 1 Chron. 28.12. Thirdly, hee hath abſolute power to appoint the time of keeping his Sabbath: for as the ordaining of a Sabbath belongs to Chriſt, ſo doth the changing thereof; hee that preſcribeth worſhip, muſt preſcribe the ordinary ſet time thereunto, which is to continue to the end. And therefore it is but an opinion of men, to hold that the Church may make two or moe Sabbath dayes in a weeke, if they will. Fourthly, In preſcribing the Sacraments: and therefore Paul ſaith, What I have received of the Lord, that deliver I unto you: ſpeaking of the Lords Supper. For hee that gives grace, muſt alſo appoint the ſignes and ſeales of grace.

B

Exod. 32.40,43. Heb. 8.5.

1 Cor. 11.23.

The ſecond part of Chriſts ſoveraigne power, is power of judgement. Which is a ſoveraigne power to determine of his owne will, without the conſent of others, or ſubmiſſion to men or Angels. And in determining, Chriſt hath two privileges. Firſt, to expound Scripture: the abſolute power of expounding the law, belongeth to the Law-giver; and his expoſition is authenticall. Secondly, to determine of all queſtions, and controverſies in Scripture. And therefore it is a wicked opinion of the Church of Rome, which hold, that the principall Judge of interpreting Scripture, and deciding controverſies, is the Church.

C

The third part of Chriſts ſoveraigne power, is to ſave, and deſtroy. This is expreſſed in theſe words, Hee openeth and no man ſhutteth, and ſhutteth and no man openeth: and for this cauſe hee is ſaid to have the keyes of hell and of death. Whereby is ſignified; firſt, that he hath power to forgive ſinnes; for that hee procureth at his Fathers hands. Secondly, that hee hath power to condemne: for when men beleeve not his word, he hath power to hold them in their ſins, for which he can caſt them into hel. The ground of this threefold power of Chriſt is this, becauſe he is ſoveraign Lord over his Church, and the members thereof.

Rev. 1.18.

The Church of Rome ſay, that this key of David hath more in it than ſoveraigntie over his Church: to wit, a power to make and depoſe Kings that bee in his Church. This they teach, that they might prove the Pope to have title

in

in ordaining and deposing of Kings by vertue of the keyes. But they erre grossely: for though Christ as hee is Mediator, bee above all Kings, yet in that regard he neither maketh nor deposeth any Kings: and therefore hee saith plainly, My kingdome is not of this world. This caused him to refuse to take upon him the office of an earthly Judge or Prince, To divide an inheritance betweene two brethren. Hence it was, that hee refused to give sentence of the adulterous woman. And yet as Christ is God, hee maketh or deposeth earthly Kings: so the wiseman speaketh of him in the person of wisdome, By mee Kings raigne.

Prov. 8. 15.

The power of the keyes.

For the further clearing of this, wee must handle another point, which is delivered hence concerning the power of the keyes: which is a power whereby the power of the keyes of David is put in execution. This power of the keyes is mentioned, Matth. 16. 19. when Christ saith unto Peter, I will give unto thee the keyes of the kingdome of heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt binde upon earth, shall bee bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven. This power of the keyes is a Ministery granted to Gods Church, to open and shut the kingdome of heaven. First, I call it a ministerie: that is, a service, because whatsoever the Church doth in Christs name, is nothing but the dutie of servants unto their Lord: from whence it is, that the most worthy members and officers that ever were in the Church, as the Prophets and Apostles, were but the Ministers of Christ. That this is a service, I shew more plainely thus: When Adam fell, in his sinne all mankinde fell with him, and thereby were all barred from the kingdome of heaven. Now since that fall, Christ became man, and in his man-hood satisfied the justice of God for mans sinnes. And this satisfaction of Christ, is properly that key whereby heaven is opened, being opposite to mans sinne whereby it was shut. And Gods Church and Ministers cannot properly open heaven by any power they have, but onely reveale unto men what Christ hath done for them; and withall apply unto them, the doctrine of Christs satisfaction which is revealed. And in this regard they are said to open and shut the kingdome of heaven; not as Lords but as Ministers and servants.

Next I adde, that this power is given to the Church: that is, to the company of true beleevers called to salvation by Christ, and to none other: and therefore it is said of them, Whatsoever ye bind on earth shal be bound in heaven, &c.

Mat. 18. 18.

Thirdly, I adde the end of this power of the keyes, To open and to shut heaven. How the Church doth this, Christ that gave this power knoweth best, and hee hath set it downe, John 20. 23. Whosoevers sinnes yee remit, they are remitted: and whosoevers sinnes yee retaine, they are retained. The Church therefore opens heaven, when it pardons mens sinnes: and it shuts the same, when it lawfully retaines their sinnes A and holdeth them unpardoned: besides this, there is no opening and shutting of heaven, committed to the Church. Quest. Can the church pardon sinne or retaine the same? Answ. Yes, for these are the words of Christ: but let us see how. It is one thing to give sentence of the pardon of sin, and another to pronounce the same sentence given, To give the sentence of the pardon of sinne, is onely proper to Christ the head of the Church; no Saint, nor Angell, hath that privilege: but yet the Church pronounceth the sentence of pardon given by Christ. If wee should say, the Church should pardon sin, we should rob Christ of his honour: for that is a privilege of his God-head. Thus we see what the power of the keyes is.

B The right use of this power, is when the Church doth use the same for the opening and shutting of heaven: First, in the name of Christ alone, as a servant: Secondly, according to the rule of Gods Word, not after mens affections or inventions: Thirdly, for this end, to bring sinners to repentance, and to continue them therein that they may bee saved: and to the Church thus using this power, Christ hath promised, that Whatsoever they bind in earth, shal be bound in heaven; and whatsoever they loose in earth shall be loosed in heaven, Matth. 18. 18.

Further, this power of the keyes, hath two parts: the ministery of the word, and spirituall jurisdiction. The key of the ministery of the word, is set downe and established by Christ, C Mat. 16. 19. I will give unto thee the keyes of the kingdome of heaven, &c. This ministery of the word is a key, because it opens and shuts heaven: this it doth two wayes. First, by teaching and explaning the substance of religion, the doctrine of salvation, whereby men must come to heaven; and in that regard, is called the key of knowledge, Luke 11. 52. Secondly by applying the promises of the Gospell, and the threatning of the Law: For when in the ministery of the Word, the promises of remission of sins and life everlasting, are applyed to beleevers that repent, then the kingdome of heaven is opened: and when as in the same ministerie of the Word, the curses of the Law are denounced against impenitent sinners, then is the kingD dome of heaven shut. Yet touching the ministerie of the Word, this distinction must be remembred that otherwhiles the Church is certaine of the faith and repentance of some men, or some congregation; and then they may pronounce remission of sins absolutely: but otherwhiles they are uncertaine of their faith and repentance, or of their impenitency: and then they must accordingly remit or retaine mens sinnes, that is, conditionally; pronouncing the remission of sinnes to all that repent, and denouncing damnation to all that repent not. And thus is the Word to bee publikely handled in Gods Church at this day, because our congregations are mixt companies, consisting of some that repent and beleeve beleeve, and of others that doe not truly repent nor beleeve.

The second part of this power of the keyes, is spirituall jurisdiction: I call it spirituall, to distinguish it from that outward jurisdiction whereby the commonwealth is governed. That this spirituall jurisdiction is a key, may appeare, Matth.18.16,17,18. If thy brother offend thee (saith Christ) admonish him privatly: if he heare thee not, yet take with thee two or three: and if he heare not them, tell it to the Church; and if he refuse to heare the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and as a Publican. Then followeth the promise, Verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever you bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven, & whatsoever ye loose, shall be loosed in heaven.

This spirituall jurisdiction, is a power whereby the Church pronounceth sentence upon the obstinate offenders in the Church, and puts the same in execution. And it hath two parts: Excommunication, and Absolution. Excommunication, is an action of the Church in Christs name, excluding an obstinate offender that is a professor of the Gospell, from all the privileges of the Church, and from the kingdome of heaven. So Paul commandeth the incestuous man to be committed to Satan: that is, not onely put out of the Kingdome of Christ, but also after a sort made subject unto Satan, to be outwardly afflicted by him. And therefore Christ saith, If he heare not the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man: that is, as one that hath no title to the kingdome of heaven. Here may some say, Can the Church thrust any man out of the kingdome of heaven? Answ. It is Christ onely that receiveth men thither, and it is he alone that must thrust them out: the Church doth not properly either receive men in, or put them out; but onely pronounce and declare what Christ doth in this behalfe. As if a man that lives in the Church, be a common drunkard; the Church finding in Gods word, that no drunkard can inherit the kingdome of heaven, which is the sentence of Christ, may pronounce the same against him, and so exclude him from the kingdome of heaven. Object. The true childe of God may be excommunicated, but he can never be excluded from the kingdome of heaven. Ans. The true childe of God may for a time, and in part be excluded the kingdome of heaven. In part, as a man that hath freedome in any incorporation, may lie in prison for some trespasses, and so want the use of his freedome, though he be a freeman: so the childe of God for committing sinne, may want the use of this liberty and freedome which he hath in Gods kingdome; and for a time, while he liveth in sinne without repentance; yet wholly and for ever he cannot: but so soone as he repents, hee shall be received certainly againe: for no man is to be barred either from heaven or the Church, any longer than he remaineth impenitent.

1 Cor 5 5.

Mat.18.18.

1 Cor.6.10.

Use. Whereas this censure is such, as doth exclude a man both from the kingdome of heaven, and the liberties of the Church till he repent: wee may here see, that this censure ought to be used with great reverence, feare, and consideration: even such or greater, as we would use in cutting off a member from the body. The abusing therefore of this sentence in small matters, cannot but be a grievous sinne, and a breach of the third commandement, wherein one of Gods most weighty ordinances is taken in vaine.

Further, one speciall degree of Excommunication, is Anathema: which is, when one is pronounced to be condemned, whereof Paul speaketh, 1 Cor.16.22. But this is not pronounced upon any, but on those that sin against the holy Ghost: and therefore it is seldome used, because that sin is hardly discerned: consisting not so much in the speech, as in the malice of the heart against Christ.

The second part of this spirituall jurisdiction, is Absolution: which is, when a malefactor upon his sufficient repentance, is approved to be a member of the Church; and is admitted to the kingdome of heaven. And yet here the Church receives him not into the kingdome of Christ, but only declareth upon his repentance what Christ doth. And thus we see wherein Ecclesiasticall jurisdiction consisteth: and what be the parts of the power of the keyes.

For the better discerning of this power of the keyes, wee must remember foure speciall abuses hereof that have taken place in Gods Church for many hundred yeares. The first is this: that in former ages the Church hath given this power of the keyes to Peter alone, debarring the same from all other, even from the rest of the Apostles; as though they had onely the use, not the right of this power. But the case is plaine, this power belongs to every Minister of the Gospell, though they be not Apostles, as well as it did to Peter; for in the promulgation of this power, Matth. 16. 19. though Christ direct his speech to Peter, yet he speaketh unto all, as the circumstances of the place doe plainly shew: for Christs question (Whom say ye that I am,) was made to all: now because it would have beene great disorder in this holy company, for all of them to have spoken; therefore Peter being both more ancient and bold of speech, speaketh for all, and the rest answered in his person: and so accordingly, Christ speaking to Peter, doth make a grant of this power unto all his disciples in his person. And therefore, Ioh. 20. 23. hee gives this power to all, saying plainly, Whosoevers sinnes ye retaine, they are retained, &c. So that the word of God is plaine in this point, to satisfie the conscience of any that is not wilfully addicted to the Popish religion. Quest. Whence have the Ministers of the Gospell this power? Ans. By succession from the Apostles: for Christ saith, Matth.28.19,20. Goe and preach, I will be with you to the end of the world. Where he cannot meane the Apostles onely; but with them all Ministers that did preach and baptize, after them, making this promise to the Apostles, not as they were Apostles, but as they were Ministers and Preachers of his Gospell.

The second abuse is, that the Church of Rome hath turned the power of the keyes into a supremacie over the Church, making it to bee a soveraigne authority, whereby Peter, and his successors the Popes, have liberty to make lawes, canons, and constitutions, which binde the conscience: as also to make kings, and to depose the same. A most notorious abuse of this power, which is no superiority, but a ministery: the chiefe power whereof consisteth in the dispensation of the word and will of Christ; For Christ said not to Peter, I will give thee the keyes of the kingdomes of men, but of the kingdome of heaven. The third abuse hereof is, that the Church of Rome hath thereby for a 1000. yeares almost, barred Kings, Queenes, and Emperours from being Governours over the Churches of God; an errour flat against Scripture: for when as good King Iosias intended the reformation of religion, and the abandoning of Idolatry, hee made a covenant with the Lord for the accomplishment of the same: and is said to have caused all that were in Ierusalem, and Benjamin to stand to the covenant which he made. Now shall we say, Iosiah did evill in causing them so to doe? God forbid: It is recorded of him by the holy Ghost for his commendation. Obiect. But Gods Pastors and Teachers have the power of the keyes, and Princes have not? Ans. True, but yet they have a civill power, whereby they rule over Gods Church: for there is a civill power, and a spirituall power. Princes rule not by any spirituall power, but civilly; and thereby they have power to compell all their subjects to the outward meanes of Gods worship, and to forsake Idolatry, and may also punish them that obey them not. Obiect. By this power of the keyes, Kings and Queenes are brought under Pastors. Ans. In Pastors and Ministers we must consider their persons and goods, and their office and word which they bring: Princes are over their persons and goods, and yet may be under their word and ministery; because therein they stand in Christs stead. Yet all this sheweth nothing why Princes in Gods church should be so robbed of their right, as the church of Rome doth.

2 Chron. 34. 32.

The fourth abuse is, that the Church of Rome for some 800. yeares, hath turned the power of the keyes unto the Priests in their Sacrament of Penance: for whereas by Gods word, the Ministers power is onely to pronounce the absolution of Christ: with them every Priest sits as a Judge, and the people come unto him as to a Judge, making knowne unto him all their thoughts, words, and deeds, (as neare as they can) wherin they have broken any commandement: which done, the Priest injoyns him to bewaile his sins; and after contrition, doth properly give sentence of pardon, even as Christ himselfe doth: and then after appoints him works of satisfaction, to be done for the temporall punishment of his sins: which done, his sinnes are pardoned in heaven. Where behold a most devillish practice, as may appeare by the manifold errours contained therein. As first, the confession of all a mans sinnes; which hath no warrant in Gods word. Secondly, that the Priest should give sentence of pardon, is a most notorious practice, whereby Christ is robbed of his honour: for the Pharisies could say, None can forgive sinnes but God, that is, properly, Mark. 2. 7. Which Christ approveth, and it is most true; for he that can forgive sinnes properly, must make satisfaction for sinnes. Thirdly, they absolve from the fault, but they will not forgive the punishment: and thereby they rob others, to enrich themselves. Fourthly, they enjoyne satisfaction to God by men for their sinnes: whereby they doe nothing else but overturne the all-sufficient satisfaction of Christ, and enjoyne that to man which is impossible. All these are most horrible abuses of this power, which ought to bee knowne and considered, being a sufficient warrant unto us, that the Church of Rome is no true Church of God: for though the Pope carry in his armes the keyes, yet they are not the keyes of heaven, but of hell. For he hath made moe places of rest and woe, than ever God did: as Limbus Patrum, and Purgatory; and therefore must needs make moe doores thither, and so moe locks and keyes.

Vse. By this doctrine, touching the keyes of David given to Christ, and the power of the keyes in the Church derived thence, we may learne sundry things. First, that Christ, who hath the keyes of David to open and shut, doth not open to all, but to some onely. The reason hereof is this: Adam being created in integrity, was in the favour of God: but by his sinne he lost the favour of God, and so barred himselfe both out of the earthly & heavenly paradise: and all his posteritie by the same sinne, and by their owne actuall sinnes are likewise debarred: for sin is a partition wall betweene us and God: and a cloud betweene our prayers and God himselfe, as Ieremie speaketh; so that sinne is the cause of this exclusion; and so many sinnes as a man committeth, so many bolts and barres he maketh to exclude himselfe from the kingdome of heaven. The consideration whereof should move every one to take a narrow view of his miserable estate in himselfe, through Adam: for by originall sinne wherein we were borne, and by our actuall transgressions wherein we live, we barre our selves from the kingdome of heaven. It is lamentable to see how the whole world lieth in sinne, and how the devill bewitcheth men to conceale or diminish their sins, making great sins small, and little sins none at all; when as the least sinne which they commit (without repentance) is sufficient to barre them for ever out of the kingdome of heaven. Againe, seeing every sin doth barre us out of heaven, this muſt be a motive to induce every one of us, to repent of all our ſinnes, to bewaile the ſame, and to pray earneſtly for the pardon of them in the death of Chriſt; and continually to labour to turne unto God from all ſinne, becauſe, if wee live but in one ſinne, it will be a mighty barre, ſufficient to exclude us the kingdome of heaven eternally. Thirdly, ſeeing Chriſt keepes the keyes of heaven; hereby we are taught to come unto Chriſt, and to ſeeke by him to enter into the kingdome of heaven. For Chriſt by his death hath opened heaven: as he ſaid unto Nathaniel and Philip, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, hereafter ſhall yee ſee heaven open: meaning, by the miniſtery of the Goſpell: and ſeeing it is open, wee muſt ſtrive to enter into it, as the men in Iohn Baptiſts time did, Matth. 11.12. This wee doe by endevouring to become good members of Gods Church on earth: for that is the doore and ſuburbs of the kingdome of heaven, which every one muſt enter into that would come to heaven it ſelfe; even as a man that would come into an houſe muſt needs come to the doore. Now, in the Church there is the true doore which is Chriſt himſelfe, and the key thereof which is his word, and the miniſtery of the word, which doth locke and unlocke the ſame. Queſt. What ſhall wee doe to become true members of the Church? Anſ. We muſt doe two things; Firſt, humble our ſelves for all our ſinnes, praying unto God for the pardon of them, and beleeving the ſame through Chriſt. Secondly, endevour and purpoſe by Gods grace every day to leave the ſame ſinnes. This doing, we are at the doore of heaven; and if wee would have our ſoules enter into heaven when wee die, this wee muſt doe while we live. But if wee enter not into the doore of grace, by the key of knowledge, in the miniſtery of the word while wee live, we ſhall never come to the gate of glory after death.

Iohn.1.51.

v. 8. *I know thy workes: behold, I have ſet before thee an open doore, and no man can ſhut it, for thou haſt a little ſtrength, and haſt kept my word, and haſt not denied my name.

In this verſe, and ſo forward to the twelfth, is contained the matter of this Epiſtle, which may be reduced to three heads; a Praiſe, a Promiſe, and a Commandement. The Praiſe in this eighth verſe. The Promiſe in the ninth and tenth. The Commandement in the eleventh. For the firſt, the praiſe of this Church is firſt ſummarily propounded; I know thy workes; which hath beene expounded, and the end thereof, with the uſes in the former Epiſtles. Then he addeth the reaſon of his commendation, wherein are two things to be obſerved. I. The ſigne of Chriſts approbation, in theſe words, I have ſet before thee an open doore. II. Their converſation, or the workes which Chriſt approved in the words following, Thou haſt a little ſtrength, and haſt kept my word, and haſt not denied my name. Both theſe may be underſtood, either of the Angell or Miniſter of this Church, or of the whole Church alſo. I take it to be meant of both. Being ſpoken of the Miniſter of this Church, the words beare this ſenſe; Behold I have ſet before thee an open doore, &c. that is, behold and conſider, I have vouchſafed unto thee opportunity and liberty to preach the Goſpell, and thereby to convert men unto me. So much S. Paul meaneth by the doore of utterance, 1 Cor. 16.9. For thou haſt a little ſtrength, and haſt kept my word, and haſt not denied my name: That is, though thou be indued but with ſmall meaſure of gifts, pertaining to thy calling, yet thou haſt maintained my Goſpell, and haſt not denied my name.

These words being thus expounded, doe afford us theſe inſtructions. Firſt, from the ſigne of his approbation, we learne, that it is a great privilege for a Miniſter to have liberty to preach the Goſpell, and thereby to convert men unto Chriſt: ſo much the word of attention behold importeth: which may alſo further appeare by this, that the moſt famous and worthy Prophets of God, were not alwayes vouchſafed this favour, as Iſay and Ezekiel, who were ſent ſometime to harden the people. And Chriſt himſelfe complaineth of the want of this privilege, ſaying, I have ſpent my ſtrength in vaine: and in regard of this privilege, the Miniſters of the Goſpell are called Saviours. And by reaſon of this liberty they have title to the promiſe of ſhining as ſtarres in glory, Dan. 12.3. This therefore is an unſpeakable mercy, and ſo ought to be eſteemed of all Miniſters which have the ſame vouchſafed unto them; they ought highly to magnifie the name of God for it, and to value it more worth than all earthly bleſſings whatſoever.

Iſa.6.8. Iſa.49.4. Obad.2.1. Tim.4.16.

Secondly, from the works which Chriſt approveth in the Angell of this Church, we may obſerve, that Miniſters endued with ſmall meaſure of gifts, may bee able to doe great ſervice unto God in his Church: this thing is plaine in the Miniſter of this Church; and might alſo bee ſhewed by manifold examples of ſuch men in all ages: but to come to our times. In the dayes of Queene Mary, when Religion was in baniſhing, this our famous Schoole of the Prophets, had many learned men in it; yet not one of them ſtood out for the defence of the Goſpell: when as a poore ſecular Prieſt not three miles off, who was farre behind them in gifts of learning and knowledge, yet having the truth revealed unto him, did stand out for the maintenance of the same, even to the sealing of it with his bloud. And at this day many men of smaller gifts in the ministerie, doe more further the Gospell, by the increase of the knowledge of Christ crucified and true obedience, than those that are inriched with farre greater gifts of knowledge both in tongues and Arts: so as though they be many hundred degrees short in regard of Schoole-learning, yet they goe as farre before them in benefiting Gods Church.

If this be so (will some say) then it is needlesse for men to be brought up so much in the Schooles of learning. Ans. Not so, for as much as they be Gods Ministers ought to have knowledge of Schoole-learning, both in Arts & tongues. And yet for all this it oft commeth to passe by Gods providence, that the greatest Clerks for learning, are lesse profitable to the Church than men of smaller gifts. This God doth to humble the learned, that they be not proud in themselves; and to magnifie the work of his Spirit in the weaker instruments.

Further, these words must also be understood of the whole Church: and then they beare this sense; I have set before thee an open doore: that is, I have vouchsafed unto thee a speciall privilege, even libertie to enter into the kingdome of heaven. From whence wee observe, That libertie to life everlasting, is a speciall privilege belonging not to all men, but only to the Church of God, & the true members of Christ.

This point hath sundry uses.

I. To confute this erroneous opinion; That Christ did effectually redeeme all and every man. Which is flat against Gods word, and this text: for those that are effectually redeemed, have libertie to enter into the kingdome of heaven: but all men have not that libertie, for then it were no privilege of Gods Church alone to have heaven opened unto them.

II. Seeing this is a privilege which God vouchsafeth unto his Church, to have heaven gate opened unto them; hereby wee are taught to take the benefit of this libertie while the doore is open; and in time to strive to enter therein. For as Christ telleth Nathaniel, the Church of the new Testament shall by faith see heaven open. Wee must not therefore neglect this opportunitie. But it is our common shame, that wee be slacke in seeking the kingdome of God, and the righteousnesse thereof, suffering our selves to be clogged with heapes of sinne, and worldly lusts, that we can neither walke in the strait way, nor enter into that doore that leadeth unto life; for sinne is an heavie burden, like a great packe that will not suffer a man to enter into so strait a doore. We must therefore cast off all sinne, that we may so enter in, and walke in the way of life.

And no man can shut it. Here is the continuance of the former benefit, against all adversarie power whatsoever. And this against confuteth another opinion of the same kinde with the former; to wit, That Christ died for every man, but yet some are not saved because they will not; they shut heaven doore against themselves. But this opinion cannot stand: for none can shut heaven doore against them, to whom Christ hath set it open effectually, neither sin, Satan, nor the world, no nor man himselfe, nor all their power together. For herein is the will of man ruled by the will of God: and looke whom God will have to enter into heaven, them doth he so incline to will their owne salvation: and also make unwilling ever to shut this doore against themselves. For thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, &c. that is, thou art endued with some measure of grace, as of faith, hope, and righteousnesse: and according to that measure thou hast maintained my word, and not denied my name.

Hence we learne, that a man endued with a small measure of Gods grace, may doe works pleasing unto God, and by the same grace come to life everlasting. Christ saith to his Disciples, If your faith were as much as a graine of mustard seed, ye should say to this mountaine: Matth. 17. 20. Remove hence, and it should remove: Now, that which is here said of the faith of miracles, may in like sort be said of all faith, and so of justifying faith; if a man have never so small a measure thereof, yet thereby he shall doe works acceptable to God: for as Paul teacheth, Gods children receive not the tenth, but the first fruits of the Spirit; that is, a small measure of grace in this life, which is only a pledge of that which they shall fully receive in the world to come: for this cause is Rahab commended for her faith, although it were but small and weake, as we shall see if we reade the whole historie, Iosh. 2. For God accepteth of man, according to that he hath received. It is not so much the measure of grace that saveth a man, as the truth of grace before God. Rom. 8. 23. Heb. 11. 31.

Use. This serveth notably for the comfort of those that have care to keepe faith and good conscience. Such are most dismayed by reason of their wants and corruptions: but they must know that God approveth of their grace, though it be but small, if so be they have care to increase in grace, and doe strive to please God in all things, according to the measure of grace received.

H. Hereby every one must be encouraged to embrace and obey true Religion. Many be dismayed herein, by reason of the great measure of obedience which they thinke God requireth; and therefore they leave off all obedience. But this ought not to be so: for God approveth of a man in Christ, according to that grace which he hath, be it more or lesse; and not according to that which by the law he ought to have. And yet none of all this must make us slacke and negligent in using those meanes which God hath vouchsafed unto us for the increase of grace, that so wee may also increase in true obedience.

And haſt kept my word, and haſt not denied my name. Here he ſetteth downe two works for the which he commendeth this Church. Firſt, their faithfull keeping of the Word of Chriſt. Secondly, the profeſſion of his name in the time of perſecution. This behaviour of this Church muſt be a patterne and a looking glaſſe for us to ſquare our converſation by. For theſe words, Thou haſt kept my word, and haſt not denied my name, though the words be few, they containe much in them; ſignifying, that this Church hath ſpeciall care of keeping Gods word in every Commandement, both legall and evangelicall. Happy were our Church if the ſame might truly be ſaid of us, that we had care of obedience unto God, and of the true profeſſion of his name. But generally wee faile in practice, though in outward profeſſion wee make ſome ſhew thereof. Thus much of the praiſe of this Church.

v. 9. *Behold, I will make them of the Synagogue of Satan, which call themſelves Jews, and are not, but doe lie: behold, I will make them that they ſhall come and worſhip before thy feet, and ſhall know that I have loved thee.

Here followes the ſecond part of this Epiſtle; namely, the promiſes of Chriſt, which are two: Firſt, concerning the converſion of certaine Jewes, verſe 6. Secondly, concerning the deliverance of theſe Philadelphians in the time of temptation, verſe 10. For the firſt of theſe promiſes: In all likelihood, there was in this Citie of Philadelphia, a Synagogue of the Jewes, which bare an outward ſhew, that they were the true worſhippers of God: albeit they denied the name of Chriſt, and perſecuted his Church. Yet Chriſt here promiſeth, that hee will convert them, and make them members of his Church, and cauſe them to worſhip him in the congregation before this Church of Philadelphia.

In this promiſe, note three points touching the converſion of theſe Jewes. The Author thereof; The partie converted; And the fruit of their converſion. For the firſt, (ſaith Chriſt) Behold, I will make them. The words are very ſignificant, being doubled; and they make Chriſt the whole and ſole Author of their converſion.

Hence we learne, that in the converſion of a ſinner, God hath the whole and ſole worke: true it is, that a man willeth his converſion in the act thereof, but yet it is God that worketh that will in him; it is not of himſelfe. This confuteth the erroneous Doctrine of free will in the Church of Rome, whereby they teach, that a man can diſpoſe himſelfe to worke out his ſalvation, being only helped by Gods grace. Like unto a ſick man, who though he be weak, yet being holden up by another, can goe of himſelfe. Anſw. But Saint Paul teacheth us, That a man by nature is not ſicke, or weak with ſinne, but ſtarke dead in ſinne: and can no more move himſelfe in the worke of his converſion, than a dead man in the grave, in the worke of his reſurrection. Eph. 2. 1. But they ſay, by this we make a man like unto a block. Anſ. Not ſo: for though he cannot turne himſelfe unto God, yet he hath his will and underſtanding free to uſe in civill and outward actions: and beſides, there is a poſſibilitie in his nature to bee converted by grace, which is not in a blocke.

Againe, whereas Chriſt ſaith, I will make them come, and they ſhall come; Here is plainly confuted the Doctrine and opinion of ſome, which hold, That a man being effectually called, may come unto Chriſt or not come at his pleaſure: when God hath given grace, man may receive it, or refuſe it, if hee will. This is flat againſt this text: for God will make them come, and mans will muſt bee pliable to Gods will in this matter.

But they alleage, Matthew 23. 37. O Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, how oft would I have gathered thee, as an hen, &c. but thou wouldeſt not. Anſ. Chriſt there ſpeaketh not of the will of his good pleaſure, for that cannot bee reſiſted, but of his ſignified will in the miniſtery of his Prophets, and himſelfe as hee was a Prophet, and the Miniſter of circumciſion unto the Jewes; for ſo he might will their converſion, and yet they will it not. Object. 2. Act. 7. 51. Yee ſtiffe-necked Iewes, ye have alwaye reſiſted the holy Ghoſt. Anſ. That muſt be underſtood of the Miniſtery of the Prophets and Apoſtles, who ſpake by the Spirit of God, and not of the Spirit himſelfe.

11. Point. The parties converted, namely, Them of the Synagogue of Satan. Such as called themſelves the only true worſhippers of God, and yet indeed and in truth, were no better than the ſlaves of Satan.

This is to be obſerved: for hereby wee may ſee, that not onely ſinners which commit ſmall ſinnes, are converted unto God, but even grievous and ancient ſinners; ſuch as have long continued the ſlaves of Satan. Chriſt died not for painted ſinners, but for grievous ſinners: and therefore Paul chargeth Timothy and the Miniſters with them, to wait for the converſion and repentance of thoſe that were taken in the ſnare of the Devill, and that according to the Devils owne will. 2 Tim. 2. 26. Roman. 1. 28. Paul ſpeaketh of ſome Gentiles that were given up to a reprobate ſenſe; which was a fearefull caſe: and yet no doubt, many of them were afterturned to beleeve the Goſpel: for ſuch are they that are taken in the snare of the Devill, and yet there is repentance to be waited for of them.

Vse. This doctrine must not be abused to liberty in sinning: for that is the right way to cast our soules into the pit of destruction. But yet seeing Christ will bring home into his kingdome most grievous sinners, we must hereby take occasion not to bee discouraged, either by the greatnesse or multitude of our sins, from comming unto Christ. For marke, Christ onely raised three that were dead to life: Iayrus daughter that was new dead, the widdowes sonne that lay on the hearse, and Lazarus that lay stinking in the grave. This is a notable figure of conversion of sinners: he will not only call to repentance small and young sinners, but even great and old sinners that lie rotting and stinking in the grave of sinne, as Lazarus did in the grave of death. He came to call sinners to repentance, and to save the lost sheepe, which are ready to be devoured by Wolves and wild beasts. Wee must all blesse the name of Christ for his large mercy, and in time lay hold upon it, and repent.

III. Point. The fruit of their conversion in these words, They shall come and worship before thy feet, and shall know that I have loved thee. These words may be fitly expounded by another place of Scripture, 1 Corinth. 14. 24, 25. If all propheſie, and there come in one that beleeveth not, or one unlearned, hee is rebuked of all men, and judged of all, so as the secrets of his heart are disclosed, and hee will fall downe on his face, and worship God, and say plainely, God is in you indeed: So that the meaning of these words is this; I will cause them to come to the congregation of Gods people, and at their feet to fall downe and worship the true God.

Here are set downe two notable fruits of the conversion of a sinner. First, concerning God: The second, concerning the Church. The fruit of conversion that respecteth God is, The true worship of God, noted in these words; I will make them come and worship; that is, In spirit and truth, with body and soule, to adore the true God. This truth no man can bring forth til he be converted: For the wicked and naturall man eats not upon God. Psal. 14. True it is, they will acknowledge there is a God, and that the same God is to be worshipped, and therefore they will come outwardly, and heare the word, and receive the elements of the Sacraments: but the true worship of God, is in spirit and truth from the heart, which a naturall man cannot performe unto God. This is the fruit of true conversion, which when a man receiveth, he doth heare the word of God with reverence, tremble at Gods judgements, and mingle the Doctrine of the Gospell with faith in his heart: and in calling upon God he feeles his sinnes, and therefore by prayer doth earnestly desire the supply of grace and the remission of his sinnes; having his heart also beleeving that hee shall receive A mercy: And in thanksgiving his heart is filled with joy, and the grace of thankfulnesse; so as being converted, all his worship unto God is in spirit and truth.

In the worship of these Jewes, are noted three properties required in Gods service. First, it must bee willing and cheerefull; so did these Jewes worship God; For they are said, not only to worship God, but to come and worship God: thus doe all Gods children worship him. Isay 56. 7. Those whom God bringeth to his mountaine, hee maketh joyfull in his house of prayer: Psalm. 110. 3. They shall come willingly in the day of assemblies. By this propertie, wee may see a great number at this day every where come farre short in the true worship of God: B for most men never regard the preaching of the Word, but content themselves with morning and evening prayer; which they frequent to avoid the penalty of the laws of the Magistrate, and the shame of the world. But these are miserable worshippers of God: his worship ought to be free and willing.

The second property: the worship of God must be expressed with seemely, meet, and convenient gesture. The word translated Worship, signifieth doing of reverence, with bowing of the body and knees: And therefore it is not an indifferent thing, but necessary, to use convenient gesture in Gods worship, that thereby the grace and humilitie of the heart may bee expressed. The Angels that stand before the throne Isa. 6. 2.
C of God, have two wings, to cover their feet, and two to cover their face: thereby testifying their reverence to Gods Majestie. In this point also many come short; for as the common complaint is, the manner is to lie snorting and sleeping upon mens elbowes at sermons, and in the time of prayer to sit unreverently with their heads covered. These things ought not to bee: for God is Lord of body and soule, and ought to be worshipped with both.

D The third property: All that will truly worship God, must first be humbled for their sins, and have the pride of their hearts brought downe, and bee stricken with a feare of Gods glorious Majestie: So these Jewes did prostrate their bodies at the feet of the congregation, when they came to worship God. The Jaylor that imprisoned Saul and Silas over-night, and put Act. 16. 29.
D their feet in the stockes, would then have very little regarded Pauls doctrine, being so cruell and rigorous to their persons: Yet when hee was about to have killed himselfe with his sword, (supposing the prisoners had beene gone because he saw the doors open) he was glad and joyfull to heare the voyce of Paul, who called unto him, that he should do himselfe no harme, for they were all there: then being humbled by that strange and wonderfull worke of God, hee comes in unto them, humbles himselfe, and fals downe before them, craving them to tell him what he must doe to be saved. In like manner, so long as men have not their proud hearts beaten downe, they will never worſhip God in ſpirit and truth. Would wee therefore know why the moſt part worſhip God formally? ſurely it is becauſe they have not beene humbled with a feare of Gods Majeſty, and a terrour of hell: Neither can it be hoped, that we ſhal ever worſhip God ſincerely, till our hearts bee thus broken within us, and we touched with a feare of Gods judgements. The want hereof is the cauſe why men and women content themſelves with a bare mumbling over of the words of the Lords prayer, the Creed, and ten Commandements, never ſeeking in the ſincerity of their hearts cheerefully, and willingly, both with ſoule and bodie to doe worſhip unto God.

The ſecond fruit of true converſion concerneth man, and that is, A reverence of the true worſhippers of God, noted in theſe words, Before thy feet. Theſe Jewes when they were converted, did not thinke themſelves worthy to bee members of this congregation, but ſubmitted themſelves to bee foot-ſtooles unto them. This reverence ſhewes it ſelfe in this one thing which is the ground thereof; namely, a baſe opinion which every true converted perſon hath of himſelfe, by reaſon of his owne unworthineſſe: This was in Paul, cauſing him to call himſelfe the chiefe of all ſinners. And the ſame ought to bee in every one of us; for this is true grace, and a note of true repentance, when a man or woman can truly abaſe themſelves beneath all Gods people; ſo as if the queſtion were, who is the vileſt perſon in the Church? the conſcience of every man ſhould anſwer, I my ſelfe. The proud and Phariſaicall heart is far from true converſion; but the humble heart is pleaſing to God.

1 Tim. 1.

And ſhall know that I have loved thee: Theſe words containe a reaſon of the former ſubmiſſe behaviour of the Jewes: for it might be asked, why ſhall theſe Jewes come to joyne themſelves with Gods people, and bee content to make themſelves foot-ſtooles unto them? The anſwer is, becauſe Chriſt will make them know, that he hath loved his Church.

Here marke and ſee the ground of all true reverence, Gods love and favour. Sundry perſons both in Church and Common-wealth have reverence due unto them, as Maſters from their ſervants; Parents from their children; and all ſuperiours from their inferiours. Now if theſe men would attaine to true reverence indeed, firſt, they muſt ſeeke to bee in the love and favour of God, and of his children, and ſo they ſhall procure unto themſelves true reverence; for when men ſet their hearts to feare God, then will God turne the hearts of men to reverence them. This ought to bee thought upon of thoſe that bee great in birth and wealth; They muſt not ſtand on theſe things, but looke to the foundation of true reverence, namely, the favour of God, which they muſt ſeeke for: and getting that, God will get them reverence, even of wicked men. The

A cauſe why many in high place, as Magiſtrates, Maſters, &c. want due reverence, is for that they care not for the favour of God, the ground thereof.

V. 10. Becauſe thou haſt kept the word of my patience, therefore will I deliver thee from the houre of temptation, which will come upon all the world, to trie them that dwell upon the earth.

B These words containe the ſecond promiſe of Chriſt unto this Church, concerning their preſervation in time of moſt bloudy perſecution: for this Epiſtle unto this Church, as alſo this booke, was written by Iohn, after the aſcenſion of Chriſt in the dayes of Domitian the Emperour of Rome; after whom ſucceeded Trajanus, who when hee was ſeated in his Empire, raiſed up grievous perſecution againſt Gods Church, in all places of his Dominion, wherein hee put to death innumerable thouſands of Chriſtians for the ſpace of fourteene yeares. Of this perſecution our Saviour Chriſt foretels this Church, calling it, The houre of temptation; and withall he promiſeth to preſerve this Church in the time of this bloody perſecution: adding a reaſon C thereof, Becauſe they had conſtantly and ſincerely profeſſed his Goſpel.

In this promiſe of preſervation note ſundry points. I. The occaſion thereof, The keeping of the word of his patience. II. The thing promiſed, deliverance under Trajanus. III. A prediction of this perſecution, That it ſhall come unto the world for this end, to try them.

I. Point, The word of Chriſts patience ſome expound to be Chriſts Commandement of patience; but that expoſition is too ſtrait; here it ſignifieth the whole Doctrine of ſalvation by Chriſt; which is called the word of patience; firſt, becauſe it teacheth patience: Secondly, becauſe it is the inſtrument of patience; for when a man knowes ſalvation by Chriſt, and alſo beleeves the ſame to belong to him, that will make him patient in all the miſeries of this life; thirdly, becauſe it cannot be profeſſed and holden unto death without patience; but as it is ſaid of the good ground, It bringeth forth fruit D with patience; ſo muſt every one doe that profeſſeth this Goſpel.

In this occaſion of Gods promiſe obſerve, that Gods grace well uſed, is rewarded with increaſe. Thoſe which have received but ſmall meaſure of grace at the firſt, by becomming faithfull therein, have received increaſe: which ſerves to move us to bee faithfull in the uſe of thoſe talents which wee have received: For hereby we ſhall receive increaſe, when as thoſe which having received good gifts from God, as knowledge, and ſuch like, becauſe they have not been faithfull in the uſe thereof, have beene deprived of the ſame. Wherefore whoſoever hath begun to know the will of God, to beleeve, and to repent; let the ſame parties proceed to uſe thoſe gifts ſtill to Gods glory, and the good of his Church and people, among whom they live: and they ſhal ſee the Lord will double and treble, and greatly increaſe the ſame unto them.

Againe, note the doctrine of the Goſpell is a Doctrine of Patience. This ſheweth how good and meet it is for every one to learne the Goſpell in the dayes of peace: for every one in times of triall, would wiſh for ſtrength and patience: and we know not how long theſe daies of peace will laſt. Againe, each man in his calling is ſubject to many croſſes and miſeries; for in the ſweat of our face muſt wee eat our bread. And who is free from paines and diſeaſes, yea, who can ſcape death it ſelfe? Now in all theſe and in all other troubles, wee have need of patience. And therefore in the time of health and eaſe, let us hide in our hearts the ſeedes of this grace, to wit, the Doctrine of the Goſpell, and then in due time wee ſhall reape the fruit of patience, which will make us contented in all diſtreſſes both of life and death. And if we would know why moſt men are ſo impatient in afflictions: it is becauſe they have ſo little knowledge and faith in the Goſpell of his grace.

Secondly, ſeeing the Goſpell is the word of patience, hereby all perſons that looke to bee ſaved by the Goſpell, muſt learne to put on patience, keeping a moderation in all their thoughts, wils, and affections: for when wee be impatient any way, wee are not ſutable to the Doctrine of our ſalvation.

Thirdly, this word of patience is called Chriſts (The word of my patience) becauſe Chriſt is the author of it. This is added to beat downe the pride of this Church, for when God doth praiſe them for their obedience, their hearts might have beene puffed up with pride. But to prevent this evill in this Church, whom he now praiſed, he calleth it his patience, that they might not thinke this good thing was of themſelves. And the ſame conſideration muſt checke the proud thoughts that riſe in our hearts; namely, to remember that no good thing we have is our owne, but Chriſts. What haſt thou which thou haſt not received? why then ſhouldeſt thou boaſt? 1 Cor. 4. 7.

II. Point. The thing promiſed, is preſervation and deliverance in the bloodie perſecution under Trajan. In which for the ſpace of foure teene yeares innumerable Chriſtians were put to death: I will deliver thee from the houre of temptation.

Here firſt obſerve, that God hath appointed certaine ſeaſons and times for the triall of his Church, as well for the gifts of his grace, as of their wickedneſſe and hypocriſie. Thus he led the Iſraelites forty yeeres in the wilderneſſe, to ſee whether they would obey him: and he ſent falſe Prophets among them, to trie whether they would turne from the true God or no. And as God thus dealeth with his Church, ſo he hath appointed particular times and houres wherein he will trie particular perſons: God bid Abraham kill his ſon, and that was his triall. And Hezekias was left unto himſelfe, That the Lord might ſee all that was in his heart. And ſo for every Chriſtian, God hath a ſet time of triall, wherein hee will either make manifeſt his grace, or diſcloſe their hypocriſie.

Deut. 8. 2. Deut. 13. 3. Gen. 22. 2. 2 Chron. 32. 31.

Vſe.

This point oughtto bee well weighed, for herein the Lord dealeth like the worthy founders of great ſchooles, who have appointed certaine ſet times of poſing, for the triall of their Schollers, to ſee what every ones proceeding is, that they may be accordingly rewarded. And as it is a ſhame for one to have beene long in a good Schoole, and to have made no proceedings in learning; ſo it is for any one, that hath lived long in the Schoole of Chriſt, and hath not profited in grace. This therefore muſt teach us theſe duties: Firſt, to trie our ſelves, and that ſtraitly concerning our progreſſe in knowledg, faith, repentance and obedience: for God himſelfe will try us, whoſe eyes we can never blind, though we may deceive men: He will lay open our hearts, and make knowne what is in us, whether it be true grace, or falſe hypocriſie. Let us not cover our ſelves with figge leaves, for God will ſtrip us naked; but rather let us ſearch our ſelves, touching our ſins and Gods graces: and never reſt contented, till we have found in our ſoules the good gifts of grace, which will abide his triall.

Secondly, hereby wee are admoniſhed, as neere as we can to conform our hearts and lives unto the word and will of God; for he will try us. Wonderfull it is to ſee how common the reproach of preciſeneſſe is, and if it were not well knowne that the world is full of Atheiſts, that might diſcourage many a Chriſtian. But the remembrance of this triall, wherein hypocriſie will vaniſh as the ſtubble before the fire, muſt move us to labour for ſincerity. When we have done our beſt, we ſhall be farre ſhort of that wee ought to bee. And therefore through the reproach of the world, let us hold on our good endevour, and labour to have the maine graces of true faith, and a good conſcience, with a reſolute purpoſe not to ſinne: that ſo we may ſtand in the day of triall. But if wee want theſe and live looſely, wee ſhall be found like the foolish Virgins, that have onely the blaſing lampe of an outward profeſſion, and want the ſaving oyle of grace which may make us acceptable unto God at his appearing. We have beene trained up in the ſchoole of Chriſt; what a ſhame will it bee, if when Chriſt comes to prove us, we be then found barren and void of found grace? David bethinking himſelfe of this triall of the Lord, doth conforme himſelfe unto the will of God: and therefore offereth himselfe unto this triall, saying, Lord prove me: meaning in regard of the truth and sincerity of a good conscience, not of the perfectnesse of his owne wayes. And hereunto must we endevour, not suffering any sinne to reigne in us.

Psal 52.

Quest. But how was this promise verified touching their deliverance from persecution, seeing no Church was free from it? For even the Churches of Asia, whereof this in Philadelphia was a principall one, were persecuted by Trajanus. Answ. This and such like promises of deliverance of Gods children from trials and afflictions, must be understood not simply, but with condition: to wit, so farre forth as they may be fruitfull unto them, and in the least measure hinder their salvation: and indeed they are promises of deliverance from the evill of temptation and persecution, not from persecution and temptation it selfe. Psal. 91. 10. The Lord promiseth to him that trusteth in God, The plague shall not come neere his dwelling: and yet by experience we know that Gods children in generall plagues are taken away as well as others; and therefore that promise must be understood of deliverance, not from the plague it selfe, but from the hurt thereof; so as it shall not hinder the good or salvation of any in the godly mans house. Wee pray, Lead us not into temptation; which we must not understand of freedome from all temptation; for it is the will of God we should be tried: but therein we are taught to pray, that God would not forsake us in our temptations, or give us up wholly to the power of the deuill; but that it may tend to our profit and not to our hurt, as well in respect of grace, as of salvation. And so farre forth was this promise accomplished to this Church.

Vse. The due consideration whereof, is most comfortable to Gods Church and people; teaching them not to feare the crosse in any temptation; God will have his Church tried, but the faithfull therein need not to bee dismaied; for God by his promise hath taken away the evill and poyson of all trials and temptations, to them that have care to keepe faith and a good conscience, though they suffer a thousand crosses in this world never so long; yea though they die under the crosse: which may put comfort into the heart of any distressed soule whatsoever, and revive those that are oppressed with temptations.

Againe, in that this promise is not made simply and absolutely, but with restraint: hereby we are taught, that the petitions of those persons which pray simply and absolutely to be freed from all temptation and adversities, are not according to Gods will and word: For every petition must depend upon some promise of God: but we have no absolute promise of freedome from all trials and temptations, but only so farre forth as they be evill. And therefore in praying against temptation, wee must qualifie our petitions for temporall deliverance, according to the tenor of the promises of Christ: that is, so farre forth as may most advance Gods glory, and best further our salvation.

A

Quest. How can this great persecution be called but an houre of temptation, seeing it lasted fourteene yeares? Answ. In divers respects it may be so called: First, in regard of God, with whom a thousand yeares are but as one day: and therefore fourteene yeares with God are but as one houre. Secondly, in regard of that punishment which every man by his sinnes deserveth in hell eternally. Thirdly, in the affection of Gods people which were tried: When Jacob served Laban seven yeares for Rachel, his affection made him thinke it was but a short time, Gen. 29. 20. So when Gods children suffer for the name and Gospell of Christ, the consideration thereof will make them thinke long afflictions to be but short. This affection caused Paul to wish to himselfe eternall perdition for the glory of God, in the salvation of the Jewes, Rom. 9. 3.

2 Pet. 3. 8.

The end of this phrase touching the shortnesse of time, was to comfort this and all other Churches in the time of this grievous persecution; for the consideration of the shortnesse of the time, is a meanes to ease any affliction; and to arme an impatient man with some measure of contentation.

III. Point. The prophecie or prediction of this affliction, is in these words; Which will come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Here Christ foretelleth a thing which was to come, simply by himselfe, and from himselfe: not by the helpe of any cause, or any man or Angell. And hereby he proves himselfe to be true God: for it is a property and privilege of the true God, of himselfe, and by himselfe, to foretell a thing to come, before it can be seene, either in it selfe, or in the causes thereof: no man nor Angell can so absolutely foretell that which is to come, but in their predictions they first see the things present in their causes, unlesse they be revealed unto them from God. But some may here demand, whether Christs foreknowledge and prediction were the cause of this grievous persecution. Answ. Not so: for things come not to passe because of Gods foreknowledge thereof, but because they would come to passe, therefore God foreseeth and foretelleth them: there is a higher cause of all things than prescience and prediction, to wit, the good will and pleasure, and decree of God. So Christ is said to be delivered to be crucified, by the determinate will and counsell of God: and from the same eternall counsell did this persecution under Trajan originally proceed: for the first cause of the event of every thing is Gods decree, either ordaining or disposing the same. It will bee said, if this bee so, then is God the author of sinne. Answ. God forbid: For the manner of Gods will and decree is divers: some things hee decreeth to cause and effect of himselfe, and by himselfe, as all good things: some other things God decreeeth to be effected by others, as sin. And so evill things, though they be not according to his revealed will, yet they come in some sort from his will and decree: for if he simply nilled them, they could never be. Beside, in Gods decree are set downe, not onely the things to be done, but also the meanes and circumstances thereof; as wee may see in the persecution, the place and end are plainly noted. This we must remember, and on the contrary, take heed of the opinion of some Protestants, which hold and teach, that sundry things come to passe, God onely foreseeing them, and no way decreeing or willing them: as namely, sinne. But to give unto God a bare foreknowledge, without a decree, is to put upon him an idle providence, which the nature of God will not admit.

The end why Christ alleageth this prophecie, is to expound his former saying: For it might be asked, why doth Christ call this persecution, the houre of temptation? Christ answereth, because it will certainly come to try them that dwell on earth. Where we may note what is the propertie of afflictions and persecutions, be they publike or private; namely, they serve to discover the state of mens hearts; either by making manifest their faith, repentance, and feare of God, or by detecting their impatience and hypocrisie.

V. 11. Behold, I come shortly: hold that which thou hast, that no man take thy crowne.

Here is Christs commandement to this Church; wherein consider, first, what he enjoyneth them: then the reason thereof. The thing he enjoyneth is this, hold fast that which thou hast; that is, hold as it were with both hands that little measure of faith and grace which thou hast received from me, and in no wise part with the same. This commandement hath been before expounded, Chap. 2. vers. 25.

The reasons to enforce this commandement are two: One going before it in these words; I come shortly: that is, either in the generall judgement, or by death unto thee particularly. Before this reason is put a note of attention, Behold; to give us to understand, that the speedy comming of Christ unto us, either by death in particular, or in judgement generall, is a matter of great moment, never to be forgotten, but laid up and treasured even in the bottome of our hearts. Herein we must not flatter our selves, and say with the bad servant, Matth. 24. 48. My master doth foreslow his comming: for that is the cause of so much wickednesse and impenitencie as is in the world: but rather with an ancient Father, thinke we ever heare the sound of his trumpet.

Ierome.

This daily perswasion of the speedy comming of Christ, is of notable use. For first, it will daunt the most desperate wretch that is, and make him to tremble in himselfe, & restrain him from many sinnes. And if a man belong to God, and be yet a loose liver; this perswasion will rowze him out of his sins, and make him turne unto God, by using the meanes of repentance: for who would not seeke to save his soule, if he were perswaded that Christ were now comming to give him his finall reward? Secondly, if a man have grace and have repented, and doe beleeve, this perswasion is a notable means to make him constant in every good duty, both of piety to God, and of charity towards his brethren. Thirdly, this serveth to comfort any person that is in affliction; for when he shall beleeve this which Christ hath said, I come shortly: he cannot but thinke but his deliverance is at hand: for at his comming hee bringeth perfect redemption to all his Elect.

The second reason is set after the commandement; that no man may take thy crowne: that is, the crowne of thy glory, even everlasting life. This must not be restrained to the ministery of this Church, taking it onely for the crowne of his ministery, though it be also understood of him; but the same must be referred to the whole Church: as if our Saviour Christ should say, If thou hold not fast thy faith and other graces, thou wilt lose the crowne of glory that is ordained for thee.

Hence some gather, that a man ordained to life may finally perish, because another may have that crowne which was ordained for him. But this is a flat abuse of this and such like texts of Scripture: for the words are not absolute, that a man may lose his crowne, but conditionall: Hold fast, or else thou shalt perish and lose eternall life, though it be ordained for thee. Now the use of such speeches, is not to signifie falling from grace, but to shew unto us our owne weakenesse in our selves; that we might acknowledge, that if we were left of God wholly to our selves, wee could not but perish. Therefore they serve to stir up the childe of God to humble himselfe in the acknowledgement of his owne weakenesse, unto a carefull using of the meanes to come to salvation. Like as a father that takes his child and sets him on a horse, guiding the horse with one hand, and holding him with the other; and then saith to the childe, take heed lest thou fall: Not meaning thereby that the childe shall fall, but intending to make him sit faster; and let him know, that if he should leave him he would fall.

Secondly, Christ useth such speeches, that thereby he may make his Church persevere in grace unto the end; for all exhortations and threatnings in Gods word, are instruments of perseverance in grace unto Gods children: because as God hath appointed who shall be saved certainly, so hee hath ordained certaine meanes to bring the same to passe: part whereof are are exhortations and threatnings, which doe not import any finall relapſe, but ſerve as means and cauſes of perſeverance: and for this end doth Chriſt here bid this Church hold faſt, leſt another take her crowne.

2. In this threatning we may note, that when God withdrawes his grace from one man, or his bleſſing from any one people, for the abuſe thereof, hee hath others ready to beſtow the ſame upon, who will uſe the ſame well: when Iudas was cut off from the Apoſtleſhip, Matthias was choſen in his roome; and when the Jewes by infidelity fell away from God, he had the Gentiles in ſtore to ingraffe in their ſtead: for the arme of God is not ſhortned. When any one people ſhall abuſe his Goſpell, he can give it to other that will bring forth the fruit therof, Matth.21.43.

Uſe. This muſt be thought upon, for by Gods mercy, we are now Gods people, and doe enjoy his Goſpell; but we muſt not flatter our ſelves herewith, for if we abuſe the ſame, wee muſt know, that he hath another Nation in ſtore, whom we now contemne, whither he can ſend his Goſpell, and cauſe them to bring forth the plentifull fruits thereof. We therefore muſt embrace and hold faſt this bleſſing of God which now we enjoy, and ſhew forth the power of obedience, or elſe God will take it from us. And wee know not how neare this judgement is, ſeeing other particular judgements have not brought us to repent. And what elſe meane the rumours of warres? are they not Gods warnings, bidding us hold faſt his Goſpell, or elſe it will be taken from us? Although therefore we loſe all other things, as honours, riches, lands, or life it ſelfe; yet let us hold faſt our crowne: When the Arke of God is gone, no glory is left, 1 Sam.4.21.

V. 12. Him that overcommeth, will I make a pillar in the Temple of my God, and he ſhall goe no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the Citie of my God, which is the new Jeruſalem, which commeth downe out of heaven from my God, and I will write upon him my new name.

V. 13. Let him that hath an eare, heare what the ſpirit

A ſaith unto the Churches.

Theſe words are the concluſion of this Epiſtle, which containeth two parts. Firſt, a promiſe in the 12. verſe. Secondly, a commandement in the 13. For the promiſe: In it we are to obſerve two points: The party to whom it is made; and the thing promiſed. The party is, he that overcommeth, of whom wee have ſpoken before: for this promiſe hath beene propounded ſix times, for ſubſtance the ſame, though in other termes. Yet here the very word Overcommeth, doth give us to underſtand, that he that would have his ſervice pleaſing, muſt diſpoſe himſelfe to a battell or combate, (for overcomming preſuppoſeth a fight.) The enemies B which he is to fight againſt, are ſpirituall, to wit, his owne corrupt nature, the wicked world, and the devill: and in this ſpirituall combate a man muſt be a good ſouldier, before he can be a good Chriſtian: for all theſe enemies will ſeeke to draw him backe and hinder him, ſo ſoone as he ſhall any way endevour to pleaſe God. Indeed God could have freed his ſervants from all temptations, but he will not; it is Gods pleaſure by temptations to have his ſervants tryed. Wherein it is manifeſt, that they are deceived, that imagine the ſtate of a Chriſtian to bee a freedome from all miſeries and temptations, or a ſtate of eaſe, wherein is no ſtrife or trouble to diſquiet the minde: nay, it is a ſouldiers condition, in which hee C that would overcome, muſt wage a perpetuall battell againſt all his enemies, both within him, and without him, and that unto death.

The thing promiſed; Will I make a pillar in the houſe of my God, and he ſhall go no more out. Here Chriſt doth moſt notably expreſſe the ſtate and condition of eternall life. In the deſcription wherof he doth allude to the cuſtome and practice of men, who minding to preſerve the memory of their names after their death, uſed to erect durable pillars of wood or ſtone, in ſome towne, valley, or mountaine, with their names engraven or written thereon. This practice is common in humane hiſtories: and Abſolom wanting iſſue, ſet up a pillar with 2 Sam.18.18. D his owne name upon it, in the Kings dale, thereby to continue his remembrance with poſterity. The meaning then is, as if Chriſt had ſaid, others for the continuing of their memory after their death, doe in ſome ſpeciall place erect ſome durable pillar of wood or ſtone, with their owne names written or engraven thereon: But to him that overcommeth, I will not ſet up ſuch a pillar, but even make him a pillar durable and everlaſting, whoſe memory ſhall alwayes E continue.

He addeth further, he ſhall be a pillar in the Temple of my God: as if he ſhould ſay, Others ſet up their pillars in valleyes and mountains, or ſuch places where ſome notable exploit hath been wrought; but the place which I will chuſe (saith Christ) is the Temple of my God; that is, the Church triumphant, which was figured by the Temple in Jerusalem, and by the Tabernacle, as we may see, Hebrewes 9.9. and Revel. 21. 3. for those were two places where Gods people worshipped him; and where God testified his presence in a speciall manner unto his people. And so in the true Temple, the Kingdome of Heaven, Gods Saints and Angels doe worship him immediately: where God is present with them in most glorious and comfortable manner. This then is Christs meaning: he shall not onely be a part of that Temple, but an excellent part, even a pillar in the triumphant Church in heaven. And to shew what is meant by this Temple, Christ calleth it the Temple of his God: thereby noting the highest Heaven. Where observe, that God is called Christs God: which argueth inferioritie, and therefore it must be understood of Christ, as he is man, and as he is Mediator: in which respect he receiveth from his Father all his Offices, and power to execute the same. But as Christ is God, he is equall with his Father, and receiveth nothing from him.

(ſaith

And to instruct us yet further herein, (Christ saith) Hee shall goe no more out. When men erected pillars for their memoriall, in processe of time they would weare away: and therefore they caused them to be renewed, or else their remembrance thereby would not continue; but he that is once made a member of the triumphant Church, shall there remaine for ever and ever: and no time shall ever come, wherein he shall cease to be a pillar in the same.

Further, in the pillars erected by men, their names were written or engraven: And to this practice Christ alludeth, saying, That he that is made a pillar in the triumphant Church, shall have names written on him: these names are three: I. The name of my God; that is, I will make it manifest, that this man is indeed the Sonne of God, and that God is all in all unto him. The second name is, The name of the Citie of my God: By Citie, he meaneth not the triumphant Church, but the place where the triumphant Church shall be; to wit, the highest Heaven: as it is taken, Revel. 21. 10. So that hereby Christ would teach us thus much, that he which overcommeth, shall be knowne to be a Citizen of Heaven, and that the privileges of that kingdome belong unto him.

And lest any should doubt, what is meant by the Citie of God, Christ here describeth it: first, by the resemblance thereof, calling it Ierusalem: because that Citie, in regard of the Temple especially, was a figure of the Kingdome of Heaven. Secondly, he calleth it the new Ierusalem; that is, the place of the triumphant Church, even the highest Heaven: which is not called new in respect of being, for it was from the beginning; but in respect of the manner of revealing and manifesting it: for in the old Testament the new Jerusalem was revealed to the Jewes onely, and that obscurely: but under the kingdome of Christ, it is more fully revealed not onely to the Jewes, but to all the world. Thirdly, he addeth that it doth now descend out of Heaven from his God. Therein answering to an objection; for it might be said, this Temple & God in Heaven is so farre off, that we cannot ascend or attaine unto it, how then shall wee come thither? Christ answereth, that this new Jerusalem commeth downe from God out of Heaven. Quest. How (will some say) can Heaven come out of Heaven? Ans. As Paul saith of Christ, that he was crucified among the Galatians before their eyes, because his crucifying was so lively represented unto them in the ministerie of the Gospel: So here Heaven may be said to come downe from God out of Heaven, in regard of the preaching of the Gospel, which doth most visibly represent and set open Heaven unto us, that Gods people may enter therein: by the faithfull embracing whereof, we become Citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of God, Ephes. 2. 19.

The third name which shall be written on him, is Christs new name: whereby is not meant any title of Christ, as Iesus, Mediator, &c. but the dignitie, power, and glory of Christ. Quest. How can that be called new, seeing hee had power and glorie from all eternitie? Ans. It is called new, because it is received of Christ, as hee is Mediator, God incarnate; being that which was given to him after his death and passion; standing in his rising againe, in his ascension, and sitting at the right hand of his Father. Hereof Paul saith, Philip. 2. 9. God gave him a name above every name: that is, dignitie, power, and glory: as it is expounded, Hebr. 2. 7. And this glory, power, and dignitie, will Christ give to them that overcome. And thus wee have eternall life set out unto us by the Author of life himselfe. The summe whereof is this; That he which overcommeth shall be made a true member of the triumphant Church, and there continue for ever: and shall have three names written on him; The name of God, having this made evident, that he is the childe of God: The name of Gods Citie, being made partaker of the privileges of Gods Kingdome of Heaven: The new name of Christ, communicating with Christ in his glory and Majestie.

And Christ doth thus describe life eternall unto us for speciall causes; which may be these. I. To comfort them which have care to keepe faith and a good conscience; and to encourage them against all hinderances and miseries of this life: for what can more hearten a man in good duties, than to set before him his recompence and reward? whereby we learne, that in all miseries and troubles that may befall us for the maintenance of true Religion and good conscience, we must comfort our selves and not faint. And to encourage us herein, we are carefully to propound and set before us the due consideration of life eternall: for this it was that caused

Heb. 11. 24, 25, 26. Heb 12. 2.

Moſes to deſpiſe worldly honour, and to chooſe affliction with the people of God: We muſt alſo looke unto Chriſt, Who for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſſe, and deſpiſed ſhame. Souldiers that are uncertaine of any reward are yet content under their Generall to adventure their lives at his command; how much more then ought Chriſtian Souldiers to fight manfully, and ſtand faſt in all troubles for Chriſts ſake, who hath ſet before them ſuch a great reward?

Secondly, it is thus deſcribed, to bring Gods people to a view and taſte of life eternall, that thereby they may the more affect it. Many caſt off all care of religion and good conſcience, for the preſent delights of earthly things; they can ſee no goodnes nor pleaſure in ſpirituall things. The ſweetneſſe of earthly pleaſures puts mens mouthes out of taſte, in regard of any reliſh of life eternall; but this muſt not be ſo with us, we muſt be of Moſes minde, who deſired to ſee the land of Canaan when he was not permitted to enter into it; and thereupon God tooke him up into Mount Nebo, and ſhewed it unto him: So conſidering Chriſt hath thus largely deſcribed this kingdome unto us, we muſt labour to comprehend in our underſtandings, and in our hearts to poſſeſſe by faith, ſomething of life eternall, though we cannot as yet fully inherit the joyes and pleaſures thereof.

Thirdly, it is thus deſcribed, to teach us to practiſe Pauls rule, 1 Tim. 6. 12. namely, to paſſe through all the miſeries and troubles of this world, and to take hold of eternall life. This is a moſt neceſſary duty, but yet little practiſed: men with both hands lay hold upon the things of this world, upon riches and pleaſures; but who conſidereth that is prepared by Chriſt in heaven for them that overcome? and who laboureth to hold thereon, and to keep that ſure, though he loſe all things elſe?

Laſtly, this deſcription of eternall life, here ſerveth to make the people of God to feare no death, though it were moſt cruell and terrible; for death is but a ſtrait doore, whereby the child of God muſt paſſe to all glory and happineſſe, when he ſhall be made a pillar in Gods temple. Thus much generally of the thing promiſed: Now follow in particular the parts thereof.

Firſt, whereas Chriſt promiſeth to make them that overcome, pillars and chiefe members in the church triumphant: Hereby we are taught to labour to become true members of Gods Church in this life. For life eternall muſt begin here, and they that would bee pillars in his church triumphant, muſt now become members of his Church militant: for not onely Miniſters and teachers are pillars in Gods Church; though they be chiefe pillars therein; but every one young and old, man and woman, that is a true beleever. And thus ſhalt thou become a pillar in Gods Church on earth, by maintaining and upholding the Goſpell of Chriſt: A which thou muſt doe, partly by teaching thoſe, whom thou art bound to teach within the compaſſe of thy calling; and partly by good example of life and converſation; and chiefly by a true and bold profeſſion thereof, not onely in time of peace, but even in the greateſt trials and afflictions.

Secondly, he addeth; He will make him a pillar in the Temple of God: that is, in the Church triumphant: for in the new Teſtament we have no other temples, but Gods Church triumphant and militant. Hereby then we muſt learne to renounce that ignorant opinion of the world, who judge every materiall Church to be the Temple of God, and as holy as the Church in Jeruſalem was. But the diſtinction of place, and place in regard of holineſſe, which was under the Law, is taken away by Chriſt. The houſe is now as holy as the Church; churches indeed muſt bee regarded and maintained, not for holineſſe, but for order ſake: now men may every where offer the calves of their lips, and lift up pure hands from a pure heart unto God. B

Thirdly, I will write upon him the name of my God; that is, whereas God the Father is my God firſt, I will alſo communicate unto him the ſame name of God; and he ſhall have God even my God, to be his God alſo. By this it is plaine that no man can have fellowſhip with God but by Chriſt: we muſt not looke to have immediate fellowſhip with God of our ſelves, or by any other, but by Chriſt: God heares not, God helpes not, God ſaves not, but by Chriſt; nay, God is no God unto us out of Chriſt. For firſt, he is a God unto Chriſt, and then in him and by him unto us. Therefore if we would call upon God, we muſt call on him through Chriſt; if we would give him thanks, it muſt be in and by Chriſt: for in him onely are we heard. If we would know God, it muſt be by Chriſt, for hee is the very engraven Image of his Father, in whom is manifeſted the wiſdome, juſtice, and mercie of God, in him dwelleth the fulneſſe of the Godhead: and to conceive of God out of Chriſt, is to make God an Idoll in the braine. Laſtly, if wee would receive any temporall bleſſing from God, it muſt bee in and by Chriſt; as meat, drinke, and cloathing. For if we receive them from God out of Chriſt, we are but uſurpers of them, and the uſe thereof ſhall turne to our further condemnation. C

Fourthly, hee ſaith, I will write on him the name of the city of my God: that is, he ſhall have the privileges of the kingdome of heaven. We doe all deſire and looke for the inheritance of Gods kingdome after this life; therefore here wee muſt live as citizens of Gods kingdome; conforming our ſelves to Gods Commandement, abandoning all ſinne, and ſo living in faith and a good conſcience unto the end, that after this life we may aſſuredly perſwade our ſelves, we ſhall be made partakers of the priviledges of this kingdome. D

Fifthly it is ſaid, this Citie of God is the new Ieruſalem, which commeth downe out of heaven from God: that is, by the preaching of the Goſpell. Hereby we are taught more carefully to ſeeke to attaine to the kingdome of God; for behold Gods endleſſe mercy herein: our ſinnes ſhut heaven gates againſt us, but by the bloud of Chriſt he hath opened them; and by the Miniſtery of the Goſpell he makes heaven come downe unto men; God therefore would not ſee us damned; hee hath made open a way, even a new and living way, whereby we may come to heaven and eſcape hell. God hath brought downe heaven among men, we muſt therefore with the people in Iohn Baptiſts time, violently enter into this kingdome, and ſtrive to take it by force, Matth. 11. 12.

Laſtly, he ſaith; I will write my new name on him: that is, I will make him partaker of that glory and dignity wherewith I my ſelfe am glorified ſince my death and reſurrection. Marke this: All that after this life muſt have Chriſts new name, muſt in this life become new creatures: So Paul ſaith, If any man bee in Chriſt, he is a new creature. And againe, Neither circumciſion nor uncircumciſion availeth any thing, but a new creation. Would wee then partake with Chriſt in his glory? we muſt here be partakers of his grace: herein ſtandeth true religion, to become new creatures, and not in bare knowledge and profeſſion. We muſt therefore put off the old man which is corrupt with ſin, and be renewed in the ſpirit of our minds, putting on the new man, which after God is created in righteouſneſſe and true holineſſe. But if we content our ſelves with the image of the old man wherein we were borne, we ſhall never partake of Chriſts glory: for this new name muſt be given to the new creature, old man and it cannot agree together.

This concluſion hath beene handled in the former Epiſtles.

V. 14. And unto the Angell of the Church of the Laodiceans write: Theſe things ſaith Amen, the faithfull and true witneſſe, that beginning of the creatures of God.

Here followeth the ſeventh and laſt Epiſtle to the Church of the Laodiceans; whereto is prefixed a commandement unto Iohn, whereby hee is authorized to pen the ſame, in theſe words, And unto the Angell of the Church of the Laodiceans write, which hath beene handled before.

The Epiſtle it ſelfe hath three parts, a Preface, the ſubſtance or matter of the Epiſtle, and the concluſion. The Preface, in this 14. verſ. wherein is ſet downe, in whoſe name this Epiſtle is written; to wit, Chriſts: who is here deſcribed by two arguments: I. Hee is called, Amen, which is that faithfull and true witneſſe: II. He is the beginning of the creatures of God.

For the firſt (Amen) is an Hebrew Adverb of aſſeveration, ſignifying as much as verily, truly, or certainely. This title is given to Chriſt, and the reaſon therof is expreſſed in the words following, which are a full expoſition of the ſame. Amen, is that faithfull and true witneſſe: So that Chriſt is called Amen, to teſtifie that he is a witneſſe, a faithfull witneſſe, and a true witneſſe: which title was given to Chriſt in the fifth verſe of the firſt chapter; where it was expounded, and reaſons rendred why he is ſo called. Unto which title is here added, that he is a true witneſſe; becauſe he ſpeakes the truth, according as every thing is in it ſelfe, without errour, deceit, or falſhood: for that which he receiveth from his Father, is the will of his Father, which is the rule of all truth.

That wee may come to the right uſe of this Argument; we muſt firſt ſearch out the ends, for which Chriſt is here called Amen, that is, a faithfull and true witneſſe, which by the contents of the Epiſtle, we may eaſily gheſſe to be theſe. Firſt, to ſet forth himſelfe unto the Angell of this Church, an example and patterne of fidelity to his Miniſtery; in the duties whereof he had beene ſlacke and negligent: Chriſt therefore by his owne example, would teach him without reſpect of perſons, to inſtruct the Church of God truly and faithfully. How this duty is to bee performed, hath beene ſhewed before, Chap. 1, 5. And not onely to the Angell of this Church of Laodicea, but alſo to all the Church, and to all them that profeſſe themſelves to be his members, doth Chriſt propound himſelfe an example of two moſt worthy vertues: Faith, and Truth. For the firſt: Faith is a vertue, wherby a man makes good all his lawfull words, promiſes, oathes, leagues, compacts, and bargaines whatſoever, ſo as his word is as ſure as an obligation, as we uſe to ſpeake. Truth is another vertue, whereby a man without fraud, lie, or deceit, ſpeaketh the truth from his heart, that is neceſſary to be knowne for his owne good, the glory of God, and the good of others.

We muſt therefore ſet before our eyes this preſident of our Saviour Chriſt: As he is a witneſſe, yea a faithfull and true witneſſe, without any ſaining or falſhood, ſo let us labour to ſhew our ſelves faithfull in all lawfull promiſes, and true in all our ſpeeches; that ſo by theſe vertues wee may bee knowne to be like unto Chriſt, through our whole lives and converſations.

Secondly,

vers. 14.

Secondly, Christ is here called Amen, to induce this Church of Laodicea, to apply unto her selfe effectually the Word of God, whether threatnings or promises. This Church had been negligent in the duties of Religion, which came for want of applying Gods Word unto themselves. The right manner of applying Gods word is this: In Gods word we are to consider the Law, and the Gospell. In the Law, there are Commandements and threatnings: now a man must apply to his owne person and life Gods commandements particularly, that thereby he may come to know his particular sinnes: then hee must also apply the threatnings of God unto himselfe, that thereby hee may bee humbled through the sight of his misery, and so made fit and capable of Gods grace. Thus the prodigall sonne applyed the Law unto himselfe, when he said, I have sinned against heaven, and against thee, and am no more worthie to be called thy sonne. So did Daniel, and Ezrah, by applying the Law unto themselves, humble themselves and their people: for this is the way to humble any man, and to make him fit to receive grace: for the Law is our schoolemaster to bring us to Christ, Gal. 3. 24. and the want of this speciall application of the Law, was a cause of the dulnesse of the Laodiceans, and is also of our slacknesse in Religion at this day.

Luk. 15. 21.

Dan. 9. Ezr. 9.

Secondly, the Gospell also must be applied: not onely by beleeving it to bee true, as the Papists teach, but also by applying unto our selves particularly the promises of righteousnesse and life everlasting by Christ. According as Paul saith, I desire to win Christ, and to bee found in him, not having my owne righteousnesse which is of the Law, but that which is through the faith of Christ. Let us (saith he) as many as be perfect, be thus minded; teaching everie one this speciall duty of particular application. For as Saint John saith, hee that by faith doth not apply the promises of the Gospel particularly to himselfe, makes God a lyar. And the want of this application is the cause of negligence in Religion, and of so many lukewarme Gospellers as be at this day. For it is not sufficient to know the Gospell to be true, or to be able to teach it unto others, unlesse we can thus apply it to our selves. This then serves to prove that justifying faith must not onely bee a bare assent to the truth of the Gospell, but a speciall faith which doth apply unto a man those promises which are propounded concerning righteousnes, & life everlasting by Christ.

Phil. 3. 8, 9, 10.

1 Joh. 5. 10.

The second argument and title whereby Christ is described, is this; That hee is the beginning of the creatures of God. The meaning whereof is, that Christ is he that is the Creator of all Gods creatures that were created: so it is said, By him all things were created in heaven and in earth: and though this be true, yet I doubt not but that Christ is here called the beginning of the creatures of God, for a further

Col. 1. 16.

A respect, namely, because he is the beginning of the new creature in regeneration: so it is said, wee are the workmanship of God, created in Christ unto good works. So that every regenerate person is a new creature; to which purpose it is said of Christ, when his soule shall make an offering for sinne, hee shall see his seed. Because Christ is the roote and seed of all that are borne againe. How is Christ (will some say) the beginning of a new creature? I answer two wayes: 1. As hee is the author of regeneration, for he is the cause whereby a man is regenerate, in which respect hee is called the Father of eternitie, Esay 9. 6. And againe, hee saith, Behold I and the children whom thou hast given me. Secondly, because hee is the matter whereof, or whereby a new creature is borne, and so the Church is called bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, alluding unto Adam and Eve, who were a type of Christ and his Church. For as Eve was taken out of Adams side, so the Church and every member thereof sprang of the bloud that flued out of Christs side, which was of infinite merit, being the blood of him that was God.

Eph. 2. 18.

Esa. 53. 10.

Esa. 8. 18.

Eph. 5. 30.

The end why Christ in this Epistle is called the beginning of Gods creatures (as wee see by the contents thereof) is, to meet with this common vice of this Church, that they had more care to seeme to bee religious, than to bee religious indeed: Now Christ calls by this his title give them to understand, that their chiefest care must bee, to become new creatures indeed. And no doubt this is the fault of our dayes; our care is lesse for the power of godlinesse, than for the name thereof; wee more respect shew, than substance, and shadow, than truth it selfe. Which ought not to be, for if wee would be in Christ, we must become new creatures. To exercise our selves in the Word, and Sacraments, and Prayers, are good in their kind; but without this new creation, they are not sufficient to salvation.

Secondly, hereby hee would meet with this speciall pride of theirs, whereby they did boast themselves to bee rich and to want nothing. But Christ tels them, that there was no dignity in any thing out of this, whereby in Christ they are made new creatures. Wherefore wee must learne by them, not to bee puffed up with outward privileges of nobilitie, wealth, strength, or such like, as many doe: but he that would rejoice, must rejoice in this, that he is a new creature in Christ Jesus.

Further, by calling himselfe the beginning of the creatures of God, Christ would teach them and us, that hee doth love his Church, and preserve the same. Eve was created by the hand of God, not apart from Adam, but of his ribbe, for this end, that he might love and protect her, and that shee might reverence and serve him: Even so every new creature springeth out of Christs hart bloud, which God hath so wrought that wee might know how Christ hath loved us, and that wee ought to magnifie and honour him: Adam was not the author, but the matter onely, whereof Eve was made: but Christ is both the author, and the matter of our regeneration; wherein appeareth his exceeding love unto us. And looke as the root spends it selfe for the preservation of the branches, so did Christ spend his owne blood for the salvation of his Church.

Fourthly, whereas he is called The beginning of his generation, hence we may gather, that the doctrine of the Church of Rome is erroneous, which teach, that a man in his first conversion, hath use of his naturall free will, and can dispose himselfe in the act of his regeneration. But the creature of God cannot dispose himselfe in his creation; now every man that is regenerate is the new creature of God, and therefore hath no power to dispose himselfe in his new creation.

v. 15. I know thy workes: thou art neither cold nor hot, I would thou werest cold or hot.

v. 16. Therefore because thou art luke-warme, and neither cold nor hot: it will come to passe, that I shall spew thee out of my mouth.

In these words, and so forward to the 21. verse, is contained the substance or matter of this Epistle: and it hath two parts: A dispraise, v. 15, 16, 17. And Counsell, vers. 18, 19, 20. They are dispraised for two vices; first, for luke-warmenesse, v. 15, 16. secondly, for their pride, vers. 17.

I know thy workes. This is a generall reproofe, signifying thus much: All thy workes are knowne unto mee, and I utterly dislike them. Then followeth the reason of this dislike, Thou art neither cold nor hot: which is a comparison borrowed from waters, whereof there be three sorts; hot, cold, and luke-warme. Now hot and cold waters doe not so much annoy the stomacke, as luke-warme water doth: they are sometime comfortable to the stomacke, but luke-warme water doth disquiet it, till it be cast up: and to those three kinds of waters, he compareth three sorts of men. By cold water, he understandeth such as are enemies to religion: as at this day are the Jewes and Turkes, and other barbarous people. By hot water, he understandeth men that are earnest and zealous of the truth. So that when he saith of this Church, Thou art neither cold nor hot, his meaning is; thou art neither an open enemy, nor truly zealous of my Gospell.

A I would thou werest cold or hot: Christ wisheth not simply, that they were enemies unto him; but only in respect of that estate of luke-warmenesse, in which they were: as if he should say, I had rather thou werest either cold or hot, than thus luke-warme as thou art. For if wee would understand it simply, we should make Christ to desire that men should bee his enemies. By luke-warme men, he understandeth a people, who are in shew Gods Church, but in truth want the power of godlinesse, and the zeale of the spirit. Because thou art such (saith Christ to this Church) therefore I will spew thee out of my mouth; that is, looke as he that hath drunke luke-warme water, cannot abide it on his stomacke, but must needs spew it up againe; so am I weary of this thy security, I cannot abide it, and therefore will I cast thee off from all fellowship with me, and make thee which art a Church in shew, to be no Church.

B Thus we see their fault, namely, luke-warmnesse; the greatnesse whereof, he aggravats, first by comparing it with the extremes, cold & hot, both which he preferreth before it, as may appeare by his wish and desire: And secondly, by the punishment therof; namely, utter rejection.

Hereby wee must examine our selves, whether this fault may not justly be charged upon us: after due triall, it will appeare, that we are guilty of this sinne. The which that it may the better appeare, I will note the severall kinds of luke-warme Christians. Vse.

C The first luke-warme professor, is the Priest; as the tenor of his religion, and the manner of his worship of God, doth plainly shew: for he doth part stakes with Christ in the matter of salvation, affirming that hee receiveth from Christ to worke out his owne salvation, and so assumeth part of Christs glory to himselfe.

Secondly, all time servers are luke-warme Gospellers; that is, all such as alter their religion with time and state: and of this sort are the body of our people, who professe themselves to bee of the same religion the Prince is of: which sheweth evidently what they will doe in time to come, namely, turne with the time as their forefathers have done.

The third sort, are the followers of Nicodemus, who came to Christ by night only: that is, such as say and think that they may go to masse with their bodies, if they keep their hearts unto God: these halt betweene two opinions, and neither serve God nor Baal.

D Fourthly, all Mediators: such as will make pacification betweene the religion of the Protestant and the Papists; so holding our religion, as not caring to embrace theirs also, because they thinke they differ not in substance, but in circumstances onely. Let these pretend what they will, they are in heart Laodiceans.

Fifthly, all Worldlings, which as God saith, Luk. 16. 13. Serve God & Mammon, God & the world, by setting their heart upon riches. These men abound every where, for though they heare heare God in the ministery of his word, and as it were touch him in the Sacrament, yet their hearts are farre from him, running after their covetousnesse, Ezech. 33. 31. and who are such their consciences will witnesse: yea, their behaviour proclaims it to the world: for though they will heare the Word, yet their wit and strength is spent upon the world, and the things thereof.

Sixthly, those that professe Christs religion in outward actions of his worship, but yet in their lives give themselves to the common sins of the time, some to drunkennesse, to fornication, to covetousnesse, or cruelty: some to this sin, and some to that. To this sort wee must referre those, that in the word approve religion, and yet their hearts delight is in garnishing themselves with the monstrous, brutish, and irreligious formes of strange and forren attire: These spend their time and their wit in decking of their bodies, and so suffer their soules to goe to wracke; when as apparell should be an occasion to put us in minde of a shame through sin: and by modest attire, we should expresse the vertues of the heart, but these hereby professe the vanity of their minde.

Now though we be not intangled with these grosse sinnes; yet wee cannot excuse our selves from this sinne of luke-warmenesse. For the want of zeale of Gods glory, of love to his truth, of care to obey his commandements, and to keepe good conscience, the want of hatred of sinne, what argue all these but luke-warmenesse? Herein we must lay our hand upon our mouth with Iob, for we cannot plead with God no not for this common sinne. But that we may be out of all doubt, that this sin of luke-warmenesse hath infected our congregations as it did the Church of Laodicea, I will make it plaine by the signes thereof, which are common among us, that so we may the better know our fearefull estate.

The first signe is, Negligence in the duties of that true religion which we professe. This appeareth sundry waies: for first, howsoever we come to the assemblies where the Word is preached, yet few doe profit there, by increase in the knowledge of that religion which is taught, and in the amendment of life. This may any man see to bee true, that hath halfe an eye to looke into the state of our assemblies, and mens owne consciences will herein witnesse against them. Againe, where Gods Word is ordinarily heard, there are very few that spend any time in searching out, and trying whether the things be so or not which are taught them. Nay men will not be at cost to buy a Bible: and if they have one, yet they will not take paines to read the same, at least in such a constant course as they ought to doe. Thirdly, the Lords Sabbath is broken, for though most men at set times will come into the congregation; yet there is not that private sanctifying of the Sabbath after the congregations are dissolved, which Gods word

A requireth, but men betake themselves to their owne affaires, and to outward delights; to omit those that have no care at all of sanctifying the Sabbath in any sort. Now these persons must needs want both knowledge, obedience, and all sound grace, that will not set apart some time, wherein they should imploy themselves in Gods Word: And by these signes it is evident, that there is a grievous disease of negligence in the duties of Religion, that infects our congregations. Now where this negligence is, though coldnesse be not, there cannot be zeale, and so luke-warmenesse must needs abound.

II. Signe of luke-warmenesse. The Religion of most men is this; in the generall calling of a Christian they shew religion, but in the af-
B faires of their particular callings where is religion? In the Church they are good Christians, but in practice of the duties of their particular callings who sheweth his religion? For when as men should practise their callings, according to Gods Word and true godlinesse, they follow the desires of their owne hearts. Little conscience is made of lying and oppression: that love and plaine dealing which ought to be between man and man, is wanting: which proveth them plainly to be luke-warme Gospellers.

III. Signe. There bee many that professe themselves to be luke-warme, neither hot nor cold. For though all generally come to the hearing of the Word, and the receiving of the Sacraments, yet many when they see some
C make conscience to become answerable in some measure to the word which they heare, and the Sacraments which they receive, doe take up in their mouthes this slander of precisenesse against them; mocking them for doing that which in the Word and Sacraments themselves professe should be done. These men will not be enemies to the Religion of Christ; and they professe themselves not to be zealous, by reproching zeale in others: Therefore they doe more than these Laodiceans did, even professe themselves to be luke-warme. For he that reprocheth another for zeale in religion, brandeth himselfe with this sinne of luke-warmenesse. And who knowes not how many of this sort are every where? I dare say with good conscience, our D congregations generally consist of such. Now marke what followeth hereupon.

First, that our common professors of religion are in worser case than heathen men, Jewes and Turkes, that know not Christ. This Christ teacheth in preferring cold persons before luke-warme: as if he should say; I had rather thou wert a Pagan, than a professor without zeale. And S. Peter to this purpose speaking of such, saith; It had beene better they had never knowne the way of truth, than after they have knowne it, not to obey the Commandements of God. So that unlesse there be further matter in us than knowledge and bare profession, our case is worse than the case of Jewes and Turkes. Religion knowne will not make thee better than them, but it is zeale and obedience that must preferre thee before them.

2 Pet. 2. 21.

Secondly, from the consideration of our estate, I gather that we are in danger to be spued out of the mouth of Christ, as luke-warme water out of the stomacke. This is the punishment here threatned, which was written for our instruction, that wee might know where luke-warmenesse takes place, there this punishment will follow. We may flatter our selves as the men in the old world did, and thinke all is well, never regarding till the judgement come: but the truth is, that in regard of this sinne, we are in danger to be cut off from the Church, and from true societie with Christ: God can doe this sundry waies, either by bereaving us of his Gospell, and making us as the heathen: or by sending the enemy among us, to destroy and root us out of this land: and even in our neighbour countries and townes, he sets spectacles before us, that by them we may see how hee can spew us out, and cut us off from being a people. And thus much of the first fault, namely luke-warmenesse.

V. 17. *For thou sayest, I am rich, and made rich, and have need of nothing: and knowest not how thou art wretched, and miserable, and poore, and blind, and naked.

Here is the second sinne of this Church, namely, spirituall pride. The words depend upon the former, as a reason thereof: before hee charged them with deadnesse in religion, and here he painteth out the cause thereof: namely, spirituall pride of heart. As if he should say, Thou thinkest thus within thy selfe, I am rich, for it is the manner of the Scripture to expresse the thoughts of men by their speeches; because the thoughts of men are as evident to Christ, as any mans speeches can be to another.

Vse. In that Christ doth expresse mens secret thoughts, and propound the same in this book; we may hence gather, that it is a part of Canonicall Scripture: for it is a privilege of the Scriptures to set downe the thoughts of Churches, and of particular men, even as they conceive them. This can no man doe in any booke of his owne devising. And hence we may gather an argument against Atheists, That Scriptures are the Word of God, because they reveale mens secret thoughts.

Now followeth the thought it selfe of the Angell and people of this Church, I am rich, that is, I have many excellent gifts and graces of Gods spirit: by this effect he expresseth their spirituall pride in overweening their estate before God. This is a common sinne in the world, and ever hath beene. Christ said, Hee came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; By righteous, meaning such as thinke themselves righteous. And the proud Pharisie in his praier, which he conceived in his heart, thought himselfe farre better than the poore Publican, or other men. And Paul bringeth in the Corinthians thinking proudly of themselves, saying, We are full, and made rich, &c. This sinne takes place in the Papists at this day; who perswade themselves, that they can satisfie Gods justice by temporall works, and fulfill the law of God, and merit for themselves, and for others. Luk. 5. 32. Luk. 18. 9, 10. 1 Cor. 4. 8.

To come to our selves: this same proud thought hath place among us. First, we thinke we are rich, in regard of knowledge: both yong and old scorne to be catechized, because they would not seeme to bee ignorant; some sticke not to professe this pride by bragging thus, that they know as much for substance as any man can teach them, when as indeed they know nothing, but that wich nature will teach a man. II. men plead that they have a most firme faith, so as they never doubted of Gods mercy: which is nothing but the presumption of a prond heart; for true faith is troubled with doubting. Thirdly, men will professe, that they are rich in love, both towards God and their neighbours; when as they love the world and the pleasures thereof, more than Christ; and so have no true love of God in their hearts. IIII. (to make most plaine, that this spirituall pride reigns in mens hearts) marke this; let any bodily calamity be made knowne to a man, that is newly befallen him, oh how is he presently perplexed! but let Gods Ministers out of his word make knowne unto him his inward fearefull estate, that by reason of sinne, he is in danger of Gods judgements, and a firebrand of hell, he is not afraid. Worldly newes doth affright men much, when as the threatnings of the word move them nothing. What argueth this, but that their hearts are forestalled with this false conceit, I am rich. The drunkard in his drunkennesse, the filthie person in his uncleannesse, and every man in his sin sootheth himselfe with this, God is mercifull, I am rich, and in his favour he will not condemne mee. Well, it being thus manifest that spirituall pride is our common sinne; wee must labour to see it in our selves, and use all good meanes that it may be removed. The meanes follow afterwards.

And increased with goods: or, am made rich, so the words are: these words are added onely for amplification, to shew that this Church had not any small portion, but an exceeding measure of spirituall pride: The doubling of the words, sheweth the strength of this conceit. Whats the cause, that this Church was growne to such an height of pride? Ans. It may be it was knowledge, wherewith no doubt the Angell of this Church, and many therein did abound:

1 Cor. 8. 1. bound: now the holy Ghost saith, That knowledge puffeth up. This is true in all places: great knowledge, (without special grace) great pride. This is the sinne of the Schooles of learning. Where knowledge abounds, there pride of heart abounds, and men are puffed up according to the measure of their gifts, unlesse by his grace, and the sight of their sinnes, God doe humble them.

And have need of nothing. This is a further sign of their great pride, that they thought they needed not the helpe of any thing, or any person beside themselves: And all such as thinke they have no need of the bloud of Christ for the washing away of their sinnes, doe surely abound with this spirituall pride of heart. This serves further to convince our congregations of this damnable spirituall pride. If any one be sicke in body, he straight sendeth unto the Physitian; but not one of a thousand seeketh to the Minister till the pangs of death draw neere. The soules disease by sinne is not felt; there is no complaint for want of the bloud of Christ. But if we would be emptied of this pride, we must labour to see that wee stand in need of Christ, and every drop of his bloud; till such time as we feele that in us, there is no goodnesse in our hearts: We are but the proud Laodiceans, and our case is wretched and damnable.

And knowest not how thou art wretched, and miserable, and poore, and blind, and naked. Christ intending to strike this sinne of pride to the very heart, doth here set downe the true cause thereof; to wit, Ignorance: as if he should say, Thou knowest not thine owne naturall estate, as thou art borne of Adam out of Christ, and therefore thou art proud, and thy pride maketh thee luke-warme. Then hee sheweth whereof they were ignorant, namely, of their naturall estate.

For the first, Christ making Ignorance the cause of their pride, teacheth us that pride is not the first sinne that ever was in the world, as many both Papists and others have thought. True it is, pride is a great and mother sin, and the cause of many foule iniquities: but yet ignorance is a mother sinne, whereof pride springeth. The cause why any person swels with pride in himselfe, is ignorance of his owne naturall estate. By this then wee are taught to learne to know our owne estate, what wee are by nature in our selves without Christ, for that is the way to pull downe our hearts. For this cause the Prophets of God used to call them, To a searching of themselves, Zeph. 2. 1. when they would bring the people to humility and grace; that men seeing their estate by reason of their sinnes to be damnable, might be humbled and caused to forsake themselves, and come unto Christ. And surely till such time as men bee humbled for their sinnes, they will never get found grace, but be as the proud Pharisie, hypocrites and dissemblers, though they have much knowledge. But when a man hath searched his naturall estate, then besides knowledge of himselfe come other most excellent graces; as humility, the feare of God, and true obedience with good conscience. And therefore first of all, let us labour to be acquainted with our owne estate in our selves, and with our personall sinnes, and with Gods judgements due unto us for them. For this is the ground of true grace. The spots and blemishes of our bodies wee can soone espy, and wipe away: and why should we be lesse carefull of our soules, which be farre better?

That Christ might fully make knowne unto them their ignorance of themselves, it pleaseth him to describe to them their naturall estate, and so proportionally the naturall condition of all Churches, and of all people: which is the state of mans miserie. This he propoundeth two waies: first, generally in these words, And knowest not how thou art wretched and miserable: then by the parts thereof, which be three, povertie, blindnesse, and nakednesse.

For the first. The word translated wretched, signifieth one subject to calamities, griefes, and in a word to all miseries. And that wee may know who is thus wretched, I will enter into a description of mans miserie: whereof that wee may conceive aright, two things are to be considered: First, the root, and fountaine thereof, for therein we shall best see what misery meaneth. This root is originall sinne, and it hath two branches: First, that particular transgression whereby Adam sinned, which was not only the sinne of his person, but also of the whole nature of man, spreading it selfe to all his posterity, Christ excepted. Secondly, the defacing of Gods image, and the corrupting of mans heart, which by reason of the fall of our first Parents, hath in it a proneneſse unto all sinne, both in will, affection, and in all the faculties of the soule. In these two stands originall sin; and in them, and with them we must conceive of mans misery, as in the root thereof. Secondly, wee must conceive of mans misery under the forme of punishment, having relation to the first sinne of Adam, and to the corruption of each mans nature thereby received. The punishment of sinne must be considered sundry waies, according to the divers kinde of mans being: either in this world, or after. For it is either in this life, or at the end of this life, or after this life. And so accordingly is misery to be considered.

Now of the punishments in this life, some concerne the whole man, some the parts of man, some his estate. Punishments concerning the whole man, be of two sorts: The first, is subjection to the wrath of God, whereby a man since Adams fall is made the childe of wrath: a misery of all miseries, and yet the more grievous, because without some grace, a man cannot discerne and see the same. The second is a bondage under the Devill, whereby a man in his mind, will, and affections, is subject every way to the will of the devill; which though we cannot not describe, yet we may thus conceive of it. The regenerate man saith, I sinne, but I would not sinne: The naturall man saith, I sinne, and I will sinne. It is my nature to sinne, and my delight; and this was the state of this Church.

Punishments concerning the parts of man, be either miseries of his soule, or of his body: the miseries of his soule be these. First, in the understanding, ignorance of Gods will: and in sundry, madnes, and foolishnes: and in all men, paine and difficulty both to learne and remember whatsoever is good: which was not in man by creation. In the conscience also, be accusations, secret feares, and terrours. In the will, is rebellion to Gods will. In all affections, perverseness. All which are miseries of the soule.

The body also hath these miseries. I. It is subject to all infirmities, sicknesses, diseases, and aches; which are so many, as all the books of Physitians neither do nor can record the same. II. Mans body is mortall, and subject to temporall death, which no man can possibly avoid or prevent by all the art and skill in the world.

Punishments of mans estate, concerne either his goods, or calling. In goods there be these miseries; want of things necessary: for by reason of sinne it is a punishment, and in it owne nature a curse: and all the hurts that come by the creatures, for their enmity towards man, and toward one another; as also their subjection to vanity; all these be miseries and the punishments of mans sin. In mans calling there is misery: for therein is man subject to trouble, to losses, and sorrow; which come as a punishment of mans first sinne. And all these bee the miseries of man in this life.

At the end of this life, comes bodily death, the separation of soule and body asunder; which in it selfe is a most fearefull curse, for so, it is the very gate of hell.

But after this life, is the accomplishment of all miseries, and that is eternall destruction and condemnation in hell fire: which to be the end of all miseries, appeares by this, because it is a separation of mans person from the societie and presence of God; and an enduring of Gods wrath in the whole person, even in the place of the devill and damnable soules, and that not for a time, but for ever and ever eternally. And thus we see what punishment is, and answerably what misery is: whereby we may see what it is to be wretched, namely, in a word to be subject to all miseries, whether we consider them in the root thereof, originall sinne; or under the forme of punishment in this life, in the whole person and in soule and body severally, in goods and calling, at the end of this life, and in the world to come.

The proper end that moves Christ to say to this Church, she knew not that she was wretched, is this; to teach this Church, and in them us, and all Churches to learne to know their owne miseries, to feele the same, and to be touched in conscience for them. We therefore must learne not to flatter our selves with hope of our good state: but labour to see our misery both in sin, and the punishment thereof: And seeing it, strive to be touched with it, that we may cry with the Jewes, What shall we do to be saved? Act. 2. 37. for till such time as this in some measure bee wrought in us, we shall be but lake-warm professors, having a shew of godlinesse, but wanting the power thereof. The true sight of our misery is the gift and grace of God, but yet we must use all good meanes, that we may come to see the same, & to be touched with it, that so we may have hearts herby fit to receive the gospel, which contains the remedy of this our misery.

And miserable; that is, worthy to be pitied: this is added, not to set downe another thing, but to expresse the greatnesse of their misery: as if he should say, Thy misery is not small, but so great and so grievous, as indeed thou art in that regard to be pitied of all men.

Use. Hence we learne, that we must not despise parties miserable by reason of their sinnes, or scorne and contemne them; but contrariwise lament and pitie them. When David saw men sinne, and so pull heapes of misery upon them, hee shed rivers of teares. Psal. 119. 136. The Lord makes it a good mans property to mourne for the abominations of the people. Ieremie Ezek. 9. 4. for the sinnes of the people wished his head were full of water. Ier. 9. 10. And just Lot grieved his righteous heart for the abominations of Sodome. 2 Pet. 2. 7, 8. It was the fault of the Corinthians, which Paul reproveth, that when the incestuous man had sinned that grievous sinne, they were not humbled, but puffed with contempt against the partie. 1 Cor. 5. And it is a fault in sundry men at this day, that they are not humbled in themselves when they see other men sinne. We must not doe so, but shew the grace we have above others, in being grieved for the miseries which men without grace by their sins pull daily upon them. Thus much of their misery in generall.

The parts of their misery are three, which Christ noteth particularly, that if it were possible, he might cause this Church to lay aside this damnable pride; for these in all men are maine miseries. The first is poverty: And poore; that is properly one that hath not a rag to his back, nor bread to his mouth, unlesse hee begge the same of others. But here it is taken for one that is spiritually poore: which poverty wee shall better conceive, if we doe understand what be true spirituall riches. True riches be Gods grace and favour in Christ: as the pardon of sinne, and life everlasting. The poore man therefore is he, that wanteth Gods favour for the remission of his sins, and the gift of eternall life: and hath in him no good thing that is acceptable to God, but in regard of his soule, is as silly and poore as any beggar in regard of his body.

The end why Christ calleth this church poor, is to beat downe the proud conceit of her own good estate, and to cause her to feele her spirituall povery, and so become poore in spirit. And we in them are likewise taught to labour to feele our owne poverty, how by nature there is no goodnesse in us: but we are utterly destitute of the grace and favour of God, that so we may goe out of our selves, and in regard of our selves even despaire of our salvation: for till this poverty of spirit be wrought in us, we may make a shew in profession, heare the word, and receive the Sacraments, but we shall never have sound grace. And blessed were our estate if we could lay aside that devillish pride, which puffeth up our hearts, and became poore in spirit; then were wee in the right way to receive the Gospel, and the graces thereof: but till we be beggers in our selves, we never begin to be rich in Christ.

How can Christ truly charge this Church with poverty; for the Laodiceans were a rich people, and had great store of wealth? Ans. True is it, they were rich in wealth, as histories shew, and yet poore to God. For all honour and wealth in the world is nothing without the grace and favour of God in Christ. Paul saith, Wee are compleat in Christ: forth of him therefore we have nothing. To the Corinthians he saith, All things are yours, and you are Christs, and Christ is Gods. But nothing is ours till we have Christ, and Christ us.

Col. 2. 10.

1 Cor. 3. 22, 23.

Vse. As it was with this Church, so it is with all other. Every person and all people are but poor and beggerly, if they want Christ: and therefore if God have given any man riches and wealth, he must lay this good foundation; use them as helpes to further his salvation: for by them he may attaine to the meanes of salvation, and also shew forth the fruits of faith. But they that have wealth and use it otherwise, shall finde it turne to their deeper condemnation.

The second part of their misery, is blindnesse. Quest. How can they be said to be blind; for they had a learned teacher no doubt, that both was able and did teach the will of God; and the people likewise knew the points of religion, and believed the Gospell? Ans. They had knowledge indeed; but yet they were blind: first, because the knew not their owne estate. If a man had all skill in all arts and sciences, and great knowledge in the word: yet if he know not himselfe in some measure, he is but a blind man. Secondly, because they did not know God in Christ: They knew no doubt, that there was a God, and that Christ was a Saviour, but they could not apply it to themselves, to be able to say, God is my God, Christ is my Redeemer, & the holy Ghost my sanctifier. Thirdly, because they could not discerne of things that did differ; as betweene good and evill, betweene evill and evill, betweene temporall things and eternall blessings: This spirituall discerning, is a gift of Gods grace.

Vse. In that Christ saith, They were blind, though they had knowledge: we may learne, that all knowledge is but meer ignorance before God, to those persons that know not themselves, and God to be their God in Christ. For want hereof Christ calleth the Angell of this Church blind, though otherwise he were a very learned man. Which must teach us not to rest content with any humane learning, no not with the literall knowledge of the Gospell; but we must labour further to know our selves, and to know God in Christ, and Christ our Redeemer: and bee able in some good sort to discerne betweene things that differ. David a most worthy Prophet, inciteth the 32. Psalme to learning. What learning sheweth he there? Ans. Surely nothing but the knowledge of the pardon of his sinnes. And indeed that is it which seasoneth all our learning: and therefore above all things we must labour for it.

The third part of their misery, is Nakednes. Nakednesse is twofold, to the eye of man, and to God. Nakednesse to the eye of man is bodily, and that is also twofold; either that which was before the fall in the bodies of our first parents, whereby their bodies being uncovered, appeared very glorious without shame: or that which is after the fall, whereby the body being naked and bare, appeares full of shame; which is so excessive by reason of mans sinne, that if necessity would permit, the whole body both face and hands should be covered. Nakednesse before God, is when any man lies before God a deformed sinner. In this case Moses saw the Israelites, when they had made a golden calfe: for thereby they deprived themselves of Gods Image, and were guilty of that most grievous sinne of Idolatry. This is a misery of all miseries, and the greatest nakednesse that can be: and this is the nakednesse of this church in this place. Quest. Why doth Christ call them naked? Ans. To move them, and in their persons all professors to have care not to flie from God, and to hide their sinnes with Adam, but to bring themselves into his presence and there lay open their sinnes, that they may obtaine a covering for them by Christ. It is the practice of the world, to hide their sinnes from men, but never to care how bare and naked they bee in the sight of God, who yet seeth them all as plainly, as wee the sores of any poore lazer that shewes the same to move our pittie towards him; which if we could see, we should be ashamed not to seeke to cover our sins before God. Wee must therefore labour in our owne consciences to see the nakednesse of our soules before God: and seeke to be touched and humbled for the same, that so we may earnestly intreat for the righteousnesse of Christ, to be a covering to cloath our soules. This was Davids practice: for when hee saith, Blessed are they whose sinnes are covered. Psal. 32. 1. hee would give us to understand, that he used to uncover his sinnes, and lay them open before God; that at his hands in Christ, he might get a cover for them.

Exod. 32. 25.

Iob. 31. 33.

These are the particular parts of a mans misery, which every man must labour to feele in him.

himselfe, if he would be partaker of the righteousnesse of Christ: for thus hath Christ both in generall and in particular, set downe the misery of this Church; that hee might prepare them to receive the blessed comfort which followeth in the next verse.

v. 18. *I counsell thee to buy of mee gold tryed by the fire, that thou mayest be made rich: and white raiment, that thou mayest be cloathed, and that thy filthie nakednes do not appeare: and annoint thy eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see.

Here beginneth the counsell of Christ unto this Church. Wherein, first he propoundeth a notable remedy for her misery before noted. In this remedy, we are to consider three things: the manner of prescribing it; the remedy it selfe; and the meanes whereby it is obtained.

For the first, this remedy is propounded; not in any sharpe commandement, but a milde and gentle advice, I counsell thee. And herein Christ doth take to himselfe the office of the Counseller of his Church. For as God hath his Church and people, so he hath his Counsellers, by whom in mercy he hath revealed his counsell unto his Church. The principall Counseller is Christ; so he saith in the person of Wisdome, Prov. 8. 14. Counsell is mine. And Isay saith; To us a Childe is borne, and hee shall call his name, Wonderfull, COVNSELLER, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace: Isa. 9. 6. yea, hee is both King and Counseller to his Church. This office Christ challengeth to himselfe, for these causes: first, because he adviseth his Church, touching the way whereby they must escape everlasting death, and come to eternall life. Secondly, because he teacheth them how they may practise every businesse, so as it may please God. Thirdly, because he teacheth them how they may in grievous dangers and distresses finde a good issue, or else be able with patience to beare them. These things he worketh daily in his Church, not by extraordinary meanes, but ordinarily by his word and spirit; and therfore may justly challenge this honour, to be called the Counseller of the Church.

Vse. From this office of Christ, wee learne two things: First, to doe all the honour and reverence wee can unto his Majestie; for hee is our professed Counseller, who imployes himselfe for the good of his Church. Counsellers of the State and of the Law, are highly honoured and respected of all sorts, even for their counsell in worldly matters, though often it faile: how much more ought wee to honour Christ our heavenly Counseller, whose counsell leadeth unto glory, and is stable and sure for ever? Looke how much his counsell excelleth theirs, so much ought he to be honoured above them all. Secondly, in all distresses and grievous temptations, and dangers either of soule or body, wee must take counsell and advice from Christ Jesus: for to this end doth hee reveale himselfe to be a counseller, that men in distresse comming to him, by his advice might be comforted and eased. When Moab, Ammon, and Mount Seir banded themselves against Iuda, the people were in great distresse and danger; but marke what good king Iehosaphat did, he betooke himselfe to the Lord his counseller, saying, Lord we know not what to doe, but our eyes are towards thee, 2 Chron. 20. 12. that is, direct thou us in this danger, for of our selves wee know not how to escape. This practice ought to be followed of all men, especially in time of any danger, such as these dayes are by reason of sinne. The counsell of Wizzards, Sorcerers, and Astrologians, ought not to be sought after; but by prayer we ought to humble our selves, and call only and continually on this our only true Counseller.

II. Point. The remedy it selfe: which hath relation to the former Verse, for there hee sets downe the misery of his Church in three parts; which were all great miseries. And here he so propoundeth his remedy, that it is answerable to their miseries in the severall parts thereof. For first, here is gold to make them rich, answerable to their poverty; Secondly, rayment to hide their nakednesse; Thirdly, oyntment to take away their blindnesse.

For the first; by gold, according to the Analogie of the Scripture, we are to understand the graces of Gods spirit: as true faith, repentance, the feare of God, love of God, and the true love of man: 1 Pet. 1. 7. Faith is compared to gold in the tryall thereof: and so may all other gifts of the spirit be hereby understood. Secondly, by gold, we are to understand Christs merits, yea, Christ himselfe, as the fountaine of all grace.

This gold is further said to be tryed by the fire: that is, most pure and precious gold, purged from all drosse, as fine as can be made by the art of man. This is added to expresse the property of Gods graces and gifts, namely, that they are more precious unto God than gold; yea, than gold tried by the fire, as Peter saith.

Vse. By this every person is taught, how to beautifie himselfe both in soule and body: It is the common blind opinion of the world, that forren attire and rich Jewels doe adorne the body; and indeed in some cases the body may be adorned with pearles and Jewels: but the right way to adorne any person indeed is, to furnish the soule with these graces of the spirit, which unto God be more precious than fine gold. Our bodies and soules ought to bee the dwelling places of the Holy Ghost; and therefore fore we muſt adorne them, and make them fit for ſo worthy a Gueſt: which muſt be done by the good grace of the ſpirit, and not by ſtrange and forren attyre, which no good man could ever abide.

Secondly, theſe graces have a further effect than to beautifie; and that is, to make rich. Here then ſee the common folly, yea the ſpirituall madneſſe of men in this world; who ſpend all their time, wit, and ſtrength, to furniſh their houſes with treaſure, and to enrich their bodies, and in the meane time leave their ſoules ungarniſhed. What a madneſſe is this, that men ſhould neglect the true riches, and follow after that which is nothing elſe but counterfeit copper? Seeing therefore Gods graces be the true treaſure which fadeth not, let us ſeeke after them, as Wiſdome counſelleth: Pro. 8. 10, 11. Receive mine inſtruction, and not ſilver: and knowledge, rather than fine gold: For wiſdome is better than precious ſtones. The ſecond part of this remedie is, a white garment; that is, Chriſt himſelfe, and his righteouſneſſe imputed. So Paul ſaith, All that are baptized into Chriſt, have put on Chriſt; There Chriſt is made a garment, whom every one that beleeveth in him, doth put on. Againe the fruits of the ſpirit are a garment; and therefore we are commanded to put on tender mercie, kindneſſe, humbleneſſe of minde, meekneſſe, and long ſuffering. Further, Chriſt ſheweth the end of this garment; namely, to cover the nakedneſſe of our ſoules, leſt the filthineſſe thereof which we by our ſinnes have brought upon us, doe appeare. The third part of this remedy is, annoynting with eye ſalve: where, by eye ſalve, we muſt underſtand the ſpirit of Illumination and knowledge, wrought in the minde by the holy Ghoſt, whereby men know themſelves and their eſtate: for as eye-ſalve ſharpens the eyes and cleares the ſight, where it was by ſome occaſion dimmed, ſo doth Chriſt by the Illumination of the ſpirit, make a man know God in Chriſt, and to diſcerne betweene good and evill, and betweene things temporall, and bleſſings eternall.

Gal. 3. 27.

Col. 3. 12.

Thus we have the meaning of the words: whereby we may ſee, that by all theſe three, we can underſtand nothing elſe but Chriſt himſelfe and his merits. Now one and the ſame thing in Chriſt, is ſignified by divers termes, to ſhew that there is in Chriſt the fulneſſe of all grace, and plentifull redemption; yea, ſtore of ſupplies for all our wants. The Laodiceans were poore, but Chriſt was their riches; they are naked, but Chriſt was their garment: and laſtly, they were blind, but Chriſt was their eye-ſalve. So that what wants ſoever be in us, there is a ſtore of ſupply thereof in Chriſt. This muſt the more diligently be marked, becauſe the Papiſts make Chriſt but halfe a Saviour, in putting our merit unto his: and ſo diſgrace him in his glorious worke, wherein he is a moſt abſolute Saviour and Redeemer.

III. Point. The meanes whereby theſe worthy gifts of God may be gotten, is by buying and bargaining: ſo Chriſt ſaith, I counſell thee to buy of me. Where he alludeth to the outward ſtate of this Citie, for it was rich, and alſo given to much trafficke, as Hiſtories record: and therefore he ſpeakes to them in their owne kinde, as if he ſhould ſay; You are a people exerciſed in much trafficke, and delighted with nothing more than buying and ſelling: well, I have wares that will ſerve your turne; as gold, garments, and oyle, therefore come and buy of me. Theſe words muſt not be underſtood properly, for ſo we can buy nothing of Chriſt; becauſe there is nothing that is good in any, but it proceedeth from the free gift of God in Chriſt. This is onely ſpoken by way of reſemblance to buying and ſelling; which ſtands in theſe points which are the principall things in bargaining. Firſt, a man ſees his want, and deſires to have it ſupplyed; and therefore goes to the place where ſuch things are to be ſold. Secondly, hee ſeeth the thing, and he liketh it. Thirdly, he prizeth and valueth it. Fourthly, he maketh exchange for it, by money or by money worth. Fifthly, if it be a great ſumme, he giveth earneſt. So in the getting of Chriſt there is a kind of reſemblance to all theſe. Firſt, a man muſt feele himſelfe to ſtand in need of Chriſt and his merits; becauſe men ſee want of bread, meat, and drinke in their houſes, therefore doe they goe to buy the ſame. Now looke how ſenſibly any man feeles theſe worldly wants; ſo evidently ſhould we feele our want of Chriſt, and his merits. For this is the firſt beginning that cauſeth us to ſeeke to receive Chriſt Ieſus. Secondly, feeling our wants, wee ſhould hunger and long after Chriſt, that we might be made partakers of him and the vertue of his merits: as a man that is to buy a thing doth take liking thereof, which doth ſtir up a deſire in him to buy; ſo muſt we labour to have a liking of Chriſt, which will move us to ſeeke unto him. Iſay 55. 1. Hoe, all they that thirſt, come and buy: ſo that none makes this bargaine, but he that thirſts. Thirdly, wee muſt prize and value Chriſt above all things in this world, even at ſo high a rate that we account all things in regard of him to be but loſſe; yea, even droſſe and dung, as Paul did. Fourthly, we muſt make exchange. How? we can give Chriſt nothing but his owne. Anſw. Properly there is no exchange, and therefore he ſaith, Iſay 55. 1. Hoe, come and buy without money, for nothing. Simon Magus is heavily checked and accurſed, for offering to buy the gifts of the holy Ghoſt, Act. 8. 20. And yet there is an exchange to be made. We muſt give him our ſinnes, and receive his righteouſneſſe; and therefore he is ſaid, 2 Cor. 5. 21. To bee made ſinne for us, that wee ſhould be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him. See a moſt bleſſed exchange; for our ſinne and ſhame, wee receive his bleſſed grace and righteouſneſſe. Queſt. How is this exchange made? Anſw. In the practice of faith and repentance: for when we humble our ſelves and and confesse our sinnes, praying earnestly for remission, and beleeve our reconciliation by Christ, then is he our righteousnesse. Lastly, though we can give nothing unto Christ, yet he giveth unto us an earnest in this bargaine; to wit, some portion of Gods Spirit, and some small measure of his graces: as grace to bewaile our sins, to humble our selves, and to pray for the pardon of them, with purpose not to sinne againe: these be the earnests of this bargaine. And thus is heaven bought and sold betweene Christ and us; the receiving of his true saving graces, be they never so small, even as a penie is a sufficient earnest for a bargaine of an hundred pounds.

Eph. 1. 13. 2 Cor. 1. 22.

Vse. Here wee see wee are commanded to buy Christ, and to make a bargaine with him, wherby we may have right to him and his merits. But how goes the case with the world? surely many come where this bargaine is offered, but few there be that buy. Wee are like to Passengers on the sea, who see many goodly buildings, sumptuous cities, and fruitfull Islands, but they make no purchase of them; they onely praise them, as they behold them, and so passe by: so we come and heare the doctrine of Christ and his merits, and approve of the same: but where is the partie that maketh this bargaine? Come to particular points, and it will appeare, that few bargaine for Christ. For who feeles his owne miserie as he ought? Who perceives himselfe to stand in such need of Christ as he doth? worldly wants we feele, and are affected with them, but in regard of spirituall wants, we are senseless; and yet till we truly feele our misery, wee never come to make this bargaine with Christ. Againe, come to our desire and hungring after Christ: In bodily thirst and hunger, we can say; I hunger, or I thirst: but who can say, I hunger and thirst after Christ and his righteousnesse? Alas, our hearts are full, wee feele no want: nay they are dead, we feare none evill; and as for our valuing and esteeming of Christ, we are plaine Gaderens, and Esaues; we preferre the world and the basest things therein before Christ. And for the exchange; we are loth to part with our sinnes, and to put on Christs righteousnesse. Which plainly shewes we make no exchange; and though we be willing to lay heapes of sinnes on Christ, yet who takes Christs righteousnesse and declares the same by the fruits thereof? And lastly, for the earnest of the spirit, though some there be that have received it, yet the body of our people, as their conscience can tell them, have not received it: for they want knowledge, faith, and other graces.

By all these, it is more than manifest, that this bargaine is not made: and yet true it is, that for worldly and base bargaines he must rise early that must goe beyond them. But what a shame is this, that we should be so expert in vile earthly things, and have no regard of this excellent and heavenly bargaine? Wherfore seeing Christ A calleth us hereunto, let us make this one bargaine with him, and that presently; which we shall testifie by doing the five former duties: let us never be at rest, till we may say each one for himselfe, I have bargained with Christ, and received his earnest. Yea, our care should bee, that this bargaine be made not with us alone, but with our children. Many are forward to bring up their children in good trades, wherein they may buy and sell for their living; wherein they doe well, but withall they ought to bé as carefull to teach them to make this bargaine with Christ, and then they doe farre better. For this is the cheapest and the chiefest merchandise that ever was set to sale, which wee may buy without money, and yet it wil make us rich B for ever. Many labour in trafficke and take great paines, and yet often lose thereby: but make this bargaine once, and then thou shalt never lose it, nor any thing thereby, but continue for ever rich in God.

V. 19. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: bee zealous therefore, and amend.

Because our Saviour Christ hath so sharply rebuked this Church, they might thereby take occasion to distrust, and despaire of his favour and mercie; here therefore it pleaseth him, to C take away all occasion of doubting, after this sort: If I use to rebuke and chasten all those whom I love, then you are not to despaire of my mercie, by reason of my sharpe reproofe, whereby I have threatned to spew you out of my mouth, for your sin of luke-warmenesse. But thus I use to deale with all those whom I love; and therefore in this regard you need not to doubt of my love and favour.

The meaning. As many as I love; Christ loves the creatures two waies; as he is Creator, and as he is Redeemer. As he is the Creator, he loves all his creatures, with a common and generall love, whether they be living or dead, reasonable or unreasonable. As hee is Redeemer, he loves his creatures with a special and a peculiar love; which is not common to all, but proper D to that part of mankind, which is chosen to salvation before the world was. And of this peculiar love he speaketh here, I rebuke: The word in the originall which is translated Rebuke, is more significant than can fitly be expressed in any one English word; thus much is meant thereby, as if Christ had said; First, I will convince them of their sinnes, and after reprove, admonish, and checke them for the same. And chasten: This must be understood of a kind of correction, which a father useth of his childe, called nurturing: which is correction to breake the childe of his fault and bad manners, and to teach him his dutie. This then is the meaning: All those whom I beare speciall favour unto, doe I convince of their particular faults, and and then checke and reprove them and nurture them, as a Father doth his childe: to make them leave their particular vices, and to walke in obedience. And to assure us that this is the true meaning, read Prov. 3. 12. whence the words are taken, and Heb. 12. 5. where they are more fully explaned.

Here then Christ sets downe his ordinarie dealing with them, whom he taketh and chuseth to be his Disciples and members; namely, he convinceth them of their faults; he reproveth and chasteneth them for this verie end, to breake them of their sinnes, and to bring them to reformation. And this dealing of Christ belongeth to everie servant and member of Christ without exception; yea, Christ layeth rebukes and chastisements on all his children, and that in divers measure, according to the nature of their sinnes, and the disposition of the parties. Such as are hardly broken of their sinnes, hee layeth on them more heavie judgements and chastisements, that they may bee brought to deeper humiliation, and so to true repentance. And therefore everie one that would be a Disciple and member of Christ, must looke to goe under his correction, and his sharpe and severe rebuke; according as they are in heart disposed unto sinnes either more or lesse; He must passe under the rod, that would come into the bond of the Covenant, Ezech. 20. 37.

The use of this doctrine is twofold, set downe, Prov. 3. 12. The first is thus; My son, despise not the correction of the Lord: for the Lord correcteth whom hee loveth, his chastisements are tokens of his love: that is, whensoever the Lord either in the ministerie of his Word reproveth thy sinnes, or by affliction chasteneth thee, despise it not, neither set light by it, but make good use thereof unto thine owne soule. The second use is, Faint not when thou art corrected: that is, let not the greatnesse of it daunt thee, but arme thy selfe with patience; because hee useth to correct all those whom he doth love, making his chastisements tokens of his love.

Secondly, Christ here setteth before all Governours, an example to follow, especially to fathers and masters: his example is this; On everie childe that he loveth, he layeth corrections, for this end, to breake them of their sinnes: So answerably, Governours must shew tokens of love towards those that are under them, by due reproofe and correction, that so they may be broken of their misdemeanour, and brought unto obedience to God. It were to be wished, that both Parents and Masters would follow Christ in this example, and to seek the reformation of those that be under them: but more lamentable is the case; Parents and Masters doe thinke it sufficient for them, if they provide for their children and servants, food, and rayment, and necessaries for the bodie: and so altogether neglect the good of their soules, which is the cause of many sinnes, and so of many judgements; both which ought to move them to put in practice this dutie.

Thirdly, the verie order of Christs words doth minister unto us necessarie instruction, touching his manner of correcting his servants. For first, hee propounds a direct end of all his corrections upon them; to wit, their nurturing and reformation; then, that hee may attaine thereto, he proceedeth thus: First, he doth convince their consciences of their sinnes, then by reproofes he rebukes and checks them, and lastly, correcteth them, by laying chastisements on them. A most excellent and blessed order, in using correction for the good of the partie chastised, which ought to be followed of all Governors, Parents and Masters especially. First, they must propound a good end of their corrections, even the amendment and salvation of the partie: and that they may then proceed aright, they must first convince their conscience of the fault, then reprove, checke, and admonish them: and if that take not place, they must proceed unto meet and convenient bodily correction: all which must bee done, not for revenge, but to bring them to amendment, and to make them obedient to the will of God. Whereby we see, how far many Parents & Governours overshoot themselves, when as they make their corrections matters of revenge and choller; wherein they seldome intend the reformation of the offender: which is a fault flat against the word of God; and therefore to bee considered of everie good Christian.

Be zealous therefore, and repent. In the former verse hee propoundeth a remedie against their Spirituall pride: in these words he doth directly propound a remedie against their lukewarmnesse. But first observe the coherence of these words with the former. Christ had said; Whom I love, I rebuke and correct, according as their fault is: therefore saith he to this Church, Because I have rebuked and corrected thee by severe threatnings for thy lukewarmnesse, therefore now become zealous and amend.

Here see the proper end of all reproofes and corrections: namely, the reformation and amendment of mens faults and misdemeanours whatsoever, that so they may be more carefull of their wayes, and more zealous in good duties than ever they were. Whensoever therefore wee are reproved by the word of God: or when the Lord shall visit any in body, mind, or goods, by any kinde of crosse, we must remember to take occasion thereby to repent and amend, knowing that by all these, as by so many Sermons, the Lord cals us to amendment.

Now come to the remedie of their lukewarmnesse; Bee zealous. That we may understand this Commandement, wee are to handle some points touching zeale. First, what is zeale? Zeale is a burning affection in regard of Christian religion, and the true worship of God. This zeale is compounded of two affections: of love, and anger or indignation: so that in this Commandement are two duties enjoyned unto this Church. First, that they should love Christ and his Religion above all things. Secondly, that they should bee greeved especially for this, that Christ was dishonoured, his worship prophaned, and his doctrine not imbraced, but in stead thereof false worship, and false doctrine entertained: when both these concurre, then zeale is in the heart. A most notable example hereof we have in Christ, Psal. 69. 9. where the Prophet David in his person saith, The zeale of Gods house had eaten him up. Whereby thus much is signified, that the heat of his love for the maintaining of his Fathers glorie, had even consumed him: and that his indignation was so great, because his Fathers name was dishonoured, and his worship prophaned, that it did even eat him up. This we shall see to be true in Christ, if we read the historie of his life, Joh. 2. 17. yea, he professeth of himselfe, that it was meat and drinke unto him, to doe his Fathers will, Joh. 4. 34. That thing he preferred before his owne life or safetie: nay, for the accomplishment thereof, hee was content to suffer the pangs of Hell. The like zeale was in Elias, when all Israel was fallen to Idolatrie; his heart was zealous for the Lord of Hosts, 1 King. 19. 14.

II. Point. The kinds of zeale. Zeale is either good or bad: In good zeale are these things required. I. True faith, as the root thereof; 1 Tim. 1. 5. The end of the commandement is love out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfained. Now, one part of zeale is love, and therfore as love proceeds from true faith, so must true zeale also; and that which is not grounded on faith, is rather rashnesse and fiercenesse of nature, than true zeale. II. Repentance; 2 Cor. 7. 11. There are seven fruits of repentance recited, whereof zeale is one, that is, good zeale; Even a burning love of true Religion, and a godly indignation when false religion is embraced. There may be zeale in a man that hath no repentance; as was in Iehu, 2 King. 10. 16. Come with me (saith he) and see the zeale that I have for the Lord. Yet hee wanted repentance, for verse 29. 31. it is said, Iehu regarded not to walke in the Law of the Lord God of Israel with all his heart: for he departed not from the sinnes of Ieroboam, which made Israel to sinne: and therefore he had not in him the true zeale that is here commanded. III. Zeale must come from knowledge: for without knowledge it is but rashnesse and boldhardinesse, such as the Jewes had, Rom. 10. 2. Whose zeale was without knowledge. And such as Paul had before his conversion, Phil. 3. 6. In zeale he persecuted Gods Church: Knowledge therefore in Gods word, must be the guide and conducter of our zeale.

III. Point. The fruits of zeale must bee considered for the better discerning of true zeale. First, true zeale constraineth a man in everie thing to seeke to please God; Whether we be out of our wits, we are it unto God: or whether we be in our right minde, we are it unto you. For the love of God constraineth us. So whersoever this true zeale is in any measure, it offereth violence to the heart; so as a man cannot but endevour to doe his dutie, for the love hee beareth unto Christ. Elihu said, The grace of God was in his heart as new wine in a vessell, which must needs vent out, Job 32. 18, 19. Secondly, true zeale makes a man endevour to serve and please God with all his heart, power, and strength. So good King Iosiah hearing the words of the Law read, hee turned not slackly or negligently, but with all his heart, and all his soule, and with all his might, according to all the Law of Moses: so as like him was no King before, neither after him arose there any like him. Psal. 51. David humbling himselfe for his sinnes, prayes for the pardon of them with such marvellous zeale as no tongue can utter: Desiring God to remember him according to the multitude of his mercies, often repeating the same thing in divers tearmes, that in some sort hee might expresse the earnest desire of his heart: And in giving God thanks for his benefits, hee putteth all the strength of his heart thereto, crying out; My soule praise thou the Lord, and all that is within me, Psal. 103. 1. And thus wee see what a thing it is to bee zealous; whence true zeale ariseth, and what it worketh in mans heart. 2 King 23. 25.

Vse. Seeing wee (as hath beene shewed) are tainted with the sinne of Lukewarmnesse, and coldnesse in Religion; let us here learne how to redresse this vice. Wee must become zealous, having in our hearts a fervent love of true religion, and vehement indignation when the same is disgraced, and false worship takes place. Let Religion therefore take place in our hearts; and let us bee fervent and shew the same in our lives by zealous obedience. Away with all slackneese and lukewarmnesse; it were better to bee Jewes and Turkes, and to hold no Religion, than to bee lukewarme in the true profession. And thus much for zeale.

The second part of this remedie is, to Repent, or amend. This they are also enjoyned, because zeale without repentance is nothing but rashnesse. Iehues zeale was no true zeale, because he wanted repentance, even then when he was zealous. But wherfore was this Church enjoyned to repent? Namely, for lukewarmnesse: not for that she had committed any horrible sinne, but because she was slacke in good duties.

Here then wee have a good lesson for the ignorant sort, that challenge Gods mercie unto themselves, because they are no notorious malefactors; as murtherers, and adulterers, they hate no man, but doe good unto all; but here they are taught to reforme this their blindnesse & ignorance: For repentance must be for want of good duties, yea for slackneese therin: therfore fore let no man sooth himselfe in his ignorance with a false perswasion that all is well, if he live not in grosse sinnes. This is the enchantment of the Devill, whereby hee rocks many asleepe in their sinnes, till he carrie their soules to Hell. A good meaning will not serve the turne, God requires zeale in well-doing.

V. 20. *Behold, I stand at the doore, and knocke: If any man heare my voice, and open the doore, I will come in unto him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

Here Christ, to keepe his Church from despaire, ministers unto them the signes and tokens of his love and favour: and before the same sets downe this note of attention, Behold, hereby intending to make them more attentively to marke the tokens of his love; that plainely seeing the same, they might not doubt thereof.

Hereby in generall we are taught, that if we would arme our selves against desperation and distrust in any distresse, we must both often and seriously consider, and marke the tokens of Gods love unto us, and that will fortifie our faith. Read Psal. 23. In everie verse save the last, he sets downe tokens of Gods love and favour towards him; and then in the last concludeth thus; Without doubt, kindnesse and mercie shall follow me all the dayes of my life, and I shall remaine a long season in the house of the Lord. Our hearts are naturally filled with doubting, which will bewray it selfe in any distresse. But to prevent and cut off all hurt that may come thereby, let us marke the good dealing of our God towards us, and observe the tokens of his love and mercie in his ordinarie providence: and these will notably strengthen us against distrust. And surely, no person is so full of despaire, but if hee could looke backe into the mercies of God, from the beginning of his dayes, and lay them to his heart, they would minister comfort unto him, in regard of his love and favour at that instant.

More particularly; Christ ministring comfort unto this Church, doth expresse his meaning by a borrowed speech, comparing everie man unto an house, his heart unto a doore, whereby entrance is made, and himselfe unto a guest or stranger, desiring to come and enter in, not so much to finde courtesie, as to shew favour and kindnesse.

In the words of this verse, there bee two signes of his love set downe. First, an heartie desire of their conversion, which he earnestly seeketh: Secondly, a promise of mutuall fellowship, after their conversion. The first in these words; Behold, I stand at the doore and knocke:

A In this desire Christ expresseth two things; First, that this Church (if we regard the greatest part thereof) had no true fellowship with Christ, nor Christ with them; for he stands at the doore of their hearts, which were closed up against him. This may seeme strange, but the case is evident: for though they had in them many good things, as knowledge of Gods will, and did professe the Gospell, and were partakers of the signes and seales of the Covenant of grace; yet they are tainted with this notorious sinne of lukewarmnesse, which closed up the doore of their hearts against Christ, and barred him out.

1 Here then we are carefully to observe, that a man may have in him many good things, and
B yet by living in one sinne, be quite cut off from all true fellowship with Christ. Judas had many excellent gifts, he forsooke all and followed Christ, hee preached the Gospell, and administred the Sacraments; and yet by covetousnesse, the doore of his heart was quite barred against Christ. So Herod reverenced Iohn, and heard him gladly, and did many things at his instruction, Mark. 6. 20. yet by the sinne of incest, his heart was so closed, that he had no fellowship with Christ. And so it is with us: It is good that wee know the will of God, approve the same, and professe the Gospell and also receive the seales of the Covenant; but yet for all these, our case may be such, as wee shall have no true fellowship with Christ. For if wee nourish,
C though but one sinne, and live therein, that will make a separation betweene Christ and us, bee the sinne what it will; as covetousnesse, adulterie, profanenesse, or such like. Hereby then, all that desire to have true fellowship with Christ, are to bee warned to purge their lives from all sinne, so as their hearts bee not tainted with nourishing any one sinne; for even one sinne, whatsoever it bee, is a strong barre, that will keepe Christ from comming into us.

Secondly, whereas he saith, I have stood at the doore: (for so the words are.) Here he speaketh to this Church, as he used to speake by his old Prophets. As by Ieremie, I have sent unto you all my Prophets, rising early everie day, and sending them. And by Esay, I have spread out mine hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that was not good: even after their owne imaginations. So here, I have stood at the doore: that is, long, even till night, as the word supping importeth. Ier. 7. 25. & 13. Isa. 65. 2.

Hereby Christ would signifie his great patience, in waiting for the conversion of this people of Laodicea. In justice he might long agone have cast them into the pit of destruction for their sinnes; and yet in mercie hee waiteth for their conversion, and complaines that he hath waited long. Hence then wee have just occasion to take a view of Gods patience in waiting for the conversion of a sinner. And that which hee saith to this Church, hee may as justly say unto us; for he hath ſtood verie long at our doores, even 36. yeeres and upward, and yet ſtill continueth knocking, ſo as he may juſtly complaine of his long waiting. Let us then here learne to know the day of our viſitation, which is then to any people, when Chriſt ſtands at their doores and knocks, and unto us this day is preſent. Wee have the Miniſterie of the Goſpell; and therefore we muſt be perſwaded, that this is the time of our viſitation, and hereupon learne the dutie which Chriſt teacheth the Jewes: namely, acknowledge the day of our viſitation; which if we doe not, wee muſt looke for like vengeance which fell upon the Jewes, becauſe they regarded not when God ſent his owne Sonne from his boſome, to knocke at the doore of their hearts.

And knocke. Here is a further ſignification of his deſire of their converſion: wherein wee may behold his grace and unſpeakable mercie towards this Church, and in them towards all other his children. This Church hath bard out Chriſt by their ſins; and yet hee purſues them, hee knocks, hee uſeth meanes to enter for their good, and vouchſafes them mercie, even then when they refuſe it. Thus when Adam had ſinned, and fled, and hid himſelfe, did the Lord ſeeke in the garden, and make with him the covenant of grace. And therefore it is truly ſaid in Iſay, The Lord is found of them that never ſought him. Luk. 15. 4, 5. Chriſt ſeeketh the loſt ſheepe that was gone aſtray. All which ſhew and ſet out unto us, the unſpeakable greatneſſe of Gods mercie in Chriſt, unto miſerable man, who then ſhewes mercie unto him, when hee never ſeeketh it. This his mercie is verified in all Churches, and unto us; Which muſt be an occaſion to enlarge and ſtirre up our hearts, to bleſſe the name of Chriſt for this unſpeakable mercie, in vouchſafing us favour when we never ſought it, but refuſed it.

Iſa. 65. 1.

Queſt. How doth Chriſt knocke?

Anſw. The words going before, whereto theſe have reference, give light unto the queſtion. Before Chriſt had threatned this Church, even to ſpue her out of his mouth for her lukewarmneſſe; and after he counſelleth her to buy of him gold, and other remedies. Now, upon this greevous threatning, the Church might deſpaire of his mercie: But Chriſt to comfort her, tels her here, that theſe reproofes and rebukes were but knockings at the doores of our hearts, to make them open: For then Chriſt knocketh at the hearts of any people, when he vouchſafes them meanes to ſee their ſinnes, and threatens them for the ſame; and withall gives them counſell, whereby they may eſcape the fearefull puniſhments thereby deſerved.

Here then note the ſtate of any people that have the Miniſterie of the Goſpell vouchſafed unto them; they have Chriſt among them, ſtanding at the doore of their hearts, and knocking to come in, by exhortations, admonitions, threatnings, and by promiſes, which is a great and endleſſe mercie.

A

Firſt, ſeeing we have Chriſt knocking at our doores, there ought not to bee in us ſuch dulneſſe and deadneſſe of heart, in hearing him knocke. If a man of any account come and knocke at the doore of our houſe; oh what a ſtir will we make to let him in quickly? What a ſhame then is it, that wee ſhould bee dead-hearted, when Chriſt Jeſus the King of Heaven knocks at the doores of our hearts? Secondly, this muſt admoniſh us with all ſpeed to turne unto God by true repentance; for we know not how long hee will continue knocking; and if we doe not heare, and turne before he withdraw himſelfe from us, we periſh eternally. For if we refuſe when he knocketh at the doore of our hearts, hee will refuſe when wee knocke at the doore of his mercie, Prov. 1. 25, 26. Matth. 25. 11, 12.

B

Note further, this knocking is not ordinarie, but is joyned with crying: for he ſaith, If hee heare my voice: ſo that hee both knocks and cries. It is then the knocking of one that would enter: we therefore ought anſwerably, with ſerious regard to receive the threatnings of the Law, and the promiſes of grace, and ſo bee as earneſt in receiving and embracing him, as he is in knocking to come into us.

The ſecond token of Chriſts love, is a gracious promiſe of fellowſhip with them, in theſe words: If any man heare my voice, and open the doore, I will come in unto him, and will ſup with him, and he with me. Theſe words have beene much abuſed, and therefore I will ſtand to ſet downe the true uſe and meaning of the ſame. Marke, the forme of ſpeech is ſuch, as gives unto a mans will and ſoule, an action in his converſion, whereby he comes to Chriſt, and receives Chriſt.

C

This may ſeeme ſtrange, but it is for juſt cauſe uſed by the holy Ghoſt: for in the converſion of a ſinner, there bee three workes, the holy Ghoſt, the Word, and mans will. The holy Ghoſt is the principall Agent inlightening the minde with true knowledge, ſoftning the heart, and changing the will from evill to good. The Word is the inſtrument of the holy Ghoſt; for now he worketh not by revelation, or ſpeciall inſtinct, but ordinarily in & by the Word, when a man is reading, hearing, or meditating, either publikely or privatly: for the Word preached is the power of God to mans ſalvation from faith to faith. Thirdly, mans will, though by nature it be evill and dead unto grace, yet being renued by the holy Ghoſt, in the firſt act of converſion moveth and ſtriveth to be turned. It is not like a peece of wax onely paſſive, which without any action receiveth impreſſion. But as fire, ſo ſoone as it is fire doth burne, and ſo ſoone as it burneth it is fire: ſo the will, though by nature it move not, yet being renewed by grace it moveth, and ſo ſoone as it moveth, it is renued. And hereupon it is, that the holy Ghoſt aſcribeth action unto a

ſinner

ſinner that is to bee converted: which argueth not, that by themſelves men can have a will to bee converted, but that being renewed, they may will their converſion. And for this cauſe is the Goſpell preached in theſe tearmes, Repent and beleeve: not to ſhew that man by nature can repent or beleeve; but that God in mans converſion, doth give him grace to will and deſire the ſame.

Hence then it followes, that this Text hath been divers wayes abuſed: Firſt, by the Papiſts, who hence would gather free will of converſion in a ſinner by nature. True it is, a man hath free will in his converſion; yet not by nature, but by grace, neither can any more bee gathered hence; for here it is only ſaid, If any man heare, and open when I knocke. Nay, hence we may rather gather, that a man by nature cannot heare, nor open, becauſe the counſell is given to ſuch as are poore, and blinde, and naked by nature.

Secondly, they alſo abuſe this Text, that hereby would prove a flexible free will by grace to be in man, which is this; Sundrie men thinke, that after the fall of Adam, all being wrapt up in ſinne, God gave a generall grace, whereby a man might will, and receive that which was good; and this grace though it diſpoſe the will in ſome part to that which is good, yet it takes not the corruption away, but that remaines ſtill; whereupon if he will, he may receive Chriſt by that generall grace: or if he will not, he may refuſe Chriſt by his naturall corruption, which yet remaineth in him. It is ſaid, this may be gathered from this Text. But the truth is, here is no foundation for flexible free will: all that can here be gathered is, that man hath free will in his converſion, yet not by a generall, but by Gods ſpeciall grace. Nay, Chriſts miniſterie ſerves for this end, that thoſe which before could not turne of themſelves, might by grace bee converted. This flexible grace is againſt Gods word; Chriſt ſaith, Everie one that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, commeth unto me: He ſaith not, may come if he will, but peremptorily commeth: For mans will cannot diſpoſe and overrule the work of God; but the work of God overrules the will of man; though man be unwilling, yet when God calleth effectually, he cannot but come: For the creature cannot reject or reſiſt the will and calling of his Creator.

If any man open unto mee, I will come, &c. The propet intent of Chriſt in this conditionall promiſe, is to provoke them that bee dull and heavie, to liſten diligently to Chriſts words, and to receive the doctrine of ſalvation from him gladly.

In the example of this Church we are taught our dutie. Seeing Chriſt in the miniſterie of his word, knocks both by threatnings, by promiſes, and good counſell: therfore wee muſt all of us liſten unto the words of Chriſt, and open the doores of our hearts, and receive him into the ſame. But alas, the practice of the world is farre otherwiſe: men are churliſh Nabals unto Chriſt, who though he come friendly, yet they repell him, making no account of ſuch a gueſt. Nay, we are Bethlemites, which have no roome for Chriſt in the Inne of our hearts: if Chriſt will needs lodge with us, hee muſt lie among the beaſts in the filthy ſtable. Nay, many ſend him out of their gates with the Jewes, and crucifie him with their ſinnes. But let us abandon this greevous ſinne, for it is the right way to plunge our ſoules into the pit of deſtruction.

Queſt. How muſt a man open his heart to receive Chriſt? Anſw. By doing two things: Firſt, he muſt labour to ſee his owne vileneſſe; that hee is unworthy to receive ſo bleſſed a Gueſt; then hee muſt humble himſelfe, and acknowledge that his unworthineſſe. Even as the Ruler did when he ſaid unto Chriſt, Lord, I am not worthy thou ſhouldeſt come under my roofe. Matth.8.8. This humiliation is the beginning of grace: This done, hee muſt by true faith lay hold on Chriſt, that is, beleeve that Chriſts death and paſſion is for the pardon of his ſinnes, and for the ſalvation of his ſoule: For, as Chriſt dwelt in mens hearts by faith, ſo by faith he muſt bee received into their hearts. Here ſome will ſay, If this be to receive Chriſt, then all is well. But take heed thou deceive not thy ſelfe, with a vaine imagination of thine owne braine, in ſtead of faith. Looke therefore that thy faith be true and ſound: if it be true faith, it will worke by love, even a true love of Chriſt and his members, which will appeare by keeping his Commandements, Joh.14.23.

I will come in unto him, and ſup with him, and he with mee. Here is the thing promiſed; to wit, mutuall communion and fellowſhip with Chriſt. This is the principall token of Chriſts love, being indeed the verie ground of all true happineſſe, joy, and comfort, and therefore it is added, to move them to open unto Chriſt. This ſocietie is here propounded in two parts. Firſt, the ſinner being converted makes a feaſt unto Chriſt, I will come in unto him, and ſup with him. Secondly, Chriſt makes a feaſt unto him, And hee ſhall ſup with me. And in theſe two conſiſts the ſumme of Salomons Song of Songs; where Chriſt entertaineth the Church, and the Church againe feaſts Chriſt.

For the firſt, ſome may aske, how can a poore ſinner make a feaſt for Chriſt? Anſ. Cant. 4.16. The Church, or everie Chriſtians ſoule, calleth Chriſt unto a feaſt, in his Garden to eat his pleaſant things. This feaſt conſiſteth of theſe things. Firſt, of the fruits of true repentance: Pſalm. 51.17. A broken and contrite heart, is a daintie diſh acceptable unto God. Secondly, of an heart beleeving the word and promiſes of God: for without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. 11.6. Thirdly, the penitent ſinner muſt give up himſelfe in ſoule and bodie, a holy and acceptable ſacrifice unto God, by ſerving God faithfully, not only in the duties of pietie, but alſo in the faithfull performance of Rom.12.1.

the duties of his particular calling: these bee the delightfull dishes wherewith Christ is fed.

The second feast is made by Christ, and hee shall sup with me. Christ comes not to be entertained only, but to entertaine: And the feast which he makes, is his owne bodie and bloud: Ioh. 6. 55. For his flesh is meat indeed, and his body is drink indeed. The vessels whereon these meats are carried, are the Word and Sacraments. And all that bee his welcome guests, are true penitent sinners, which have hungring and thirsting hearts after his bodie and bloud, Luk. 1. 53. Rom. 14. 17. And from this feast arise these blessings; Righteousnesse, peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Use. Seeing this fellowship with Christ is here promised to those, that open and receive him into their hearts: First, hereby wee are taught to renounce all earthly & carnall pleasures, and not to addict our selves to drinking and quaffing, or sumptuous fare; for here is a better feast set before us, whereupon wee must set our hearts, turning our eyes from all worldly pleasures. We know by experience how friends entertaine each other; but wee must labour to know how to entertaine Christ, and to feast him with his owne graces, that he may sup with us, and we with him, and so have true fellowship with him.

Againe, by this wee may see a notable abuse of many that come to the Lords Table: for here wee see is required an interchange of feasting betweene Christ and a Christian; but many there be that will come to the Lords Table, and feast with Christ, that will never feast Christ againe: And yet we ought to be as carefull to feast him, as to feast with him. It is a shame to sup often with Christ, and yet like ungratefull Nabals, never to have one good dish of grace and holy obedience to set before him, wherewith indeed wee should feast him daily. Others will seeme to give him good entertainment, for that day whereon they feast with Christ: but soone after they give him gall to eat, and vinegar to drinke, by their daily sinnes.

V. 21. To him that overcommeth, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame, and sit with my Father in his throne.

V. 22. Let him that hath an eare, heare what the spirit saith unto the Churches.

Here is the conclusion of this Epistle, and it hath two parts. A promise, vers. 21. and a commandement, vers. 22. In the promise note two things. First, to whom it is made, To him that overcommeth. Hereof we have spoken. Secondly, the thing promised; that is, fellowship with Christ in glorie: I will grant to sit, &c. whereby is not meant equalitie of glorie and honour; for that is not possible for any creature to receive; but a participation only of some part of his glorie, so much as shall suffice for his perfect happinesse. And because it might bee thought no great matter, therefore it is illustrated by a comparison, as I overcame, and sit with my Father in his throne. As if he should say; I will advance them that overcome their spiritual enemies, into the participation of my glorie, even as my Father (when I had overcome) advanced me into the fellowship of his glory. Now Christ as he is Mediator, is inferiour to his Father, and in that regard is not advanced to equall glorie with his Father, though he sit with him: So the members of Christ, being inferiour unto him, may sit with him in his throne, though their glorie be unequall. These things for substance have beene handled, chap. 2. vers. 25, 28.

The second part of this conclusion, Let him that hath an eare, heare, &c. hath also beene handled before.

The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life: And hee that winneth soules, is wise, Prov. 11. 30.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE,

Sir William Ruſſell, L. Ruſſell, Baron of Thornhaugh,

With the vertuous Ladie his Wife:

Grace and Peace.

VPon that ſtrange [a] battell in Heaven, betweene Michael the [b] great Prince, and Satan that old Serpent, was heard a loud voice, ſounding forth joy and woe: joy to the heavens. and to them that dwell therein, becauſe [c] the accuſer of the brethren is caſt out thence: but woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the ſea, that is, (to the ſonnes of men in this vale of teares) for the Devill is come downe unto them with great wrath, knowing that he hath but a ſhort time.

a Revel. 12. 7.
b Dan. 12. 1.
c Revel. 12. 12.

In this voice (Right Honourable) are two things affirmed touching Satan; firſt, that his caſting out of Heaven is joyfull to the Saints; next that, his comming downe on earth is wofull unto men. Is the matter of our woe, joy to the Saints? Nothing leſſe; but that the Devill might be knowen to be an evill gueſt where ever hee comes, the Heavens doe rejoyce for his departure, and ſea and earth ought to mourne for his approaching; ſo that he is, or at leaſt wiſe ought to be, no where welcome, except it be in Hell: and all ſuch perſons may well perceive themſelves, not heavenly, but plainly helliſh minded, as give more kinde welcome unto Satan, in their cheereſull practice of the works of darkneſſe, than they doe unto Ieſus Chriſt, who knocks [d] at the doore of their hearts, promiſing to come in and ſup with them, if they will heare his voice and open unto him.

d Revel. 3. 20.

But what doe the Heavens gaine by Satans caſting downe? Aud how doth his deſcending to the earth worke man ſuch woe? Anſw. For Heavens gaine, [e] they are well rid of the malitious accuſer of the brethren. Who would know more, muſt ſtrive to get to Heaven; and if more be needfull, there his information ſhall be certaine. As for mans woe by Satans company here on earth, who ſo doubts hereof, may well ſuſpect himſelfe to have already received of him that deadly hurt, in blindneſſe of minde, and hardneſſe of heart, whereof none ſave Ieſus Chriſt the good Phyſitian of our ſoules, by the eye [f] ſalve, and [g] anoynting of his ſpirit, can worke the cure. Is it not wofull to the flocks and to the herds, when ravenous beaſts doe frequent their paſtures? then woe to man becauſe of Satan: for the perill of the Lambe from the Wolfe, of the Kid from the Leopard, of the fat beaſt from the Lion, & of the ſucking child from the Aſpe, is nothing comparable to the danger of man from this old Serpent, who in craft and crueltie, yea in everie hurtfull propertie goes beyond them all. Other devouring creatures keepe their circuits, and obſerve their times; they are ſometime wearie, and not alway hungrie: ſome are unfit for the darke, and others afraid of the light, whereby their ſilly prey gets ſome reſpite: but Satan is a Prince [h] of the darkneſſe of this world, who yet for his advantage [i] can transforme himſelfe into an Angell of light; ſo as the day and night are both alike for the working of our woe: he is ever greedy, and never wearie, and therefore alwayes ſeeking: and if we dreame of any reſtraint to him for time or place, we deceive our ſelves; for he was a [k] murtherer from the beginning, and ſo will continue, till time ſhall be no more: and he [m] compaſſeth the whole earth, walking in it to and fro, even [n] like a roaring Lion, ſeeking whom he may devoure. With other creatures woe is ended, when the prey is once devoured; but to Satans prey it is not ſo, for unleſſe his ſnare be broken, and they delivered in this life, their woe continues eaſeleſſe, endleſſe, and remedileſſe after naturall death. Indeed the naturall man doth not perceive the working of Satan, which doth procure his woe: it may be hee hath ſeene the Players and the Painters Devils, ſome blacke horned monſter with broad eyes, crooked clawes, or cloven feet; and till ſome ſuch thing appeare unto him, hee never feareth hurt by Satan: little doth he thinke that ignorance in the Scriptures, neglect of Gods worſhip, prophaning Gods Sabbaths, with greedie affecting the wealth, pompe, and pleaſures of this world, doe give advantage unto Satan againſt his ſoule: and therefore while the matters of this life doe anſwer his deſire, he can ſing to himſelfe this pleaſant requiem; [o] Soule, ſoule, take thy reſt. But our voice from heaven cries woe to all ſuch inhabitants of the earth becauſe of Satan: for they are of this world, and he is their [p] Prince, and their [q] God, who having blinded their mindes, [r] working in their hearts, and ſo keepes them ſure in his poſſeſſion. Indeed, like a ſeeming friend, he ſuffereth all [s] things to be in peace; but woefull peace, like to Abſaloms wine which hee gave to Ammon, that [t] when his heart was moſt merrie therewith, his leaſt ſuſpected deadly wound might fall upon him. Everie one by [u] nature is a childe of wrath, and ſo of himſelfe full of miſerie: but mercileſſe Satan ſeekes the increaſe hereof, by cauſing the root of mans corruption to ſpread forth the branches of all tranſgreſſions: indeed he is not the beginner of everie ſinne, for much impietie flowes from mans inbred impuritie: yet ſo ſure a friend is Satan to corruption in the works of darkneſſe, that if nature doe but ſtretch forth the hand, Satan will thruſt at the elbow: Doth Cain hate Abel? then will Satan bring this hatred from the heart to the hand, and cauſe [x] Cain to kill Abel. Is Iudas covetous? then will Satan, for the ſatisfying of that deſire, [a] make him traiterous: let him finde but a ſparkle, he will ſoone kindle it to a flame: ſo that woefull is his comming to all naturall men.

But doth the childe of God eſcape his hands? No verily: Satan is a profeſſed deadly foe to all ſuch, he is their [b] adverſarie and [c] accuſer; that which ſhould procure them good, he ſeekes to hinder: and what ever may worke them woe, he will be ſure to further: if they fall into ſinne, he ſeekes to bring them to deſpaire; and when they endevour to doe good, he moves them to be proud: they are no ſooner converted to the Lord, but he hath ſome [d] Elymas to turne them backe to the world: and though they ſtand againſt that aſſault, yet he will purſue them ſtill, by troubles without, and terrours within: by raging foes, and flattering friends; ſo as in regard of Satan advantaged by their fleſh and his world, they ſhall finde this to be true, [e] while their fleſh is upon them, they ſhall be ſorrowfull; and while their ſoules be in them, they ſhall mourne. Satan is a mightie [f] Prince, and a wily [g] Serpent, and if either force or fraud may worke them woe, no childe of God ſhall eſcape his hands: hee ſpared not the greene tree, what then will he doe to the drie?

But is there no remedie to man for all this woe that comes by Satan? Yes, bleſſed be our God, who hath not left us for a prey unto his teeth, but to ſhew the exceeding riches of his grace and love to the world, [h] hath given his only begotten Sonne, to bee our Prince and our deliverer: who in no ſort tooke the Angels, [i] but the ſeed of Abraham: and becauſe they were [l] partakers of fleſh and bloud, hee himſelfe tooke a part with them, that he might deſtroy through death, him that had the power of death, that is, the Devill. For the evidence and application of which deliverance, hee hath ordained in his Church an holy Miniſterie, whereby naturall men are brought [k] from darkneſſe unto light, and from the power of Satan to himſelfe: and his owne children doe [l] grow up into Chriſt their head, and be edified [m] in their moſt holy faith, through which [n] they are kept by the power of God unto ſalvation. Yet we muſt ſo conceive of this deliverance, thatas Iſrael being brought out of Ægypt, was not preſently ſettled in the Land of Canaan, but for the ſpace of fortie yeeres was exerciſed with ſundrie temptations in a barren and drie wilderneſſe, where they met with [o] fierie Serpents, and were encountred with many and ſtrong enemies, who ſought to debarre them from the promiſed Land: ſo the children of God, though redeemed by Christ, are not presently translated from the bondage of corruption, to the full inheritance of perfect glorie in the Heavens; but must passe thorow this vale of teares, and in the wildernesse of this world, meet with that crooked Serpent the Devill, who will seeke to sting their soules to death, and also stirre up many an [p] Amalec to entrap them in the way, that either through disobedience or unbeleefe they may be deprived of their heavenly Canaan. True it is, this match is farre unequall, for flesh and bloud to fight against spirituall powers; yet here is comfort, that we have him for our Captaine, who in his [q] deepest humilitie, spoiled our strongest adversarie, and is now [r] crowned with glorie and honour, being highly [s] exalted far above all might and domination, at his Fathers right hand, where he must [t] reigne, till he hath put all his enemies under his feet: yea, till he hath [u] trodden Satan under the feet of all his members: only this he requireth, that we should be valiant, [x] and quit our selves like men in the power of his might, knowing that the battell is the Lords, and so the victorie sure before we strike a stroke. Now for the manner of our fight (a matter indeed of great moment, because a [y] smooth stone out of Davids sling, will foile to the ground great Goliah) we have in this combat betweene Christ and the Devill, so pregnant direction set before us, that unlesse we doe wilfully shut our eyes against the light in this behalfe, we cannot be ignorant of our dutie: [z] whatsoever was written aforetime, was written for our learning: and therefore the recording of this combat is as much from Christ to everie Christian, as the speech of Gedeon to his souldiers, [a] Looke on me and doe likewise, even as I doe, so doe yee: for Christ left himselfe an example, that wee should follow his steps, though not in his miraculous fast, yet in his couragious fight against sinne. The view hereof hath formerly beene presented to your Honours, by M. Robert Hill, Bachelour of Divinitie, under this title, Satans Sophistrie answered by our Saviour Christ. And now at the entreatie of M. Perkins Executors, I have published it againe; yet under a new title, and more at large almost by one third part. Mine endevour hath beene that this poore Orphan might imitate his brethren, who were the messengers of love unto our Church, while their happie Father lived among us. What is wanting herein, or may deserve a just reproofe, I willingly take to my selfe, Me me adsum qui feci, &c. What I have beene able to doe, I humbly commend to the Church of God, under your Honourable protection. If herein I seeme presumptuous, because I am unknowen unto you, I humbly crave this favourable construction; that I chose rather by presuming to wrong my selfe, than to alienate this Booke from your Honours, who had right hereto by former dedication. When your Honourable imployments in time past required your wisdome and courage, for the just defence of our Soveraignes right, I make no question, but as well the messengers of victorie over rebels, as the Counsellers of peace were alwayes welcome to your Honour: why then should I doubt whether this ensuing display, being as well a counseller of peace with God, as an Herauld of triumph through Christ over Satan the arch-enemie of our soules, will be gratefull unto you, who have learned long since, that whosoever will keepe a good conscience towards God or man, must endure many a conflict with Satan.

Now the God of peace, who is able to doe exceeding abundantly above all that we can aske or thinke, grant unto your Honours according to the riches of his mercie, so to fight the good fight of faith on earth, that you may receive the crowne of glorie in Heaven. Cambridge, Emmanuel College, 25. of June 1606.

Younger Son to that most Christian and Honourable Earle, FRANCIS Earle of Bedford;

With the vertuous Ladie his Wife:

Grace and Peace.

Matth. 3.
Matth. 4. 1.

RIght Honourable, as Iohn the Baptist was in one desart, so our Saviour Christ he was in another: but as these two differed in their being in the world, so did they not accord in their being in the wildernesse. Iohn was with some men, Christ with none: Iohn was with wilde men, Christ with wilde beasts: Iohn was preaching, Christ praying: Iohn was baptizing, Christ fighting: Iohn was feeding, Christ fasting: Iohn was encountring with Devils incarnate, Christ did encounter with the Prince of those Devils. From Iohn preaching in the desart, learne we diligence in our callings: from Christ tempted in the desart, see wee troubles at our calling: [a] Many are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of all.

[a] Psal. 34. 19.

If you purpose to give these after-lines the reading, you shall see set downe that monomachie or single combat, which was hand to hand betwixt Christ and the Devill. And as for Christ Iesus, you shall see him fasting, fighting, conquering. Fasting and an hungrie, to shew that he was man: fighting and encountring, to shew he was Messiah: and conquering and triumphing, to shew he was God. And as for the Devill, you shall see him objecting, answering, flying. Objecting, that Christ [b] might despaire; [c] answering, that he might presume; and [d] flying, when he could not overcome.

In Christs temptations, we see the estate of the [e] Church; in Satans assault, we see his malice to the [f] Church. Is Christ tempted? thinke it not strange if wee fall into [g] temptations. For the greefe of the head, is the greefe of the [h] members: and the temptations of Christ, shew the temptations of [i] Christians. It is true of Christ, that [k] by many tribulations he did enter into the Kingdome of God: that our [l] high Priest was consecrated by afflictions, that so he must suffer, and enter into his [m] glorie.

Hee is no sooner borne into the world, but hee is [a] hunted by Herod: baptized at Iordan, but Satan [b] set on him: a Preacher for repentance, but [c] the Scribes proscribe him: to worke [d] miracles, but the Pharisies slander him. He is no sooner to suffer, but [e] the Devill assaults him: apprehended, but the [f] Iewes deliver him: delivered, [g] Herod derides him: derided, but [h] Pilate condemnes him: condemned, but the Souldiers [i] abuse him. Is he on the crosse? the [k] people will not pitie him: Is hee risen? the high [l] Priests will belie him. In a word, is hee upon earth? hee is tempted in his [m] person: is he in heaven? he is [n] tempted in his members. Thus the life of Christ was a warfare upon earth, and the life of Christians must bee a warfare upon earth. We live here in a sea of troubles; the sea is the world, the waves are calamities, the Church is the ship, the anchor is hope, the sailes are love, the Saints are passengers, the haven is Heaven, and Christ is our Pilot. When the sea can continue without waves, the ship without tossings, and passengers not bee sicke upon the water, then shall the Church of God be without trials. We begin this voyage so soone as we are borne, and we must saile on till our dying day.

We doe read in Gods word of many kindes of temptations: God, Satan, Man, the world, world, and the Fleſh, are ſaid to tempt. God tempteth man to trie his obedience, Satan tempteth him to make him diſobedient: Men doe tempt men to trie what is in them: and man tempteth God to trie what is in him. The world is a tempter, to keepe man from God: and the fleſh is a tempter to bring man to the Devill. So God tempted Abraham [a] in the offering of his ſonne: Satan tempted Iob in [b] the loſſe of his goods: a [c] Queene tempted Salomon in trying his wiſdome: men [d] tempted God by diſtruſt in the deſart: the world tempted [e] Demas, when he forſooke the Apoſtles: and the fleſh tempted David, [f] when he fell by adulterie. Doth God tempt us? take heed of hypocriſie: doth Satan tempt us? take heed of his ſubtiltie: doth man tempt man? take heed of diſſembling: doth man tempt God? take heed of enquiring: doth the world tempt man? take heed of apoſtaſie: doth the fleſh tempt man? take heed of carnalitie. But doe we ſo? Are wee warie of theſe tempters? No, we are not, and therefore we fall. We fall on the right hand, by temptations in proſperitie: and we fall on the left, by temptations in adverſitie. Of the one it may be ſaid, it hath [g] ſlaine thouſands: of the other, that it hath ſlaine ten thouſands.

When we come and ſee cities diſpeopled, houſes defaced, and wals pulled downe, we ſay the Souldier hath beene there: and when we ſee pride in the rich, diſcontent in the poore, and ſinne in all, we may juſtly ſay, the Tempter hath beene there.

Now of all other temptations, it pleaſeth God to ſuffer his Church to bee tempted with afflictions. It is never free either from the ſword of Iſmael, which is a reviling [a] tongue: or ſword of Eſau, a [b] perſecuting hand. Neither was there yet ever Chriſtian man found, who had not his part in the cup of affliction. We muſt drinke of the [c] ſame cup our maſter did: [d] the diſciple is not above his maſter.

The reaſons why God doth viſit us thus with afflictions, are; 1. To humble us. 2. To weane us. 3. To winnow us. 4. To prevent us. 5. To teach us. 6. To enlighten us. 7. To honour us. 8. To cure us. 9. To crowne us. 10. To comfort us. 11. To protect us. 12. To adopt us. And laſt of all, to teach and comfort others. To [e] humble us, that we be not proud: to [f] weane us, that we love not this world: to [g] winnow us, that we be not chaffe: to [h] prevent us, that we doe not ſinne: to [i] teach us, that we be patient in adverſitie: to [k] enlighten us, that we ſee our errours: to [l] honour us, that our faith may be manifeſt: to cure us, that we [m] ſurfet not of ſecuritie: to [n] crowne us, that we may live eternally: to [o] comfort us, that he may ſend his ſpirit: to [p] protect us, that he may guide us by his Angels: to [q] adopt vs, that we may be his ſonnes: and to [r] teach others, that they ſeeing how ſinne is puniſhed in us, may take heed it be not found in them: that they [s] ſeeing our comforts in troubles, may not bee diſcouraged in the like trials.

Thus a Chriſtian mans diet is more ſowre than ſweet: his Phyſicke is more aloes than honey: his life is more a pilgrimage than a progreſſe: and his death is more deſpiſed than honoured. This if men would thinke of before, afflictions would bee as welcome to the ſoule of man, as afflicted [d] Ruth was to the field of Boaz. But becauſe we looke not for them before they come, thinke not on Gods doing when they are come, and doe deſire to bee happie both here and hereafter; therefore wee can away with the name of Naomi, but in no caſe would be called [e] Mara. Wee [f] ſee the Sea, not the Whale: the [g] Ægyptian, not the ſalvation: the [h] Lions mouth, not him that ſtoppeth the Lions mouth. If we could ſee God in our troubles, as [i] Eliſha did in his, then would we ſay, There are more with us, than there are againſt us. But becauſe we doe not, therefore at everie aſſault of the Aſſyrians, we ſay, as the ſervant to [k] Eliſha did: Alas Maſter, what ſhall we doe? And with the Diſciples, [l] Careſt thou not maſter that we periſh? Yet it is good for us to ſuffer affliction: [m] Bleſſed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he ſhall receive the crowne of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to them that love him. It is [a] commanded by God, [b] practiſed by Chriſt, [c] yeelded to by the Saints, [d] aſſigned by Gods providence, and good for us each way. We are Gods [e] trees, wee ſhall grow better by pruning: Gods pomander, ſmell better by rubbing: Gods ſpice, bee more profitable by bruiſing: and Gods conduits, we are the better by running. Let us ſuffer afflictions, they are [f] momentanie in reſpect of time: [g] favours, if we reſpect Gods love, and a meanes to bring us to the Kingdome of God. If they did conſume us, we might wiſh them an end; but they doe purge us, let us be content. They [h] are Gods fan, we are Gods wheat; they are Gods boulter, wee are Gods meale; they are Gods [i] flame, wee are Gods buſh; they are Gods [k] cords, wee are Gods ſacrifice; they are Gods fornace, wee are Gods gold. The wheat will not be good without the fan, nor the meale without the boulter, nor the buſh without the flame, nor the ſacrifice without the cords, nor the gold without the fornace: they are trials, not puniſhments, if we be ſonnes: puniſhments, not trials, if wee be ſlaves. Let us then beare them, they will [l] have an end: joy [m] will follow: they [n] ſhew us our weakneſſe, they [o] move us to pray, they [p] ſhew we are in the path-way to Heaven, and [q] make us contemne this preſent world. By them wee [r] learne to repent us of ſinne paſt, [s] to take heed of ſinne preſent, and to foreſee ſinne to come. By them we [t] receive Gods ſpirit, [u] are like to Chriſt, are acquainted [x] with Gods power, have joy in [y] deliverance, know benefit of proſperitie, made more hardie to ſuffer, and [z] have cauſe to practiſe many excellent vertues. They cauſe us (as one ſaith) to ſeeke out Gods promiſe, the promiſe to ſeeke faith, faith to ſeeke prayer, and prayer to finde God. [a] Seeke and yee ſhall finde, [b] call and he will anſwer, [c] wait and he wil come. I am to write an Epiſtle, I muſt not be long. Iobs [d] meſſengers came not ſo faſt on him, but Iobs afflictions may come as faſt upon us. Hath David ſlaine a [e] Beare? he ſhall encounter with a Lion: hath he killed a Lion? hee muſt fight with [f] Goliah: hath he ſubdued Goliah? he muſt make a rode upon the Philiſtims: are the Philiſtims conquered? [g] Saul will aſſault him. Remember Davids troubles, and foreſee what may be our troubles. The more righteous wee are, the more manifold are our troubles: and the better we are, the better we may indure them.

But as our troubles are many, ſo are our deliverances many: God will deliver us out of all. Hee that delivered [p] Noah from the flood, [q] Lot from Sodome, [r] Iacob from Eſau, [s] Ioſeph from Potiphar, [t] Moſes from Pharaoh, [u] Iſrael from Ægypt, [x] David from Saul, [y] Eliah from Achab, [z] Eliſha from the Syrians, [a] Naaman from his leproſie, [b] Hezekiah from the plague, [c] the three children from the fire, [d] Daniel from the Lions, [e] Ioſeph from Herod, the Apoſtles [f] from the Iewes, and [g] Chriſt from the Devill: he, even he will deliver us from trouble, or comfort us in trouble, or mitigate troubles when they come upon us.

He [h] hath promiſed to doe it, and he that hath promiſed, is able to doe it. And this he doth ſometimes by no meanes, ſometimes by ſmall meanes, and ſometimes by ordinarie meanes, ſometimes by extraordinarie, ſometimes contrarie to all meanes. By no [i] meanes he cured the Cripple at Bethesda: by [k] ſmall meanes, hee fed five thouſand in the deſart: by [l] ordinarie meanes, hee was brought from the pinnacle: by meanes [m] extraordinarie, he was provided for in hunger: and contrarie to all meanes, were the [n] three children preſerved in the fornace of fire.

I have good cauſe to thinke of Gods gracious deliverance, being my ſelfe delivered from a great trouble. Since the time I was diſmiſſed from my poore charge, where I would have continued, if malice had not hindred mee, I have lived in an end of this Citie: dangerouſly in reſpect of the ſickneſſe, poorely in reſpect of maintenance, and painfully in reſpect of my Miniſterie; yet untill this time hath the Lord delivered me; and as Paul ſaid, he [o] will deliver me, if that he ſee it be beſt for me.

Let man therefore [p] comfort himſelfe in the Lord: [q] after two dayes he will revive us, and the third day he will raiſe us up againe: [r] Heavineſſe may endure for a night, but joy will come in the morning. [s] Doubtleſſe there is a reward for the righteous; verily, [t] God retaineth not his wrath for ever. Could he overcome the world, and can he not overcome many troubles in the world? Yea, let one plague follow another, as one quale ſings to another: yet, as the [u] viper leaped on Pauls hand, and forthwith leaped off againe; ſo one trouble ſhall leape upon the righteous, and anon leape off againe: [x] though hee fall, he ſhall riſe againe; the righteous ſhall not bee forſaken for ever.

If he hath delivered us from the guilt of our ſins, he will deliver us from the puniſhment of our ſinnes. Let us then therefore be patient in trouble, conſtant in hope, rooted in love; let us wait, and he will come; call, and he will heare; beleeve, and hee will will performe; repent us of our evill committed against him, and he will repent of his evill intended against us. Hee is over us by his providence, about us by his Angels, in us by his spirit, with us by his word, under us by his power, and upon us by his Son. In him is our helpe, from him is our comfort, by him is our victorie, and for him is our trouble. In thee [a] have I trusted, saith a King: who ever was [b] confounded that trusted in the Lord, said a friend? and as Elkanah was to [c] Hannah in stead of many sons, so God is to his in stead of many comforters. Of other comforters wee may say as Iob did of his friends; [d] Silly comforters are you all. They will leave us, as mice doe a ruinous house: but the Lord (like [e] Ruth to Naomi) will never leave us, nor forsake us. Especially in the houre of death, [f] which is in remembrance bitter to great men: in that houre of death hee will be with us, and command his [g] Angels to take charge of our soules, the [h] earth to be as a bed for our bodies; that so the one may goe into [i] glorie, the other reserved in hope of like glorie, and bee made [k] one day like unto the glorious bodie of Christ Iesus. Thus, Right Honourable, you have seene the righteous in affliction; as Israel [l] was in Babylon: and the Lord like [m] Zorobabel is readie to deliver them. Though in troubles Christ seemes as in the ship [n] to sleepe, yet in deliverance he awakes, as a man out of sleep, and as a Giant refreshed with wine. He will rebuke the waves and winds of troubles and persecution; and they shall flie before him, as Sisera did before [a] Debora, and the [b] Philistims before Ionathan and his servant. And as [c] Christ asking the woman of her accuser, she answered, There was none: so in the end, aske a Christian of his trouble, and hee will say, There are none. Hee is a buckler for our left hand, and a sword in our right: hee is an helmet on our head, and harnesse for our bodie. We shall looke upon troubles, as [d] Israel did upon the Ægyptians, as the Iewes [e] did on Goliah, and as the Grecians did on Hector, to triumph over them: and as the Angell said to Ioseph, [f] They are dead that sought the childes life, so the Spirit shall say to the afflicted, They are dead that did seeke your life. A day of deliverance, a veere of Iubile will come, and then Ioseph [g] shall be out of prison, [h] Iacob out of servitude, and Iob [i] shall lie no more in the dust of the earth: [k] Let us comfort our selves with these words.

I have exceeded an Epistle, especially to such a small Booke. If the wals seeme too great for this Citie, abundans cautela non nocet. It is usuall for Students, not only to present their owne labours, but other mens to great personages; especially such Workes wherein they have beene either Translators or Overseers. It were infinite to instance this point. I am bold to doe the like to your Honour at this time. This Copie it was brought unto my hand, I have conferred it with another, I have perused it at the Presse, I heard divers of the Sermons, I have added nothing of mine owne: and I desire, that of these many baskets [a] full of most delicate diet, which this worthy man hath now left behinde him, there may not so much as any one be lost. If any such come unto my hand, surely they shall not be lost. By his life had I much comfort, and I will seeke to honour him after he is dead. I was twentie yeeres acquainted with him: I at his request made the first fruits of his labours to speake English. And now I am bold to present this his Posthume to your Patronage. Your Honourable Nephew, his vertuous Ladie, your worthy Sister, have heretofore accepted the labours of this man. If it shall please your good Honour to doe the like, this Preface of mine shall remaine as a perpetuall testimonie of my dutie to you: and the Booke following as fully armed against all such adversaries as shall speake against it. # A GENERALL VIEW OF THE Strange Combat betweene our Saviour CHRIST and SATAN.

- The Description of this Combat betweene Christ and Satan containeth
  - A Preface, or Preparation, consisting of
    - Christs going forth to the place of Combat, — Vers. 1.
    - Christs abode and conversing in that place, — Vers. 2.
  - The Combat it selfe consisting of three great conflicts:
    - First, tending to bring Christ to unbeleefe: and is consisteth of
      - Satans preparation thereto, — Vers. 3.
      - The temptation it selfe, — Vers. 3.
      - Christs repulse thereof, — Vers. 4.
    - Second, tending to bring Christ to presumption: containing
      - Satans preparation, — Vers. 5.
      - The assault or temptation, — Vers. 6.
      - Christs repulse and answer, — Vers. 7.
    - Third, tending to bring Christ to Idolatrie: containing
      - Satans preparation, — Vers. 8.
      - The assault or temptation, — Vers. 9.
      - Christs repulse and answer, — Vers. 10.
  - An happie issue and event thereof, consisting of
    - Satans departing from Christ, — Vers. 11.
    - The Angels ministring unto Christ, — Vers. 11.

THE COMBAT BETWEENE CHRIST and the Devill expounded.

MATTH. 4. 1.

Then was Jesus led aside of the spirit into the wildernesse to bee tempted of the Devill.

THe eleven first verses of this chapter do containe a briefe description of Christs temptations, whereof I have chosen to treat, having formerly handled the doctrine of Conscience, because all that endevour, either to get or keepe a good conscience, are most of all subject to temptations. Now here wee have the speciall temptations of the Devill, wherewith he assaulted our Saviour Christ, and in Christs example the best way to avoid the same. This description consisteth of three distinct parts: First, A Preface or preparation to a combat betweene Christ and the Devill, vers. 1, 2. Secondly, The combat or conflict it selfe, vers. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Thirdly, The issue or event of this combat, vers. 11.

I. Part. The Preparation to the combat hath two parts: First, Christs going forth to that place where the combat was to be fought, vers. 1. Secondly, his abode and conversing in that place, vers. 2, 1. Christs going forth to the place is set out by sundrie circumstances of the Evangelists: as, The time when he went; The author of his going; The manner how hee went furnished; The place whither he went: And the end wherefore.

I. Circumstance. The time when Christ went forth to be tempted is noted in this word, Then: what time this was, wee shall see in the end of the former chapter, where is set downe the baptisme of our Saviour Christ by Iohn in the river Jordan; as also the great honour and majestie wherewith he was there renowned: for it pleased Christ for speciall end and purpose, to bee baptized, not as we are, to put off sinne, for hee had none; but to be ordained a Mediator for us, that putting on our sinne, hee might beare the burden thereof in our stead. Againe, in his baptisme he was distinctly proclaimed, The Doctor of his Church: for immediately thereupon, The Holy Ghost descended upon him like a dove, and a voice came from heaven, saying, This is my wel-beloved sonne, whom I am wel pleased. Now so soon as Christ was thus solemnly inaugurated into his office, & proclaimed from heaven to be the sole Doctor & Prophet of Gods Church, even then immediately without any delay was he driven forth, as Marke saith, chap. 1. 12.

The Vse. In that Christ is no sooner baptized, but hee is presently tempted, wee learne, that all those who are truly baptized into Christ, must make account to bee tempted, and prepare for a combat with the Devill, even through the whole course of their lives: for if Satan durst bee so bold, as to encounter with Christ Jesus the head of the Church after his baptisme, then doubtlesse he will not spare any of his members, who are but weake and sinfull men. Againe, in baptisme a man gives up his name unto God, promising therein for ever to renounce all service to the Devill, the flesh, and the world; and contrariwise, to beleeve in God, and to serve him: and this vow being thus made, it is the will of God hee should bee tempted, that in the schoole of temptation, he might learne to practise his baptisme. But here most men will say, they never felt by experience in themselves the truth of this doctrine; for they have not perceived any such combat in themselves, though they have beene baptized many yeares agone. Answ. Such men whatsoever they be, have indeed the outward baptisme of water, but they never yet received the inward ward baptisme of the spirit; they weare Christs liverie, but as yet they doe service unto Satan: and though they have beene made partakers of the seales of the covenant, yet still they abide within the kingdome of darknesse; for Christ here teacheth by his owne example, that all those who have received the inward baptisme of the spirit, whereby they have effectually put off sinne, and put on the Lord Jesus, are as sure to be tempted by Satan as himselfe was; therefore let such persons as never yet felt in themselves this spirituall conflict, now begin to reforme their lives, and to performe their vow of baptisme, and they shall undoubtedly finde in themselves the truth of this doctrine, That all that are baptized into Christ, shall be tempted of the Devill. So long as the children of Israel continued under Pharaohs bondage, they were not pursued by his armie; but when they set their faces toward the land of Canaan, then presently he makes after them, with all his might and malice; even so, while men live in sin, and submit themselves to Satans spirituall bondage, hee will suffer all things to bee in peace with them; but if once they set their hearts on the heavenly Canaan, and give themselves sincerely to Gods service, then will he with all his force pursue them, and meet them with armies of temptations to turne them backe into their old way of sinne againe. The silly bird that is in the snare, or under the net, so long as she lieth still, feeles no harme; but when shee stirs and offers to get away, then beginnes her paine, and the more shee strives, the more shee findes her selfe ensnared: So fareth it with silly men, while they live in sin securely, they are not troubled with Satans temptations; but when they begin to leave their bad courses, and settle themselves to serve the Lord, then presently the Devill seekes to spread his net to intangle them in the snare. The consideration whereof must teach us, to watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation; and (as Paul saith) to put on the whole armour of God, that wee may bee able to stand against the assaults of the Devill, Ephes. 6.11.

Men set apart for some speciall calling, must looke for temptations.

Secondly, in that our Saviour Christ after his solemne inauguration into his Mediatorship, was immediately to go to be tempted, we learne, that all those that are set apart by God to any speciall calling, even at their verie entrance thereinto must looke for temptations. This befell the head, and therefore all the members must reckon for it. When Moses was first called to bee the guide and conductor of Gods people out of Ægypt, having slaine an Ægyptian in defence of one of his brethren, upon knowledge of the fact he was faine to flie from Pharaohs Court into the land of Midian, and there to live a shepherds life, for many yeeres with his father in law Iethro. And David was no sooner appointed by God to bee King over his people Israel, but Saul began to persecute him, and so continued all his dayes. And our Saviour Christ, having called his Apostles to their office of preaching his Kingdome, tooke them soone after to the sea, and there falling asleepe, suffered their ship to bee so tossed with waves in a great tempest, that they looked for nothing but present drowning, so as they cried out, Master, save us, wee perish. And this the Lord doth in great wisdome for the good of his children: first to teach them, that no man is able of himselfe to carrie himselfe in any acceptable course of his calling, without Gods speciall assistance and grace. Secondly, to stirre up in them those good gifts and graces, which hee hath formerly bestowed on them; as the feare of his name, the love of his majestie, the gifts of prayer, faith, patience, and many other which he would have tried in the entrance of their callings, and exercised in the continuance thereinto unto the end.

Thirdly, seeing Christ begins his Prophetical office of teaching his Church, with temptations; this should admonish all Ministers of the Word, that howsoever all Gods people must prepare themselves against Satans temptations, yet they must doe it above the rest; for looke as in a pitched field, the enemie aimeth principally at the Standard-bearer; even so Satan and his instruments doe among all Gods people bend their greatest forces against the Ministers of Christ which hold up his scepter, and display his banner in the preaching of the Gospell. When Iehoshuah the high Priest stood before the Lord, Satan stood at his right hand to resist him, Zach. 3.1. And when Ahab went to fight against the King of Syria, Satan became a lying spirit in the mouth of 400. Prophets and moe, 1 King. 22.22. This is that great red dragon, that with his taile drew downe the third part of the starres of heaven, that is, of the Ministers and Preachers of the Word, and cast them to the earth, Revel. 12.3, 4. This is he that desired to winnow the Disciples as wheat, Luk. 22, 31. And as the King of Aram said of Ahab, Fight not against small nor great, but against the King of Israel only, 1 King. 22.31. So Satan fighteth not against any so much as the Prophets of Israel, the Ministers of the Church.

Ministers specially must looke for temptations.

It is good for Ministers to bee tempted.

Fourthly, in that Christ is tempted before he goe to preach, we learne that it is good and profitable for Gods Ministers to bee exercised with temptation even of Satan himselfe, and that for sundrie causes; first, that they may know what temptations meane; Secondly, that they may be the more able to minister help and comfort to those that are tempted; Thirdly, to make them understand the word of God aright; for many places of Scripture cannot so well be understood by bare studie only, as by temptations therewithall: and it is true which one saith well, Reading, meditation, prayer, and temptation, make a Divine.

that Jesus was carried apart by the Spirit; which must not bee understood of any locall transportation of his bodie, from the river to the wildernesse, as Elias was carried from earth to heaven; or as Philip was taken away from the Eunuch, and carried to Azotus; but it was a motion of the Holy Ghost, wherewith Christ was filled above measure, and made willing to encounter with Satan in that combat: for so are the words by Saint Luke, being full of the Holy Ghost, he returned from Iordan, and was led by the Spirit into the wildernesse, that is, by the inward motion and instinct of Gods spirit. Againe, Saint Marke saying, the Spirit drove him into the wildernesse, giveth us further to understand, that this motion in Christ from the Spirit, was a peculiar motion; not forced or constrained, but voluntarie, and yet verie strong and effectuall.

2 King. 2. 11. Acts 8. 39. 40.

Luk. 4. 1.

Mark. 1. 12.

Againe, by the Spirit here is not meant the Devill, or an evill spirit, but the holy spirit of God: hee it was that moved Christ to goe into the wildernesse; so that the meaning is this: After Christ was baptized in Jordan by Iohn, he willingly tooke his journey into the wilderneſse, being moved thereunto by a speciall and strong instinct of Gods Holy Spirit, wherewith he was filled above measure. If any aske, how Christ could be led by the spirit, seeing he sends the spirit: Answ. These two may well stand together: for Christ must bee considered two wayes; first, as man in the forme of a servant; secondly, as God, even the Son of God, yea God himselfe. Now as Christ was man, he was subject to Gods providence, and so was led and guided by the Holy Ghost: but as he is God, he is not subject to providence, but is the author thereof, and is not himselfe led or sent, but together with the Father, sendeth the Spirit.

The holinesse of Christs manhood.

The Vse. In this circumstance wee may observe, first, the exceeding holinesse of Christs manhood, in that hee moved not from one place to another, without the speciall instinct and direction of the Spirit of God. By which example wee are taught, to suffer our selves to bee ordred and guided by the spirit of God, in everie thing wee take in hand; yea, in all our thoughts, words, and deeds; for this is the true note of everie childe of God, to be led by the spirit, Rom. 8. 14. where the Apostle useth the same word that S. Luke doth, speaking of this leading of our Saviour to be tempted: we must therefore labour to be of Davids disposition, to have our hearts pliable to all Gods testimonies. When God said, Seeke ye my face, Davids heart answered, I seeke thy face, O Lord, Psal. 27. 8. and thus doing, we shall suffer our selves to be directed and guided by the Holy Ghost: for he teacheth and guideth men by the Word.

Temptations come not by chance.

Secondly, from this that Christ was led unto temptation by the spirit of God, we learne, that temptations come not by chance, nor yet by the will & pleasure of the Devill only: for he could not touch Iob, or ought hee had, till God gave

Iob 1. 12.

A him leave: or enter into the herd of Swine, till Christ said, Go: but temptations come by Gods most just permission, and not without his speciall providence and appointment. This combat of Christ with Satan was decreed of God, by his speciall appointment in his eternall counsell. And therefore was Christ led by the spirit to encounter with the Devill, that hee might performe this one work of a Mediator, namely, in temptation overcome him, who by temptation overcame all mankinde. And as God appointed this combat of our Saviour, so hath he also ordained the temptations of everie Christian, and the circumstances thereof. The theater or place of this combat, is this present evill world: the actors are Satan & everie Christian; B the beholders are men and Angels, 1 Cor. 4. 9. The Umpire and Judge is God himselfe, who overruleth Satan, so as the issue cannot but bee happie and blessed to those that fight manfully; For hee casteth away none that bee mightie and valiant of courage, Job 36. 5. Hee will give an issue with the temptations, 1 Cor. 10. 13. from whence we learne sundrie good instructions.

Matth. 8. 32.

First, when we are tossed and tried by manifold temptations, we must not thinke it strange, but rather count it exceeding great joy, Jam. 1. 2. because it is Gods blessed will and ordinance, that Satan and everie Christian should enter combat and conflict, for the triall of his graces in them.

Secondly, wee are hereby taught to labour C with patience to beare all trials and afflictions, not using unlawfull meanes to winde our selves out of them, because they come by the speciall providence of the Almightie.

Thirdly, Christ went not to be tempted, till he was led by the spirit; therefore no man must wittingly put himselfe into danger, without a calling from God, least therein he tempt God: indeed a man may bee moved extraordinarily, to offer himselfe into places of danger; thus Paul went bound in the spirit to Hierusalem, that is, he willingly followed the motion of the Holy Ghost, which inwardly enforced him to goe thither. And the same may be said of many holy Martyrs, who though they might have escaped by flight, yet did willingly offer themselves into the hands of their persecutors, and endured D the violence of their torments, which we must think they did by a speciall motion of the Holy Ghost; otherwise, for a man to offer himselfe into danger without all warrant from God, is to swarve from the practice of Christ in this place.

Acts 20. 22.

Fourthly, Christ being lead by the Spirit, did not seeke to shroud himselfe from this combat; so likewise if a man follow his calling according to Gods wil, & thereupon fall into troubles and temptations, hee may not seeke to escape them by neglecting his dutie, but with courage and patience must inure himselfe to beare them, waiting on the Lord by well-doing for his deliverance. Here it may well be asked, whether a man can lawfully & with good conscience

Queſt. Of abode in places hanted by ſpirits.

ſcience abide in thoſe places which are certainly knowen to be hanted with evill ſpirits? Anſw. Some indeed are ſo venturous and bold, that they feare nothing: yet the truth is, no man ought on his owne head, abide or lodge in ſuch places, unleſſe it be within the compaſſe of his calling, or elſe have a true extraordinarie motion of Gods ſpirit ſo to doe; we are therefore to avoid them rather, than wittingly and willingly thruſt our ſelves into the danger of ſuch places; for if God have given libertie unto Satan, to poſſeſſe ſuch places as have been conſecrated to idolatrie, or defiled by oppreſſion and bloud, or ſuch like abhominations; why ſhould wee without warrant from God, put our ſelves into his hands? This alſo may ſerve to reprove thoſe men, who preſume ſo much upon their ſtrong faith, that they never ſticke to thruſt themſelves into moſt lewd companie: but let ſuch perſons beware, for places of bad companie are places of danger, by reaſon of that power and libertie which Satan hath among them, for there he hath a throne, Revel. 2.13. How then can it be, that they ſhould cleane eſcape the infection of ſinne, who doe uſually converſe with thoſe that commit it without controlment? He that walketh with the wiſe (ſaith Salomon) ſhall be wiſe: but a companion of fooles ſhall be made worſe: ſo the words ſignifie; and therefore his counſell is, not to conſent when ſinners entice us: not to make friendſhip with the angrie perſon, nor to goe with the furious, leſt wee learne their wayes, and receive deſtruction to our ſoules.

Prov.13.20.

Prov.1.10.

Prov.22.24.

Fifthly, in this leading of Chriſt by the ſpirit, we learne a further thing: ſo long as Chriſt was a private man, he lived with Ioſeph and Marie a private life; but being baptized, and thereby inſtalled into the office of Mediator, he returnes not to Bethlem or Nazaret where he was borne and brought up, but gets him preſently into the wildernesſe, there to encounter with Satan, and that by the motion of the ſpirit: wherin we may ſee, that all that are appointed and ſet apart by God for any ſpecial calling, are in ſome ſort changed by his ſpirit, and as it were made other men. When Saul was anointed to be king, the Text ſaith, God gave him another heart, 1 Sam. 10.9. And when David was made of a Shepherd a King, he was furniſhed for that place, as his behaviour ſhewed, which was ſuch as did beſeeme a King. Thus the Apoſtles of our Saviour Chriſt, of poore fiſher-men, altogether unlettered, by the gift of Chriſts calling, were made able Miniſters of the New Teſtament, and ſo became indeed fiſhers of men, Mark.1.17. Which ſerves to confute ſuch men as plead extraordinarie callings, as many have done: ſome ſaying they were Elias, ſome Iohn Baptiſt, &c. For if theſe were ſuch men, and had received ſuch extraordinarie callings, then ſhould they withall have been endued with extraordinarie gifts fit for thoſe callings; but no ſuch thing befalleth them; nay it is plaine, they remaine the ſame men they were before, without any change at all in reſpect of gifts fit for ſuch perſons as they pretend themſelves to bee. And to apply this to our ſelves; wee are all by nature the children of wrath, and enemies unto God; but by grace we are made Kings, Prieſts, and Prophets: Kings to rule over the world and the Devill, in reſpect of their provocations unto ſinne, as alſo to ſubdue in our ſelves our owne evill luſts and affections: Prieſts, to offer up ſpirituall ſacrifices unto God, as prayers and praiſes for his daily bleſſings: and Prophets, to inſtruct our ſelves and others in the wayes of God, according to our gifts and calling. Now then it behoveth us all to become new men, and to lead new lives, fitting and ſutable to our holy calling, giving our ſelves wholly to the honour and ſervice of God, ſhewing hereby that wee are hereunto called by his ſpirit of grace and holineſſe: ſo ſhall we walke worthy of the Lord, and ſhew forth the vertues of him that hath called us, 1 Pet. 2.9.

III. Circumſtance. How Chriſt went furniſhed into this place of combat: which though our Evangeliſt Matthew hath omitted, yet hath S. Luke plainly noted, ſaying, Hee was filled with the Holy Ghoſt, Luk.4.1. If any ſhall ſay, this ſeemes to import that Chriſt wanted the fulneſſe of the ſpirit all the former part of his life, if now only after his baptiſme hee were filled therewith: I anſwer; This fulnes of the ſpirit is aſcribed unto Chriſt after his baptiſme, not as though hee formerly ſuſtained any want of the ſpirit, but becauſe at his baptiſme he received a greater meaſure of the ſpirit, than hee had before: for this we muſt know, that Chriſt was alwayes filled with the ſpirit; being an infant, he had a full meaſure of gifts fit for his infancie, and ſtill as his growth in yeeres required more graces of the ſpirit, hee increaſeth therein, having in his youth, and in his riper yeeres full meaſure of gifts fit for his eſtate in thoſe times. And at his baptiſme, being inaugurated into his Mediatorſhip, he received ſuch fulnes of the ſpirit, as was behovefull for ſo high an office, which becauſe it was far greater than before he needed, therefore is he now ſaid to be filled with the Holy Ghoſt: ſo that though Chriſt were alwayes full of grace, yet he increaſed therein, as his ſtate and calling did require.

The Vſe. This ſerves to confute the Papiſts, who teach that Chriſt had all fulnes of ſpirit in his infancie, even from his conception & birth; and did not grow in grace at all, ſave only experimentally, as he had occaſion to manifeſt the ſame more and more in practice. But S. Luke ſaith plainly, that Ieſus increaſed in wiſdome, & ſtature, and in favour with God & men, Luk. 2.52. Againe, Chriſt was like unto man in all things, ſin only excepted, & therfore did increaſe in grace, as man doth in gifts from time to time.

Further, Chriſt goeth thus furniſhed to this combat, that hee might bee able to encounter with Satan hand to hand, and at the end give him him the finall overthrow. Thus hee furnished Moses for his ambassage unto Pharaoh; and David for his combat with Goliah; Aholiab and Bezaliel for the worke of the Tabernacle; and everie one whom God imployeth about any speciall worke, is furnished and fitted thereto of God with speciall gifts: whereby in everie age wee may see whom God placeth in any calling, for they are well qualified for the duties thereof; and therefore those that want gifts meet for their callings, doe thrust in themselves thereto, and are not placed therein of God.

IV. Circumstance. Whither was Christ led to be tempted? namely, into the wildernesse, that is the place chosen of God for this combat. There bee divers opinions touching this place; some thinke it was a little wildernesse betweene Jerusalem and Jericho; some the desart of Palestina; others the great desart of Arabia, where Elias fasted fortie dayes and fortie nights; and where the Israelites wandred fortie yeeres. But seeing the Holy Ghost doth not define what wildernesse this was, we are not curiously to inquire after it, but only know it was a desart and solitarie place. Let us rather search into the reasons, wherefore hee chose a desart place for this combat, and they are divers: First, because he was to worke our redemption in great humilitie, even in the base and low estate of a servant, for the satisfying of Gods justice in that nature which had sinned, therefore hee would not goe to Jerusalem, there to shew his glorie and God-head, as a little before hee was proclaimed in his baptisme; but he gets himselfe to a desart place, void of all pompe and glorie, where he meant to begin this great work for us, by encountring with our chiefest adversarie. Secondly, he chose this place for the more easie encountrings with our adversarie Satan, whom he was to overcome for us: for if Christ after his baptisme should have shewed the glorie of his God-head, Satan durst not have meddled with him: therefore as the fisher hides the hooke, and shewes the bait to entice the fish, so our Saviour Christ with the vaile of his flesh, in this base estate, and solitarie place, did cover the glorie of his God-head, that Satan seeing him only in this low degree, might bee the more eager and bold to set upon him. Thirdly, Christ was willing to give unto his adversarie the advantage of the place, that therewithall he might give him the greater overthrow; for the Devill delights in desart & forlorne places, and there hee would chuse to practise his temptations, because in such places men want those helps and comforts which in societie they may finde: hence Salomon saith, Woe be to him that is alone: yea, God himselfe said of man in the state of his innocencie, It is not good for man to be himselfe alone. And that Satan takes advantage of such solitarinesse, appeareth by his tempting of Eve, when she was apart from her husband, Genes. 3. 1. Fourthly, the praise and honour of the victorie over Satan, was peculiar to Christ, and not communicable to any creature: and therefore Christ chose a desart place for this combat, apart from all humane society, that no man might challenge any part of this glorie to himselfe, but that it might bee wholly Christs, as of right it was. Fifthly, he went into a desart place for a time, that afterward hee might thence returne with more credit, reverence, and authoritie, to exercise his Prophetical office: for we see by experience, that when a man hath beene abroad for some time, hee is received with more reverence at his returne.

The Vse. From hence the Church of Rome would fetch a ground & warrant for their monasticall life: saying, that as Christ went apart into this desart, so may men sequester themselves from ordinarie societies, & live as Monks and Heremites in cloysters, woods, and desarts. But this collection is absurd, as may appeare by these reasons: First, Christ went not thus apart on his owne head, but by the instinct and motion of the Spirit of God: but the Papists admit and undertake the state of hermiticall & monasticall life without any warrant in Gods word. Secondly, Christ did thus sequester himselfe but once for a certaine time: but with them, an hermiticall estate is ordinarie and perpetuall for their whole life. Thirdly, our Saviour Christ fasted truly all the while hee abode in the wildernesse: but Papists in their Cloisters & Hermitages doe plentifully enjoy the wealth of the world in great ease and libertie. And therefore how soever solitarinesse for a time may be commendable in some cases, as to meditate on the works or word of God, as Isaac did, Gen. 24. 63. or for the exercise of prayer and fasting in more earnest manner: yet the Hermites life being a perpetuall forsaking of humane societies, is neither warrantable by Gods word, nor commendable in Gods childe.

Luk. 5. 16.

V. Circumst. The end why Christ went into the desart; namely, to be tempted of the Devill: wherein observe three points; How hee was tempted; wherefore; by whom. For the first; To Tempt, in Scripture is ascribed to God, to man, and to the Devill; God tempteth man, when he proveth him: that is, when hee maketh manifest what is in his heart for grace or sin, which before were hid to the world: thus God tempted Abraham in the offering up of his sonne, Gen. 22. 1. and Christ the Ruler, Luk. 18. 22. Man tempteth God, when hee proveth by unlawfull meanes, whether God be so powerfull, just, and mercifull, as the Scriptures doe affirme him to be: and thus the Israelites tempted God, when they required meat for their lust, and said, Can God prepare a table in the wildernesse? Psal. 78. 18, 19. The Devill tempteth when hee allureth unto sinne, by inward suggestions, or outward objects: and hereof must wee understand Christs tempting in this place: to wit, that he was led into the wildernesse for this end, that Satan might assault him: and use what meanes

he

he could not bring him unto ſinne. If any ſhall thinke it was too much derogatorie to the dignitie of Chriſt to be thus tempted; I anſwer; If it had ſo pleaſed him, Chriſt could have confounded the Devill with the leaſt word of his mouth: for as he is Creator of heaven & earth; ſo Satan hath no power to tempt him, for God cannot bee tempted with evill, Jam. 1. 13. But here Chriſt ſtood in our roome and ſtead (as hee did upon the croſſe) encountring with Satan for us, as if we in our owne perſons had been tempted. This therefore muſt be underſtood as a part of Chriſts humiliation in his manhood, whereto he ſubjected himſelfe for our ſakes, otherwiſe the Devill could not have tempted him. Object. This ſtands not with the holineſſe of Chriſt, as he is man to bee tempted with Satan. Anſ. Yes, he might be tempted of Satan without ſin, as our firſt parents were before their fall: this will plainly appeare, by comparing Chriſt with other men in their temptations.

The Devill in tempting a man to ſinne, firſt, conveyes into his minde, either by inward ſuggeſtion, or by outward object, the motion or cogitation of that ſinne which hee would have him to commit. Thus hee tempted Iudas, by caſting into him this evill thought, Iudas betray thy Maſter. And ſo dealeth he with Chriſt in this temptation, hee conveyeth to his minde or apprehenſion the unrighteous cogitation of unbeleefe, idolatrie, and covetouſneſſe; yet ſo as Chriſt received them not, but with all power of grace repelled them. Secondly, as Satan conveyes evill ſuggeſtions into mens mindes, ſo the ſame are full of trouble, ſorrow, and vexation; at leaſt to the godly: for when Satan preſſeth upon man his temptations, the whole man is diſquieted, his thoughts and affections are troubled, and his heart is vexed. And this alſo was in Chriſt: he felt ſorrow and moleſtation in himſelfe through theſe temptations, as appeareth by his Avant Satan, upon his laſt aſſault. And thus farre was Chriſt tempted like unto men. Thirdly, in temptations uſually bee corrupt motions; for though a man doe not approve, neither entertaine with delight, the Devils temptations, yet ſhall hee hardly keepe himſelfe from the ſtaine and taint of ſinne, becauſe the imaginations of his owne heart are naturally evill. Now herein Chriſt differeth from all men in temptation; for being perfectly holy in his humane nature, he did not in the leaſt meaſure receive any corruption into his minde, but by the power of grace did repell them more ſtrongly than they were offered. Put a burning match to tinder or gunpowder, and it will kindle preſently; but put it into water, and that will quench it ſtraight: ſo it fareth in temptations; our corrupt hearts like tinder doe eaſily ſuffer corruption to kindle in us; but Chriſts moſt holy heart did preſently like water quench the evill of Satans motions. And thus wee ſee how Chriſt was tempted, and yet without ſinne.

Ioh. 13. 27.

Similitude.

The Vſe. Hence we may obſerve a good direction for their comfort that are troubled with blaſphemous thoughts. Among other temptations that befall men in Gods Church, the Devill doth mightily aſſault ſome men, by caſting into their minds moſt fearefull motions of blaſphemie againſt God the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt, whereby he doth greatly aſtoniſh them, and bring them to deſpaire. Now the ground of their ſtay and comfort hence is this: There be incident to the minde of man two kindes of evill thoughts: Firſt, ſuch as ariſe from the fleſh, that is, from our corrupt nature; and the verie firſt motions of theſe are ſinnes, forbidden in the tenth Commandement. Secondly, there bee others that riſe not inwardly from the fleſh, but are from without conveyed into the minde by the Devill, as theſe moſt horrible blaſphemies againſt God, which would make a godly heart to tremble and quake, once to thinke upon. Now theſe are our heavie croſſes indeed, when wee bee aſſaulted with them, but the Devils ſinnes wholly, and become not ours, till wee receive them by ſome degree of delight or aſſent, as may hence appeare; for Chriſt was tempted to infidelitie, covetouſneſſe, and idolatrie, yet his holy heart received them not, and ſo they never became his ſinnes.

The ſecond point to bee conſidered in this circumſtance is, wherefore Chriſt was tempted: for it may ſeeme ſtrange, that Jeſus Chriſt the Sonne of God, yea verie God, equall with the Father, ſhould bee tempted. The reaſons therefore that moved him to bee tempted, are theſe; Firſt, that he might foile the Devill at his owne weapon; for the Devill overcame the firſt Adam in temptation, therefore Chriſt the ſecond Adam would in temptation overcome him. Secondly, that in his example hee might give us direction whereby to know the ſpeciall temptations wherewith the Devill aſſaults the Church, as alſo how to withſtand and repel the ſame: for this cauſe no doubt hath the ſpirit of God ſo diſtinctly ſet downe Chriſts victorie over them all: which plainly confuteth the common opinion of ignorant people, who thinke thoſe that are tempted by the Devill to be moſt vile and wicked men, ſuch as have forſaken God, and therefore God hath forſaken them; but behold Chriſt Jeſus, the moſt holy perſon that ever was, even the holy one of God, was tempted of Satan, and that exceeding ſore, having the ſame troubles and vexations thereby ariſing in his minde that we have, inſomuch as the Angels came to miniſter comfort unto him, verſ. 11. Gods deareſt children therefore may and muſt be tempted; for that is no token of a childe of wrath, unleſſe we will ſay, that Chriſt Jeſus was the childe of wrath, which once to thinke were moſt blaſphemous. Thirdly, Chriſt was tempted, that he might be a mercifull high Prieſt unto them that are tempted, Hebr. 2. 17, 18. for himſelfe knowing the trouble and anguiſh of temptation, muſt needs in a more com-

Reaſons why Chriſt was tempted.

Matth. 4. verſ. 1.

compaſſionate fellow-feeling of their miſeries bee readie to helpe and comfort his members when they are tempted.

The third point is, the author of Chriſts temptations, to wit, the Devill: the name Devill ſignifieth a caviller, a ſlanderer, and an accuſer. He is an accuſer three wayes: hee accuſeth God to man; man to God; and man to man. Firſt, God to man; as when he told Eve, they ſhould not die, though they did eat of the forbidden fruit, Gen. 3.4. which was as much as if hee had ſaid, God doth but deceive you with that threatning, yee ſhall not die at all. Secondly, he accuſeth men to God, and therefore is called the accuſer of the brethren: and Apoc. 12.9. our adverſarie who goeth about like a roaring 1 Pet. 5.8. Lion: which word adverſarie ſignifies one that enters plea or ſuit againſt us: thus he dealt with godly Iob by the Lords owne confeſſion, Iob 2.3. Thirdly, he accuſeth man to man, by ingendring ungodly and uncharitable ſurmiſes and ſuſpicions, in one man againſt another, and in cauſing one man to ſlander and injurie another: and for this cauſe is he ſaid to worke in the children of diſobedience, Epheſ. 2.2. and their wiſdome is ſaid to be devilliſh, who have bitter envying and ſtrife in their hearts, Jam. 3.14,15.

1 The Vſe. From this verie name we are to be admoniſhed of two things. Firſt, to beware of falſe-accuſing, tale-bearing, and ſlandering: for in theſe practices wee put on the Devils name, and ſhew forth the infection of his nature: Paul telling Timothie, that a Minister 1 Tim. 3.6. muſt not be a novice, leſt hee bee puffed up, and fall into the condemnation of the Devill, uſeth ſuch a word for the Devils name, as ſignifieth a falſe accuſer or ſlanderer; to ſhew unto us that ſuch an one is a Devill incarnate. And yet this is the common ſinne of this age, to ſpeake evill, and to backbite, when they ſpeake one of another. Secondly, hereby wee are taught to beware, how at any time, or any way, wee diſſwade any one from embracing or obeying true religion: for herein wee ſhew our ſelves to bee the children of the Devill. When Elymas the Sorcerer would have turned Sergius Paulus Acts 13.10. from the faith, Paul cals him, full of all ſubtiltie and miſchiefe, the childe of the Devill. And this I doe the rather obſerve, becauſe it is an unſuall thing to draw others back from the power of godlineſſe; though not in plaine termes, yet partly in reproaches, and partly by bad example of life. Now all ſuch had need to looke to their eſtate; for the children of the Devill are like to have their portion with the Devill and his Angels. And thus much for the author of Chriſts temptations; as alſo for the firſt part of Chriſts preparation to this Combat.

2. *And when he had faſted fortie dayes and fortie nights, he was afterward hungrie.

A Here is the ſecond part of Chriſts preparation to this Combat, namely, his abode in the wilderneſſe; which is ſet out unto us by foure arguments: I. By his faſting fortie dayes and fortie nights, noted in the words of this verſe. II. By his abode with wilde beaſts, noted by Saint Marke, chap. 1.12. III. By his enduring of temptations within the ſpace of theſe fortie dayes and fortie nights, Luk. 4.2. though in particular thoſe be not ſet downe by any Evangeliſt. IV. By his hunger after fortie dayes faſting, in the end of this verſe. Of theſe in order.

I. Circumſtance. Chriſts faſting fortie dayes and fortie nights. There bee three kindes of faſts, if wee take the word in a generall ſenſe; Three kindes of faſts. 1

B firſt, the daily faſt of temperance and ſobrietie, whereby wee uſe Gods creatures for our ſuſtenance with that moderation and abſtinence, that wee give rather leſſe to natures appetite, than that which it deſireth. This Chriſt enjoyneth to everie Chriſtian, Take heed leſt at any time Luk. 21.34. your hearts be oppreſſed with ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe. The ſecond kinde of faſt is, the religious abſtinence of Gods Church from all meats and drinkes for a time, for the furtherance of their prayers, when they humble themſelves unto God for the preventing or removing of ſome heavie judgement: thus the Jewes faſted, ſometime for one day, ſometime for three dayes and three nights, as Heſter 4. verſ. 16. yea, ſometime for ſeven dayes together; but C then it is like they received ſome ſuſtenance in the evening: for ſo Daniel faſted for three 1 Sam. 31.13. 1 Chron. 10.12. weekes of dayes, eating no pleaſant things, Daniel 10.2,3. But of neither of theſe muſt Chriſts faſt here bee underſtood. The third kinde of faſt is miraculous, done by the power of God reſtraining the appetite for many dayes together without meat or drinke, beyond the power of nature: Thus Moſes faſted fortie dayes and fortie nights in mount Sina, where hee enjoyed the preſence of God ſo long. And ſo did Elias faſt in mount Horeb, and our Saviour Chriſt in this wilderneſſe. We read indeed, that Paul in his converſion faſted three dayes and three nights eating nothing, Acts 9.9. So did the Jewes with Heſter and her maids, Heſt. 4.16. And experience teacheth, that a ſicke man may live ſeven or nine daies together without meat or drinke; yea, (as ſome learned Phyſitians write) foureteene dayes: And Pauls companions ate verie little or nothing at all for foureteene dayes: for the words are plaine, eating nothing: And it may bee ſo, ſith the like hath beene found true by experience in our age. And this is the longeſt that a man can faſt and live, to wit, foureteene, or fifteene, or ſeventeene dayes: for ſo much is recorded of ſome, that after ſo long abſtinence have lived, though with ſome weakneſſe of nature: but for a man ordinarily, being of good conſtitution of bodie, to faſt fortie dayes and fortie nights together, it is impoſſible. Indeed it hath beene avouched avouched that a man might faſt moneths, yea, a whole yeare together without meat or drinke, and yet live; but we may perſwade our ſelves it is not true. Now our Saviour Chriſt, which is yet more, during this faſt felt no faintneſſe nor weakning of his bodie, as we ordinarily doe with a little abſtinence; ſo that his faſt was not ordinarie, but miraculous altogether.

Iub. Parad. 2. decad. 1.

Reaſons why Chriſt faſted fortie dayes.

I

The reaſons why Chriſt faſted thus long in the wilderneſſe, may bee theſe; Firſt, that hee might performe his miniſterie, which now hee was to begin, with more reverence and authoritie: for this cauſe would God have Moſes to faſt fortie dayes and fortie nights, before hee delivered the Law written in the two Tables of ſtone unto the people of God; and ſo muſt Elias doe, before he did reſtore religion in his dayes. Secondly, that it might appeare he was no whit inferiour to Moſes and Elias: and thirdly, that he might ſhew his full conſent with them. Queſt. Seeing Chriſt did excell Moſes and Elias, why did he not exceed them in the length of his faſt, for threeſcore dayes, or a whole yeare? Anſw. Hee did it not through want of power to have faſted longer, but becauſe hee would not give occaſion thereupon, that any ſhould call into queſtion the truth of his manhood, which might eaſily have happened, if he had faſted a whole yeare together.

The Vſe. Hereon the Church of Rome would build their Lent faſt, but verie fondly: for firſt, Chriſt did not thus faſt to give us example to follow him herein, but to prepare himſelfe to the great worke of his miniſterie: ſecondly, there is great difference betweene Chriſts faſt and theirs: Chriſt faſted thus but once, and that by the inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt; they keepe their faſt yearely, and that on their owne heads: Chriſts was a true faſt, without all meat or drinke; but theirs is a mock-faſt: for they eat the fineſt fiſhes, and other dainties, and drinke wines, wherein is as much nouriſhment to the bodie, and as good as in fleſh: neither can they juſtly build it on the practice of the Primitive Church: for they uſed to faſt (at leaſt in ſome places) but two or three daies before Easter: and their Lent faſt was not ordained nor impoſed till many yeares after Chriſt; ſo as everie one might chuſe whether he would faſt, or not.

Ante paſchale Ieiun. Zanch. de redemp. l. 1. c. 19. in theſi de quadr. Ieiun.

II. Circumſtance. S. Marke doth further ſet out Chriſts abode in the wilderneſſe, by his being and converſing with wilde beaſts, Mark. 1. 13. which ſome thinke Chriſt did for this end, that wilde beaſts might come to him, and doe him homage due to their Creator and Governour: but this is a device of man without likelihood of truth; for howſoever Chriſt in himſelfe deſerved all homage and reverence of all creatures; yet becauſe hee abode among wilde beaſts to bee abaſed and humbled in the low eſtate of a ſervant, therefore it is not like he went to receive homage from them. The true cauſe rather is this: we finde in Scripture that among the Jewes were two ſorts of deſarts; one in part peopled and inhabited, having here and there cities and villages; in ſuch a deſart was Iohn Baptiſt borne, and did baptize and preach: that the prophecie of Iſai might be fulfilled, The voice of a crier in the wilderneſſe, make ſtrait the way of the Lord. The other not inhabited at all by men, being a place of abode only for wilde beaſts, as Lions, Beares, Tygres, Wolves, &c. which lived therein continually: Now in ſuch a deſart as this was our Saviour Chriſt led by the ſpirit, and made his abode among ſuch wilde beaſts; which circumſtance is therefore noted, to give us to underſtand, that in this combat our Saviour had no aid, protection, ſuccour, helpe, or comfort from any man, or other creature whatſoever: for by nature his companions were ſo farre from being an helpe and comfort unto him, that they would rather ſeeke to devoure him. Whereby we plainly ſee, that the praiſe of victorie in this combat, is proper to Chriſt alone, and not communicable to any creature whatſoever.

Matth. 4. verſ. 2.

Iſa. 40. 3.

The Vſe. In this eſtate of Chriſt in the wildernes, we may behold the condition of Chriſts militant Church; to wit, that it is in this world as in a wildernes, and deſart of wild beaſts: for during their abode on earth, Gods children live with men, who in diſpoſition and affection are like Wolves, Beares, Tygres, Lions, and Cockatrices, untill ſuch time as the Holy Ghoſt by grace ſhall turne their hearts, as we may plainly ſee, Iſa. 11. 6, 7, 8. in regard whereof they muſt arme themſelves with patience againſt manifold aſſaults and vexations, comforting their hearts with this conſideration, that Chriſt their head hath undergone this eſtate before them.

III. Circumſtance. S. Luke obſerveth, that while Chriſt abode in the wilderneſſe, within the ſpace of thoſe fortie dayes and fortie nights, hee was tempted of the Devill, before the three great temptations: the words are plaine, And was there fortie dayes tempted of the Devill: And when they were ended, then the Devill ſaid, &c. what theſe temptations were either for matter or forme, the holy Ghoſt hath not ſet downe; and yet wee may probably thinke they were more milde and gentle temptations than thoſe three which are ſet downe; the Devill making them as it were an entrance to his ſtrongeſt and moſt dangerous temptations: for his manner is, when it makes for his advantage, not to ſhew his violence and extremitie at the firſt, but to proceed by degrees, and by little and little to inſinuate himſelfe, till he have gotten his beſt advantage, and then will hee ſhew the ſtrength of his malice. Thus hee dealt with Caine, firſt hee provokes him to anger and malice againſt his brother, becauſe his brothers ſacrifice was accepted, and his rejected; then having ſettled hatred in his heart, hee never leaves, till hee had cauſed him in his rage to ſlay his brother: and yet he ſtayes not there, but after after brings him to deſpaire of Gods mercy, in ſo much as he cried out, my ſinne is greater than I can beare. Thus alſo he dealt with Iudas; firſt, hee caſt this evill thought into his heart, Iudas betray thy Maſter, and when he had gotten entertainment for that (for doubtleſſe Judas would not yeeld to ſo vile a thought at the firſt motion) then he cauſeth him to put it in execution, wherupon in fearefull deſpaire he brought him to hang himſelfe. This is the ſubtiltie of the old ſerpent; firſt, he conveies one claw or talent into a mans heart, and then another; after that hee gets in his head, and ſo at length windes in all his body. Thus he aſſaied to do with Chriſt, and ſo will he continue towards all Gods children. Which ſhould teach us to labour to bee ſtrong in the Lord, and wiſe in his word, that ſo wee may ſtand againſt all his aſſaults. Yea, this muſt move us to a ſpeciall watch through the whole courſe of our lives againſt the occaſions of ſinnes, that wee may cut off temptations in the beginning, becauſe it is Satans craft, not to ſpit his venom at the firſt, but to ſugar his temptations at the beginning, that no danger may appeare till hee have conveyed into us the bane and poiſon of our ſoules.

Luk. 4. 2, 3.

Matth. 4. Verſ. 2.

Gen. 43.

IV. Circumſtance. Chriſts abode in the wilderneſſe is further ſet out by his hunger, in the end of this verſe; He was afterward hungry: that is, after hee had faſted fortie dayes and fortie nights by the power of his Godhead, then hee began to wax hungry. But ſome will ſay this ſtands not with the glory and Majeſtie of the ſonne of God to be hungry: for his fleſh is meat indeed, and his bloud is drinke indeed. Anſw. Chriſt was content to lay aſide his glorie and Majeſtie, and to take upon him our baſe and fraile nature, becomming like unto us in all things ſave ſinne; now in this his abaſement and humilitie, he had not onely a true ſoule and body, but the true faculties therof, as underſtanding, will, memory, &c. and though his bodie was free from perſonall infirmities, as palſie, gout, dropſie, or ſuch like; yet he was ſubject to ſuch infirmities as agree to the nature of man, as hunger, thirſt, wearineſſe, &c. Yea, this was one part of his humiliation, to become not onely man, but man with infirmities: and therefore though he could by the power of his Godhead have preſerved himſelfe fortie yeares without meat or drinke, as well as fortie dayes; yet that he might abaſe himſelfe to the loweſt degree of a ſervant, hee was content to ſuſtaine the infirmitie of his humane nature in being an hungred. And that for theſe cauſes:

Mat. 4.

Reaſons why Chriſt was an hungred.

First, to confirme unto us the truth of his man-hood: for ſome man might ſay, it was an eaſie thing for him to faſt forty dayes and forty nights, ſeeing he had not a true body, but only the ſhew and ſhadow of a body; therefore to ſhew that hee was true man, and had a true naturall bodie as wee have, he was content to ſuſtaine hunger as wee doe, and that truly. Secondly, that thereby hee might caſt an object before the Devill, to cauſe him to be the more eager and violent in his temptations, & to ſhew his malice in full meaſure againſt him; for by vertue of his office whereto he was now called, Chriſt was to encounter with Satan our common enemie; and therefore gives him not only the advantage of the place, but alſo the opportunity of eſtate, that Satan perceiving his infirmity of bodily hunger, might thereby bee emboldened to give the more violent aſſault upon him. And thus much of the ſecond part of Chriſts preparation to his combat.

V. 3. Then came to him the Tempter, and ſaid, If thou be the Sonne of God, command that theſe ſtones may bee made bread.

Here begins this ſtrange combat betweene our Saviour Chriſt and the Devill, conſiſting of three great conflicts: The firſt whereof is contained in this verſe and the next, being indeed the greateſt of them all, as after ſhall appeare. In this temptation obſerve theſe three things: firſt Satans preparation to this conflict: ſecondly the temptation it ſelfe: Thirdly, Chriſts anſwer and repulſe made thereunto.

Satans preparation.

I. Point. The Devils preparation is in theſe words; Then came to him the Tempter, and ſaid: herein obſerve foure things: firſt, the title given to Satan the Author of this temptation, the Tempter: So Paul calleth him, 1 Theſſ. 3. 5. I ſent to know of your faith, leſt the Tempter had tempted you in any ſort. And Satan is called the Tempter, becauſe his continuall ſtudie and practice hath beene and is, by all meanes to tempt all men; hee omits no times, neither ſpares any paines day or night, but by all meanes ſeekes to draw men from God, and to bring them to deſtruction: the conſideration whereof ſhould move us to the practice of theſe duties.

Vſe 1.

First, to be watchfull in all manner of praiers and ſupplications againſt Satan, for the gracious protection of God againſt his aſſaults: If any of us had our dwelling among Lions, Beares, or Tigers, which were hungerbit, and therefore would ſeeke greedily for their pray, we would be ſure never to goe out of our dwelling houſes without preparation for reſcue and defence, whereby wee might avoyd their danger. Well though we have no ſuch wilde beaſts to endanger our bodies, yet our ſoules are daily aſſaulted by a more deadly enemie, even the Devill, whoſe continuall ſtudie and practice is by temptation to devoure us, 1 Peter 5. 8. and therefore we muſt alwaies be watchfull againſt temptations, putting upon us the whole armor of God, that wee may be able to ſtand againſt his aſſaults.

Secondly, as it is the Devils practice alwayes to tempt, and to seeke to draw men from God, so because wee must be unlike him in all things, wee must draw neere to God in the practice of all good duties: Jam. 4. 7, 8. Resist the Devill and hee will flie: draw neere to God, and he will draw neere to you: The conjunction of these two duties shewes, that the neerer wee come to God, the more wee oppose our selves to Satan; now he that commeth unto God must beleeve, Heb. 11. 6. and therefore by faith we exercise our selves unto godlinesse, as Paul exhorteth Timothy: and unlesse wee thus strive to bee unlike him, wee shall never bee able to with-stand his temptations.

1 Tim. 4. 7.

3 Thirdly, we must hence learne to beware of the practice of the seducers in seeking to draw backe others from the love or practice of religion, or in hindring the good meanes whereby religion is begun and furthered in men: for if either by endevour in action, or by bad example we shall doe thus, doubtlesse wee become tempters and the children of the Devill; for to tempt and draw to sinne is the propertie of Satan, and hee that in tempting fulfils the lusts of Satan, must needs be his child, Joh. 8. 44. hence it was that our Saviour Christ cals Peter Satan, when he went about to dissuade him from that worke, for which his Father had sanctified him, and sent him into this world, saying, Get behind me Satan, Matthew 16. 23. And when Elymas sought to turne away the Deputie from the faith, Paul cals him enemie to all righteousnesse, full of all subtiltie, and child of the devil, Act. 13. vers. 10.

The second thing in this preparation is, the time when Satan began to tempt our Saviour Christ in a more strong and violent manner, noted in this word Then, that is, when Christ had now fasted fortie dayes and fortie nights, and was an hungred: when the Devill saw Christ not only to be alone in the wildernesse, but also perceived that he was afflicted with hunger, & so the more weake, being in the low estate of a miserable man, Then hee prepares to assault Christ with a most violent temptation.

Satans policy in tempting.

Then se. This discovereth unto us the deepe policie of Satan in making choise of the fittest time for his assaults: hee will not tempt all men at all times, neither alwayes with the greatest temptations; but hee fore-casts for the time of mans greatest weaknesse, and thereto hee reserveth his strongest assaults. Now usually a man is most weake when hee is under some grievous affliction, either in body, minde, or both; or when he lieth in the pangs of death: these times doth Satan observe, and keepe his strongest temptations against they come, as doth notably appeare by his dealing with Christ, not onely at this time when hee was an hungred, but also and especially at his passion: for the Scripture saith, Hee spoiled principalities and powers upon the crosse: whereby it is apparant that the devil with his greatest power did then assault him; thinking either then or never to give him the foile, when as he did sustaine the wrath of God due unto the sinnes of man: and so will he handle all the members of Christ; in their greatest extremities they shall bee sure to feele Satans deepest malice, unlesse God restraine his power. Which must teach us in the day of peace and strength, to prepare against the day of weaknesse by any affliction or by death it selfe, that so wee may by Gods grace bee able to stand against the rage of Satan: for then will hee bee sure most eagerly to seeke our ruine, and unlesse we prepare before hand, we shall never be able to stand. Now our best preparation is, to come to keepe the words of Christ, and to doe the same: for then, though the winds blow, the raine fall, the waves beat, and Satan doe his worst, yet being built upon the rocke Christ Iesus, wee shall never fall, Matth. 7. 24, 25.

Col. 2. 14, 15.

B

The third thing in this preparation, is the occasion of Satans onset at this time, namely, Christs bodily hunger, as the knitting of this verse to the former will plainely shew: for Christ being an hungred, Satan came unto him, and tempted him. He could not finde in Christs most holy manhood any blemish of sinne, or inclination thereto, whereon to build his temptation; yet such is his malice, that rather than Christ should escape his hands, he will take occasion from the infirmitie of his nature in bodily hunger to provoke and allure him unto sinne.

Satan grounds his temptations on somthing in us.

C

Herein wee learne a speciall point: namely, that the Devill will have some ground in us for those temptations wherewith hee doth assault us; for as we may see by his dealing herewith Christ, he observes not onely the inclination of mans heart and soule, but the state and constitution of the body, that if either body or minde will afford him the least advantage, thereon he will be sure to take occasion to tempt. If we regard the seed and root of sinne, it is true that every man hath all sins in him; but yet through the worke of God, restraining corruption in some, and renewing grace in others, it comes to passe, that each man is more inclined naturally to some sins than to others, which thing Satan doth observe most diligently; and as an enemy that besiegeth a citie will goe about it, and espy where the wall is weakest, and most fit for his entrance, and there will bee sure to give his strongest onset; and as a man that would strike fire with a flint, will turne it about in his hand, to see what part is fittest: even so the Devill, he goes about a man, and as it were turnes him to and fro, to spie out his weaknesse, and to what sinnes he is most inclined, and there hee will bee sure to trie him often, and to assault him with the greatest violence. Example: If a man bee impatient of poverty, hee will seeke to carrie him to picking and stealing: If a man bee prone to covetousnesse, hee will provoke him to fraud and oppression: If hee bee inclined to ambition, Satan will puffe him up with pride and vaine glory: nay which is farre

Matth. 4. Vers. 3.

farre more, Satan will take occasion from the very constitution of a mans body to draw him unto sinne; if choller bee predominant in him, Satan will labour to stirre him up to wrath, anger, fury, and if he can to bloodshed and murther: If a man bee of a sanguine complexion, Satan will seeke to carry him to immoderate mirth, and to excesse in pastimes, pleasures, and delight, that if it be possible he may drown him therein, whether they be good or bad: If a man be melancholike, Satan will sometime take occasion by that humour, to strike him with exceeding sadnesse, with terrours and feares; and other while to intoxicate his brain with strange fantasies and delusions, causing him to thinke himselfe to be Elias, John Baptist, Christ, &c. So that it is true which an ancient Divine saith of this humour, that it is the Devils bait wherewith hee sports himselfe. See the experience hereof in the lunatike person, whose disease was to bee exceedingly troubled certaine times of the moneth, by reason of melancholy oppressing the braine. Now Satan (as it there appeares) tooke advantage of that humour to abuse him most fearefully, not onely in making him deafe and dumbe, but also causing him to cast himselfe into fire and water. So that looke how many sinnes and infirmities we have in us, so many darts wee carry about us, wherewith Satan will seeke to wound us. He taketh ground or occasion from us of all the advantage hee hath against us; his temptations are like fire and bellowes, and our infirmities and corruptions are wood and fewell.

Matth. 17. 15.

The use. 1. Here then wee may behold our miserable estate by reason of sinne; for thereby it comes to passe, that wee beare about us those darts, wherewith the Devill doth wound us. And sith Satans craft and malice is such to take advantage from us; for to worke our woe, wee must labour the more diligently, to be throughly acquainted with our naturall dispositions and inclinations, yea, with our bodily infirmities, for the Devill will search us: and when we have truly found out our owne estate, wee must set strong watch and guard about our owne hearts in respect of our infirmities, and so shall wee be the better able to breake the necke of Satans temptations.

The fourth thing in this preparation is, Satans comming to Christ; The Tempter came unto him: By which phrase it is probable, though not certaine, that the Devill tooke upon him the forme of some creature, and so appeared unto Christ; thus hee came to Eve in Paradise, abusing the serpent to further his assault against the first Adam: and it is like, that in his combat with the second Adam, hee came in the shape of some creature, for otherwise hee could not properly be said to come and speake. Some indeed thinke that these temptations were inward in minde onely, and by vision; others think they were altogether visible and done actually; but the safest way is to hold that they were in part actually done in bodily manner, and partly shewed in vision. And thus much for the preparation to the conflict.

A

II. Point. The temptation it selfe: containing matter of great importance, being indeed the maine temptation of all, in these words, If thou be the Sonne of God, command that these stones be made bread. The Devill being well provided for time and place, and advantage also by Christs bodily hunger, doth here assault our Saviour Christ like a cunning Sophister, and frame his argument Syllogistically, thus:

Satans Sophistry.

If thou be the son of God, thou canst make these stones bread:
But thou canst not make these stones bread:
Therefore thou art not the sonne of God.

B

The ground of this temptation is this: It is no reason that the Sonne of God should starve for want of food; but thou must starve unlesse thou canst make these stones bread: and therefore unlesse thou canst doe so, thou maiest perswade thy selfe it was but a false voyce which thou heardest from heaven; This is my welbeloved Sonne, &c.

The scope and drift of Satan in this temptation stands in two things: First, hee labours to overthrow the faith of Christ. Secondly, to bring him to a practice of unbeleefe. For the first, by faith I meane, a gift or grace in Christ, whereby as hee was man, hee beleeved his Fathers words to bee true, which said, This is my welbeloved Son in whom I am well pleased: whereby we may see, what the devill aimes at principally in his temptations against Gods children; for these his assaults against our Saviour Christ are set down for our instruction in this behalfe.

C

Satans maine drift then in temptation, Is to overthrow our faith, whereby we beleeve every part and parcell of Gods word to bee true. See this in his tempting of Eve: first hee labours to weaken her faith in the truth of Gods threatning; which done, he easily brought her to actuall disobedience in eating the forbidden fruit. The same course he holdeth at this day; first he will seeke to nuzzell men in ignorance, that hee may keepe them in unbeleefe: if hee faile that way, then will hee endevour to plunge their soules into some damnable errour and heresie: and by one of these meanes doth he destroy the faith of many; for while a man remaines in ignorance, he can have no faith; and if he misse of the truth of God, he wants ground for his faith. Now the reason why the Devill labours so much against our faith, is because wee cannot truly rely upon Gods mercy, nor depend upon his providence, nor yeeld any acceptable obedience to his Commandements, unlesse we beleeve his Word.

Satan seekes the ruine of our faith.

D

More particularly, wee are to observe that speciall branch of Gods Word which the Devill would have Christ not to beleeve; even that voice of his Father, which a little before Christ heard from heaven at his baptisme; This is my welbeloved Sonne in whom I am well pleased:

Matth. 4. Vers. 3.

Satan seekes to deprive us of assurance of adoption.

sed: And this hath the holy Ghost recorded in great wisdome and mercy to Gods Church; for hereby doth appeare a maine drift of Satan against Christs members in his temptations, namely, to make them doubt of their adoption, and to destroy this perswasion in them, that they are the sonnes and daughters of God: for if herein he spared not the head, doubtlesse the members shall not escape his hands. This appeares by his usuall assault against them, specially when God shall lay upon them any singring crosse or affliction, either in minde, in bodie, or in goods; then the Devill will suggest this into their minds, If thou were't the child of God, hee would never lay his hand upon thee so long a time, and in so grievous manner; never was any childe of God in this case that thou art in: But God lies his hand thus heavy on thee; and therefore thou maiest perswade thy selfe that thou art not the childe of God.

The use. The consideration hereof must move us above all things to labour for assurance of our adoption, even to have our consciences assured out of Gods word, that wee are the Sons and daughters of God in Christ. The Devils drift is to overthrow this perswasion in us, and therefore our endevour must bee, to confirme and settle our hearts herein. This is the charge of the holy Ghost upon every childe of God, 2 Pet. 1. 10. Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure: that is, get the assurance thereof sealed up in your hearts, by the saving graces of Gods spirit, joyning vertue with your faith, and with your vertue knowledge, and with your knowledge temperance, and with temperance patience, and with patience godlines, and with godlinesse brotherly kindnes, and with brotherly kindnesse love, v. 5, 6, 7. and indeed if we would have true peace and comfort in every estate, whether adversity or prosperitie, let us labour for the knowledge of our Adoption. This will bee our joy in want, in wealth, in bondage, in freedome, in sicknesse, in health, in life, and in death: herein is that joy of Christ which never can be taken from us, Joh. 16. 22. We cannot doe the Devill a greater pleasure, than to neglect the getting of this assurance; for hereupon hee will take occasion (specially in time of distresse) fearefully and dangerously to seek to break the necke of our soules; hee cares not much otherwaies what men professe, and what knowledge and other common gifts of the spirit they have, so that they want this blessed assurance: and therefore with the Apostle Paul, wee must account all other things to be but drosse and dung in respect of this excellent knowledge of Christ, to bee our Saviour and Redeemer. True it is, that unto many this exhortation will seeme needlesse: for ignorant persons that have nothing in them but meere presumption, will bragge most of this perswasion; but they that have felt the smart of this temptation, doe know what it is that will stand us in stead, even that assurance onely which is rightly founded upon

Phil. 3. 8.

A the word of God: and therefore forsaking the vaine conceit of our ignorance, let us with all diligence unfainedly endevour to get this resolution; if we cannot of our selves attaine unto it, wee must use the direction and helpe of Gods faithfull Ministers: for howsoever it pleaseth some to thinke otherwise, yet this is the undoubted truth of God, that a man in this life may ordinarily bee resolved and assured of his salvation.

Satan would bring Christ to a practice of unbeleefe.

The second thing which the Devill aimed at in this temptation, was to bring Christ to a practice of unbeleefe, namely, in want of bread to turne stones into bread, for the present satisfying of his hunger; for the Devill would needs perswade our Saviour Christ that he must have bread to save his life, and therefore in the want of bread would have brought him to this distrustfull course, to turne stones into bread.

B And as the devill here deales with Christ, so he assaies to doe with all his members; as he labours to worke unbeleefe in their hearts, so hee seekes to bring them to the practice of unbeleefe in their lives. See the truth hereof in the course of this world; Is a man oppressed with outward want and povertie? The Devill will tell him, he must needs live, and therefore will perswade him to rob, and steale, and to filch for his living. If a man be sicke, and want present helpe in lawfull meanes, or else be afflicted somewhat extraordinarily, then will the devill move him to seeke to Wizzards and Witches, C suggesting this into him by one meanes or other, that they can doe more good in such a case, than all the Physitians in the world. This is a most vile practice of unbeleefe, and yet too common in the world, wherein men for the removall of some outward evill, will not sticke to hazzard the losse of their soules. We therfore must labour to be acquainted with these wiles of Satan, and by the practice of faith in our lives, labour to expresse the power of faith in our hearts, as in all manner of godly conversation, so especially in using only lawfull meanes for our releefe in the time of miserie and distresse.

But to come more particularly to the words of this temptation; If thou be the Sonne of God command these stones, &c. It may be demanded why the devil should make choice of this question wherewith to tempt our Saviour Christ, rather than any other? Ans. The reasons hereof may be these: First, hee knew well, that if Christ were the true and proper sonne of God, then hee must needs be the true Messias; and if hee were the annointed of God, then also hee it was that must accomplish that old and ancient promise made to our first Parents for the bruising of the serpents head. This was the thing that of all other the Devill was most afraid of, and could not indure to heare; and therefore by moving this question hee intends to infringe, yea, and (if hee could) quite overthrow our Saviour Christ in the right of this title. Secondly, ly, The Devill ſince his fall, beares an unſpeakable deadly hatred againſt God himſelfe, and according to his nature as occaſion ſerves, hee cannot but ſhew the ſame. Now in this queſtion he doth notably bewray his malice and ſpight againſt God; for whereas in Chriſts baptiſme a little before, God had proclaimed him to bee his beloved ſonne in whom hee was well pleaſed: hereby the Devill goes about to prove the cleane contrary, and ſo as much as in him lieth, ſeekes to make God a liar; which becauſe it fitteth his nature ſo well, hee makes choice of at this time.

D

Gen. 3. 15.

Matth.4. verſ.3.

The uſe. I. In this practice of the devill, wee may learne what to judge of ſundry falſe teachers; for as well in the primitive Church, as alſo ſince that time, there have beene ſundry men of great fame for wiſdome and learning, as Ebion, Cerinthus, Carpocrates, Samoſatenus, and Arrius, who have all laboured ſeverally, to prove that Jeſus Chriſt the Son of Mary was not indeed the Sonne of God, very God, but onely a worthy Prophet. Now of them wee may ſafely think with the Church of God in former times, that they were falſe Prophets, heretikes, and ſeducers; yea, the profeſſed enemies of Chriſt, guided by the ſpirit of Satan; for herein they doe directly tread in his ſteps.

II. In this his practice wee may obſerve the malicious and contradicting ſpirit of Satan againſt God himſelfe: for here he labors to conclude that Chriſt was not the Sonne of God, notwithſtanding God himſelfe had a little before avouched that he was. And this is his continued practice unto this day; for where God in his Church pronounceth grace, mercy, and love, there on the contrary will the Devill pronounce a curſe, hatred and damnation. Againe, where God denounceth his curſe and judgment, there will the devill ſeek to perſwade a conceit of grace and favour. If a man bee the childe of God, and have received the ſeale of grace for his aſſurance thereof; the Devill will ſeeke to weaken this aſſurance, and perſwade him if hee can, that he is the childe of wrath. And if a man be void of grace, and ſo indeed the child of the devil, then will Satan ſuggeſt into his heart preſumptuous thoughts, and make him thinke hee is the childe of God; ſo that every way he ſheweth himſelfe contrary to God.

Yet marke the devils words a little further; If thou be the ſonne of God, command theſe ſtones &c. that is, doe but ſay the word, and bid theſe ſtones to become bread, and it will bee done. And here in the very propounding of this temptation, we may obſerve the deepe policy of Satan; for in theſe few words (the better to effect his purpoſe) hee toucheth three moſt true and notable points in divinitie: Firſt, that hee that is the Sonne of God by nature, is alſo true and very God: for here hee aſcribeth unto the Sonne of God, the true prerogative of God himſelfe; a point wherein the Phariſies withſtood our Saviour Chriſt, and which many heretikes ſince have denied. Secondly, that the true God can without paine or labor, yea without all meanes, at his very beck doe whatſoever he will; and by his word onely make ſtones become bread. Thirdly, that to worke a miracle of himſelfe, is a propertie and prerogative of him alone that is true God; as to turne ſtones into bread in this place. Now when the Devill acknowledgeth all this, a man would not thinke that herein he ſhould intend any hurt to Chriſt, or to his Church; but in very truth his drift herein is, to deſtroy the faith of Chriſt in that word of his Father which ſpake from heaven, and to overthrow the foundation of the Church, by proving that Jeſus Chriſt the ſonne of Mary was not true God.

Here then obſerve a tricke of the Devils cunning; when he ſpeakes a truth, he doth it not to confirme the ſame as loving it, but indeed his meaning is to overthrow the truth thereby: which muſt admoniſh us, that when Satan ſhall any way aſſault us in temptation, we never give credit unto him, no not then when hee ſpeaketh the truth, becauſe therein his purpoſe is to deceive us, and to deſtroy the truth: hence it was that Chriſt forbad the uncleane ſpirits to teſtifie of him, though they acknowledge him to bee the holy One of God: hence alſo Paul was grieved at the teſtimonie of the foule ſpirit that was in the maid, though in it ſelfe a moſt worthy truth, to wit, That they were the ſervants of the moſt high God, which ſhewed unto men the way of ſalvation.

Satan ſpeaks ſome truth to overthrow another truth thereby.

Mar.1.24,25.

Act.16.17,18.

Further, in comparing our Evangeliſt Matthew with Saint Luke, there may ſeeme ſome difference betweene them in propounding this temptation; for in Matthew the words are thus, Command theſe ſtones, &c. And in Luke thus, Command this ſtone. But they are reconciled thus; Matthew ſets downe this temptation as the devill firſt propounded it: and S. Luke ſhews how the devil urged it: for firſt the devill comes to Chriſt, and bids him, if hee bee the Sonne of God, command all the ſtones which hee ſaw round about him to be made bread; this S. Matthew ſets downe: or if that ſeemed too much, command one ſtone to bee made bread, and it ſhould ſuffice; and this S. Luke noteth.

Luke 4.3.

The uſe. By this comparing of the Evangeliſts we may obſerve, that when the devill hath once begun to tempt a man, hee will not eaſily leave off, but will ſet an edge upon it, and enforce and urge it by all the meanes hee can, that if it be poſſible he may prevaile. Which ſhould teach us on the other ſide, to bee moſt earneſt and reſolute in reſiſting Satans temptations; he will take ſmall advantage before he leave; wee therefore muſt not give place, nor yeeld one jot unto him: Reſiſt the Devill and hee will flie. This muſt every member of the Church doe: the Miniſter by ſound and through applying of every part of Gods truth to the heart, whereby it may bee armed againſt the enemy; and the people by faithfull embracing and obeying of the ſame, as alſo by earneſt praier unto God for the aſſiſtance of his grace in all aſſaults.

Deut. 8. 3. V. 4. *But he answering, said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread onely, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

The words containe Chriſts gracious anſwer, whereby hee repelled the Devils temptations: and in it wee may obſerve three points: Firſt, that Chriſt did anſwer: Secondly, whence hee borrowed his anſwer: Thirdly, the very words of his anſwer.

For the firſt, that Chriſt did anſwer, is noted by the holy Ghoſt in plaine words, And Iesus answering, said; Whereby he would give us to underſtand, that Chriſt Jeſus our Saviour being in the wilderneſſe, was not onely willing and ready to encounter with Satan, but alſo able to withſtand him, yea and to vanquiſh Satan without receiving any foyle at his hands. Which is a point of ſingular comfort to Gods Church and children; for was Chriſt Jeſus able in this low and baſe eſtate of a ſervant, being diſadvantaged alſo by a deſart place, and bodily hunger; was he then (I ſay) able to encounter with Satan, and to overcome him in his moſt violent and ſubtile aſſaults? Then how much more is he now able even in all his members to give Satan the foile, having ſpoiled him in his death? ſeeing hee is advanced to the throne of majeſty and glory, and ſet at the right hand of his Father, having a name above all names given unto him, at which every knee ſhal bow, both of things in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth? we therfore may now ſay with that loud voice; Now is ſalvation in heaven, and ſtrength, and power, and the kingdome of our God, and the power of his Chriſt: for the accuſer of the brethren is caſt downe.

Rev. 12. 10.

The ſecond point here noted is, whence Chriſt borroweth his anſwer, namely, from the Scriptures. It is written. It had beene an eaſie thing for Chriſt being the Son of God, to have confounded the Tempter with the breath of his mouth, or to have commanded innumerable legions of holy Angels to have driven him away; but he betakes himſelfe to the written word for his defence. And this hee did eſpecially for our inſtruction: namely, that we might know, that the written word of God, rightly weilded by the hand of faith, is the moſt ſufficient weapon for the repelling of Satan, and the vanquiſhing him in all his temptations: hence Paul calleth it the ſword of the ſpirit; becauſe it ſerves not onely for our defence, but alſo to wound Satan, and to put him to flight.

The written word our beſt weapon againſt Satan.

Eph. 6. 17.

The uſe. I. This fact of Chriſt doth diſcover and condemne the damnable practice of the Church of Rome, who locke up the Word of God from their people in an unknowne tongue, and commend unto them for their defence againſt ſpirituall enemies, other devices of their owne, as holy water, croſſing, croſſes, &c. which they highly commend as meanes of ſpeciall ſtrength and force to vanquiſh the devill; when as indeed the Word of God is the onely true and truſty weapon, whereof while they deprive their people, they ſend them forth naked and unarmed to encounter with Satan.

Secondly, here alſo behold the miſerable eſtate of all thoſe that either through covetouſneſſe, or any other prophaneneſſe are drawne to neglect or contemne the written word of God: their caſe is moſt fearefull; for they caſt away thoſe weapons, whereby they ſhould defend themſelves againſt the Devill, and quench all his firy darts; and ſo betray their owne ſoule into his hands: And doubtleſſe all contemners and neglecters of the Word are guiltie of their owne damnation, becauſe God hath given us his Word for our defence, and for the confounding of Satan, ſo as without guilt of wilfull murther, not of our bodies, but of our ſoules, we cannot neglect this heavenly weapon.

Thirdly, hereby wee may ſee the cauſe why ſin ſo much abounds in all eſtates every where, namely, want of love unto, and knowledge in the word of God: wherupon the moſt are ignorant of it, or elſe know not how to handle this ſpirituall weapon, wherby Satan is reſiſted and foiled. Hoſea 4. 2. The Lord complaineth of lying, ſwearing, killing, ſtealing, and whoring, yea of blood touching blood; and the cauſe is laid downe in the firſt verſe, There is no knowledge of God in the Land. This David knew well; and therefore ſaid, He hid Gods ſayings in his heart, that he might not ſinne againſt him, Pſal. 119. 11. For as Sauls ſpeare ſtood in readineſſe at his head even when he ſlept, ſo ſhould Gods word, which is the ſword of the ſpirit, bee ever in our hearts, as it were ready drawne, that to what ſinne ſoever the Devill allures us, we may be able to ſay for our defence, It is written: through want hereof it comes to paſſe, that the Devill at his pleaſure leads men captives into all impieties.

1 Sam. 26. 7.

Laſtly, this excellent uſe of the word underſtood, beleeved, and obeyed, muſt move all ignorant perſons to labor for knowledge herein, and withal endevour after growth in knowledg by holy obedience, to ſhew forth their faith. If we had an enemy that had ſworn our death and vowed to ſee our blood, how careful would we be for our naturall life, both to get us weapons, and alſo ſome knowledge to uſe the ſame, not only for our defence, but alſo for the annoiance of our deadly foe? oh then how carefull ſhould wee be for the ſafety of our ſoules, to put upon us the whole armour of God, and to learne to uſe aright this ſword of the Spirit; that when we meet with Satan our irreconciliable enemie in the field of temptation, which is this miſerable world, world, wee may bee able both to award his blowes, and to wound his head? It is lamentable to see how ignorant people wil blesse themselves in their ignorance, and say they defie the Devil, and spit at him in defiance, and yet they know not how they are intangled in his snares of their owne sinnes, he little regards such defiance, so long as their soules lie naked and bare before his daily darts. Let two men meet that be at enmitie, the one armed, the other naked, what will it availe for the naked man to defie his enemy with bigge words, while in the meane time, his armed enemie takes away his life? Loe, Satan is this strong man armed, and ignorant persons are poore naked caitiffs, they defie the devil, and spit at him with their mouth, but in the meane time the Devill wounds their soules unto death. They will say they feele no such wounds, and therefore they feare him not; but they must know that the lesse they feele, the more cause they have to feare: for Satans wounds are most deadly whē they are least felt.

Matth. 4. vers. 4.

The third point is Christs Answer it selfe: Man shall not live by bread onely, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God: This answer is borrowed from Deuteron. 8. 3. And it is that lesson which Moses sought to teach the children of Israel, after the Lord had fed them with food from heaven in that barren wilderneſse where they were afflicted with hunger. The words are something hard, and therefore I will shew the meaning of them. Man shall not live; that is, shall not preserve his temporall life in this world; for of eternall life, neither Moses nor Christ did intend to speake. By bread only, that is, onely by such ordinary meanes as food and raiment, sleepe, physicke, &c. Which God hath appointed in his providence for the ordinary preservation of naturall life. But by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. This title word, betokens divers things in Scripture: I. The substantiall word of God, the second person in Trinitie: John 1. 1. In the beginning was the word, and the word was God. II. It is usually taken for the written word contained in the booke of the old and new Testament, 1 Peter 1. 25. Thirdly, it is sometime taken for Gods will and decree, and it is called his good pleasure: so Heb. 1. 2. Christ sustaineth all things by the word of his power, that is, according to his will and decree, by his powerfull appointment: and by his word were all things made in the beginning, and hereby have they beene preserved ever since; that is, that word that melteth the Ice, Psalm. 147. 18. And in the last sense must wee understand word in this place; meaning that man doth not preserve this naturall life by ordinary meanes only, but withal by Gods good pleasure, will, and decree, sanctifying the meanes for his good. Note further that it is said by every word, and therein lieth the substance of this sentence: for the understanding whereof we must know that this powerfull and working word of God may be distinguished according to the matter whereabout it is occupied: Thus, sometime God will have men to live by bread the ordinary food of naturall life; and this is his ordinary word. Sometime his will and appointment is that man shal live by extraordinary meanes: as the Israelites did in the wildernesse, while they lived upon Manna; and this is his extraordinary word. Otherwhiles hee ordaines that men shall live without all meanes, as Moses did in Mount Sinai, Elias in Mount Horeb, and our Saviour Christ in this wildernesse, for the space of fortie dayes and fortie nights together. And lastly hee ordaines sometime, that men shall live against meanes, and contrary to the course of nature; Thus Daniel lived in the Lions Denne, and the three children in the fiery furnace; both which last may be called Gods miraculous word. So that wee see the good reason of this clause, every, for hereby wee learne, that man doth not preserve his life onely by ordinary meanes ordained of God; but likewise by every word proceeding out of the mouth of God; that is, by every appointment and decree of God, whether extraordinary, above the usuall meanes, or miraculous without all meanes, or against the course of nature: this wee must labour to know and be perswaded of. Nature teacheth that man liveth by Gods blessing and appointment in ordinary meanes; But nature knowes not this, that God preserveth mans life by his Word, above meanes, without meanes, yea and against meanes. The beleeving heart will hardly yeeld to this, which Moses would teach the Israelites, and therefore we must take the more paines to bee resolved of it. If any shall thinke hereupon that a man may live by the written word without meat and drinke, he is deceived; for Christ meaneth not that every word that God hath spoken shall preserve naturall life, but that whatsoever way hee hath appointed whereby man shall live, whether by ordinary, or extraordinary meanes, whether without meanes, or against meanes, the same shall be effectuall for mans preservation: Thus much for the meaning.

The applying of this testimonie to the Devils temptation, is thus to bee conceived: The Devils temptation was this; If thou bee the Sonne of God, then command these stones to bee made bread: But thou canst not make these stones to become bread: Therefore thou art not the Son of God. To this Christ answers, by denying the proposition or first part of this argument: the ground whereof was this (which the Devill tooke for granted) that when a man is hungry hee must needs have bread, or else hee cannot live: and this our Saviour Christ doth flatly deny, saying, Man liveth not by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God: And this application is most excellent, teaching us that thing, for the learning whereof the Israelites were trained up forty yeares in the wildernesse, and fed with Manna from heaven,

Word in Scripture, sundry things.

God, powerfull word distinguished.

heaven, and with water out of the rocke; to wit, that God by his Word can preſerve the life of man without ordinary meanes, even what way ſoever hee appointeth for that purpoſe; and if we ſhould ſpend our lives in learning hereof, no doubt the time were not miſpent.

The vſe. Firſt, hereby we are taught to conſider aright of all creatures whereby our life is preſerved, as meat, drinke, apparell, &c. and that is thus; Beſides the bodily ſubſtance of the creature, we muſt labour to ſee a further matter, even the bleſſing of God in the creature proceeding from his Word, decree, and appointment, whereby it is made fit and able to yeeld ſuſtenance and nouriſhment. The Scripture calleth this, the Staffe of bread: and ſo it is indeed; for as an aged and impotent man falleth to the ground, if his ſtaffe be plucked from him; ſo the beſt creature that ſerves for our uſe, without Gods bleſſing becomes fruitleſſe unto us. This reaſon may teach us; for how ſhould that thing of it ſelfe preſerve and further life, which in it ſelfe is void of life? And how ſhould that give heat and warmeneſſe to our bodies, which of it ſelfe is void of heat? Let us therefore confeſſe, that it is not the ſubſtance of food that doth refreſh us, nor the matter of our raiment that keeps us warme, but the bleſſing of him that by his word hath ordained them for theſe ends: if hee withdraw his bleſſing, the ſtaffe and ſtay is gone: men may eat, (as Haggai ſaith) but they ſhall not have enough; drinke, and yet not be filled; they may cloath themſelves, and yet not be warme: It is Gods bleſſing that makes Gods creatures doe us good: how elſe ſhould it come to paſſe, that the poore mans childe which is barely clad, and homely fed, ſhould bee as healthfull, comely, and well liking, as the child of a Prince, but that God bleſſeth as well the homely food of the poore, as the dainty fare of the richeſt?

Lev.26.26.

Pſa.3.8. Hag.1.6.

Secondly, hereby we muſt learne Sobrietie and Temperance, in the uſe of all Gods creatures: when wee uſe our food and raiment, it is Gods bleſſing alone that makes them doe us good; the Lord as it were ſtands by us to put his bleſſing upon every morſell that wee eat, and every draught that wee drinke, and upon our raiment when wee put it on; how then dare wee abuſe them in ſurfeting and drunkenneſſe, in pride and wantonneſſe? may wee not feare in ſo doing, that while the meat or drinke is in our mouthes, the wrath of God will fall upon us, as Pſal. 78. 30, 31.

Thirdly, hence wee muſt learne to ſanctifie Gods creatures, as food and raiment which we uſe for our comfort, by invocation on the name of God: for wee doe not live by the creatures ſimply, but by the word and appointment of God bleſſing them unto us: and therefore wee muſt not bee like bruit beaſts which receive Gods bleſſings, but yet never look up to heaven from whence they come; or like to the ſwine that gathereth up the maſt, not looking up to the tree from which it falleth.

Fourthly, hereby we ſee the common errour of the world, who place the ſtaffe and ſtay of their life in the abundance of outward bleſſings, whereupon they labour to enrich themſelves herewith as much as poſſibly they can: theſe men doe little conſider that mans life ſtands not in abundance, neither doth hee live by bread, but by the bleſſing of God, which is and may bee as well upon a little, as upon the treaſures of a kingdom. This was the practice of the rich foole, who ſpake peace to his ſoule for eaſe and paſtime, becauſe he had much goods laid up for many yeares. But ſith Chriſt teacheth us, that man liveth not by bread only, it muſt needs be a flat note of unbeleefe, to carke and care immoderately for the things of this life.

Luk.12.19.

Fifthly, hereby we are alſo taught, not to entangle our ſelves overmuch with the cares of this world; nor to ſuffer our hearts to be oppreſſed with deſire of food, raiment, lands or living: becauſe our life and welfare conſiſteth not in theſe things, but in the bleſſing of God on whatſoever hee ſends, bee it more or leſſe: the gripple minde after much, is a deadly ſnare, wherewith many a ſoule is intangled to perdition and deſtruction; this choakes the heart in ſuch ſort, as the ſeed of grace can take no root, nor bring forth any ſaving fruit: this made Paul to lay a charge upon Timothy for rich men, that they ſhould truſt in the living God, and not in uncertaine riches, 1 Tim.6.17. Let us therefore be content with food and raiment, and rather ſeek the kingdome of God and his righteouſneſſe, and then all thoſe things whereof wee ſtand in need ſhall bee given unto us, in the moderate uſe of lawfull meanes. Indeed the worldlings excuſe is, that food and raiment is his living, which he muſt needs looke unto; but wee muſt ſtil remember, that our life ſtandeth not in theſe things: for when death comes, theſe cannot ſave us from the grave: It is Gods bleſſing by which we live, hee can preſerve us above meanes, nay without meanes, and againſt meanes; and therefore wee muſt not give place to ſuch thoughts and cares as ſhew diſtruſt in God.

1 Tim.6.9.

Sixthly, hence wee muſt learne contentation and patience in extreme povertie, and in all other miſeries of this life. If God ſhould deale with us as hee did with his ſervant Iob: If for our religion hee ſhould bring upon us the loſſe of goods, of children, of health, and all that we have, with baniſhment alſo from our friends and countrey, yet then muſt we labour to ſhew the fruit of patience, and not ſuffer our hearts to be ſwalowed up of overmuch griefe; becauſe our life ſtands by Gods word, and not in any of theſe things: indeed, if in theſe outward miſeries a man ſhould bee deprived of the comfort of Gods providence, then might hee ſorrow without meaſure: but ſeeing all ſuch as feare God, doe ſtill enjoy the bleſſing of God in their greateſt calamities, (for Gods bleſſing is not locked up in bread, but above meanes without out meanes and against meanes can he manifest his power and goodnesse in their preservation) therfore in the extremity of evill must we comfort our selves in the Lord our God, as David did in great sorrow, having lost his two wives, and being in danger to be stoned of his own followers; and learne to say with Iob, Though the Lord kill me, yet will I trust in him. What if the Lord should send a famine among us, as he may justly doe for the sinnes of this Land? should wee then despaire, or use unlawfull meanes for our releefe? nay, then wee must learne Moses lesson, That man liveth not by bread only; and labour to depend on him that can increase the oile in the poore widdowes cruse, and the meale in the barrell, till plentie come.

1 Sam. 30. 6.

Iob 13. 15.

1 Kin. 17. 14.

Seventhly, this must teach us moderation of our affections in all estates that doe befall us; in health and plentie wee must not bee puffed up with pride; in weaknesse and want we must not be oppressed with sorrow; for mans life standeth not in these things, neither can wee hereby know love or hatred: hee that is in want may have as good a portion in Gods blessing as the wealthiest man in the world: herein hungry Lazarus full of sores, went farre beyond the rich glutton in all his riot.

Luke 16. 19, 20.

Lastly, seeing our life depends upon Gods word, wee must hereby learne to acknowledge Gods providence, and to relie thereupon in all estates. In the dayes of peace, wherein (as Iob speaketh of himselfe) men wash their paths in butter, and have the rockes to powre them out rivers of oile, men wil soon be brought to say so much; but we must labour to see and feele the blessing of his providence, even then when we tread (as it were) the winepresse of his wrath: as well in sicknesse as in health, in want as in plentie, in the depth of distresse as in the height of all prosperitie: this is the counsell of the holy Ghost, Roll thy workes upon the Lord. Cast all your care upon him, for he careth for you, 1 Pet. 5. 7. It is a brutish property onely to looke upon the creatures whereon they feed; and therefore our eyes and our hearts must be fixed on him, who feedeth the young ravens that cry unto him; and beareth up all things by his mighty Word: we must not content our selves with a bare speculation hereof in our heads, but labour to feele the comfort of it in our hearts, and to expresse the power of it in our lives. And thus much for the first conflict.

B These words containe the second conflict of Satan with our Saviour Christ: for howsoever by Saint Luke this is put in the third place, which Matthew here placeth in the second, yet this breedeth no difference between the Evangelists, who tie not themselves to a strict observation of time, place, and order, how every thing was done which they relate; as in the story of this conflict, S. Luke respects the substance of it onely, but S. Matthew observes the order of it also. Now in this second conflict we are to observe three points; I. Satans preparation thereto: II. The assault it selfe: III. Christs answer and repulse thereof.

1. Point. Satans preparation to this conflict is contained in the 5. verse: wherein wee are to note, both the time and the parts thereof: The C time in the first word Then: that is, so soone as the Devill had received a foile of Christ in his first assault, presently he addresseth himselfe unto a second.

Herein behold the exceeding malice of Satan, in that the end of one temptation with him is but the beginning of another: he ceaseth not with one assault, but as he is a deadly foe to the Church of God, so hee shewes himselfe by his continuall seeking whom he may devoure, hee will never make truce with any childe of God, upon any condition lesse than the hazard of his soule; neither is he wearie of his worke, but day and night is either plotting or performing some mischievous attempt against the childe of God. The consideration whereof must teach us, upon our victory and conquest over one temptation, D presently to prepare for a new. This was the state of the sonne of God our head, and we his members may not looke for better; our life in this vale of teares is a continual warfare against the enemie of our soules; wee must not therefore here looke for rest and ease, but ever keepe watch and ward against their assaults. If this dutie were well learned and put in practice, it would prevent much impatience, and become the ground of much peace in our soules: mans nature cannot brooke the doubling and renuing of sorrowes; when one evill lights in the necke of another, oh then hee thinketh never any was in his case; but looke unto Jesus the Author and finisher finisher of thy faith, hee endured no lesse; and herein he is an example that thou shouldest follow his steps. If therefore thou wilt bee his disciple, prepare to take up thy crosse every day and follow him.

Luke 9.15.

The parts of Satans preparation are two; first, he conveies Christ from the wilderneſſe to Jeruſalem; ſecondly, hee placeth him on a pinnacle of the Temple. For the firſt, in theſe words, The devil tooke him up into the holy City, that is, into Jeruſalem, as Luke expoundeth it, Chap. 4. 9. This the Devill might doe three wayes; In viſion; or leading him up the ordinary way; or carrying him thorow the ayre. I. It might be in viſion; for that was uſuall with the Prophets: ſo Jeremie went to the river Perath; and Ezekiel was carried from Meſopotamia to Jeruſalem: but Christ was not thus tranſported: for then Satans perſwaſion unto Christ, To caſt himſelfe downe, could have been no temptation.

Ier. 13. 4.
Ezech. 8. 3.

II. Christ might be lead of the Devill the ordinary way from the wilderneſſe to Jeruſalem; ſo much the words will beare: but (as I take it) he went not ſo: for if Chriſt were lead by the Devill, it was either willingly of his owne accord, or by the Devils perſwaſion: but of his owne accord he would not goe; for he came into the wilderneſſe to bee tempted, which as yet was not fully accompliſhed, and therfore would not willingly depart thence, before that worke for which he came was ended. Againe, hee would not depart thence upon the Devils perſwaſion: for Chriſt would never gratifie the Devill ſo much, as to doe ought himſelfe, which the Devill would have him, as in all his temptations doth appeare; for this is a rule to bee obſerved; Wee muſt not doe any thing which the Devill perſwades us to in his temptations, though in it ſelfe the thing be lawfull and good. III. The Devill might carry the body of our Saviour Chriſt thorow the ayre, by his power through Gods permiſſion. This is the moſt likely way, and ſo it is thought to bee of the beſt Divines: and the words following confirme it much; for it is ſaid, The Devill ſet him on a pinnacle of the Temple: Now, if hee had power to ſet him there, why might hee not alſo carry him thither, God ordaining this as well as his temptation.

Rule. Doe nothing Satan perſwades thee to in temptation.

The uſe. By this wee ſee, that men may bee tranſported by the Devill from place to place, as the records of all ages doe report: this one thing yet obſerved (wherein the common opinion faileth) that the Devill cannot convey a man alive ſo farre in a little time, as many men thinke, as a thouſand or two thouſand miles in an houre; for no man is able to indure ſuch violent motion, & yet live, as experience teacheth: let a man fall from ſome high ſteeple, and his breath will be gone, and he dead before he come at the ground, by reaſon of the violence of his motion. Indeed the Devil can carry a man very ſwiftly, but yet for the ſafety of mans life, hee muſt prolong his time farre more, than otherwiſe of himſelfe hee needs to doe.

A

Secondly, hence wee learne that by Gods permiſſion, the Devil may have power over the bodies of Gods owne children which are true beleevers, to tranſport them from place to place, for dealing thus with the head Chriſt Jeſus, why may hee not doe ſo with any of his members? beſides, we finde, that (God permitting him) hee hath done more than this to the Saints of God; he may poſſeſſe their bodies, as hee did the woman of Canaans daughter, Mat. 15. 22. Hee may torment them long, as hee did exceeding grievouſly bow the body of a daughter of Abraham eighteene yeares, Luke 13. 16. Yea, he may kil the body, as he did to Iobs children, who no doubt were holy perſons, Job. 1. 19. And therefore much more may he tranſport them from place to place.

Satans power over mens bodies if God permit.

B

Here this queſtion may fitly bee anſwered, whether a true beleever may bee bewitched, Anſw. Hee may: there are none upon earth ſo faithfull and holy, but if God permit, Satan can afflict their bodies grievouſly, and therfore alſo they may be bewitched. It is but the fancy of preſumptuous perſons, when they ſay their faith is ſo ſtrong, that all the witches in the world cannot hurt them: for if God permit, Satan can grievouſly afflict mans body, as he did the body of Iob; yea he can kill the body, as hath been ſhewed. Salomon ſpeaking of outward things, ſaith truly, All things come alike to all, and the ſame condition is to the juſt and to the wicked now the wicked man may bee bewitched, as all will grant; why then may not the godly alſo, ſeeing it is but an outward evill? This therefore muſt abate their pride that ſtand ſo much on their ſtrong faith: behold this fact of Satan to the holy bodie of Chriſt, and hereby learne for thy humiliation, that if God permit, Satan is able to bring upon thy body great affliction.

Further, obſerve the place whither Satan carries our Saviour Chriſt, into the holy city, that is, Jeruſalem. Queſt. Why is it called holy, ſeeing now it was a polluted place full of ſinfull people? Anſ. It is called holy for theſe cauſes; 1. Becauſe here was the Lords Temple, the place of his ſolemne worſhip, wherein were the holy rites and ceremonies preſcribed for Gods worſhip. Secondly, in Jeruſalem, as alſo in all the Synagogues of Judea, was Moſes chaire, the law and the Prophets were read and expounded. Thirdly, Jeruſalem was the mother Citie of all the world in reſpect of religion: here God ordained that his Church ſhould firſt be planted, and from hence muſt religion bee derived to other nations.

D

The uſe. Hence we may obſerve, that as in time Jeruſalem was the true Church of God: indeed it was very corrupt both for doctrine and manners, as Chriſts ſevere reproofe of both doth plainely ſhew, Matthew 5. 21, &c. and Matth. 23. 13, 14. &c. and yet a true Church; elſe the holy Ghoſt would not have called it the holy

holy citie. Now if Jerusalem at this time were the true Church of God then, then may wee well say, that in England God hath his true Church: for let the corruptions of our Church be as they are, yet shall it match Jerusalem in the prerogatives of Gods Church. They had the Law and the Prophets read & expounded; so have we, and the Gospell also, which is the power of God to mans salvation. They had the Sacraments and ceremonies of the Law; answerable thereto we have the Sacraments of the Gospell, and also a true and holy forme of serving God. Their Jerusalem was a mother city; and though we cannot say so much in that behalfe, yet hath our Church beene a nurse to neighbour Churches in Germany, France, and other places round about, for many yeares; in regard whereof, the Lord, no doubt, hath bestowed many blessings upon us. And therefore though our sins and abuses be many and grievous, yet in regard of Church-prerogatives we may bee called a holy nation, and a true member of the Church of God: so that as our Saviour Christ and his disciples joyned themselves to the congregation of the Jewes in their legall service, and forsooke them not till they became no Church: so ought it to be among us, till we separate from Christ, none should sever themselves from our Church, ministerie, and service of God. Those therefore that make a separation from our Church, because of corruptions in it, are farre from the spirit of Christ, and his Apostles. If any shall say, this makes well for the Church of Rome, if so corrupt a place as Jerusalem, in regard of Church-prerogatives were an holy City: for they have as many prerogatives for religion, as the Jewes then had, and therefore are the Church of God, and so we do not well to separate from them. Ans. Some indeed that are no Papists, say the Church of Rome is the Church of God; but the truth is, the present Church of Rome is spirituall Babylon, the mother of abominations, no spouse of Christ, but a strumpet. But they plead their prerogatives: as first, their succession from Peter: secondly, true baptisme for substance according to the first institution: Thirdly, the Apostles Creed, which they hold and believe: fourthly, the Word of God, in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles: and lastly, that theirs is the mother Church. Ans. All this is nothing when the truth appeares: for first, succession in person, without succession in doctrin, is no note of a Church: now let them shew succession in the Apostles doctrine, and wee yeeld. Secondly, their baptisme alone, though for substance true baptisme, cannot prove them a true Church: Circumcision was the Sacrament of Gods Church, yet Samaria and Colchis were not the Church of God, though they used it: Againe, the theefe may shew the true mans purse, but that proveth him not to be true and honest; no more doth baptisme justifie the Church of Rome to be a true Church.

Rome is spirituall Babylon.

A Lastly, though they have outward baptisme, yet indeed they overthrow inward baptisme, the life of that Sacrament, to wit, imputed righteousnesse & renewed holinesse, which in Gods Church must goe together with the outward element, else it is nothing. Thirdly, for the Apostles Creed, they have it in word, but they deny it in deed; For though they say, they beleeve in God the Father, and in Iesus Christ: yet in effect they deny both God and Christ. For the God of the Papists is an Idol-God, and the Christ of the Papists a false Christ, as wee have shewed in handling of the Creed. Fourthly, for the Scripture: we must know the word of God stands not in bare words and letters, but in the true sense and meaning of the holy Ghost contained in the Scripture of the Prophets and B Apostles. Now though they have the bookes of Scripture, yet in sundry maine grounds of religion, they overthrow the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles. Againe, they keepe the Scripture as a lanthorne holds a candle, not for it selfe, but for passengers: so is the Scripture with them, not for their Synagogue, but for Gods secret ones among them: for even in the midst of popery hath God ever had some of his elect, who have not embraced their cursed doctrine. Lastly, for their plea to bee the mother Church; we must distinguish betweene the ancient Church of Rome, and the strumpet that now is; the ancient Church of Rome to whom Paul writ, was a true and famous Church, and a C mother Church; but shee is now dead and buried, and the now Romane Church is no mother Church, no spouse of Christ, but the whore of Babel, the mother of abhominations, from which we are commanded to depart, Rev. 18.4.

Secondly, in that Christ is brought to Jerusalem, that holy Citie, there to be tempted, wee learne that no holinesse of place on earth can debarre the Devill from his temptations; hee brings Christ from the wildernesse, to tempt him in the holy City, even upon the holy Temple: he will thrust himselfe on Iehoshuahs right hand to resist him, though Iehoshuah stand before the Angell of the Lord to minister to the Lord. And therefore the folly of Papists is egregious, that thinke the signe of the crosse, holy water, reliques, and such Massing inchantments have vertue in them to free their houses, or their D bodies from the assaults of Satan.

Lastly, hereby we see that change of place is but a silly cure for a troubled minde; indeed change of aire may much further bodily cures; but a troubled minde both comforts and vexes the Devill, who will not leave for change of place; Jerusalem will fit his turne as well as the wildernesse.

The second part of the Devils temptation to this conflict is this, he set him on a pinacle of the Temple: the word translated pinacle signifieth properly a wing of the Temple, whereby some take to be meant the sharpe bodies and spires on the top of the Temple; some reof

Zach. 3.1.

of there were diuers; but these (as I take it) are not here meant; for such a spire cannot wel be called a wing: others take it for some part of the battlement, made on the top of the Temple, which was flat, as the Jewes used to build, to keep men from falling: others take it for any top corner of the Temple; and whether of these it was, we cannot certainly define; but this wee must hold, that it was some dangerous steepe downe place, on some corner of the Temple, or on the battlements, from which a man might easily cast himselfe: whereby we see the Devill will omit no advantage that may further his temptations; which should make us the more carefull of our standing against him.

A

V. 6. And said unto him, If thou be the Sonne of God, cast thy selfe downe: for it is written, that he will give his Angels charge over thee, and with their hands they shall lift thee up, lest at any time thou shouldest dash thy foot against a stone.

B

These words containe the second maine point in this conflict, to wit, Satans assault upon Christ: wherein wee are to observe, First, his temptation: then the reason whereby hee doth enforce it. His temptation here is framed as the former was, in a kinde of reasoning, thus:

If thou be the Son of God, then shew the same by casting thy selfe downe from this pinnacle of the Temple:

But as I see, thou art certainly perswaded that thou art the Sonne of God:

Therefore cast thy selfe downe, and thereby declare it.

C

Seeing this is a distinct temptation from the former, I doubt not but it must be thus framed with this conclusion: for if it had the same conclusion with the former, it should bee the same temptation. Satans meaning then is this, as if he had said; I have made triall to see expresly whether thou be the Sonne of God or not, and it seemes thou doest undoubtedly beleeve that voice of thy Father to be true, which said, This is my welbeloved Sonne in whom I am well pleased. Now if this be so indeed, it is convenient thou shouldest confirme the same by some miracle, and the fittest place thou canst doe it, is this; therefore cast thy selfe downe headlong from this pinnacle, and yet preserve thy selfe in safetie without all hurt in the fall.

D

The drift of Satan in this temptation was, to bring our Saviour Christ to a vaine confidence in his fathers protection, and indeed to flat presumption upon his extraordinary providence in the neglect of lawfull ordinary means; as by Satans conclusion, and the answer of Christ will easily appeare. And hereby wee may observe, that one maine drift of Satan in his ordinary temptations in Gods Church, is to carry men to presumption, and vaine confidence in the love, favour, and mercy of God: this appeares by the strange reasonings for libertie in sinne which many frame to themselves, and some are not ashamed to utter; as first, God is mercifull, and Christ shed his bloud for their redemption, and therefore they will not bee so strict and precise in hearing Sermons, and reading and conferring about the Word, as many are, but they will take their pleasures, and seeke the profits of this life. Thus reasoned some in the Apostles dayes: Let us continue in sin that grace may abound: of such Iude complaineth, saying, They turne the grace of God into wantonnesse. Such there have beene ever since, and at this day they do every where abound. Secondly, some say, they are either ordained to salvation or damnation: now if to salvation, they are sure of it how ever they live; and if to damnation, they cannot escape it, though they live never so holily; for Gods decree is unchangeable; and therefore they will take their pleasure, and live as they list. Thirdly, others say, they have ever found Gods goodnesse towards them, and they are perswaded he will never see them want, and therefore they will not toyle themselves with labour and care as others doe, but take their ease and pleasure while they may have it: and so neglect their charge and calling, and give themselves wholly to their sports and pleasures, to company-keeping, or such like. Yea, by this temptation to presumption, Satan oft prevailes with the better sort; for if a man favour the truth, and give himselfe to know religion in any sort, the Devill will straightway goe about to perswade him, that that which he doth is sufficient to his salvation; and thus will keepe him from using further meanes to come by the certaine knowledge of his election, and full assiance in Christ Jesus, to become a perfect man in Christ, (which is the end of Gods holy ministery, Ephes. 4. 13. whereunto wee should give all diligence, 2 Pet. 1. 16. See the truth hereof in the five foolish virgins, who carried burning lamps, but took no oile with them, never minding that till it was too late; and so doe most men content themselves with the blazing lampe of an outward profession, never looking for the oyle of grace, till the time of grace be past.

Satan seekes to carry men to presumption.

Rom 6. 1. Iude 4.

Matth. 25. 1, 2.

The use. Hereby then wee are all taught, in speciall manner to beware of presumption; this is the common snare of the devil wherin he intangles many a soule. It is true indeed that he oft prevailes by bringing men to desperation, but a thousand perish through presumption, almost for one by desperation: for despaire is a painfull

Matth. 4. vers. 6.

painefull things to flesh and bloud, and as the Devill knowes well, doth sometimes turne to a mans more sound conversion; but to presume is sweet and pleasant to the flesh, and most agreeable to mans corrupt nature; in regard whereof, we ought to keepe our heart with all watch and ward, as David prayeth, Keepe thy servant from presumptuous sinnes, Psalm. 19. vers. 13.

Againe, observe the order of Satans temptations by comparing this with the former. There he sought to overthrow Christs faith, and to bring him to distrust the truth of Gods Word uttered from heaven; but finding he could not that way prevaile, here he takes the cleane contrarie course, and seekes to bring him to presume.

Satans cunning in tempting.

This serves to discover unto us the deepe guile and subtilty of the Devill, that can so cunningly turne himselfe from one extreme unto another. And looke as he dealeth here with Christ the head, so doth he continue towards all his members; if he cannot bring them to one extreme, he will assay them hard in the other. If he cannot bring a man to covetousnesse, and keepe his heart to the love of money, then let him beware of riot and prodigalitie. Is a man given to pleasures and delight, and at length is deprived of them? then let him beware the devill swallow him not up with overmuch griefe, as he sought to doe with the incestuous person of Corinth. Doth a man come to love religion, that formerly was given to loosenesse of life? then if it be possible the Devill will carrie him to schisme and heresie. The Devill cannot abide that a man should keepe the meane according to Gods Word, Isa. 30. 21. He would have our first Parents to be Gods, or no body, Genes. 3. 5. And so still he laboureth to bring a man to some extreme. We therefore in all estates during life, must labour to keepe the golden mean, as Christ here did, neither doubting on the one hand, nor presuming on the other, but retaining still that blessed faith, whereby his blessed heart was firmely settled in these assaults. Thus much for Satans drift. Now come to the words of this temptation.

2 Cor. 2. 7, 11.

If thou be the Sonne of God, then cast thy selfe downe: that is, shew by this miracle that thou art the Sonne of God. Marke here, the Devill perswades him not, to shew himselfe to be the Sonne of God by doctrine in the execution of his ministerie; but Cast thy selfe downe; shew a miracle: wherein we may behold the very lively image of that naturall disposition which is in all impenitent persons; they affect Christs miracles, but they care not for his doctrine. Herod longed to see Christ, and was glad of his comming, when Pilate sent him; yet not to heare his doctrine, for that he could not endure; else he would not have imprisoned Iohn, and also put him to death; but he hoped to see a miracle. The wicked Jewes desire a signe, that put Christ to death for his doctrine; yet if hee will

Luk. 23. 8.

A come downe from the crosse, and so miraculously save himselfe, then they will beleeve, Mark. 15. 32. And this venome of the old serpent hath poysoned the hearts of many Students in the Scriptures, who care not at all to ground themselves in the fundamentall points of religion, as faith and repentance; and yet are wonderfull eager after quiddities and difficulties, wherein may appeare some outward shew of wit and learning; like the hypocriticall Pharisies, that would tithe mint and rue, and yet passe over judgement, and the love of God, Luk. 11. 42. And the cause hereof is the want of sound grace: for naturall men indeed cannot savour the things of the spirit of God; the knowledge of Christ crucified seemes foolishnesse unto

B them.

Secondly, the Devill tooke occasion of his former temptation from Christs infirmitie of hunger; but perceiving Christs sure faith in his fathers word by his gracious answer to that assault; here he borrowes his temptation from that profession of his faith; as if he should say, Thou seemest to be resolved of the truth of thy Fathers word, that thou art the Sonne of God: and if that be true indeed, then shew it by this miracle, Cast thy selfe downe.

Here then behold another tricke of Satan; if he cannot prevaile by assaults drawne from our infirmities, then will he assay us by temptations drawne from Gods good gifts and graces in us. If he cannot keep a man in ignorance that hath

C good gifts of wit and memory, then will he seeke from his knowledge to puffe him up with pride, and so mingling his poison with Gods good gifts, doth cause many a one to become a bane to Gods Church, that otherwise might have proved an excellent instrument therein; as might easily bee shewed in sundry particulars.

Satans malice restrained.

Thirdly, here marke how Satans malice is restrained, & his power limited: By Gods permission, he is able to carry Christ from the wildernesse to Jerusalem, and there to set him in a most dangerous place on a wing of the temple; the thing he now desireth is his destruction, by casting him downe headlong, but that he cannot doe, and therefore perswades Christ to cast

D himselfe downe: wherein we see the speciall providence of God over Christ Jesus in all these temptations, restraining his enemy in the thing he most desired. And the same providence doth he still continue over his Church for the effectuall preservation of Christs members in all their temptations. The devils unwearied desire and drift is, to bring contentions, hurliburlies and ruines into all societies, in Church and Common-wealth: therefore the peace and tranquillitie of these, is, and so must be acknowledged, a notable fruit of Gods blessed providence, restraining the spite and malice of Satan. Againe, hence it is evident, that in temptation Satan cannot goe beyond the permission of God; he can tempt Christ, yea, transport his body, and set him in a dangerous place, for thus farre God permits him to goe; but to cast Christ downe from the pinacle hee cannot, therein comes Gods restraint. So it fareth with Gods children, for the triall of his graces in them, and to chastise them for some sins, he suffers Satan to buffet them; but yet one jot of his malice beyond Gods permission hee cannot shew, as in Iobs affliction by him may notably appeare. Which wee must carefully remember for our speciall comfort in our most grievous assaults: Gods will permitting Satan so farre, must make us patient; and yet his power restraining Satan from doing worse, must give us comfort. Thus much for the temptation it selfe.

A

The reason whereby Satan enforceth his temptation, is taken from a testimonie of Scripture: For it is written, he shall give his Angels charge over thee, &c. Satan hearing Christ alleage Scripture for his defence against the first assault, comes now upon him with his own weapon, that if it were possible he might foyle him, after this sort: Thou shewest thy selfe to bee the Doctor of the Church, by thine alleaging of Scripture, and that, it seemes, thou makest the rule of thine actions: well then, thou maiest well and safely cast thy selfe downe hence if thou bee the Sonne of God: for it is written, hee shall give his Angels charge over thee, and with their hands they shall lift thee up, &c.

B

From this dealing of Satan, we are taught, not to embrace an opinion in religion, because a shew of proofe by testimony of scripture may be given for it. But we must trie the spirits, that is, the doctrines of men, whether they be of God or not, 1 Joh. 4. 1. For the Devill can alleage Scripture to move Christ unto presumption, and it is his usuall practice, when he carries men into schismes, errors, and heresies. Reason with a man that minds to live in sinne, and tell him of that dangerous state, by reason of the shortnesse and uncertainty of this life: will hee not tell you straight, he will doe as he does, and repent when he is old: for it is written, At what time soever a sinner doth repent him of his sinne, I will put all his wickednes out of my remembrance, saith the Lord: And some thinke three or foure good words at a mans last end will serve his turne: for the theefe on the crosse said no more, but Lord remember me when thou commest into thy kingdome. And all such as are trained up in the schoole of Satan, can easily alleage Scripture to further them in evill.

D

Ezec. 18. 27.

Luk. 23. 42.

But let us come to the Scripture which the Devill doth notoriously abuse by his allegation: it is written in the 91. Psal. v. 11. in the alleaging whereof he would seeme very carefull and precise, at the first not omitting so much as this particle [for] which might have bin left out, and yet nothing have beene wanting to the force of his reason: But herein is the deepnesse of his policy, to cause Christ not to suspect any falshood afterward: for towards the end, he leaveth out that, on which the promise is grounded, of being kept by the Angels, to wit, to keepe thee in all thy waies, that is, in all the good duties of thy lawfull calling wherein thou shalt glorifie God, and doe good to others; to such as so walke in their wayes doth that promise belong.

Matth. 4. vers. 6.

Here then behold Satans notable fraud and craft, that can so cunningly leave out that which makes not for his purpose, and so pervert the true meaning of Scripture; this is his usuall practice, in enmitie against the word, to deprave the true meaning by cutting off some part, when he cannot utterly overthrow the whole. The like is the dealing of all heretikes, who by cutting off, and leaving out, play legerdemain with the Scripture. The Arrian holds the Bible for the word of God; but such places as serve to prove the Godhead of Christ, he doth notably abuse and pervert. The family of Love also doth hold the Bible for the word of God: but come to the true meaning of it, therein they faile, turning all into Allegories, even most true histories, as the fall of our first Parents, and such like, which are maine grounds of religion in their naturall sense: and the Apostaticall Church of Rome doth hold with us the Books of the old and new Testament; but yet they put in and take out at their pleasure, and take from it all sense and meaning which agrees not with the determination of their holy Father the Pope; and thereby they overturne the Word of God, and strongly maintaine their mysterie of iniquitie.

Satans mincing of the word of God.

This dealing of Satan and his wicked miscreants with the Scripture, must make all Gods children willing to spend their strength in searching out the Scripture; for that is the onely way to descrie their fraud in depraving of it. This caused Christ to bid the people in his time to search the Scriptures, to learne to know him to be the true Messias, which the Jewish teachers did then deny. In regard whereof we must say with Moses, Oh that all the Lords people were Prophets, and that the Lord would put his spirit upon them! Oh that all could read and understand the word of God! This is it, wherein all that either be, or intend to be Ministers, must labour especially, even to get sound knowledge and judgement in the text of Scripture. The Minister must not onely be able to teach the truth; but also to discerne, to discover, and to confute errors and heresies; which he can never soundly doe without good understanding in the text it selfe. The Devill knows the whole Scripture, and he will spare no text therin if he can corrupt it; therefore to rescue Gods truth out of his hands who is the Father of lies, the Minister must shew himselfe a good souldier of Jesus Christ, as Paul exhorteth Timothie: giving such attendance to the word, that all men may see his profiting therein; yea with Ieremie, the Minister must eat the books of God, and digest them in his understanding, and rejoyce therein, labouring to feele them the joy of

of his heart. The Devill knowes that Scripture truly underſtood and well applyed, is the only engine for the batterie of his kingdome; and therefore, even from the beginning, but ſpecially ſince the comming of Chriſt, he hath laboured by all meanes to keepe men from the knowledge and true underſtanding of them; he it is, that hath brought men from the reading of the Scriptures, to betake themſelves to the writings of men, as Schoolemen, Fathers, and ſuch; by this meanes he hath for many yeares even to this day in the Church of Rome, locked up the Scripture in an unknowne tongue: yea even in Gods Church the devill workes mightily this way, by ſtealing away the affections of young ſtudents from the Bible, and raviſhing them with delight in the writings of men; for thus he keeps them from the fountain of truth, that they either fall into errour themſelves, or bee leſſe able to diſcerne and confute it in others. And hence come diſſentions and errors into the ſchooles of the Prophets, which cannot bee avoided while men leave the text of Scripture, and addict themſelves ſo much to the writings of men, for thereby he can more cunningly convey ſtrange conceits into mens minds: and therefore every one that would maintaine the truth in purity and ſincerity, muſt labour painfully in the text.

Secondly, Gods Miniſters muſt hereby bee admoniſhed, to bee carefull in alleaging any text of Scripture, that the ſame be fit and pertinent: for to wreſt the ſame from the proper meaning of the holy Ghoſt to ſerve their owne conceit, is the practice of Satan, which every ſervant of God muſt bee farre from, and therefore muſt not doe it hand over head. Which alſo may ſerve for a good advertiſement to thoſe that uſe to heape up manifold allegations of Scriptures in the doctrine of a Sermon; for as in many words there cannot want iniquitie, as Salomon ſaith; ſo in affected multiplicitie of quotations can the abuſe of Scripture bee hardly eſcaped. If wee deliver but a mans teſtimonie, honeſty will compell us as neere as we can to keepe both his words and his meaning; much more ſhould conſcience move us in alleaging the teſtimony of the Lord, to have carefull reſpect to the evidence of truth: and therefore that ſparing courſe is very commendable whereby in quoting of Scripture men make ſure to keepe themſelves to the Lords true meaning, leſt by depraving his Word they become followers of Satan. And thus much for the manner of Satans allegation.

Prov. 10. 19.

The truth and proper meaning of that text is now briefly to be diſcuſſed. The ninetie one Pſalme, from whence it is alleaged, is a moſt heavenly part of Scripture, penned for the comfort of Gods people in the time of ſome grievous plague or ſickneſſe; and it containes a notable preſervative againſt the plague, and by conſequent againſt any judgement of God; to wit, true affiance and confidence in the Lord, that

A is the ground of all comfortable ſafety; thereto among many other, is this gracious promiſe made of the protection of Gods holy Angels, (which the Devill doth here alleage) who ſhall be as carefull for the ſafety of Gods children in common calamities of famine, plague, peſtilence, &c. as the nurſe is over her tender child to hold it in her hands, and beare it up in her armes, leſt it ſhould fall and hurt it ſelfe; alwaies provided that the child of God keepe himſelfe in his wayes, that is, in obedience to Gods commandements, and in the duties of his lawfull calling. It is true indeed, that judgement begins at the houſe of God, and the righteous are taken away from the evill to come: yea many times the ſame outward judgement lights upon the B good, that doth upon the bad: yet this taketh not from Gods child the comfort of this protection in common calamities; for all promiſes of temporall bleſſings muſt be underſtood with the exception of the croſſe: as here, Gods Angels ſhall guard his children in time of plague, famine, and peſtilence, unleſſe it pleaſe God herewith to chaſten them for ſome ſinne paſt, or to prevent ſome ſinne, or greater evill to come, or to make triall of their faith and patience: in which caſes alſo the child of God doth greatly differ from the wicked: for through the fruition of Gods love in Chriſt, the evill of the puniſhment is taken away, and the outward ſmart thereof ſanctified to the greater good of his ſoule: but out of this caſe their protection is C certaine: ſee Exod. 12. 23. The uſe. The conſideration of this gracious protection of Gods Angels over ſuch as keepe themſelves in their wayes, muſt move every one to labour to know and practiſe the duties of his calling, both generall of Chriſtianitie, and particular for the ſtate of his life, in all good conſcience: ſo doing let come what will, in all dangers he ſhall have ſafetie: for Gods Angels pitch their tents about him, they are as watchfull over him, as a nurſe over her child; but if we forſake our wayes, we loſe the comfort of their protection, and expoſe our ſelves to all Gods judgements.

V. 7. Ieſus ſaid unto him, Againe it is written, Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

Here is the third generall point in this conflict: to wit, Chriſts anſwer and repulſe made to Satans aſſault, taken as the devils temptation was, from a text of Scripture; for he ſaith, Againe it is written; where yet he meanes not to oppoſe Scripture to Scripture, but to confute the abuſe of Scripture by Scripture, after this ſort; as if he had ſaid to Satan; It is true indeed that God hath made many worthy promiſes of aid and protection to his children in his Word, yet they ſhall not bee performed to thoſe that preſume to tempt God, as thou wouldeſt have me to doe.

Scriptures are ſufficient to expound themſelves.

From this dealing of Chriſt with Satan, we may obſerve, that the Scriptures of God are ſufficient in themſelves, truly to interpret and expound themſelves. The Devill alleaging Scripture, did wreſt it from the true ſenſe: this our Saviour Chriſt ſheweth, by alleaging another text out of Moſes, which being applyed to the place which the Devill abuſed, doth ſhew the true meaning thereof. So Ezra expounding the law unto the Jewes, read diſtinctly in the law of God, and (as the words doe ſignifie) gave the ſenſe by Scripture, and cauſed the people to underſtand: much more then at this day may the Scriptures be thought ſufficient for the expounding of themſelves, ſith to the Canon thereof ſince Ezra his time, there is added the whole new Teſtament by the hand of God, wherein the deepe things of God are plainly revealed.

Deut. 6. 16.

Neh. 8. 8.

The Church of Rome cannot away with this, that Scripture ſhould bee ſufficient to expound it ſelfe. And therefore againſt it they reaſon thus: That which muſt expound Scripture, muſt have judiciall power to determine of the ſenſe thereof: but the Scriptures have no ſuch judiciall power, for they are but a dumbe letter: and therefore no ſufficient judge to determine of their owne ſenſe and meaning. Anſ. The Scriptures have judiciall power to determine of their owne true ſenſe and meaning: for they ſpeake evidently, to all that are inlightned by Gods Spirit, and thereby made able to know what the Scripture ſaith: we know a man may ſpeak to his friend not only by word of mouth, but alſo by letter, and thereby expreſſe his meaning ſufficiently: even ſo, though God ſpeake not now unto his Church by created voice, yet by his written word he ſpeakes ſufficiently, for the cleare manifeſtation of his will and pleaſure concerning them: and therfore it is a ſhamefull ſlander and blaſphemy againſt the Scripture to call them an inkie letter, and dumbe judge. And let them ſhew, if the Scriptures be not, where is that ſpeaking Judge who hath power judiciall to expound the Scripture. Indeed their anſwer is, that the Church is this Judge, and that wee muſt conſult at her mouth for the true meaning of the Scripture. Anſ. The Church hath a miniſterie and diſpenſation committed unto her, in the execution whereof ſhe delivereth the meaning of the Scripture unto Gods people; but that is not from any judiciall authoritie committed unto her, to determine of the ſenſe of Scripture of her ſelfe; but onely by comparing Scripture with Scripture, and expounding one place out of another; even as the Lawyer gives the ſenſe of the Law, not from any judiciall power given unto him above the Law, but by obſerving the words with the ſcope and circumſtances of the law. But here I would know, if the Church muſt needs be judge, by what means muſt ſhe determine? they anſwer, by the rule of faith, the conſent of Councels and Fathers; and if theſe faile, then by the Pope. Anſ. By their rule of faith, they underſtand, unwritten traditions, that is, ſuch truth beſide Scripture as hath beene kept by tradition from hand to hand ſince the Primitive Church. But theſe are meere forgeries, and ſhame it were to ſubject the truth of God to the device of man: if theſe be made jndge of Scripture, then ſhall the faith of the Church depend upon the wiſdome of man, and not upon the power of God: a thing abhorred of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 2. 5. The only rule of faith is the Scripture, and true faith will admit no other judge beſide the Scripture, to determine of that whereon it muſt depend. Secondly, for their conſent of Fathers and Councels, that is no ſufficient meanes to determine of the true ſenſe of Scripture: for their ſeverall errours and contradictions, one to another, and many times to themſelves, ſhew that they wanted the immediate aſſiſtance of the Spirit. And the ſame is true of the Pope, as might eaſily be proved at large, by their groſſe ignorance and errors. And therefore it remaines that the true judge and expounder of the Scripture is Scripture it ſelfe, as Chriſt himſelfe by his practice ſheweth in this place.

The place alleaged by Chriſt, is this commandement of God unto his people, Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God. For the underſtanding whereof, we muſt ſearch out three things: firſt, what the tempting of God ſignifieth: ſecondly, the manner how God is tempted: and thirdly, the cauſe and root thereof. For the firſt, to tempt God ſignifieth to make triall and experience of God, and to prove whether he be ſo true, juſt, merciſull, provident, and powerfull, as his word reporteth him to be. Thus did the Iſraelites often tempt God, as the Lord ſaith, When your fathers tempted me, proved mee, and ſaw my workes: which latter words ſhew what it is to tempt God, euen to ſecke to have proofe by his works whether he be ſuch a one as his word ſaith he is. If any ſhall ſay, we are commanded to taſte and ſee how gracious the Lord is, Pſal. 34. 8. yea the Lord bids his people prove him, Malach. 3. 10. Anſ. Thoſe places doe ſufficiently expound themſelves: for Davids taſte and ſight is by the grace of true faith and affiance, for in the ſame verſe he pronounceth ſuch bleſſed: and in Malachie the Lord bids them prove him, but yet in their way of obedience in providing for his Sanctuarie according to his ordinances. Therefore wee muſt know for the ſecond point, that every triall of God is not ſimply evill, but that which is needleſſe, when without warrant from his word, we preſume upon him beyond the meanes of his ordinarie providence. Thirdly, the root of this ſinne, is an unbeleeving heart, whereby a man doubts of the truth of Gods word, of his power, preſence, and providence. Pſal. 78. 18. The Iſraelites tempted God in their harts, there is this ſinne: the manner how followeth, in requiring

Deut. 6. 16.

To tempt God.

Pſal. 95. 9.

Matth. 4. verſ. 6.

meat

Matth. 4. vers. 7.

meat for their lusts, &c. not contenting themselves with Gods present providence; the root and ground whereof is set downe, vers. 22. because they beleeved not in God, and trusted not in his helpe. When a man doubts of the fidelitie of his servant, he will lay something in his way, as a peece of silver, his purse, &c. to try him withall; so when a man beginnes to doubt of Gods goodnesse and fidelitie towards him, he will easily be brought to make needles triall of him by some worke of God beside his ordinarie providence. The meaning then is this, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God, that is, thou shalt not make any needlesse triall of Gods goodnesse, mercie, power, or providence, from a distrustfull heart in the truth of his word.

God is tempted five waies. 1

Here yet further for our instruction wee are to know, that God is tempted five waies, as the Word of God doth manifest: first, when a man shall appoint unto God, either the time when, the place where, or the manner how God shall helpe him, and performe his Word unto him; herein hee seekes experience of the truth and power of God. Thus the Israelites tempted God in the wildernesse when they wanted water; saying, Is God among us or no? God had promised to be with them in all their journey to Canaan, but that they will not now beleeve, unlesse he will shew his presence by giving them water in that place. And so likewise they tempted him in the want of food, Psal. 78. 19. Can God prepare a table in the wildernesse? The consideration whereof must teach us in all our petitions which wee make unto God for the accomplishment of his promises unto us, to beware of limitting God, as the Jewes did, by prescribing unto him time, place, and manner, for the accomplishment thereof; but wait with patience his good leisure. For hee that beleeveth will not make haste, but will commit his way to the Lord, Psal. 37. 5.

Exod. 17. 7.

2

Secondly, God is tempted when men require a signe at his hands. Thus the Pharisies tempted Christ: Matth. 12. 38. Master, we would see a signe of thee: meaning thereby to be certified whether he were the Messias: and S. Luke saith, they tempted him, Luk. 11. 16. And thus doe all those tempt God, which refuse to embrace the doctrine of the Gospell, because they cannot see the Ministers thereof confirme the same by miracles. Thus doe many Papists plead against our religion, embracing rather the mysterie of iniquitie, because it is confirmed unto them by lying wonders; not considering that the truth which we professe was once sufficiently confirmed to be the truth of God, by his owne testimonie thereunto in signes and wonders through the hands of the Apostles. Quest. Is every asking of a signe a tempting of God? for Gedeon asked a signe when he was to bee a Judge and deliverer of Gods people, Judg. 6. 17. And so did Hezekias to be assured of the lengthning of his dayes, 2 King. 20. 8. And yet we read not that God charged them with tempting him, but did condescend to their requests. Answ. There be two causes in which we may require a signe of God, and not tempt him: first, when God commands a man to aske a signe at his hands: so might Ahaz have asked a signe of God, for his assurance of the victorie according to Gods promise; yea he is blamed for not asking it when the Lord commanded him. Secondly, a man may aske a signe of God, when it serves for the necessarie confirmation of an extraordinarie calling, or some speciall promise of God made to man: in this case did Gedeon aske a signe of God for the further confirmation of his extraordinary calling, to be a deliverer unto Gods people. And so did Hezekiah for his further assurance in the lengthning of his life, by an extraordinary promise, fifteene yeares. But out of these cases to aske a signe of God, is to tempt him: as the Pharisies did, who would prescribe unto God what kinde of miracle they would have, even a signe from heaven, not contenting themselves with those miracles which Christ did ordinarily worke among them.

Isa. 7. 11, 12.

Thirdly, a man tempts God when he goeth on in any sinne against Gods commandements; for hereby he makes needlesse triall of Gods justice, mercy, and patience. The Lord said of his people, they tempted him ten times, and have not obeyed his voice. Malac. 3. 15. The people murmuringly say, they that worke wickednesse are set up, and they that tempt God are delivered; where working wickednesse and tempting of God are allone. Which serves to admonish us, that with all speed we breake off the course of our sins by repentance, for while we continue in sinne we tempt God, and so lie open to all his judgements, depriving our selves of the guard and protection of Gods holy Angels, nay they will become our enemies, and in stead of protection, execute Gods heavie vengeance upon us.

Numb. 14. 22.

4

Fourthly, they tempt God, that impose upon Gods people the religious observation of legall ceremonies abolished by Christ: Act. 15. 10. Why tempt yee God (saith Peter) to lay a yoake on the Disciples neckes, which neither our Fathers, nor wee were able to beare? This is to make triall of Gods power in the saving of his people. Whereby we may see how wicked and damnable the Romish religion is, which wholly stands in the observation of ceremonies, partly heathenish, and partly Judaicall, whereto when men submit themselves, they doe nothing else but tempt God.

Fifthly, they tempt God, that refuse or neglect the ordinary and necessary meanes of their preservation, either for body or soule: as hee that being to goe over a water, will leave the bridge which is the ordinary way, and adventure dangerously thorow the water: for herein hee seekes a needlesse experience of Gods power: so doe they also that neglect or contemne Gods holy ordinance for the ſaving of mens ſoules in the miniſtery of the word. Now to this kinde of tempting God, doth Chriſt apply this commandement in this place; as if he ſhould ſay, When God hath afforded unto men an ordinary meanes for their helpe and ſafetie, they are not to refuſe the ſame, and to ſeeke for ſafety from God extraordinarily. I am now in a dangerous place, I confeſſe, upon this pinacle, yet there is ſome ordinary way to get downe, as ſtaires or ladder; and therefore unleſſe I would tempt the Lord my God, I may not caſt my ſelfe downe, and thereby ſeeke for extraordinarie preſervation, as thou perſwadeſt me. Thus alſo they ſin that goe into places of great danger without a calling: ſo Peter ſinned in thruſting himſelfe into Caiphas hall, a place of temptation, as by lamentable experience hee found too true. Thus Davids three Worthies ſinned in adventuring upon their enemies hoſt, for the fetching of a little water out of the well of Bethlehem; and therefore when it was brought unto him, David would not drinke thereof, but powred it out for a ſacrifice unto the Lord, 2 Sam. 23. 16.

B

Here ſome may aske, whether they doe not tempt God, that adventure to climbe on high places, to ſtand on ſpire ſteeples, or runne on the ridge of high houſes, and to goe on ropes a great heighth from the ground. Anſ. Men may doe ſuch things in a twofold eſtate; either having a lawfull calling thereto, as Carpenters and Maſons, who are to worke upon high buildings; now they without tempting of God may climbe and ſtand on high and dangerous places; or elſe having no lawfull calling thereto, as they who uſe to doe ſuch things to make knowne their activitie, or onely to afford delight and admiration unto others, for their private gaine and advantage; and ſuch tempt God fearefully; for Chriſt was better able to have caſt himſelfe downe from this pinacle, and have preſerved himſelfe without hurt, than theſe men are to ſave themſelves in their adventures; and yet he refuſed ſo to doe, becauſe he would not tempt the Lord his God. Thus much for the meaning of this commandement.

C

The doctrine for inſtruction hence, is to be gathered from this command applyed to the text, which the Devill alleageth: and it is this; Whoſoever looketh for the accompliſhment of Gods promiſes unto him, muſt be carefull to walke before God in the wayes of his commandements, and in the works of his calling with all good conſcience. God indeed hath made many gracious promiſes in his word, of bleſſings temporall and eternall, but they that tempt God ſhall not find the comfort of them; mens ſinnes hinder theſe things from them; Gods goodnes is to be ſeene and taſted in the wayes of faith and obedience. God hath promiſed the guard of his Angels to his children while they keepe themſelves in their wayes: if therefore thou wouldeſt have this protection, thou muſt keepe thy ſelfe in thoſe waies that God would have thee to walk in. And in the riches of his love God hath made a promiſe of everlaſting life with freedome from eternall perdition, to thoſe that beleeve in Chriſt, Joh. 3. 16. Thou therefore that wouldeſt enjoy the comfort of this promiſe to thine immortality and life, muſt get true faith into thy heart, and thereby live all the dayes of thy life. The ſame may be ſaid of every promiſe of God pertaining either to ſoule or body, the fruition of them both depend upon the practiſe of ſome part of obedience; which if thou doeſt neglect, thou doeſt but preſume in making title to the promiſe: Peter tels Simon Magus plainly, he had no part with them in the gifts of the ſpirit, while his heart retained a purpoſe to live in ſin, Act. 8. 21. Breake off therefore the courſe of ſinne, and inure thy ſelfe to the practice of obedience, ſo ſhall Gods promiſes bee ſweet unto thine heart; and the more thou proceedeſt in obedience, the more comfort thou ſhalt find in Gods gracious promiſes: but if thou doe lay hold on ſinne, the comfort of the world will depart from thee. And thus much for the ſecond temptation.

v. 8. Againe the Devill tooke him up into an exceeding high Mountaine, and ſhewed him all the kingdomes of the world, and the glory of them:

9. And ſaid unto him, All theſe will I give thee, if thou wilt fall downe and worſhip me:

10. Then ſaid Ieſus unto him, Avoid Satan: for it is written, thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerve.

Theſe words containe the third conflict betweene our Saviour Chriſt and Satan; wherein conſider three points: I. Satans preparation; v. 8. II. Satans aſſault upon Chriſt; v. 9. III. Chriſts anſwer thereto; v. 10. For the firſt, before we come to the hādling of it in particular, we are to conſider that unto every aſſault the Devill prepares himſelfe afreſh: which ſhould teach us to labour to furniſh our hearts every day afreſh to be able to repulſe his new aſſalts. Now particularly; this preparation hath two parts: firſt, Satan takes Chriſt into an exceeding high high mountaine: ſecondly, he ſheweth him all the Kingdomes of the world, and the glory of them all. For the firſt, it may be demanded, what way Satan tooke up Chriſt into this high mountaine? Anſ. He might doe it two wayes; either by viſion, or by reall and locall tranſportation of his body from the temple to ſome high mountaine. Some thinke this was done by viſion onely in Chriſts minde, as Ezechiel was carried by the Lord from Babylon to an exceeding high mountaine in the land of Iſrael. But I rather thinke that Chriſt was really and locally tranſported by the Devill in body from the Temple to ſome high mountaine; for Chriſts temptations were not imaginarie, but true and reall. Againe, the words import a true and reall tranſportation, without any mention of a viſion.

Matth. 4. verſ. 8.

Ezec. 40. 2.

The reaſons why the Devill carries Chriſt to an high mountaine, may be theſe: firſt, the devill hath a great deſire to imitate God in his glorious workes, that ſo he may diſgrace the works of God, yea and God himſelfe as much as he can. Now wee read, that God tooke up Moſes into mount Nebo, from whence hee ſhewed him all the land of Canaan; ſo Satan, that he might ſeeme to goe beyond God, takes up Chriſt into an exceeding high mountaine, to ſhew him all the kingdomes of the world, and the glory of them. Secondly, he did it for the furtherance of this laſt aſſault wherewith hee tempted Chriſt: for he meant to entice Chriſt with the glory of the world; and therefore brings him where hee might take the faireſt view thereof.

Deut. 13. 14.

Satan may have power over the bodies of Gods children.

Now in that Satan tranſports the bodie of our Saviour Chriſt this ſecond time, we ſee that by Gods permiſſion, Satan may have power over the bodies of Gods children, to tranſport the ſame from place to place, or otherwiſe to vex them, and that not once only, but ſundry times. This wee muſt obſerve and remember carefully, as a ſtay and prop againſt diſtruſt and deſpaire, if God ſhould ſuffer Satan to vex us, by ſuch tranſporting of our bodies from place to place, or by any outward calamities; and that not once or twice, but divers times; for that which befell the head Chriſt Jeſus, may well befall any of his members.

The ſecond part of the Devils preparation is this: he ſhewes unto Chriſt all the Kingdomes of the world, and the glory of them. This he could not doe actually: for there is no mounraine ſo high in all the world, whereon if a man were placed, he could ſee one halfe or one quarter of the kingdomes of the world, as they are ſeated and placed upon the face of the earth; nay, if a man were ſet in the Sunne, and from thence could looke unto the earth, yet he could not ſee paſt the halfe thereof. And therefore wee muſt know, that the devill did this in a counterfeit viſion; for herein he can frame an imitation of God.

Of Diabolicall viſions.

Now the Devils viſions be of two ſorts; either in outward ſenſes, or in the minde and underſtanding. His viſions in the outward ſenſes be deluſions, whereby he makes men beleeve they ſee that which indeed they do not ſee; this might eaſily be proved by manifold examples recorded in the Hiſtories of all times, but that one ſhall ſuffice, of his counterfeit reſemblance of Samuels forme and attire to the witch of Endor for the deluding of Saul; when as indeed Samuels true body was in the grave, and his ſoule with the Lord.

1 Sam. 28. 14.

Secondly, the devill hath viſions whereby he deludes the underſtanding: Zach. 13. 4. the Lord ſaith hereof, The Prophets ſhall be aſhamed every one of his viſion. Theſe viſions the Devill ſhewes to men ſometime ſleeping, ſometime waking: even as the Lord doth ſhew his viſions to his owne ſervants. The viſions of Satan ſhewed to men ſleeping are called dreams: Deut. 13. 1. the falſe Prophet hath his dreame. His viſions ſhewed to men waking, are to ſuch as have crazed braines, whom he perſwades ſtrange things of themſelves: as ſome, that they are Kings or Princes; others, that they are Chriſt, John Baptiſt, and ſuch like: examples hereof in all ages are many. Now touching this viſion of Satan to Chriſt; ſome thinke it was inward in Chriſts minde, but I rather take it to have beene in his outward ſenſes onely, as the words of the text doe import; the Devill by his art did cunningly ſet forth and repreſent unto the eies of Chriſt a notable ſhew and repreſentation of all the kingdomes of the earth, and the glory of them.

Herein the Devill ſheweth great power and skill, in that he can repreſent unto the eie in his counterfeit viſions ſuch ſtrange and admirable ſights. And it teacheth us, that the practices of Sorcerers and Magicians, undertaking to repreſent unto the eie, partly in the aire, and partly in glaſſes, either the perſons of men that lived long ſince, or actions done in far countries, or long before, are not meere fancies, as ſome thinke, who deny altogether that ſuch things can bee ſhewed: for the Devill can reſemble things done long ſince, and a farre off; for if he could ſet ſuch a ſight before the eye of our Saviour Chriſt in viſion, as the view of the whole world, and the glory thereof, then much more can he repreſent unto the eye of man ſtrange and marvellous things.

The Devils drift in this reſemblance unto Chriſt is this; hereby he intended moſt cunningly to inſinuate himſelfe into the heart of our Saviour Chriſt; for before he propounds this third aſſault, he ſhewes unto Chriſt all the kingdomes of the world, and the glory of them, that Chriſt might take a liking of them, and ſo deſire them, and at length accept of them upon Satans offer. Thus he dealt with our firſt Parents; upon their firſt communication hee ſhewes unto Eve the outward beauty of the forbidden fruit, that it was faire to looke upon: and tels her of the good eſtate they ſhould attaine unto by eating of it, and ſo at length brings brings her to yeeld to his temptation.

Gen. 3. 6.

Looke well to hearing and seeing.

Hence we must learne to have speciall care in the good ordering of all the outward senses of our bodies, specially the two senses of learning, seeing and hearing: for by them the devill can cunningly convey his temptations into our hearts; the senses (specially these two) are the windowes of the heart and soule, and if wee keepe them not well, Satan will be sure to convey some evill into us. We must therefore obey Salomons counsell, Keepe thy heart above all watch and ward; this we cannot doe unlesse we looke well to our outward senses, for they are the doores of the heart. This made David to pray, Lord turne away mine eyes from beholding vanitie: and Iob to make a covenant with his eyes. And so must we make conscience of hearing and looking, lest hereby we give advantage to the Tempter.

Prov. 4. 23.

Psal. 119. 37.
Iob. 31. 1.

Further, in this sight observe the deepe policy of the Devill: there are in the kingdomes of the world besides glorie and dignitie, many troubles, hurliburlies, and vexations; now these the Devill conceales from Christ, and shewes him only the glory, pompe, wealth, and dignity of the world, that so he might the more easily winde his temptation into the heart of our Saviour Christ. And the same course he still observeth in tempting men to sin; he hides from their eyes all the miseries, plagues, and punishments which are due to sin, and that will follow upon it; and shewes them only all the profits and delights that they may reape thereby: thus he sugars over the poison of his temptations, that men never feele the bitternesse of them, till their soules be therby deadly infected; but then he takes a cleane contrary course, and shewes to the wounded soule all the woes and terrours of Gods wrath, that if it be possible he may bring a man to despaire. And therefore we must be most watchfull of being insnared with the deceitfulnesse of sinne in false shew of profit and pleasure.

Secondly, the Devils policie doth notably appeare, in reserving this temptation for the last place: for hee knowes full well how forcible with man be the temptations of profits, pleasures, and honours. From whence we may also learne, that temptations fetched on the right hand, from honour, pleasure, and commodity, are the most dangerous, and doe soonest creepe into the heart of man, prevailing far more than temptations on the left hand, which are taken from adversitie. The Devill foiled David worse in the time of peace and ease, than ever he could do during the time of Sauls grievous persecution against him. And he prevailed more against the Church by errours and heresies under Constantine and other Christian Emperors, than he could doe by most bloudy persecution for the space of 300. yeares before. Yea, in these our dayes, worldly hopes have drawne those from the sinceritie of religion, whom outward violence could not move: prosperity is a slippery path, wherein a man doth soone catch a fall; and therefore we must learne to be most watchfull over our owne hearts, when wee have faireſt weather with the world.

Temptations from the right hand most dangerous.

2 Sam. 11. 2.

Matth. 4. vers. 9.

Luk. 4. 5.

Lastly, S. Luke addeth this circumstance of time, that the Devill shewed all these things unto Christ in as short a time as might be, even in a moment or point of time: whereby we may perceive the devils great celeritie and speed in doing any thing he takes in hand, herein hee goes beyond all men in the world; for being a spirit he is able to worke wonders, and though hee cannot goe beyond the strength and compasse of nature, because his power is finite, yet by reason of his agility and speed, hee can goe beyond the ordinary course of nature in the manner of working the things he takes in hand. And this exceeding quicke speed the devill here useth, to stirre up in Christ a more eager desire after those strange and goodly things, whereof he had but as it were a glimpse, that so by degrees hee might worke in Christ a liking of them, for the nature of man doth more eagerly affect strange things when they be sudden, and the eye of man doth more wistly behold them. And this also, as the former, must make us watchfull against all Satans crafty wiles, that we be not beguiled by him. Thus much for Satans preparation.

The second point in this conflict, is the temptation it selfe, in these words; vers. 9. And said unto him, All these will I give thee if thou wilt fall downe and worship mee. The drift of Satan in this assault (which we must carefully observe) is to draw Christ to commit idolatry by the hope of worldly kingdomes, and the glory of them: herewith he proves him, when he could neither weaken his faith by his first temptatiō, nor worke presumption in him by the second. And looke how he dealeth here with Christ, so doth he commonly in the world: many an ones conscience and religion doth hee quite overthrow, by worldly hopes of riches, pleasures, and preferments: hereby not only ordinary professors, but Ministers and Preachers of the Gospell have been drawne to abjure and renounce that truth which formerly they have taught, & to betake themselves as the Popes vassals, to professe and maintaine his blasphemous idolatries: hereby also Protestant-merchants are drawne to become very serviceable to the Popish Churches, by transporting among them wax, and such like merchandise, which serve as necessary helps & furtherances, to their Idolatrous service. And what else is it that makes the people generally to change religion with the times and states, but because they would still enjoy their worldly commodities? And the more men doe possesse in the world, ordinarily the lesse courage and resolution they have for the religion of God, as experience in Queene Maries dayes hath shewed; which in generall may admonish us how dangerous an enemy the world is to the power of true religion.

Satan would bring Christ to idolatry.

This

Matth. 4. vers. 9.

This temptation hath two parts; A promise made to Christ, and the condition thereof. The promise in these words, All these will I give thee: he saith not, I will procure God to give them unto thee, but I will give thee them: where we may see, that Satans drift is to cause Christ to take him for his Lord, to depend and wait on him for his kingdome, and to acknowledge him to be the giver thereof: which notably bewraies his egregious boldnesse, that dares thus challenge to himselfe the Lords owne right, even in the presence of him who was true Lord and King of heaven and earth. Let no man therefore thinke, that Satan will lose ought for want of adventure; but in regard thereof bee better armed against him.

A

Now that which the Devill aymed at in Christ, doth he commonly effect in the world: he makes men beleeve that he is the giver of all things, and so brings many a one to rely upon him. Indeed with their lips men will confesse that God gives them their daily bread, even all things they have; but their dealings and practices speake aloud, that the devill is governour and giver of all: for how doe many men get their livings? Is it not by lying, fraud, and oppression? Doe not most men hereby seeke to inrich themselves? Well, the just Lord never approveth such meanes; the Devill setteth such courses a flote, and him they serve, and on him they relie that walke therein.

B

Satans enmitie against Christs spirituall kingdome.

Secondly, note a further reach of Satan in this promise of these earthly kingdomes, even to overthrow Christs spirituall kingdome. Satan knew well that if Christ were the true Messias, he should be a King, and have a kingdome, though not earthly, yet spirituall in the hearts and consciences of men, which should bee the ruine of his kingdome; and therefore he labours with Christ to entertaine an earthly kingdome, that so his spirituall kingdome might not be looked after. And looke as he seekes to deale with Christ the head, so he perseveres against the Church which is his body: for Gods Church hath it ministery, which in it nature is a soveraignty, to be exercised in the dispensation of the word: now the Devill hath laboured by all meanes to bring this ministery wherein the Churches spirituall soveraigntie doth consist, to become an earthly lordship and dominion, tha by this meanes he might overturne it, and make it fruitlesse in the building and upholding of Christs spirituall kingdome: and how he hath prevailed this way, the church of Rome doth shew to all the world.

C

Thirdly, observe the largenesse of the Devils promise: he will give to Christ all the kingdomes of the world, and the glory of them: but this is more than he meant to our Saviour Christ, at least-wise more than he could performe: for all these were not in his power. Now because in all things we must bee as unlike the Devill as may be, hence we must learne to be wary and watchfull to our promises, that therein we be not like unto Satan, promising that which we never meane to performe, or never can performe although we meant it. In all our promises therefore we must looke to two things; first, whether the thing we promise be in our power: secondly, whether it be lawfull for us to performe. This fidelity in keeping promise is a fruit of the spirit, called by the Apostle faith, Gal. 5. 25. and a propertie of him that must rest in Gods holy mountaine, Psalm. 15. 4. not to change from a mans lawfull oath or promise, though the performance of it doe tend to his great hinderance.

D

Fourthly, in this promise of Satan we may observe, that he knowes all the kingdomes of the world, else he could not have shewed them to him, which here he offers to give; yea his offering of them, with the glory of the all, which he could so speedily represent, doth shew unto us, that he is most expert in the policies and regiments of States and Kingdomes: he goes not to and fro for nought compassing the earth, Job. 1. 7. And his promise of them to Christ, was made to inflame his heart with ambition, after those kingdomes & glories, that he might enjoy some of them at the least. Wherein we may note that one speciall practice of the devill is to overturne States and kingdomes, by putting ambition into mens hearts after earthly kingdomes and glories: his study is to doe mischiefe, and in the ruine of kingdomes he overthrowes many, and therefore hereunto he endevours himselfe with might and maine. Hence come insurrections & rebellions in kingdoms, which no time nor age could ever escape: looke as he stirred up the Chaldeans and Sabeans to inrich themselves by spoyling of Job, so dealeth he by ambitious and covetous persons in all estates, as true records of times doe fully testifie. We may see the truth hereof in our owne land, in the manifold complots and treasons both at home and abroad, that have beene conspired and attempted against our Prince and State, by profane men stirred up by the Devill, through ambition and discontent: howsoever by Gods mercy themselves have beene taken in the snare that they laid for others. In regard wherof we are all bound to yeeld all praise and glory to God, for his gracious preservation and defence both of our Prince and State; and to shew forth our thankfulnesse by all holy obedience unto that God, who hath brought to nought the devillish conspiracies & treacheries of the ambitious instruments of Satan. Secondly, we must pray unto God continually for the preservation of our Prince and State; crying aloud unto God, as the people did at the coronation of Salomon, for the safetie of our Prince: yea, we must daily intreat the Lord to bring to nought the counsell of Achitophels, and of all that thinke evill against the Lords anointed among us. Quest. But how comes it to passe that any Prince or State can stand, if the Devill have such malice against them? Answ.

Q. Elizabeth, and it may fitly be applyed to our present State.

1 King. 1. 39.

Through

Through the good providence of God, who gives his Angels charge to guard and defend, not onely his children in particular, but alſo whole Kingdomes and States. And one part of their office is for the good of Gods Church, to repell the rage of Satan and his inſtruments, yea to ſtand with Gods Church in the execution of judgements upon the enemies thereof. In the ſiege of Jericho, an heavenly captaine of the Lord of Hoſts came to helpe Joſhuah: and when the king of Syria ſent a mighty hoſt to take the Prophet Eliſha that was in Dothan, the Lord ſent for his defence horſes and chariots of fire, which filled the mountaines. And in the dayes of Hezekiah, for his comfort, and the joy of Gods people, an Angell of the Lord ſlew in the hoſt of Zenacherib, that came againſt Jeruſalem, an hundred foure ſcore and five thouſand in one night. And we want not ſure teſtimonie of this good providence of God in the ſtrange diſcoveries of many devilliſh conſpiracies.

Ioſh. 5. 14.

2 King. 6. 17.

Iſa. 37. 36.

Fifthly, Satan ſaith, All theſe will I give thee. This is the voice of the great red Dragon: and the ſame is the voice of the Pope of Rome, both regiſtred in their canons, and daily attempted in practice, to diſpoſe of all the kingdomes of the earth; whereby he ſhewes evidently, that he is that beaſt comming out of the earth, having two hornes like the Lambe, but he ſpake like the Dragon. For the Lambs hornes he ſhewes in calling himſelfe the ſervant of ſervants; and the voice of the Dragon, that is, of the Devill, in taking upon him to diſpoſe of the ſoveraignties of theſe earthly Kingdomes.

Rev. 13. 11.

Laſtly, Saint Luke recordeth a reaſon, which the Devill addeth to his promiſe, to prevent all conceit of impoſſibility in him to performe the ſame; to wit, for that the power and glory of all the kingdomes of the world is delivered to him, and to whomſoever he will he gives it. Wherein obſerve in Satan two notorious ſinnes: firſt, a groſſe lie; for Daniel ſaith, that it is Iehovah, the moſt high God, who beareth rule over all the kingdomes of men; and giveth them to whomſoever hee will. Secondly, arrogant and ſhameleſſe boaſting, to vaunt himſelfe even to the Lords owne face, as though he were Soveraigne Lord of that which belongs to God alone. The conſideration whereof muſt move us, who in all godly converſation muſt be contrarie to Satan, to renounce all lying, and to make conſcience to ſpeake the truth from our hearts; And alſo to abandon all vaine boaſting of our ſelves, what we are, or what we can doe; yea rather to ſpeak baſely of our ſelves, that ſo God in all good things we do may have glory. Lying and bragging are the properties of Satan, and therefore cannot beſeeme the tongue and heart of the children of God.

Luk. 4. 6.

Dan. 4. 21.

The ſecond point in this temptation, is the hard condition which Satan would have Chriſt to yeeld unto for this gift; If thou wilt fall downe and worſhip me: even to commit moſt abominable idolatrie in worſhipping the Devill himſelfe. Herein we may obſerve ſundry things.

First, that it is a principall part of the Devils endevours againſt Gods Church, to ſeeke the overthrow of true religion, and the pure worſhip of God, by ſowing therein the ſeeds of hereſies and idolatries; for if he dares be thus bold with Chriſt the head, as to ſeeke to draw him from the worſhip of his Father to ſuch abhominable idolatrie, what will he not attempt with ſilly and ſinfull men? The Scriptures are plentifull in ſhewing his endevours this way. Michaiah ſaw in a viſion an evill ſpirit offering himſelfe unto God, to become a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all Ahabs Prophets, even foure hundred at one time. When Iehoſhuah the high Prieſt ſtood before the Lord, Satan ſtood at his right hand to reſiſt him, he ſought to hinder the building and worſhip of the materiall temple; much more therefore will he ſeeke to hinder the building of the ſpirituall temple, even the worke of the miniſtery in converſion of ſoules, wherby they are pulled out of Satans kingdome, and made pillars in the temple of the living God. Satan is that envious man that ſoweth tares of errors and hereſies in the Church of God, which is the field of the good husbandman. He hindred Paul from comming to the Theſſalonians, whereby it appeares, that he did his endevour to hinder the courſe of the Apoſtolicall miniſterie. In the Church of Smyrna, he caſt ſome into priſon, ſtirring up wicked men ſo to doe, thereby to hinder the embracing of the Goſpell. Iohn ſaw three uncleane ſpirits like frogges come out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the beaſt, and out of the mouth of the falſe Prophet. Theſe are ſpirits of the Devils, working miracles, and going to the Kings of the earth: thither they goe for the ſtoppage of the Goſpell; for if Kings oppoſe themſelves, they become greateſt hinderers to the Goſpell of all other. And theſe frogges, by the common conſent of Catholike expoſitors, are the rabble of Popiſh Friers, Prieſts, & Jeſuites, who ſeeke the infection of States thorow all the world. By all which, the Devils enmitie againſt the Church is moſt apparant.

Theuſe. I. This ſhewes what care and diligence Gods Miniſters ſhould ſhew for the building of Gods Church, and the furtherance of the Goſpell: for they ſhould ſeeke to the uttermoſt of their power to countervaile the envious practice of Satan againſt the Church.

II. Every Chriſtian muſt hence learne, to pray not onely for their owne good eſtate, but alſo for the welfare of Gods Church every where, in free paſſage of the Goſpell, in the eſtabliſhing of true doctrine, and in the continuance of conſtant obedience thereunto. For Satans endevour is to ſubvert and corrupt the truth, and to draw men from obedience; and unto him GODS children muſt ever oppoſe themſelves, the rather becauſe their welfare ſtands in the good of Gods Church.

Secondly, in this condition of Satans offer to Chriſt,

Matth. 4. vers. 9.

Christ, we may obserue that his endeuour is to bring men to worship him: for if he durst attempt a demand hereof at the hands of Christ, who shall think to escape this assault when opportunitie serves him? And howsoever men thinke it impossible, that Satan should thus far prevaile with any, as to bring men to worship him; yet doubtlesse (though he could not prevaile with Christ) herein he attaines his purpose in the world, and that with the greatest part thereof: for the three religions of the Jew, Turke, and Papist, doe at this day over-spread the greatest part of the face of the earth; and in them all, such a worship of God is propounded unto men, wherein God is not worshipped but the Devill. For the evidence whereof, marke these two rules; First, that all doctrines devised by man in the matter of religion, which either directly, or by just consequence oppugne the Word of God, are doctrines of Devils, 1 Tim. 4.1.3. Doctrines repugnant to the word, touching marriage, and meats, are doctrines of Devils; and so by proportion are all such like. Secondly, all devised worship of God by man, against Gods word, is no worship of God, but of the Devill: 1 Cor. 10. 20. The things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice unto Devils, and not unto God. Doubtlesse, the Gentiles intended to worship God in their images, but because that worship was not according to Gods will, the Apostle respects not their intent, as a thing that could nothing availe in this case, but saith peremptorily, their worship was done unto the Devill. And in reason it must be so: for why should we think, that God should accept that for his worship, which is not agreeable to his will, but devised by man, according to the will of the Devill?

Fom these two rules it will follow, that the best of the three forenamed religions is no worship of God, but of the Devill; for all of them have such worship as is devised by man and not of God. The Jew worships God out of Christ; and so doth the Turke; yea, and the Papists worship God, but yet out of the true Christ: for (as hath beene shewed else-where) the Christ of the Papists is a counterfeit Christ. And in many other points of their religion, there is apparant repugnancie to the word of God; yea, of their sacrifice of the Masse, we may as truly say as the Apostle did of Heathen idol worship, that they sacrifice not unto God, but to the Devill: for therein is as vile, accursed, and abominable Idolatrie, as ever was devised by man. So that it is plaine, the Devill doth mightily prevaile, in causing men to worship him. Yea, he prevaileth thus not onely in the world, but in Gods Church; for all such as (notwithstanding their outward profession) have their hearts set upon the world, more eagerly affecting the honors, profits, & pleasures thereof, than God and his word, do indeed and truth worship the Devill: for he is the God of this world, ruling in the hearts of the children of disobedience, by the baits of honour, profit, and

1 Cor. 4. 4.

A pleasure: he steales mens hearts from God, and so herein they doing the will of the Devill, must needs worship him; for looke whereon a man setteth his heart, that he maketh his God.

Thirdly, here obserue that the Devill would faine make a covenant with Christ; for worship at Christs hands, he will give Christ the glory and riches of the world; hereto is nothing wanting but Christs consent. Whereby we see that it may be true, which sundry times we heare of, and many histories doe record, to wit, that some persons doe make a league with the Devill, wherein the Devill covenanteth to be serviceable unto them in procuring them honour, riches, pleasures, or great renowne for some strange activities, whereto he will enable them, B upon condition that they for their parts give unto him their bodies, their soules, or their bloud. Some indeed are of minde, that such things are meere forgeries and delusions of the Devill, and that no leagne can be made between him and man: but they are deceived; for he attempted in effect such a thing with Christ: what will hee not therefore doe with silly and sinnefull men, especially when he findes them cast downe with discontents? And thus much for the Devils assault.

Some make a league with the Devill.

The third point in this conflict is Christs answer, v. 10. Then Iesus said unto him, Avoid Satan; for it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serve. C This I will handle as the words lie in order.

Before his answer he propoundeth a speech of indignation and detestation both of the Devill and his offer, Avoid Satan: as if he should say, I have heard thee Satan speake injuriously against my Fathers word, and against my selfe; and now againe, thou uttereſt blasphemie against my Father, wherein thou goest about to dishonour him greatly; but I abhor thee Satan, and these thy temptations; therefore hence, avoid, and have no more to doe with me.

In this detestation of Christ towards Satan, for uttering blasphemy against his father, in his challenge to have power to dispose of all the kingdomes of the world, as being his owne, we are taught not onely to grieve at such blasphemies as we shall heare uttered against God, but D to testifie our detestation and indignation towards them. The world is full of black-mouthed Rabshekaes, who will not spare to blaspheme the glorious name of our God, and to scoffe and deride his sacred word: now when we meet with such, we must not be like Stoicks without affection, but in Christian wisdome from bleeding hearts for the reproach of God, shew forth godly zeale and indignation, for the rescue of his glory. The hypocriticall practice of wicked Iezabel, in proclaiming a fast upon the false accusation of Naboths blasphemie against God and the King, may teach Gods Church to be zealous indeed against all blasphemers. When Rabsheka railed on the God of Israel, good King Hezekiah rent his cloathes, and and humbled himselfe in great measure for that reproach against his God. Teares were Davids meat day and night, while the Heathen among whom he was constrained to live, said unto him, where is thy God? And just Lot vexed his righteous soule from day to day, with the unlawfull deeds of the filthy Sodomites, living among them. The practice of these godly men must bee a president for us to follow, that wee heare no blasphemie against God without detestation. And as all Gods children must practise this dutie, so especially Masters of families; David would not suffer a lyar or a slanderer to come in his sight, or abide in his house; much lesse would he have endured a blasphemer of God, or a slanderer of his word. The Law commanded that the blasphemer should be stoned to death, who wittingly and willingly spake a word against God: and no doubt this law is perpetuall. Let a man but speake a word of disgrace against an earthly Prince, and it costs him his life, and that justly: how much more then should he die the death, though he had a thousand lives, that shall blaspheme the King of kings? Shall one that hath been baptised into the name of Christ, say there is no God, and that the Scriptures are but a device of man, and yet live? God forbid: for this hellish sinne defiles a kingdome. And therefore the Magistrate with the sword of justice must cry out against such wretches, Away from us, blasphemers.

Secondly, in this Avant of Christ given to Satan, we learne how to behave our selves against entisers from religion and the obedience of God; we must hold them as limmes of the Devill, and in that regard have nothing to doe with them, but with Christ bid them avoid from us. The Lord commanded that in this case, Parents should not spare their owne children, nor children, spare their Parents, if they were enticers to Idolatrie; but their owne hands must bee first upon them to put them to death. Our Saviour Christ would not spare Peter, when he gave him bad counsel, to spare himselfe from suffering that which God had ordained for him, but saith unto him, Get behinde me, Satan. So that we are without excuse, if we shall reject this counsell of Salomon, Heare no more the instruction that causeth to erre from the words of knowledge.

Deut. 13. 6. 9.

Matth. 16. 23.

Prov. 19. 29.

Thirdly, hereby wee also learne how to behave our selves towards Satan, when hee is violent and importunate in his temptations and assaults, to wit, that howsoever wee may reply to them out of Gods Word when they are more milde, yet when Satan beginnes therein to shew his force and violence, we must not reason with him; for Christ would not endure his blasphemy, though hee answered his temptations. In schooles of learning, it is counted a simple part to hold alwaies to the conclusion: but in the schoole of Christ when the conscience is to deale with Satan, the safest way is, by both hands of faith, to lay fast hold of the conclusion; cleave fast to Christ, let the Devill say what he will, bee not drawne thence one jot.

Matth. 4. verſ. 9.

After Christ hath shewed his detestation to Satans blasphemie, he answers his temptation: saying, It is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, &c. And whereas hee saith the third time, it is written, taking his answer from the Scripture; it teacheth us, that Scripture of it selfe is of power sufficient to vanquish the Devill. This the Church of Rome will not admit; for they make Scripture to be of two kinds; inward and outward; By inward Scripture they meane, the universall consent of all Catholikes in all ages. And by outward Scripture, they understand the written word contained in the Bible. Now they say, inward Scripture is the more excellent; for the outward Scripture they call a dead letter, of little or no power; and they make generall Councels equall with them for substance of doctrine. If this were true, Christ would not have alleaged outward Scripture, as they call it; but he knew the written word was the powerfull weapon, sufficient to vanquish the Devill. And therefore herein they doe shamefully blaspheme the truth of God, and so God himselfe.

Secondly, this allegation of Christ teacheth us how to behave our selves against all enemies of the truth, that would allure us to heresie, as to Popery, Anabaptisme, or such like; namely, to sticke fast to the text of Scripture, and not to suffer our selves by any meanes to be drawne from it. It may be thou art unlearned, and thine adversarie both learned and eloquent; yet here is thy refuge, cleave the faster to this written word, and if thou have one text for thy truth, make more account thereof, than of all the testimonies of Councels, Fathers, or men whatsoever. This instruction is needfull, for it may be God will suffer seducers to try his chidren, and then, unles they keep sure this ground of faith, they shall surely be seduced.

The text which Christ alleageth for his answer, is taken out of Deut. 6. 13. where the words are thus read; Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serve him. At the first, it may seeme that Christ misallegeth that text, and corrupteth it: for where Moses saith, Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God; Christ saith, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God; and to the latter part Christ addeth the word onely; saying, him onely shalt thou serve, for that which Moses saith, and serve him. But the truth is, here is no corruption, but a most worthy allegation, as we shall plainly see, if we consider two things: first, that Christ and his Apostles in alleaging the Scriptures of the old Testament, did not so much respect the words, as the true and proper meaning of the place. Secondly, that they oft expound the places which they alleage, and therupon do sometimes vary in word, but still retaine the true sense and meaning. So it is in this text alleaged: Moses saith, Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, under-understanding by feare, religious awe and reverence: And Christ saying, thou shalt worship or adore the Lord thy God, understandeth by worship, outward adoration in bowing of the body, whereby we testifie the inward awe and reverence of the heart, as when we humble our selves to call upon God by prayer. And this change of words by Christ, serves for excellent use in this place, to wit, to let us more clearely see what this feare of God is. To feare God, in that place, is from a reverent awe of the heart towards God, to humble a mans selfe in prostrating his body before the Lord, either to praise God for benefits received, or to pray unto him for gifts and graces needfull. Againe, for the word which he addeth, therein is no fault at all: for the full sense and true meaning of Moses Text must needs include so much, as the Prohibition annexed in the verse following doth plainly shew: for saying, Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serve him: and adding, Thou shalt not walke after other gods, Verse 14. is it not all one, as if he had said, thou shalt serve him onely? so that we have just cause to blesse God for the true and plaine explaining of the words, and not to surmise the least corruption in the alleaging of them.

Verse 13.

Now then for our further instruction in this Text alleaged, consider two points: first, what worship and service is: secondly, to whom it belongeth. First, worship generall betokeneth, the exhibiting and giving of reverence and honour to another. This worship is two-fold; Civill, or Divine; Civill worship is that outward reverence and honour which one man gives to another, as by prostrating the body, bowing the knee, &c. The end of Civill worship is, to testifie and acknowledge superioritie and preheminence in another, either for authoritie and office; as the subject worships his king and governour; or for gifts and graces, or for old age; as inferiours in gifts, and yonger in age by due reverence must acknowledge. In this Civill manner did Iacob bow himselfe seven times to his brother Esau, thereby acknowledging him for his superiour and better, Gen. 33. 3. Thus also did Abraham bow himselfe before the Hittites, Gen. 23. 7. And Lot unto the Angels that came into Sodom, taking them to be but men, Gen. 19. 1. And in this civill manner it is lawfull to kneele before Kings and Princes, to testifie our subjection unto them, and loyall acknowledgement of their preheminence over us under God.

Worship in generall.

Civill worship.

Divine worship is the ascribing of Divinitie to the thing we honour, whereby we make it unto us some divine thing above the order of any creature. A man may ascribe Divinitie unto a thing foure wayes; First, by attributing the god-head unto it, or giving unto it such honour, whereby hee acknowledgeth the same to bee God. Secondly, by ascribing unto it the attributes of God, as omnipresence, omnipotencie, to be most just, to know all things, &c. Thirdly, by accepting and acknowledging it to be the Creator and Governour of all things. Fourthly, by acknowledging it to be the giver of all good things, the defender and deliverer from all evill. And to whatsoever thing in worship a man ascribes any of these, to the same doth he ascribe Divinitie. This divine worship doth principally consist in religion and pietie; for by religion, which indeed is Gods worship, and by pietie, doe men ascribe unto a thing divine and religious honour.

Divine worship.

Divine worship is two-fold; Inward in the minde; or outward in the body. Inward divine worship is, when a man gives his heart and soule to any thing, devoting thereto the affections of his heart, as love, feare, joy, hope, faith, and confidence, and that because he conceiveth it to be God, having divine properties, as omnipotencie, infinite wisdome, justice, mercie, &c. or being the Creator and Governour of all; or the giver of all good things unto him, and his preserver from all evill. This devoting of the heart and soule unto God, with the faculties and affections thereof, is the ground and substance of all divine worship, and indeed can be given to nothing but to that which is God, or conceived of as God. Outward divine worship is, when a man shall any way bow, prostrate, or cast downe his body to any thing, thereby to testifie, that his heart and minde are devoted to it: as that he holds it to be God, to be omniporent, &c. Creator and governour, and his preserver, and therefore he doth repose his trust and affiance therein, set his love, joy, and feare thereon above all other things. And here we may observe a difference betweene Civill worship and Divine. By outward Civill worship, we onely acknowledge preheminence and superiorite in another, in regard of authoritie, of gifts, age, or such like. But by outward divine worship, we acknowledge Divinitie to be in the thing whereto wee bow or prostrate our selves. Againe, we must here also remember, that outward Divine worship serves onely to testifie the inward; even to make knowne what thing it is which wee conceive to bee God, and whereto we have devoted the affections of our hearts.

Difference betweene civill worship and Divine.

Thus we see what worship is, and the kindes thereof. And here we must understand our Saviour Christ to meane, outward divine worship: as if he should say, Thou shalt religiously submit, bow, or prostrate thy body unto God in prayer and thanksgiving, therby testifying that thou hast devoted thy heart and soule unto him; not onely conceiving him to bee the Divine essence, omnipotent, infinite, &c. but also that thou doest rest and relie on him as on thy Creator, who doth blesse thee with all good things, and preserve thee from all evill.

Besides this worship, God doth mention a serving of God, which being distinguished from worship must needs import some other thing. Service in generall, is nothing else but the giving and performing of obedience to the com-

Service.
